Painesville.—First. The 87th annual meeting showed 72 additions for last year, 45 on confession, making a net gain of 53. Rev. Perry Wayland Sinks is pastor.

Illinois.

North Aurora.—This young church, constituted principally of young people, enters the year with good heart and is thoroughly united in Rev. O. C. Dickerson. The pastor has been housebound for nearly a month with illness, but on Jan. 31 the deferred communion proved a gracious season, eight accessions being received, one on confession.

Indiana.

Michigan City.—First has experienced a severe loss in the death of Dr. D. T. Brown, the eminent surgeon of the Michigan Central R. R. To his unremitting labors and energetic and progressive spirit the erection of the present edifice was largely due. Mrs. Brown was for several years treasurer of the State W. H. M. U. Dr. Brown was born in White River, Vt., and served as surgeon in the war.

Terre Haute.—Second is in the midst of a great revival, which has apparently changed the attitude of the community, turning it strongly in favor of the church. The preaching has been by the pastor and 35 have already professed to have entered upon a new life. There will be a large accession to the church and local support will be greatly increased.

Fort Wayne.—South. Rev. E. E. Frame and his family were quarantined on account of sickness for two weeks lately, just in the midst of meetings continued from the Week of Prayer. Local brethren came promptly to his aid. The membership has been helped and several unconverted ones were aroused.

Kokomo, Rev. R. J. Smith, pastor, has united with the Disciple and Methodist churches in a series of union meetings conducted by B. Fay Mills. Mr. Smith is chairman of the committee and the immediate work of Mr. Mills will be followed by special evangelistic services.

Michigan.

Detroit.—Old First reveals an encouraging condition by increased contributions in all departments and steady progress in the whole work, notwithstanding a change in the pastorate. The church continues to recognize gratefully its good fortune in securing Dr. Nehemiah Boynton as pastor when it parted regretfully with Dr. W. H. Davis. The total benevolences from all sources were $9,589, and for the maintenance of the church $12,297 were expended.——Brewster. The business men's Bible class has arranged a program of live subjects for consideration at its Sunday sessions for three months.——Mt. Hope. The men's auxiliary have perfected rules for a reading, debating and lecturing department, to commence work at once with a membership of over 30.——Fort Street for several days has been turned into a veritable supply store. The women are busy soliciting and distributing all kinds of useful articles to needy ones in the community.

Saginaw.—Large audiences listened to the annual reports of the various organizations of the church. All lines of work showed progress. Hard times seemed only to stimulate all to do their best. Fifty-six new members were received during 1896. The roll was revised and 114 names dropped, leaving an actual present membership of 630. Expenditures were $6,700. The charitable and benevolent gifts of the people reached $3,000.

Lansing.—Pilgrim reports a bright and prosperous year. The congregations crowd the building to overflowing, and a new house becomes a necessity. The church has raised $1,400, has received 40 new members, has a Sunday school of 285 and a C. E. Society of 125.

Hancock has closed a prosperous year, 70 being received to membership, making 400 in all. Benevolences amounted to $1,500. Local church work required $4,000. Dr. J. E. Reilly is happy and encouraged.

Grand Rapids.—Smith Memorial has been thoroughly reorganized and is getting its members to work. Methods of conducting prayer meeting have been changed with advantage.

Port Huron.—First has closed a hard year with a balance in the treasury and starts the year with increased revenue. Rev. H. R. Williams is called to be associate pastor.

Olivet has decided to continue free seats.——Fisher Station has had a helpful series of special meetings.——The Grandville women have provided for carpeting the auditorium.

Wisconsin.

Clinton, Rev. William Moore, pastor, had good annual reports from all departments, showing progress for the year. Sunday school and prayer meetings have been well attended. Preaching services and neighborhood prayer meetings are held at two points in the country.

Rochester, Rev. T. A. Porter, pastor, voted enthusiastically at the annual meeting to take, at least, one collection a year for each of the benevolent societies. The first installment on the parsonage loan was paid to the Building Society on time.

Dodgeville.—The Primitive Methodist Church has voted, in view of the prospective disbanding of that denomination in this country, to become Congregational. A council meets Feb. 15 for recognition services.

Secretary Wiard of the H. M. S. takes the superintendency of home missions of North Dakota. President Simmons, his predecessor, will confine himself to Fargo College exclusively.

THE WEST.

Missouri.

Peirce City.—Rev. R. L. Layfield began services Jan. 21, which have grown into a widespread revival. The first invitation given to sinners to accept Christ was responded to by over 80 persons. This is a union movement, though begun under Congregational auspices. Rev. J. E. Pershing is pastor.

Iowa.

Lakeview.—The ingathering of 40 as a result of the labors of Evangelist Hartsough of Des Moines was unprecedented in the history of this church. Of these 25 were men and 15 women. Others are pledged to unite; the meetings are still in progress and many more are on the way to the Christian life. The church is only six years old. This important accession will bring the membership up to over 100. Rev. H. G. Cooley begins his pastorate with this revival.

Grinnell.—Baptist, Methodist and Congregational churches have united in special services, conducted by Evangelist L. P. Rowland. They are now well attended and are promising a rich harvest. Through cottage prayer meetings and gatherings of S. S. teachers with their scholars much good work has already been done.

Owen's Grove.—Special meetings resulted in a great spiritual awakening, a large proportion of the converts being adults. In one day four family altars were established. The pastor, Rev. O. L. McCleary, was assisted by Rev. F. G. Wilcox of Manson.

Independence.—Union revival meetings are in progress, under the leadership of Evangelist C. W. Merrill. The women expended $200 recently in improving the edifice. Rev. J. W. Horner is pastor.

Reinbeck.—Thirty-five persons united in 1896, 24 on confession. In this church of about 130 members, the attendance sometimes runs up to 260. Rev. H. E. Warner is pastor.

Muscatine.—First reports increased attendance at prayer meeting and signs of growing religious interest. A lady member recently gave $1,000 toward the debt on the edifice. Rev. L. G. Kent is pastor.

Iowa City, Rev. M. A. Bullock, D. D., pastor, received last year 10 members on confession and 17 by letter. Expenditures for all purposes were $3,948. The benevolences amounted to $573.

Garner.—During the past three months 13 members have been received. The new pastor, Rev. J. B. Mather, is encouraged by these accessions and by other signs of progress.

Elkader.—A house of worship, costing about $3,000, has been so far completed as to be ready for use. The dedication will be postponed for several weeks. Rev. F. L. Fisk is pastor.

Jewell.—A leading member, Mr. John Warburton, was killed instantly a few days ago at a railway grade crossing. The church sustains a great loss in this affliction.

Dickens.—Rev. J. C. George closed two and a half years of service Jan. 31, during which a meeting house was built and 87 persons were received to membership.

Iowa Falls, Rev. T. M. Price pastor, closed the year without debt. The accessions in 1896 were 41. ——Special meetings are in progress at Castana, Rev. W. A. Pottle assisting the pastor, Rev. F. C. Lewis.——For 47 years there has been connected with the church at Clay a maternal association, holding regular meetings.——At Ogden a bell has been presented to the church by a friend.——Special meetings are in progress at Oto, Rev. R. W. Jamison of Sioux City assisting the pastor.

Minnesota.

Graceville.—As a result of the revival in which young men from the colleges assisted, nine persons were received on confession, and the church has been otherwise strengthened. A few years ago it was felt that the field should be abandoned, and another denomination stood ready to administer on our estate. An efficient minister, the readiness of Christians of other communions to unite, and much hard work have resulted in a strong church, approaching self-support. Two out-stations have been developed, at one of which a building has been erected, with the prospect of organization in the spring.

Brainerd.—Second. A series of meetings has revived the church, a number of conversions are reported, with 14 added to the fellowship and the promise of others. The congregations are too large for the building, and an edifice is in prospect. A Christian Workers' class has been established to teach the converts how to use the Bible.

Spring Valley.—The resignation of the pastor, Rev. P. M. Harman, leaves the church somewhat divided, some desiring to form another. It is believed that wise counsel will prevail. Rev. J. W. Todd of Montevideo is visiting here.

Barnesville.—Removals and lack of employment at the railway shops affect our church unfavorably. It is, however, the leading one in the place, and the coming of a new pastor, Rev. J. C. Huntington, brightens the outlook.

Lake City.—Swedish. The church has been greatly strengthened by a visit from Rev. E. A. Anderson of Winona, who held a series of meetings, with several conversions.

Winona.—Second. Financial troubles have aused the pastor to leave, though the church has been liberally assisted by the H. M. S. and by First Church.

Kansas.

Kansas City.—Pilgrim united in evangelistic services with the churches of the city. Mrs. Edith L. Peake, an evangelist from California, has been preaching for them, and the interest is deep and growing.

Nickerson.—Notwithstanding loss by removal of members, the church closed its fiscal year without debt. Its services are enlisting the interest of business men to an unusual degree.

Nebraska.

Ogallala.—Rev. W. S. Hampton, after closing his meetings at Brule, a station on the U. P. R. R., nine miles west of Ogallala, where a preliminary church organization of 24 members was formed, commenced special meetings at the Sherman schoolhouse in Perkins County, 12 miles south of Ogallala. The meetings here were of profound interest and the whole community was moved. A large number expressed hope in Christ and a preliminary organization was effected of 32 members. Both of these embryo churches will soon call councils of recognition. Mr. Hampton expects to establish another out-station north of the town.

Cambridge.—Rev. John Foster began work Jan. 24 under favorable auspices. The following Thursday evening the annual supper and social were held in the opera house. The pastor was welcomed by Deacon G. G. Miller and made a happy response. The mortgage on the parsonage, which had lately been paid, was cremated with imposing ceremony. An address followed by Rev. H. S. MacAyeal, long the efficient pastor in former years, during whose stay the church progressed along all lines. His address stimulated the church to undertake large benevolent work, since its debts are all paid and it has a large active membership.

Fremont.—The approaching fortieth anniversary gave an unusual zest to the recent annual meeting. Reports showed 29 members received, nearly $4,000 raised for all purposes and benevolences amounting to over $400. The Ladies' Aid Society has completed the payments on the commodious new parsonage, and the trustees recommended the sale of the old one, the proceeds to be used in repairs on the house of worship. The S. S. membership is 323, and its receipts amounted to $217. A committee was appointed to make arrangements to celebrate the fortieth anniversary, Aug. 7. Rev. W. H. Buss is pastor.

Norfolk.—Rev. J. J. Parker entered upon the new year with all debts paid and a good record for 1896. When the pastor agreed two years ago that his salary should be reduced, the church promised that whatever was raised above the sum specified should be turned over to him, and the trustees lately paid him $50, realized from pledges above the amount promised. This Sunday school is among the strongest in the State.

Havelock, Rev. Samuel Woods, pastor, has arranged for the chancellor of the State University and several professors to give addresses Sunday afternoons.

Colorado.

Denver.—Plymouth. At a recent morning service over $2,000 was pledged in a few moments toward the debt. Sixty five accessions during the year make the membership 354. Rev. F. T. Bayley is pastor.

Rev. Addison Blanchard has been holding special meetings at Eaton, through which pastor and people have been greatly blessed.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

Benicia.—A shield-shaped board, bearing the following inscription, recently appeared on the outer wall of the meeting house: "Our Father's House, for all his Children. Samuel Weyler, Servant. God's Love Told, Sunday, 11 A. M. and 7.30 P. M.; God's Word Studied, Sunday, 10 A. M.; Family Gathering, Wednesday, 7.30 P. M. God's Work to be done always. Come and get and do good!" The idea was suggested by the pastor and artistically executed by two members.

Oakland.—Plymouth Avenue. Dr. McLean, finding the joint work of pastor and president of the seminary too burdensome, has resigned the former. He returns for a few weeks to First Church, a former charge, to supply while Rev. and Mrs. C. R. Brown journey to Palestine on their bridal tour.——Pilgrim, burdened with debt, is about to be relieved through the munificent legacy of a sister in Israel and the C. C. B. S.

Oregon.

Sherwood.—A house of worship was dedicated Jan. 10, Rev. R. A. Rowley preaching the sermon. Superintendent Clapp led in raising the deficit of $130. A series of gospel meetings was begun the same day by Revs. J. M. and Dora R. Barber.

Continued on page 211.

The advertisement of Hinds's Almond Cream o
the last page of this issue is worth your notic
That he may introduce his excellent preparatio into homes where it is not in regular use Mr. Hind sends for six cents a large sample bottle, cond tioned only on the fact of mention being made as t where this advertisement was seen.

This

Is the time to take a good blood purifier lik
Hood's Sarsaparilla. The system is now i need of this medicine, and is most susceptib to the benefit to be derived from it. The bloo is impure and depleted in quality. It fails t supply to the nerves and muscles the nouris ment needed. That is why almost every one i

Spring

Has a tired, languid feeling. That is why wor is a drag, sleep is disturbed and unrefreshin appetite is poor. Purify enrich and vitalize th blood with Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great bloo purifying and building-up medicine, and a these troubles will disappear. Those wh

Take

Hood's Sarsaparilla quickly see beneficial r sults. It creates an appetite, tones the stomac and digestive organs, strengthens the nerve gives sound, refreshing sleep, and by purifyin the blood it builds up and fortifies the who system and wards off sickness. Rememb

Hood's
Sarsaparilla

Is the Best—in fact the One True Blood Purifie
Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Ma

Hood's Pills are the best after dinner pil aid digestion. 25 cents.

FOREIGN SIGHTS.

As an outgrowth of the love for travel a sight-seeing in foreign lands there has come demand for the furnishing of complete apar ments in the style of another civilization, ra or clime.

In New York there are many notable instances such interesting apartments: Chinese pagodas, which every part of the furniture and accessories w secured in China; Japanese apartments, which are n
"copied," but brought back piecemeal from Japa old English 15th Century Halls, in which every pie of the woodwork, walls, doors, lattice windows, furn
ture, chimney-pieces, armor, etc., has been carefu transported to this country, and the entire apartme reconstructed here, as perfect a historical relic as t
Obelisk of Luxor.

Through our large facilities we are in a position to execute commissions for the r production of native apartments in the complete style of any nationality. The ea possibilities of such furnishing within the limits of modest expense may be seen in th
Turkish salon now on exhibition in our warerooms.

This faithfully copies the interior of an Arab dwelling, with all the richness of th arabesque, the shimmering of the hangings, and the barbaric splendor of the Land of th Sultan. We supply the entire equipment and execute the work at the ordinary cost of modern fashionable apartment.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

Continued from page 210

Washington.

SPRINGDALE.—Following the dedication of the house of worship, Jan. 25, special meetings were held for several days, Rev. T. G. Lewis of Colville assisting the pastor, Rev. H. M. Mobbs. Twenty-six persons were received into the church and more are to follow.

RHODE LAKE AND KELLEY were practically disbanded a year or so ago, but a seed was left which has just been reorganized. A meeting house will soon be built, probably of hewn logs.

BIG BEND.—The work has been reorganized, and the several churches which unite in the support of one pastor feel new strength and courage.

Whitman College Day, Jan. 24, was observed by many of the churches. Collections were taken for the Eells Memorial Fund.——Special meetings are being held, with good results, at Port Angeles and at Green Lake.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

Rev. W. S. Hubbell, D. D., for several years pastor of the Franklin Street Church, Somerville, Mass., and since leaving there the pastor of the North Presbyterian Church, Buffalo, N. Y., has been confined for some weeks by a painful railway accident, and the prospect of a considerable period of suffering is still before him. At his request, though very reluctantly, his church joined with him in asking the presbytery to dissolve his pastoral relations, which was done Jan. 27. Dr. Hubbell has had a remarkably successful ministry in Buffalo and is greatly beloved by his people.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

Calls.

ABLETT, John C., Tomahawk, Wis., recalled to Alton, Io., after a year's absence. Accepts, to begin Mch. 1.
ARNOLD, Wm A., Toledo, Wn., to Roy. Accepts.
BARNETT, John H., Lakewood, N. Y., accepts call to Trinity Ch., Bowmanville, Ont.
BUSSEY, Robt. D., Jr., Chicago Sem., to Grand Island, N. Y.
CHANDLER, Edward H., Union Ch., Taunton, Mass., to Wellesley. Accepts, to begin Mch. 14.
DOE, Franklin B., Ashland, Wis., to be field secretary for Ripon College, Wis.
DOYLE, Amos A., Brooklyn Ch., Seattle, Wn., to Aberdeen. Accepts.
GEORGE, Jesse C., Dickens, Io., to Webster and German Township. Accepts.
GEORGE, Jos. H., First Ch., St. Louis, Mo., to be principal of McGill University, Montreal, Can.
HARGER, Chas. H., Lyons, Col., to Ward. Accepts.
HARRIS, Benj., Palmyra, O., to Newton Falls.
SCHWIMLEY, Wm. A., Green River, Wyo., to David City, Neb. Accepts.
SLOAN, Alex., Jr., Andover Sem., to Groveland, Mass., for a year from next June.
SPANSWICK, T. W., to West Ch., Guthrie, Okl. Accepts.
STEWART, W. Ernest M., Bridge St. Ch., Streator, Ill., to Sheridan, Wyo. Accepts, to begin Feb. 21.
THOMAS, C. M., Denver, Col., to Starkville Accepts.
WALKER, John J., lately asst. pastor Central Ch., Providence, R. I., to Yarmouth, Mass.

Ordinations and Installations.

CROOKS, Chas. M., o. p. Coleraine, Mass., Feb. 2. Sermon, Rev. W. H. Ashley; other parts, Dr. Lyman Whiting, Rev. Messrs. G. G. Atkins, A. C. Hodges, D. H. Strong.
HARRINGTON, Vernon C., i. Trinitarian Ch., Norton, Mass., Feb. 4. Sermon, Rev. S. V. Cole; other parts, Rev. Messrs. P. W. Lyman, Chas. Clark, Granville Yager, E. L. House, Jacob Ide, D. D.
SHEPHERD, Alexander, o. p. Fruita, Col., Jan. 26. Sermon, Rev. W. A. Hutchinson; other parts, Rev. Messrs. S. F. Dickinson, Guy Foster and Isaac McRae.

Resignations.

ALDEN, West, Victoria, Ill., to take effect Apr. 1.
BARNETT, John H., Lakewood and Ashville, N. Y.
DIBBLE, Wm. L., Second Ch., Winona, Minn.
FEHLANDT, August F., Le Mars, Io., to take effect May 1.
GRAHAM, John J., Huntley, Ill., to take effect May 1.
LADD, Henry M., Euclid Ave. Ch., Cleveland, O., after a pastorate of 14 yrs.
MADGE, Walter W., San Luis Obispo, Cal., to return to Canada.

Dismissions.

BROCK, Geo. A., Saxonville, Mass., Jan. 26.
DUDLEY, Willis E., S. Natick, Mass.
HAMMOND, Gideon, Emerald Grove, Wis., Jan. 29.
SEWALL, Oliver D., Durham, N. H., Jan. 26.

Styles correct,
Prices right!
Only four words but what a world of meaning!

Macullar Parker Company,
Clothiers and Outfitters for Men, Youths and Boys.

400 Washington St., Boston.
166 Westminster Street, Providence.

Churches Organized.

LINTON, Fla., People's, Jan. 20, 17 members.
ROSEFIELD, Neb., 26 members.

Miscellaneous.

ANDERSON, Wilbert L., and wife, Feb. 3, gave an enjoyable reception to their parishioners of First Ch., Exeter, N. H., which was largely attended.
CHERINGTON, R. B., of Yale Divinity School, has been approbated to preach by the Association of Eastern Washington and has received four appointments for work in the Big Bend country. He is the son of Rev. F. B. Cherington of Spokane.
CONE, Jas. W., will act as pastor in Ocheltree, Kan., till April 1.
GANE, Wm. H., enters upon his fourth year at Peterboro, N. H., under favorable auspices. The anniversary of his coming was marked by a social gathering in the chapel and church parlors, attended by a host of friends.
GRANT, Lathrop C., Hamilton, N. Y., is deeply afflicted by the death of his wife.
HARRIS, Clarence J., and wife, were given a pleasant social by their parish of Colchester, Vt., lately, and a generous gift of coin and bills was presented.
SMITH, Wm B. T., and wife, Auburn, N. H., were given a farewell reception last month, and a purse of $26 with the good wishes of the parishioners.
WILCOX, F. G., on leaving his pastorate at Mason City, Io., received from friends a purse of money and a handsome silver tea set.

◆

Dr. Watson (Ian Maclaren), at a recent temperance meeting in Liverpool, gave his impressions of this country so far as they referred to drinking habits:

> While he did not say intoxicating liquors were not to be found in the station restaurants, he did not see them. People were to be seen drinking tea, coffee, milk or soup, but not intoxicants. In refined, cultured homes where wine was used it was taken with the greatest moderation, and the gentlemen did not stay at the dinner table after the ladies had left in order to drink wine. In many such homes wine was not used at all. In all his travels he only saw a handful of drunken people, not one of whom was a woman.

We will forgive Dr. Watson for intimating that he saw people drinking soup and not press the inquiry as to where he saw such an unconventional performance, in view of his, on the whole, favorable report concerning us. Interesting reports from the Continent tell of a Dutch translation of Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush already published, and a German translation under way; and the Revue de Paris and the Revue des Mondes are soon to publish translations of chapters of the same book, and portions of The Mind of the Master and The Upper Room are to appear in the Revue Chrétienne.

Before Retiring....

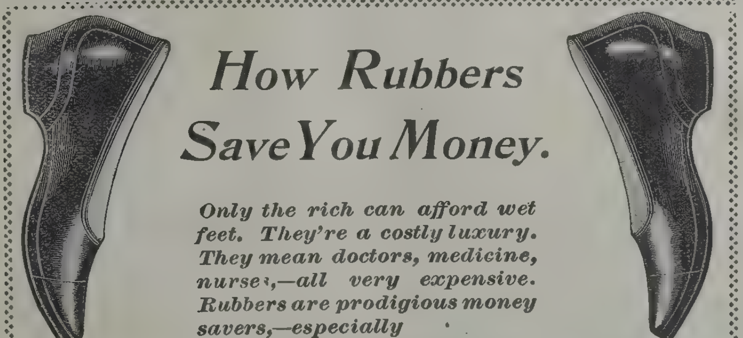
take Ayer's Pills, and you will sleep better and wake in better condition for the day's work. Ayer's Cathartic Pills have no equal as a pleasant and effectual remedy for constipation, biliousness, sick headache, and all liver troubles. They are sugar-coated, and so perfectly prepared, that they cure without the annoyances experienced in the use of so many of the pills on the market. Ask your druggist for Ayer's Cathartic Pills. When other pills won't help you, Ayer's is

THE PILL THAT WILL.



How Rubbers
Save You Money.

Only the rich can afford wet feet. They're a costly luxury. They mean doctors, medicine, nurses,—all very expensive. Rubbers are prodigious money savers,—especially

CANDEE RUBBERS.

They're made of the best rubber, and are famous wearers—and famous lookers, too. Service and style—every Candee rubber boot and shoe has these two. The Candee Co. are the oldest rubber makers in the world.

ANY SHOE STORE.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

An evangelical clergyman, of considerable and varied experience as a successful solicitor, desires to engage as secretary or financial agent for some worthy institution or cause. References exchanged. Address "M," solicitor, care Congregationalist, Boston.

Hymn-Books. 75 copies "Gospel Hymns No. 5" for sale. Half worn. $5.00 for the lot. G. Dame, Roslindale, Mass.

The "Harris"
Method of Giving

This little tract has been of immense service to the churches in suggesting systematic methods of giving. It was first published as an article in the Congregationalist, and attracted wide notice. Many large editions of the "True Method of Giving" in its present form have been sold. Price, 100 copies, $2.50; 35 copies, $1.00.

For sale at the office of The Congregationalist, Boston

FURTHER RETURNS FROM THE DAY OF PRAYER FOR COLLEGES.

ILLINOIS.

The day was an occasion of great interest at Illinois College, fully maintaining the fervor and impressiveness of previous years. It began with a largely attended prayer service at 6.30 A M., under the charge of the college Y. M. C. A. Later in the morning the various prayer bands met. At 10.30 the usual morning service was held, at which Prof. Graham Taylor of Chicago preached a powerful sermon from the text, "He emptied himself . . . wherefore God hath highly exalted him." In the afternoon another prayer service was held, led by Rev. Mr. Rice of Alton, in which President Bradley, Dr. Taylor, Dr. Fairbank of Waverly and a large number of students took part.

RIPON.

The day has come and gone when thousands of hearts united in prayer for the colleges of this and other lands. Ripon College joined in the observance of the day, and a great blessing was received in quickening the spiritual life of Christian students and in bringing to some for the first time the joy of believing. The day was preceded by favoring circumstances. Beginning with the winter term earnest prayer has been offered in all the meetings that our hearts might be open to the Holy Spirit. On two days of the previous week the State secretary of the Y. M. C. A. and Rev. C. T. Studd were with us to conduct evening meetings and to meet students during the day. The stirring words of Mr. Studd and the knowledge of the complete consecration of himself and his estate in England to the cause and service of Christ moved all deeply. He spent ten years as a missionary in China, where he will soon return. Another evening Rev. Dr. Merrell gave a clear, impressive talk on revivals, defining a genuine revival as "the incoming of divine power along the line of Christ's redemptive work," and describing the conditions necessary and the blessed results.

Rev. Mr. Buswell, a successful evangelist in connection with the Endeavor Societies, as well as a pastor, was with us one evening and on the Day of Prayer. The Christian students and others met for prayer and conference an hour before the morning service, Thursday, and came to the chapel with reverent and devout spirits. The leader spoke on the first chapter of Acts and drew lessons on the need and power of the Holy Spirit in all effective Christian work. A great number of prayers followed. The afternoon and evening meetings were filled with prayer, consecration, testimony and requests indicating the deepest interest. New voices joined in the exercises, among them that of one in the Junior Class who came here as a devout Catholic. He became interested in the Bible and meetings, but was forbidden by the priest to attend the meetings or to study the Bible. He was loyal to his instruction for a time, but finally felt that his responsibility was to God, not to man. He has now publicly declared his purpose to follow Christ. One of the youngest members of the woman's department gave herself to Christ, though no one of her family is a Christian. The good work is going on; may it not soon cease!

Enameline

The Modern

STOVE POLISH.

DUSTLESS, ODORLESS,
BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.
Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

Enameline
J. L. PRESCOTT & Co.
NEW YORK, N.Y. U.S.A.
APPLY WITH A DAMP FLANNEL POLISH WITH A FLANNEL OR BRUSH
ENAMELINE

OLIVET.

The sermon at 10 A. M. was by Rev. J. A. Blaisdell. A general prayer meeting was held at three o'clock, led by President Sperry, and class prayer meetings were conducted at various hours during the day. The Phi Alpha Pi Society and friends listened to an instructive lecture by Rev. Mr. Hunting of Marshall, Mich.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

A drinking fountain has been put up by a junior society at Prohibition Park, N. Y.

Cincinnati Endeavorers are preparing by special meetings for Mr. Moody's work next month.

A society in Wellsville, Mo., held one of its regular meetings at the home of a "shut-in" member.

A Pennsylvania society has a committee to read or report the pastor's morning sermon to invalids

A mission Sunday school in a passenger car lent by a railroad company has been started by some Texas Endeavorers.

The interest following the Week of Prayer led one-fourth of the society in Pilgrim Church, Providence, R. I, to form a "Win One" band for personal work.

The gospel wagon, employed by the Hampden County Union, Massachusetts, has already been used at 122 meetings attended probably by between 45,000 and 50,000 persons.

The progress of Christian Endeavor in Germany was evidenced at New Year's by the appearance of the first number of the new organ of the societies in Germany, Die Jugendhilfe.

The topic for the World's Prayer Chain for February is, "Armenia, that it may be spared further persecution and that a way to prosperity may be opened to the thousands left destitute by the Turk."

A Philadelphia society conducts a regular social evening for boys from the slums. One evening, when the evils of cigarette smoking were discussed, 46 boys decided to stop smoking, for a specified time at least.

The official news about the San Francisco Convention will appear in The Christian Endeavor Bulletin, to be obtained continuously until the great gathering by sending 25 cents to 112 Post Street, San Francisco.

A society in Arcot, India, three years old and having but 39 members, has conducted 133 preaching services during the past year, which were attended by 6,000 persons, and in its Sunday schools there are more than 2,500 scholars

The Reformed Church C. E. societies in America have made quite a record by the number of churches that have been built by their contributions. A year's course of study on denominational matters has been planned for the societies of this church in the United States. Five minutes weekly is to be given to the Heidelberg catechism and a special denominational topic is assigned once a month.

A society in Cleveland, O., of 83 members, all having small incomes, fulfilled a pledge to raise by freewill offerings $500 for foreign missions the past year, without lessening gifts to their own church. They also made more than 700 visits to the sick and needy, distributing more than 5,000 pieces of literature, and started a missionary and reference library of 100 volumes. Two of the number have gone as missionaries to Africa.

The missionary department of the California Union has established a missionary extension summer school for two weeks at Glenwood, in the Santa Cruz Mountains. The forenoons are occupied with denominational conferences in charge of leaders sent by the missionary boards. In the afternoon an opportunity is given by individuals or groups to talk with and question the workers. General lectures illustrated by stereopticon are given in the evening. They usually attract many from the neighborhood and give occasion for personal work.

LIVER AND KIDNEY TROUBLE.

Cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy.

Mrs S. R Berry, Lebanon, N. H., says:—

"I could not sleep nights and the chills or shaking would follow, and I could do but very little of anything. I had to lie down a great deal, and my nerves were very weak and of no use. There was a terrible pain in my head, and I was almost a complete wreck of my former self. I was depressed in mind and spirits. My liver was swollen and my kidneys were very bad.

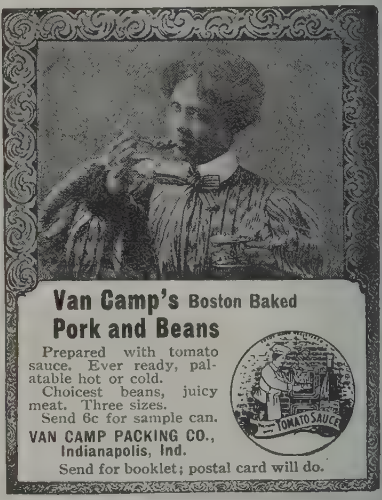
"I used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and I will say that this wonderful medicine is the greatest blessing that ever came into a family.

MRS. S. R. BERRY.

"It has done perfect wonders for me. After taking two bottles I could do more work than I had for over a year, and now I can eat better than ever, am strong again and have got back my former looks and good color."

If the bowels are constipated, use Dr. Greene's Cathartic Pills with the Nervura.

Dr. Greene, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful physician in curing nervous and chronic diseases, can be consulted free, personally or by letter.



Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans

Prepared with tomato sauce. Ever ready, palatable hot or cold.

Choicest beans, juicy meat. Three sizes.

Send 6c for sample can.

VAN CAMP PACKING CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

Send for booklet; postal card will do.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT. Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER,
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

EDUCATION.

—— The Finns have just established a college at Hancock, Mich.

—— Drs. Gordon, Bradford, McKenzie, Stimson and Merriman are on the staff of preachers at Yale for this term.

—— Rutgers College has received $5,000 from vice-president elect Garret A. Hobart, an alumnus and trustee of that venerable institution.

—— Nearly half of Johns Hopkins University's graduates, to the number of 800, are now on the faculties of the leading colleges of the country.

—— The Wellesley College Y. W. C. A. is showing its practical Christian spirit by furnishing a parlor for the servants employed in the college.

—— The School for Christian Workers, Springfield, receives $8,000 from the estate of Mrs. Horatio Lyon. Pomona College also receives $10,000.

—— Mrs. George Locke of Lockeford, Cal., has just pledged to President Baldwin for Pomona College $10,000, a memorial to her son, who recently died.

—— There are forty students from without the Free Church fold studying at the Free Church College, Edinburgh, drawn thither by men like Davidson and Dods.

—— The New York City Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor has decided to establish a social settlement on the West Side, 413 West 46th Street. Instruction in cooking and home-making will be a feature of its work.

—— Dartmouth College has a remarkable record for its influence on the jurisprudence of the country. Statistics, recently compiled, show that twenty-nine per cent of the total number of its graduates from 1770 to 1890 have been lawyers.

—— The University of New York extends to the students of Princeton, Drew and New Brunswick Theological Seminaries the opportunities that it granted in 1890 to Union Seminary, namely, lecture and library privileges, and degrees of B. D. and D. D. conferred upon all students or clergymen recommended by the seminary authorities.

—— The students of Union Seminary are fortunate in being able to hear this season lectures by Rev. P. S. Moxom, D. D., on Personal Righteousness, President Tucker on Social Righteousness, William Allen Butler on Commercial Righteousness, Bishop Satterlee on Ecclesiastical Righteousness, and Dr. Parkhurst on Civic Righteousness.

—— Among the degrees conferred at the semi-centennial of Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis., Jan. 19, 20, was the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity given Rev. John Faville of Appleton and his twin brother, Henry Faville, of La Crosse, both graduates. The degree of LL. D. was given to Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, whose father founded the institution which bears his name.

—— One problem which the administrators of our colleges and universities face is explicitly referred to in President Eliot's latest report for Harvard. Whereas the average rate of Harvard's income from general investments during the period from 1870 to 1875 was 7.59 per cent, during the years 1890–95 the average rate of income was only 4.93 per cent., and in 1895–96 only 4.73 per cent. Today $100,000 is required for a professorship fund, while forty years ago $50,000 was considered a very satisfactory endowment.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. AZARIAH HYDE.

One of the most respected citizens of Galesburg, Ill., Rev. Azariah Hyde, died Jan. 25, at the age of 83 years. He was born in Randolph, Vt., graduated from Middlebury College in 1838 and was approbated to preach in 1842. In 1845 he became pastor at Benson, Vt., and for 26 years continued in ministerial work in Rutland County. He then went to a Presbyterian church in Polo, Ill., and subsequently to Galesburg, becoming financial agent of Knox College. He was a man of strong, broad and lovable character and was a power for righteousness.

Do not allow your system to get weak and debilitated. It is easy to keep well and strong by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

STRANGE SIGHTS BROUGHT HOME.—Since the Chicago exposition the people of this country have had a better idea of foreigners and foreign dwellings, and one result of this has been an attempt to furnish rooms in our modern houses after the style of foreign nations. This method of furnishing is less expensive than would at first appear. It is not at all difficult, for example, to furnish a Turkish or Persian room, while a Japanese room may easily be had at trifling cost. The best way to set about it is to place the entire work in the hands of the Paine Furniture Co , who are now making a specialty of this class of foreign furnishing. In their warerooms they exhibit a Turkish salon, which gives an excellent idea of the easy possibilities of this plan.

YOUR present need is pure, rich blood and a strong and healthy body, because with the approach of spring and the beginning of warmer weather your physical system will undergo radical changes. All the impurities which have accumulated during colder weather must now be expelled or serious consequences will result. The one true blood purifier prominently in the public eye today is Hood's Sarsaparilla. Its record of cures is unequaled. Its sales are the largest in the world. A few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla will prepare you for spring by purifying and enriching your blood and toning and invigorating your whole system.

Art Embroidery
Here is the greatest value ever offered in embroidered cut work Bureau Scarfs, Sideboard Scarfs, Pillow Shams and Table Squares, worth from $1.00 to $1.50 each, for a Special Sale, choice at. ... 48c.
200 pairs EMBROIDERED PILLOW SHAMS, actual value $2.00 to $2.50 a pair, special February Sale price per pair........... ...... 96c.
WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

Why not make art as well as music part of the church service? By the aid of one of our Magic Lanterns you can illustrate your sermon with some of the world's masterpieces in art.

Special Lanterns and Slides for all purposes sold and loaned on easy terms. Send for free literature.
RILEY BROTHERS,
Bradford, Eng. 16 Beekman St., New York.
The largest Stereopticon outfitters in the world.
BRANCHES—BOSTON: 36 Bromfield St. CHICAGO: 196 La Salle St. KANSAS CITY (Mo.): 515 East 14th St. MINNEAPOLIS: [illegible] Washington Ave. So. CHATTANOOGA: 708 Market.

CHURCH ORGANS
Hook & Hastings Co.
Boston, Mass.

SINGERS LEAD THE WORLD.
Over 13,000,000 Made and Sold.
Highest Awards at the World's Columbian Exposition
FOR Excellence of Design,
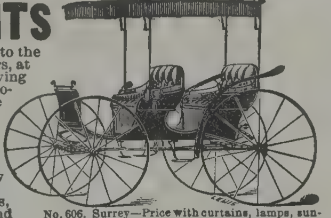
Excellence of Construction,
Regularity of Motion,
Ease of Motion,
Great Speed,
Adjustability,
Durability,
Ease of Learning,
Convenience of Arrangement.
SINGER SEWING MACHINES
IF YOU BUY A SINGER,
You will receive careful instruction from a competent teacher at your home.
You can obtain necessary accessories direct from the Company's offices.
You will get prompt attention in any part of the world, as our offices are everywhere; and we give careful attention to all customers, no matter where their machine may have been purchased.
You will be dealing with the leading sewing-machine manufacturers in the world, having an unequaled experience and an unrivaled reputation to maintain—the strongest guarantees of excellence and fair dealing.
SOLD ON EASY PAYMENTS.
THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.
OFFICES EVERYWHERE.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS

No. 37½. Surrey Harness—Price $15.00. As good as sells for $22.00.
but have sold direct to the consumer for 24 years, at wholesale prices, saving them the dealers' profits. Ship anywhere for examination before sale. Everything warranted. 100 styles of Carriages, 90 styles of Harness. Top Buggies as low as $35. Phaetons as low as $55. Spring Wagons, Road Wagons, etc. Send for large, free Catalogue.



No. 606. Surrey—Price with curtains, lamps, sunshade, apron and fenders, $60. As good as sells for $90.
ELKHART CARRIAGE AND HARNESS MFG. CO., W. B. PRATT, Sec'y, ELKHART, IND.

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

BRACE—In Philadelphia, at the Presbyterian Hospital, Jan. 25, Rev. Seth C. Brace, aged 86 yrs.

CHENERY—In Medfield, Jan. 27, Dea. Benjamin Chenery, aged 93 yrs.

FAIRCHILD—In Cleveland, O., at St. Vincent Hospital, Feb. 1, Mary Fletcher, daughter of Jas. H. Fairchild, LL. D., ex-president of Oberlin College, aged 50 yrs., 3 mos., 21 dys. She was for ten years matron of Baldwin Cottage, Oberlin.

HADLEY—In New Haven, Ct., Feb. 2, Anne T., widow of Prof. James Hadley and mother of Prof. Arthur T. Hadley, aged 80 yrs.

LYON—In Roxbury, Feb. 6., George Lyon, aged 77 yrs. 6 mos.

MRS. CLARA B. BABCOCK.

At the South Congregational Church, Chicago, on the afternoon of Sunday, Jan. 17, were conducted the funeral services of Mrs. Clara Bajley Babcock, pastor, ex-pastor and neighboring minister uniting in the service. Seldom does one see on a funeral occasion such a large representation of young people. Members of the Boys' Brigade acted as pall-bearers and escort. One side of the spacious church was given to the Sunday school, the girls of several classes singing the favorite songs of the deceased. Behind the family relatives sat a number of aged women from the Old Ladies' Home. Here, at the very outset, are furnished, even to a stranger, hints as to the consecrated usefulness of a noble Christian woman.

Born in Boston, Feb. 7, 1837, in the house adjoining the Odeon, the early meeting place of the Central Congregational Church, she seemed from the first to breathe that Christian atmosphere that led along, step by step, through the New England doorway of education, to a life of consecrated service. Sturdy New Hampshire stock lay behind her, the father, Charles Cook, coming from Campton and the mother, Abigail Mason, from Hampton. As the oldest child and only daughter the best New England coald give was none too good for her. Passing through the Boston public schools she entered Abbot Academy, Andover, where she graduated in the class of 1856. Returning to Boston she began as a member of the Central Church, then worshipping on Winter Street, regular work in the choir. Here she became acquainted with the organist, Mr. William R. Babcock, to whom she was married in 1859. After a bridal trip in Europe, West Newton became their home until the early death of her husband, who, under the inspiration of Finney's preaching, had felt impelled to study for the ministry. All these experiences were but preparing her for this life of mission work, the Valley of Achor again proving but the door of hope.

For the next few years she worked among the colored people of the South, first under the A. M. A. in Georgia and later in the Lincoln Mission at Washington. Returning to her dear old Bay State, it was only to reengage in special work at Newburyport and Salem.

Coming to Chicago she united with the South Congregational Church Jan. 3, 1886, and at once identified herself with the needs of the community. The South End Gospel Association was organized. Work among the street car men was begun. A reading-room was opened on Cottage Grove Avenue. Industrial work became a special feature, these lines of missionary activity continuing from 1886 to 1892. In this year she was made church visitor for the South Church, in which office she continued until her death.

From the beginning her loving sympathies went out to the Old Ladies' Home and the Erring Woman's Refuge, but her special work was among the young. Her room was a complete armory of equipment for young people's work, into which she entered with a full heart She never wearied of trying to interest them in various lines of work. She had a particular aptitude for arranging and conducting gatherings where the young folks were the working forces. One of her last bits of work was in connection with the children's celebration at Christmastide.

Organized relief work became a feature of the hard times in the winter of 1893–94. Looking not merely at the few near her, but at the many suffering ones farther away, she came to have a special interest in the starving poor of South Chicago, and in that part of the city her face came to be a benediction, her interest continuing here to the end. Many will mourn the loss of one entering so beautifully into the spirit of the Master, "who went about doing good." Flowers may be put into a vase, but their perfume will spread. These flowers may be removed from the room but their fragrance will linger still.

For several years she had been far from well, occasioned by a poisonous growth upon her neck. It was thought that, by a surgical operation, this could be safely removed. It was undertaken on Wednesday, Jan. 13, but the system was unable to retain food to withstand the shock and loss of blood. Life just ebbed away, and on the afternoon of Friday she "fell asleep in Jesus." The body was taken to Boston and buried in the family lot at Mount Hope Cemetery next her father and mother. A brother only survives her, George M. Cook of Chicago.

Surprised, almost shocked, by this sudden and unlooked-for Providence, her host of friends can only feel and say:

It is little matter at what hour of day the righteous fall asleep.
Death cannot come to one untimely, who has learned to die.
The less of the brief life, the more of heaven;
The shorter time, the longer immortality.

Life's race well run,
Life's work well done,
Life's crown well won,
Now cometh rest.

G. H. B.

MRS. SUSAN HOOPER BREWER.

On Dec. 11 at Westfield, N. Y., where she had lived for thirty-six years, died Mrs. Susan H. Brewer, widow of the late Hon. Francis Beattie Brewer, representative in Congress of the thirty-third New York district. Mrs. Brewer was in her sixty-ninth year and was unusually vigorous physically and mentally, but succumbed to an attack of pneumonia after but three days' illness. She was born at Gilmanton, N. H., Aug. 28, 1828, and was the daughter of Prof. Beman Rood of the Gilmanton Theological Seminary, and was educated at Gilmanton Academy. She was married to Dr. Brewer July 20, 1848, and lived for a time at Barnet, Vt., where Dr. Brewer began the practice of medicine, and afterwards at Plymouth, Mass. In 1851 Dr. Brewer gave up his profession in order to join his father, the late Ebenezer Brewer of Pittsburg, in his extensive lumber business in northwestern Pennsylvania, afterward merged into the petroleum trade, in which the firm were pioneers, Dr. Brewer having personally organized the first company and contributed the land where the original spring existed and where the first well was bored.

The family moved to Westfield in 1861 and Mrs. Brewer at once united with the Presbyterian church, of which she was an active and beloved member until her death. She was a woman of great attractions of mind and person, whose intellectual powers were developed by sound education, constant reading and study and extensive travels in this country and Europe, but she was even more conspicuous by her devotion to the duties of a wife and mother and for her exemplary Christian life. Her days were a record of charity and good works, and she had the respect and esteem of the entire community and the devoted affection of all who knew her well.

JOHN SYLVESTER LEAROYD.

This beloved and faithful servant of God passed to his eternal reward Jan. 14, after a protracted illness. Forty years he had been an earnest and diligent member of Maple Street Church, Danvers, for thirty-two years a most efficient deacon, and for over thirty years in succession the very active and energetic superintendent of its Sunday school. The church and the school are largely indebted to him for their growth and prosperity, both material and spiritual, while the community at large has lost a citizen of sterling integrity and unquestioned uprightness.

He was a man of strong convictions, which he maintained with strong and vigorous utterance. He held to the Bible as the veritable word of God, and with the tenacity of personal affection he held to Jesus Christ as the Son of God, the Saviour of the world and his glorious Lord. He was a constant advocate of the evangelical doctrines of Christianity, and in the prayer meeting and the Sunday school he earnestly contended for the faith, and for a corresponding life and character. And his own life and character were a fair illustration of the faith which he strenuously held and urgently advocated.

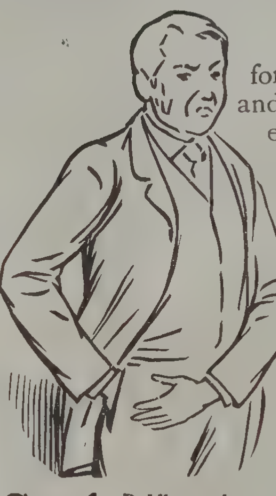
His death is the first break in the roll of nine brothers and sisters since his birth, sixty-four years ago. Honored of his fellowmen on earth, he is honored now in the presence of angels in heaven.

Men Who Work Hard
Need Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Taken at bedtime it brings sound, sweet sleep; quiets the nerves and builds up brain tissue. It's good for digestion, too. Take a little after meals.

One reason why Scott's Emulsion cures weak throats, weak lungs, makes rich blood, and strengthens puny and delicate children is because all its parts are mixed in so scientific a manner that the feeblest digestion can deal with it. This experience has only come by doing one thing for nearly 25 years.

This means, purest ingredents, most evenly and delicately mixed, best adapted for those whose strength has failed or whose digestion would repel an uneven product. For sale by all druggists at 50c. and $1.



Who pays

for all the clothes, etc., that are worn out and torn to pieces in the wash? Whoever it is, he or she ought to insist that the washing shall be done with Pearline, and with Pearline only. Then that ruinous, expensive rub, rub, rub, over the wash-board, which makes all the trouble, will be done away with.

It isn't a little matter, either, this needless wear and tear. It's big enough to pay any man to look after it, and stop it. Pearline saves not only hard work, but hard-earned money.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 493 JAMES PYLE, New York.

A Vacancy

In many a household there is an empty chair that ought not to be empty. Hosts of children have been carried off by croup when there was no need for it at all. Croup comes along without any warning. Usually it comes in the night-time, when the drug stores are closed. That is why every mother ought to have at her elbow a bottle of : : : :

Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam

It never fails to cure Croup if taken at the first symptom. Usually it cures after the disease has made considerable progress. But it is wise to keep a bottle on the shelf all the time.

This good remedy also cures Coughs, Colds, Pneumonia, Bronchitis, Asthma, Hoarseness, Whooping Cough, Influenza and all diseases of the breathing organs. It cures, remember.

Large Bottles, 75c.
Small Bottles, 35c.
Trial Size, - 10c.
At all good drug stores.

Made only by F. W. KINSMAN & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Druggists,
6th Av., cor. 39th St. and 4th Av., cor. 25th St., N.Y.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Feb. 21–27. Our Little Worries and How to Get Rid of Them. Ps. 121: 1–8; John 14: 1.

Ideally there is no such word in the Christian vocabulary as worry. As a matter of fact it occurs over and over again. So long as we are in the body, subject to physical weariness and depression, to financial anxieties, to the friction that arises from living and working with others, we are likely to know by sad experience the meaning of worry. We may think we have disposed of our cares and fears by one mighty effort of the will. We may lay them aside as we go to our rest, but, lo and behold! much to our disgust, they are with us again in the morning as vigorous and as intrusive as ever. And the peculiar thing about the psychology of the matter is that the mind in such a state finds it difficult to discriminate between little and large worries. Things trivial in themselves assume immense proportions. The fear that we may not catch our train looms into sight alongside of the dread that we may experience a collapse of fortune. What are we to do then in the presence of these little, big worries?

First, remember that they are a part of life, that it does not necessarily prove that we are not Christians because we are their prey now and then. Character becomes sturdy and symmetrical in proportion as these worries are met and overcome. Some of the best saints in the world understand what that battle is. Charles Kingsley, on his deathbed murmuring, "No more fighting, no more fighting," is the type of the noble souls in all the ages whom God has thus tested. If we never had an anxious thought, how should we get in sympathy with our suffering, burdened, fellow-creatures in this world of doubt and fear?

But we must remember, also, that worries are not the whole of life. There is always a set of compensating circumstances, a train of important forces which we may match against our swarm of little worries. Life is not meant to be permanently clouded by them. Tennyson in his poem Two Voices brings this thought out. The man has wrestled long with the spirit who asks:

> Thou art so steeped in misery
> Were it not better not to be?

But at last he breaks away from the malign influence and goes out into the beauty and the peace of a summer Sabbath morning. The sight of a family going with reverent step to the house of God changes the whole current of his feeling, and

> The woods were filled so full of song,
> There seemed no room for sense of wrong.

So it is often with us. We go forth to our day's labor weighed down by some anxiety. Suddenly we hear the joyous voices of little children at play, or we catch sight of the graceful curve of the distant mountain or meadow, or we read in the daily paper of some heroic deed, or we get fresh evidence of the blessedness of a human friendship. And somehow the worries are all gone.

But the crowning thought for us is that Christ redeems life from worry. He would not only save us from our sins, but from nameless terrors of the night and of the day, from all that weakens our strength and mars our natures and impairs the value of our Christian service. He is such a mighty Saviour that he can do all this for us, and we are not truly saved by him until he has made it impossible for little things to disturb our peace and paralyze our power.

Parallel verses: Ps. 37: 3–8; 55: 22; Isa. 30: 15; Luke 12: 22; 1 Peter 5: 7.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are unrivaled for relieving coughs, hoarseness and all throat troubles. Sold only in boxes.

$3,400.00 CASH AND PRIZES GIVEN FREE EACH MONTH FOR Sunlight SOAP WRAPPERS

As follows:

4 First Prizes, each of $100 Cash - - -$ 400.00
20 Second " " " $100 PIERCE SPECIAL Bicycles* 2,000.00
40 Third " " " $ 25 Gold Watches - 1,000.00
Cash and Prizes given each month - - $3,400.00
12
Total given during 12 mos. 1897, $40,800.00

HOW TO OBTAIN THEM.

Competitors to save as many SUNLIGHT SOAP Wrappers as they can collect. Cut off the top portion of each wrapper, that portion containing the heading "SUNLIGHT SOAP." These (called "Coupons") are to be sent, postage fully paid, enclosed with a sheet of paper stating Competitor's full name and address and the number of Coupons sent in, to Lever Bros., Ltd., New York, marked on outside Wrapper (top left hand corner) with NUMBER of the DISTRICT Competitor lives in.

No. of District	NAME OF DISTRICT.
1	New York City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands, New Jersey.
2	New York State (outside of N.Y. City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands).
3	Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and District of Columbia.
4	The New England States.

*The Bicycles are the celebrated Pierce Special, 1897 Pattern, m'f'd by Geo. N. Pierce & Co., of Buffalo, Boston and New York. Fitted with Hartford Tires, First Class Nickle Lamp, New Departure Bell, Standard Cyclometer, and Hunt Lace Saddle.

RULES.

1. Every month during 1897 in each of the 4 districts prizes will be awarded as follows:
The 1 Competitor who sends in the Largest Number of coupons from the district in which he or she resides will receive $100 Cash.
The 5 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Pierce Special bicycle, price $100.00.
The 10 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Gold Watch, price $25.
2. The Competitions will Close the Last Day of Each Month during 1897. Coupons received too late for one month's competition will be put into the next.
3. Competitors who obtain wrappers from unsold soap in dealer's stock will be disqualified. Employees of Lever Brothers, Ltd., and their families, are debarred from competing.
4. A printed list of Winners in Competitor's district will be forwarded to Competitors in about 21 days after each competition closes.
5. Lever Brothers, Ltd., will endeavor to award the prizes fairly to the best of their ability and judgment, but it is understood that all who compete agree to accept the award of Lever Brothers, Ltd., as final.

LEVER BROS., Ltd., New York.

A Matter of Taste

That people who have tried different chocolates prefer WHITMAN'S Instantaneous Chocolate to all others. It is distinctively delicious—distinctively pure.
Your grocer has it in 1 lb. and ½ lb. tins.
STEPHEN F. WHITMAN & SON, Philada.

Here's Hope! BRIGHT'S DISEASE AND DIABETES CAN BE CURED.

SEND for History of Cures and all details. We invite inquiry as to what we have done and are doing. We guarantee no misrepresentation. Investigation will compel belief.

CONSULTATION FREE.
The Tompkins-Corbin Co.
1300 Broadway, New York City.
ESTABLISHED 1890.
J. W. CORBIN, Gen'l Manager. | A. W. TOMPKINS, M.D. Consulting Physician.

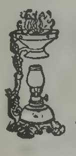
PIMPLY FACES

Pimples, blotches, blackheads, red, rough, oily, mothy skin, itching, scaly scalp, dry, thin, and falling hair, and baby blemishes prevented by CUTICURA SOAP, the most effective skin purifying and beautifying soap in the world, as well as purest and sweetest for toilet, bath, and nursery.

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. ☞ "How to Beautify the Skin," free.

BLOOD HUMORS Permanently Cured by CUTICURA REMEDIES.



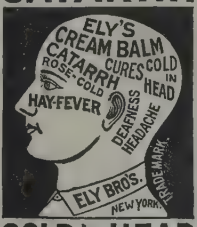
Vapo-Cresolene

Cures While You Sleep, Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Catarrh & Colds.

CRESOLENE when vaporized in the sick room will give immediate relief. Its curative powers are wonderful, at the same time preventing the spread of contagious diseases by acting as a powerful disinfectant. Harmless to the youngest child. Sold by druggists. Descriptive booklet with testimonials free.

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 69 Wall St.
SCHIEFFELIN & CO., New York, Sole Agents.

CATARRH



COLD IN HEAD

NASAL CATARRH is a LOCAL DISEASE and is the result of colds and sudden climatic changes.

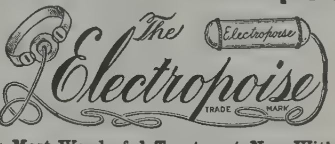
This remedy does not contain mercury or any other injurious drug.

ELY'S CREAM BALM

Opens and cleans the Nasal Passages, Allays Pain and Inflammation, Heals and Protects the Membrane from Colds, Restores the Senses of Taste and Smell. Is quickly absorbed. Gives relief at once. 50 cents at Druggists or by mail; samples 10c. by mail.

ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren Street, New York.

REDUCED FROM $25 TO $10



This Most Wonderful Treatment Now Within the Reach of All.
Circulars, Testimonials, etc., Free.
L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS.
General Agent for the New England States.

In a world where "Cleanliness is next to godliness" no praise is too great for SAPOLIO

New Spring Suits.

Black, Blue and Green Suits, made from all-wool Cheviot, lined throughout with Changeable Taffeta Silk	$25
Green, Brown and Blue Tailor-Made Suits, tight-fitting waist, Silk-Lined throughout	$45
Blue, Green and Brown, all-wool Cheviot Suit, percaline lined	$15
Tailor-Made Suits in Tan Covert Cloth, Silk-Lined Jacket Skirt, lined with percaline	$35
Tan and Green Braided Tailor-Made Suits, tight-fitting Jacket	$33
1 Green and White India Silk Costume, trimmed with Lace	$45
1 Black and White Costume, Silk-Lined throughout, trimmed with Silk and Lace	$50
1 Blue and White India Silk Costume, White Chiffon front	$58
1 Blue and White India Silk Costume, made over Green Taffeta Silk. Front of waist White Chiffon over Green Silk	$85
1 Black India Silk Costume, with White Polka Dot	$35
1 Tailor-Made Suit, Green Eton Jacket, Green and Tan Plaid Skirt, Silk-Lined throughout	$40
Blue, Green, Red and Gray Tailor-Made Suits, Silk-Lined throughout with Changeable Silk	$35

New Linen Batiste Waists made over Silk.

New Black Figured Silk Waists.

New Velveteen Shirt Waists.

New Figured India Silk Shirt Waists.

New Silk Shirt Waists in Changeable Silk.

R. H. STEARNS & CO.,

Tremont Street and Temple Place, Boston.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'

TOURS.

ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED.

A party will leave Boston Feb. 25, for a Grand Tour of days through the Southern States, in Vestibuled Sleeping, Dining and Composite Library Obser tion Cars.

Mexico and Californi

Ample time will be devoted to all the leading cities and ot places of historic and picturesque interest in Mexico, including Wonderful Tampico Division of the Mexican Central Ra way, a Week in the City of Mexico and a Four Days' T over the Vera Cruz Railway.

In California, San Diego, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Santa Barba San Francisco, Monterey, etc., will be visited.

The return tickets may be used from California on Any Regu Train until July, 1897, or with any one of Nine Parties un Special Escort, with a Choice of Three Different Routes.

On same date a party will leave Boston for a 35 days' tour

Omitting California MEXICO Omitting California

Florida Tours, Feb. 25.
Jamaica, Feb. 25.
Washington Tours, March 26, April 5 and May 11.
Washington Inauguration Trip, Feb. 25.
California Tours, Feb. 15 and 25, March 15.
European Tours, March 27, May 4, 15, 19, June 9 and 26.

Independent Railroad Tickets via the Boston & Alba Boston & Maine and Other Lines; also Steamship Tick to all points.

☞ Send for descriptive book, mentioning the particular trip desi

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB,

296 Washington Street, opp. School Street, Boston.

For Face, Hands and Complexio

HINDS' HONE AND ALMOND CREAM

Insures a fair, clear skin, soft and healthy, free from ANY irritation. Is especially valuable for Chapped Hands, Face, or Lips, and all Irritations or Eruptions.

As a Toilet Requisite is invaluable because of its purifying and healing properties and cleanliness. It contains no oils, grease, chemicals—leaves no visible trace of its use—is perfectly harmless.

VIRGINIA STATION, VA., Jan. 30, 1897.

MR. A. S. HINDS;

Dear Sir: I have used your Honey and Almond Cream and find it to be just what it is recommended to be, in fact, I am more than pleased with it.

Yours truly, R. B. TWONER.

MR. A. S. HINDS; BOSTON, Feb. 2., 1897.

Dear Sir: We have long known that your Honey and Almond Cream has a high reputation. Several of our staff have had it in their families for years. It is certainly a wonderful preparation and fully deserves the splendid success it has already won.

Yours sincerely, THE GOLDEN RULE.

SAMPLE BOTTLE, with Book descriptive and testimonial, SENT FOR SIX CENTS, by mentioning THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

For sale at all Druggists, or sent, charges prepaid, 50 cents per Bottle.

A. S. HINDS, Portland, Me.

Volume LXXXII Number 7

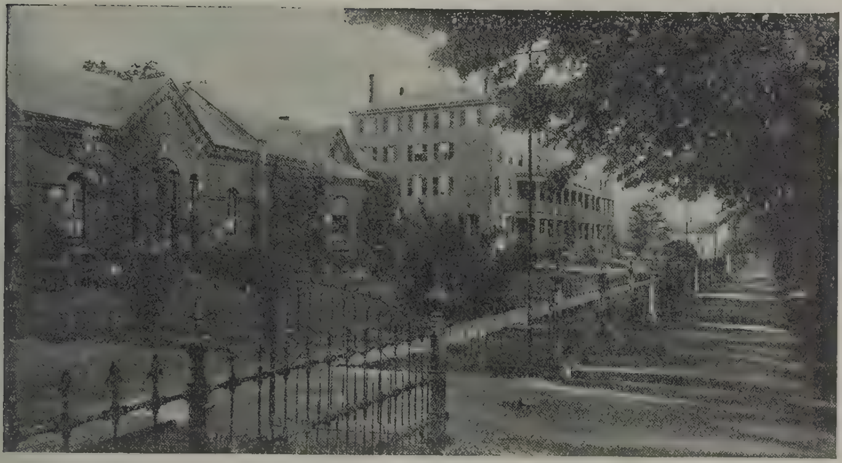
THE CONGREGATIONALIST

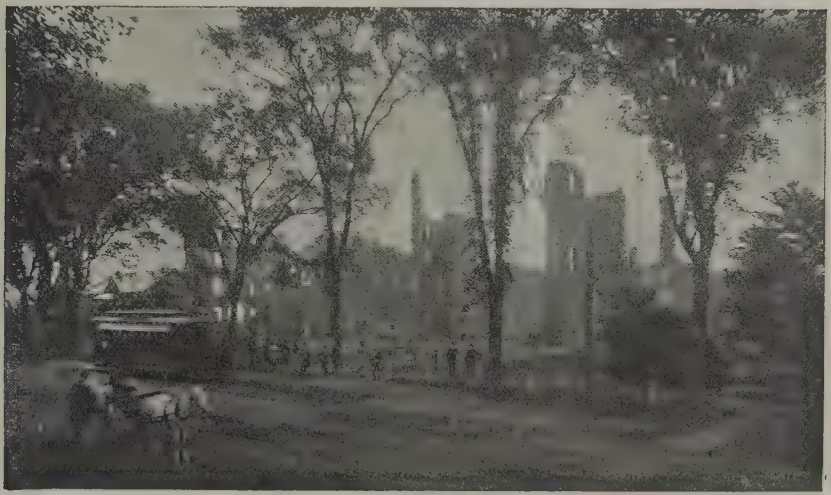
Boston Thursday 18 February 1897

Mt. Holyoke College

Before and Since the Fire
of
Sept. 27, 1896.



THE LIBRARY AND MAIN DORMITORY.



THE RUINS OF THE MAIN DORMITORY.

"There is nothing in the universe that I fear but that I shall not know all my duty, or shall fail to do it."—Mary Lyon.

ONE OF THE NEW DORMITORIES (IN PROCESS OF ERECTION).

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 221
Mary Lyon's Just Reward 222
The Place of Revivals in the Church 222
George Washington 223
Belligerent Greece 223
Serving Our Generation 223
Current History 224
In Brief 225

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

Interior 226

CONTRIBUTIONS:

The New Mt. Holyoke. H. A. B. 227
Mary Lyon; Her Breadth and Progressiveness. Anna C. Edwards 229

THE HOME:

Be Swift to Love—a poem. Elizabeth J. Woods 231
Paragraphs 231
Given to Hospitality. Elizabeth Elliot 231
Food for the Child up to School Age. II. Mary E. Green, M. D. 232
Washington's Birthday—a selected poem 232
The Good of Sorrow—a selection 232
Closet and Altar 233
Mothers in Council 233
Babie Olive—a poem. Rev. W. T. Sleeper 234
A Little Boy's Interview with Washington—a selection 234
About People 234
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 235
Corner Scrap-Book 235
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for Feb. 28 236
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for Feb. 28-March 6 237
PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 237
LITERATURE 239
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 241
The Louisiana Association 230
An Installation in Cambridge 238
A City Meeting House Dedicated 242
Weekly Register 251

MISCELLANEOUS:

Our Armenian Orphans' Fund 237
Mr. Murphy at Faneuil Hall 238
The Free Organ Recitals 238
An Honored Social Settlement Worker 238
Notices 241
Biographical 246
Business Outlook 247
Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 248
Rev. William Kincaid, D. D. 249
Deaths 250
Temperance 251

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.
On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

$300.00 in CASH

A 25c. PATTERN FREE.

This Ladies' New '97 Shirt Waist

TO EVERY ONE

HOW many words do you think you can correctly spell with the letters in the word "MANUFACTURERS?" Using each letter as desired, but not more times than it appears in "Manufacturers"—verbs, pronouns, adjectives, nouns, adverbs, plurals allowed. Use any standard dictionary. All legitimate English words count. Proper nouns, prefixes, suffixes, obsolete and foreign words do not count. Work it out as follows: Am, Can, Cans, Cure, Cures, Rum, Same, Fact, Facts, Fracture, Manufacturers, etc. Words spelled alike but having different meanings count as one.

Our Offer.—We will pay $100 for the largest list, $50 for the second largest, $25 for the third, $10 each for the next five, $5 each for the next ten, and $1 each for the next twenty-five. That is to say we will divide among forty-three contestants the aggregate sum of $300, according to merit. Don't you think you could be one of the forty-three? TRY IT.

Our Purpose.—The above rewards for mental effort are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to MODES, by May Manton, the most popular up to date Fashion Magazine in the world. Its 36 pages, replete with beautiful illustrations of the latest styles in ladies', misses' and children's garments, make it a real necessity in every household; the Designs and Fashion Hints, being by May Manton, render it invaluable as an absolutely reliable Fashion Guide.

Our Conditions.—You must send with your list of words 25c. (stamps or silver) for a Three Months' Trial Subscription to MODES.

Our Extra Inducement.—Every person sending 25 cents and a list of 15 words or more, will, in addition to three months' subscription, receive by return mail a pattern of this style Shirt Waist No. 6999 (illustrated above), in any size from 32 inches to 44 inches.

Our Aim.—The present monthly circulation of MODES exceeds 100,000. We aim to make it 200,000.

This contest will close March 5th next so the names of successful spellers may be published in May issue of MODES, mailed April 5th, but SEND IN YOUR LIST AT ONCE. For our responsibility we refer you to any Mercantile Agency. Address:

MODES FASHION MAGAZINE,
Dept. 536, 130 White Street, New York.

THE HYMNAL

WITH TUNES

FOR USE IN THE SERVICES OF THE CHURCHES

Edited by the Rev. LOUIS F. BENSON, D. D.
WILLIAM W. GILCHRIST, Mus. Doc., Musical Editor.

The Hymnal was prepared by a committee of several persons specially qualified by practical experience for the undertaking. It was then placed in the hands of the editor, who had command of unusual resources for his task. His work shows itself in every line of every hymn. The Hymnal throughout was subjected to the same conscientious and minute care that is employed in establishing the standard text of a classic. The same care is displayed in the arrangement of the hymns and in bringing together words and music to form a perfect whole. The indexes of the book are the most complete and satisfactory that have ever been prepared for a similar work. The hymns for Special Occasions have a wider range and appropriateness than will be found in other books.

Dr. W. W. Gilchrist, the musical editor, is too well known to make it necessary to more than allude to the value of his share in the work.

By a careful process of selection the number of hymns was reduced to 724, among which will be found nearly everything that any church can desire in its services. All of the hymns which through long use and association have become an inseparable part of the services of praise throughout the church will be found in The Hymnal, and with them the music with which they are commonly associated. Churches therefore with a very moderate musical capacity will be able to use The Hymnal, but there is also a wealth of new music that renders The Hymnal available for churches whose musical equipment is most elaborate and complete.

"In reply to your letter asking my opinion of The Presbyterian Hymnal sent for examination there is but one response I can make, and that I make as gladly as I do sincerely. It is the best Hymn and Tune Book ever published. I know whereof I speak, for during the last twelve months, I have examined all the later publications in this line, and some of earlier date."
CHAS. K. HINKLEY,
Organist First Congregational Church, Gorham, Me.

"Now comes this new Presbyterian Hymnal, and in many respects in advance of all its predecessors and competitors. In its mechanical make-up and appearance it leaves nothing to be desired, while the good judgment of its editors is to be seen on every page. . . . For comprehensiveness, for poetic merit as well as religious feeling, for adaptation to all the moods and phases of Christian experience, and for practical use in the services of the church this book seems to us a decided success."—The Congregationalist.

PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF PUBLICATION AND SABBATH-SCHOOL WORK, 1334 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST SERVICES.

THIRTY-THREE SERVICES READY.

100 copies, with music, 8 pp., 60 cents, postpaid.

Less than 100 copies of one number 1 cent each.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST, Boston.

The Tearless Land.

A Collection of Poems on Heaven.

Compiled by M. C. Hazard, Ph. D.

The poems are grouped under the following topics:—

1. Longings for Heaven. 2. The Pilgrimage to Heaven. 3. The Gate to Heaven. 4. The Heavenly Land. 5. The Heavenly City. 6. The Heavenly Home. 7. Reunions in Heaven. 8. Rest in Heaven. 9. The Bliss of Heaven. 10. The Lord of Heaven.

"It is surprising that such a compilation has not been made before."—The Outlook.

"One will have to read the book itself to appreciate the full richness of the poetical literature in this line."—The Watchman.

"Will need only to be named to find a large number of interested readers."—The Interior.

"Carefully selected, with rigid exclusion of all trashy and sickly sentiment."—The Christian Advocate.

"Sets forth in choicest forms the various aspects of one of the most precious hopes of the human heart."—Christian Work.

"In it are brought together a great number of the very best poems in the language on heaven."—The Advance.

"Many of the poems are well known, while others, of rare merit, are brought from obscurity."—Zion's Herald.

"The book is a constant treat to the Christian reader."—The Congregationalist.

"It is decidedly superior to any of the various anthologies in this line."—New Hampshire Journal.

Congregational S. S. & Publishing Society,
Boston and Chicago.

(Notice this today. This ad. may not appear again.)

$100 IN GOLD FREE

Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in ENDEAVORS? You can make twenty or more words, we feel sure, and if you do, you will receive a good reward. Use no letter unless found in the word. Use no language except English. Use any dictionary. Pronouns, nouns, verbs, adverbs, prefixes, suffixes, adjectives, proper nouns, plurals allowed. Anything that is a legitimate word. Work it out in this manner: Endeavors, en, end, ends, near, nod, nods, dear, deer, ear, ears, and, or, ore, oar, oars, etc. Use these words in your list. The publisher of Woman's World and Jenness Miller Monthly will pay $20.00 in gold to the person able to make the largest list of words from the letters in the word ENDEAVORS; $10.00 for the second; $5.00 for the third; $5.00 for the fourth; and $2.00 each for the thirty next largest lists. The above rewards are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to our handsome woman's magazine, thirty-six pages, one hundred and forty-four long columns, finely illustrated, and all original matter, long and short stories by the best authors; price $1.00 per year. It is necessary for you to enter the contest to send 12 two-cent stamps for a three months' trial subscription with your list of words, and every person sending the 24 cents and a list of twenty words or more is guaranteed an extra present by return mail (in addition to the magazine) of a 176-page book, "Beyond Recall," by Adeline Sergeant—a powerful love romance. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or money refunded. Lists should be sent at once, and not later than March 15. The names and addresses of successful contestants will be printed in April issue, published in March. Our publication has been established ten years. We refer you to any mercantile agency for our standing. Make your list now. Address J. H. PLUMMER, Publisher, Dept. M. C., Temple Court Bldg., N. Y. City

---

MEYER'S MOODY'S BOOKS AT ALL THE BOOKSTORES
COMPLETE LISTS SAMPLE TRACTS FREE

Mr. Meyer's recent Lectures in New York, Boston and Philadelphia ready shortly. Paper 15 cents; ten copies, $1.00; cloth, 30 cents.

Fleming H. Revell Co. Publishers, New York, Chicago.

Edersheim's Life of Christ.

Two large octavo vols., Longmans's Authorized Edition, mailed on receipt of $1.85. Reduced from $6.00.

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, BOSTON.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

American Seamen's Friend Society, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

James W. Elwell, President.
Rev. W. C. Stitt, Secretary.
W. C. Sturges, Treasurer.

HURRY UP!

Limited to April 30.

A Most Sensible Gift for Your Family or Friends.

For Use in your Home or Office, or to Assist the Children in their Studies, no other Reference Book in the World Compares with the New

AMERICAN STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA

Yours for 3 Cents a Day

Edition of November 1, 1896. The finished work of more than 100 of the world's greatest scholars, educators, scientists and specialists, condensed for the use of busy people.

AMERICAN STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA
AMERICAN STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA
VOLUME I.
VOLUME II.
WITH MAPS
WITH MAPS

The cut on the left shows sample volumes of the handsome

Cloth Style

which shall be yours for 7 monthly payments of $1 each, or

$5 Cash with Order.

The cut on the right shows sample volumes of the elegant

Half-Russia Style

which shall be yours for 9 monthly payments of $1 each or

$7 Cash with Order.

AMERICAN STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA
AMERICAN STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA
VOLUME I.
VOLUME II.
WITH MAPS
WITH MAPS

A SUPERB REFERENCE LIBRARY

covering the entire range of human knowledge, invention and discovery up to the present day, including the Arts, Sciences, History, Biography, Philosophy, Astronomy, Meteorology, Geography, Navigation, Geology, Exploration, Botany, Agriculture, Commerce, Finance, Zoology, Ethnology, Physiology, Chemistry, Electricity, Law, Medicine, Theology, Statistics, etc.

JUST OFF THE PRESS!

The new American Standard Encyclopedia is brought right down to the date of its issue, and contains hundreds of articles on subjects on which all the older reference works are necessarily silent. It is also a superior Pronouncing Dictionary, giving all words in general use, carefully defined. Its contents embody a Biographical Dictionary, a Gazetteer of the World, a Glossary of Technical Terms, late Census Reports, an Atlas of the whole Globe, and a rich storehouse of general, practical, up-to-date information—scientific, historical, military, social and civil—all arranged and classified in convenient form for ready reference.

UNTIL April 30 ONE DOLLAR Secures immediate possession of this superb library. Balance payable $1.00 monthly for 6 months—about 3 cents a day. Total Only $7.00.

IT IS THE VERY LATEST OF ALL REFERENCE WORKS. These are some of the live topics that are treated with 1896 accuracy and freshness, viz.: Argon, X-rays, Atlanta Exposition, Li Hung Chang, Nansen and Peary's Arctic Explorations, Horseless Carriage, Air Ships, Color Photography, Free Silver, Electrical Science, Acetylene, Prof. Roentgen, Skiagraphy, etc. On these and a thousand other important topics of today the older books say nothing or are years behind the age. This great new work is an absolute necessity to all who want to keep abreast of the times.

IT IS MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED THROUGHOUT with beautiful colored maps of every country on the globe, superb charts bearing upon anatomy, mineralogy, entomology, zoölogy, fossils, electrical science, ordnance, etc., besides the countless wood-cut engravings that graphically illustrate the thousands of subjects.

OUR GREAT SPECIAL OFFER FOR INTRODUCTION

As a means of quickly introducing and popularizing this peerless home reference library, we have decided to distribute a few advance sets in each community, regardless of cost and purely as an advertising project. We know that every set so placed will prove an advertisement of the greatest power, and lead to hundreds of sales at paying prices. Comparison with any and all other reference works will quickly demonstrate the immeasurable superiority of our grand new work April 30 prices will be advanced to regular rates—$19.00 to $31.00 a set. We reserve the right to withdraw this offer at any time without notice, in which case money will be at once returned.

HOW TO ORDER. Send $1.00 to American Newspaper Syndicate (address below) and the entire set will be forwarded. Subsequent payments to be made as follows: On cloth style, $1.00 a month for 6 months; on half russia style, $1.00 a month for 8 months. When ordering be sure to state style of binding wanted (we recommend the half russia) with full shipping directions. All transportation charges to be paid by purchaser. Books guaranteed as represented or first payment refunded if set is returned within ten days. We refer to any newspaper or bank in Philadelphia.

SPECIAL TO CASH BUYERS If cash in full be sent with order, prices will be $5.00 for cloth style, $7.00 for half russia, until April 30 only. Book of Specimen Pages mailed free upon request.

CAUTION! We are the sole publishers of the new American Standard Encyclopedia, and can assume no responsibility for any orders except those sent directly to us. Beware of inferior imitations advertised at higher prices. See that our name, and no other, is at the bottom of each title-page.

AMERICAN NEWSPAPER SYNDICATE, 8th and Locust Streets, Philadelphia.

HOME STUDY FOR BUSINESS We teach Book-keeping, Business Forms, Penmanship, Com'l Law, Letter Writing, Arithmetic, Shorthand, etc. thoroughly by MAIL at your own HOME. Success guaranteed every earnest student. We give a useful, Money Making Education which leads to a good paying position. A ten years' success. Highly endorsed. It will pay you. Try it. Catalog free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 47 College Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

Schermerhorn's Teachers' Agency.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 East 14th Street, N. Y.

Massachusetts, Bradford.
CARLETON SCHOOL for Young Men and Boys. College preparatory and general course of study. Individual teaching. Gymnasium bowling alley, etc. Circulars.
I. N. Carleton, Ph. D.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

An evangelical clergyman, of considerable and varied experience as a successful solicitor, desires to engage as secretary or financial agent for some worthy institution or cause. References exchanged. Address "M," solicitor, care Congregationalist, Boston. 3III

Blake Bell Foundry

Established in 1820.

Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.

Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address

BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

One of the most important religious books of the year.

The Bible as Literature.

By Prof. Richard G. Moulton, A. B. Bruce, D. D., Henry van Dyke D. D., J. M. Whiton, Ph. D., Prof. John F. Genung, W. E. Griffis, D. D., Prof. L. W. Batten, Ph. D., Prof. Albert P. Cook, and others. Introduction by Lyman Abbott, D. D. 12mo, cloth, $1.50

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

"A book that we can heartily commend to all ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and literature classes."—Northern Christian Advocate.

"We have followed the volume with delight and surprise at the richness of its treatment."—Chicago Advance.

"There has been no former publication of this kind having anything like the scope, plan, and amplitude of both Biblical and literary scholarship."—Boston Advertiser.

"The contributors to this volume are among the most distinguished Biblical scholars in the world." —Epworth Herald.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, prepaid, on receipt of price.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & Co.,

46 East 14th St., New York.
100 Purchase St., Boston.

Second Edition.

The Imperial Christ.

Fifteen Sermons by John Patterson Coyle, D. D. With an excellent portrait of Dr. Coyle, and a Biographical Sketch by George A. Gates, D. D., President of Iowa College. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1 50.

Dr. Coyle was a keen and careful thinker, a true mystic, a deep lover. He saw, he reasoned, he felt, and these three elements enter into his sermons, making them at once profoundly because spiritually logical and warmly true. They possess that truth which is life and that life which is truth. They deserve a high place in the sermon literature of the present age.—The Outlook, New York.

Second Edition.

The Spirit in Literature and Life.

By Dr. Coyle. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, pos'paid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

EASTER MUSIC

"The Prince of Life," prepared by J. R. Murray, is a beautiful service for Sunday Schools, containing Responsive Readings, interspersed with appropriate songs. Price, 5 cents per single copy

A SPECIAL CIRCULAR

Containing a list of our large and varied stock of music for Easter will be sent free on application.

The new music for 1897 is exceptionally fine, including in addition to the publication above named, splendid solos and duets, and fine anthems for the choir. Among the composers represented are G. W. Marston, E. Marzo, C. A. Havens, G. F. Root and others.

CANTATAS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Flower Praise (20c). Festival of the Flowers (30c). Under the Palms (30c).

THE MUSICAL VISITOR

for March will contain a supplement of Easter Anthems. Price, 15 cents.

THE JOHN CHURCH COMPANY,
CINCINNATI. NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.

4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-paged Agency Manual free. Everett O. Fisk & Co.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY'S NEW BOOKS.

A Tale of the Great Mutiny.

ON THE FACE OF THE WATERS.

By Mrs. Steel.
Cloth. $1.50.
Fourth Edition now ready.
Fifth in preparation.

"Where native life, thought, and character are concerned, Mrs. Steel leaves nothing to desire. Next to her vivid humanity is her firm grasp of scenic details. . . . In one sense her book might be considered the book of Delhi as it is of the Mutiny." — From "The Novel of the Mutiny," by J. Lockwood Kipling, in the New Review.

A New Volume by Goldwin Smith, D. C. L.

GUESSES AT THE RIDDLE OF EXISTENCE.

With Other Essays on Kindred Subjects.

By Goldwin Smith, D. C. L., Author of "Canada and the Canadian Question," "The United States," "Essays on Questions of the Day," etc.
12mo. Cloth, pp. viii.+244. Price, $1.25.

THE TITLES OF THE "OTHER ESSAYS" ARE:
The Church and the Old Testament.
Is There Another Life?
The Miraculous Element in Christianity.
Morality and Theism.

The New Edition of Lord Byron's Works.

PROSE. Vol. I. Letters. 1804–1813. Poems. Vol. I. Price, $1.75 each.

THE WORKS OF LORD BYRON.

Edited by
W. E. Henley.

To be completed in Twelve Volumes, of which the first, Letters, is ready; its frontispiece shows a portrait after Phillips. The next contain Diaries, Controversies, Speeches, etc. His Verse is contained in the remaining eight, in the first of which is Westall's portrait "It promises to be the completest, the best equipped and by far the most valuable edition of Byron" — St. James Gazette.

THE ENGLISH CONSTITUTION.

A Commentary on its Nature and Growth. By Jesse Macy, M. A., Professor of Political Science in Iowa College. Cloth. Price $2.00, net.

The first part makes an excellent introduction to Bryce's "American Commonwealth," as supplying that knowledge of English political institutions, which is presupposed. The second part shows how the present constitution has been derived from English history.

ELEMENTARY GEOLOGY.

Just Ready. By the author of Elementary Physical Geography.
12mo. Cloth. Price $1.40 net, each.
By Ralph S. Tarr, F. G. S. A.,
Professor of Dynamic Geology and Physical Geography in the Cornell University.

Distinctly an elementary book; intended as a companion to the Elementary Physical Geography by the same author. The combined study of the two subjects will furnish a training in science of great value. "I have found it (the Physical Geography) exceedingly valuable and helpful In the prominence given to the physical features as illustrated in our own country, in the references to the bibliography of the various subjects, it is certainly very much the best book accessible to the American teacher"—Charles B. Scott, State Normal School, Oswego, N. Y.

THE MODERN READER'S BIBLE.

Books from the Sacred Scriptures in Modern Literary Form By R. G. Moulton, M. A. (Camb.), Ph. D (Penn), Professor of Literature in English in the University of Chicago.

Small 18mo. Cloth extra, 50 cents each; Leather, 60 cents.

A New Volume. ISAIAH in the PROPHECY SERIES. Just Ready.

THE WISDOM SERIES (four volumes).
The Proverbs,
Ecclesiasticus,
Ecclesiastes—
Wisdom of Solomon,
The Book of Job.

Biblical Idyls.
Deuteronomy.

Send for a circular of these volumes now ready and of others to follow.

THE HISTORY SERIES (five volumes).
Genesis,
The Exodus,
The Judges,
The Kings,
The Chronicles.

ON MANY SEAS.

By Fred. B. Williams.
Edited by W. S. Booth.
Price $1.50. Second Edition.

"An unusual work both to those who will regard it as an important study, and to the much larger number who will be fascinated by its thrilling adventures and its quiet humor." "Every line of this hits the mark. Through all his four hundred and more pages the author is equally unaffected and forcible, equally picturesque. To go through one chapter is to pass with lively anticipation to the next. The book is destined to be remembered."— The N. Y. Tribune.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, 66 Fifth Ave., New York.

Fillmores' Easter Music for Choirs and Sunday-schools now ready. Send for descriptive list. FILLMORE BROS., 119 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, or 40 Bible House, New York.

Sacred Songs No. 1.

By Sankey, McGranahan and Stebbins.

IS THE BEST ONE YET!

Messrs. MOODY, SANKEY, CHAPMAN, MUNHALL, DIXON, and others use it.

$25 per 100; add 5c. a copy if ordered by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

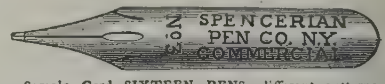
Chicago House, 215 Wabash Ave. 76 E. 9th St., N. Y.

The Standard American Brand : : : : Established 1860

SPENCERIAN

DROP US A LINE

If you wish to select a STEEL PEN suitable for your handwriting



Sample Card SIXTEEN PENS, different patterns, for every style of writing, including the VERTICAL SYSTEM, sent prepaid on receipt of TEN CENTS.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO.
450 Broome Street, New York, N. Y.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THAT THE ANNOUNCEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 18 February 1897 Number 7

HOME MISSIONARY FUND.

T. D. Kellogg, Orange, Mass.	$10.00
H. S. Parker, Plympton, Mass.	2.00
Mrs. Schuyler Clark, Huntington, Mass.	2.00
S. E. Wheeler, Worcester, Mass.	2.00

THE HANDBOOK FOR 1897 CONTAINS CHURCH PRAYER MEETING TOPICS, WITH SUB-DIVISIONS, Y. P. S. C E. PRAYER MEETING TOPICS, JUNIOR C. E TOPICS, S. S. LESSONS AND A GREAT VARIETY OF OTHER IMPORTANT MATTER 100 COPIES, $1.25 POSTPAID

✠ TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS. ✠
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

THIS issue of The Congregationalist will reach the eyes of many who may not be accustomed to scan its pages. The fact that it contains so much interesting and hitherto unpublished material relating to Mary Lyon and to the college which she founded makes it well worth preserving for future reference. At the same time immediate action upon the suggestions made in our editorial columns is desired by those who have the welfare of Mt. Holyoke at heart. Pastors will be glad, no doubt, to take their full share of responsibility in the matter, and there must be many in the churches who will be glad at the time suggested to pay honor to the memory of Mary Lyon. It is gratifying, too, that the enthusiasm is not confined to our own denomination. One of the finest tributes which we ever saw to Miss Lyon appeared last week in the Springfield Republican and was signed "A Unitarian." Whatever funds for the college are gathered should be forwarded promptly to the treasurer, A. Lyman Williston, Northampton, Mass.

Words of gratitude continue to come from far-away Turkey for the relief brought by The Congregationalist's Armenian Orphans' Fund. The committee in Constantinople appropriated $2,000 for Marsovan, and Rev. G. E. White of that station writes us rejoicing that the missionaries there can now make adequate and permanent arrangements for the care and Christian training of these unfortunate children. He adds the welcome information that since the massacres, fifteen months ago, the officials have treated the missionaries with great courtesy, permitting them thus to succeed in their plans for relief. Their thankfulness for funds sent from America should not blind us to the fact that there is great need still. There have been a number of additions to our fund since it was formally closed, several weeks ago, and it amounts now to $22,946.79. One of the most touching letters which we have received in connection with the movement came in the other day from a little boy in New York State. He prints the words and they read as follows:

> I was six the last day of 1896 and send twenty dollars, some of which I earned myself, for the Armenian orphans.

It is a significant answer to those who question the usefulness of Mr. Murphy in Boston as a temperance worker that during the first four weeks of his labors here the arrests for drunkenness were 268 less than during the same period last year; while the arrests for the same cause during the three weeks before his coming were 246 more than during the corresponding period last year. Mr. Murphy has a profound, simple, tender and true gospel for intemperate men and women, and he has no less a message of warning and counsel to others. He speaks from the depths of experience and with a love which opens to him the hearts of his hearers. We wish that he may be encouraged by the presence of a larger number of ministers and representatives of the churches in his meetings. These meetings are saving souls for life here and hereafter, and they deserve the united support of Christian people.

A bill now before the General Court of Massachusetts provides that "no county, town, city, municipal or other corporation, organized, located or doing business in the Commonwealth, and no official, agent or servant of such corporation, or of the Commonwealth, shall directly or indirectly cause or allow any person to perform labor, either under contract or otherwise, for such corporation or the Commonwealth, more than six days in a week." It is being heartily indorsed and practically supported by organized labor in the State, and the Christian leaders—lay and clerical—of the State will lose a splendid opportunity to do good, and at the same time show sympathy for the wage-earner, if they fail to exert all their influence in favor of making into law the principle expressed in this bill.

Last week we chronicled the heroism and self sacrifice of a Texas woman, the matron of a hospital. This week it is in order to note the valor and self disregard of the men on our men-of-war who, when the fleet was facing the gale off Cape Hatteras, flung themselves into the sea to rescue, if possible, their mates whom the raging seas had swept from the decks. A splendid tale also comes from the mining regions of British Columbia. Two miners at the bottom of a shaft had sent aloft a bucket full of iron ore, one Hemsworth turning the crank which was hoisting the bucket to the surface. When the bucket was within twenty feet of the surface the crank broke, the cogs failed to hold and the bucket rapidly sped downward. What did Hemsworth do but thrust his arm in the machinery and block it. Of course his arm was horribly lacerated. When asked if he was much injured or hurt, he replied, "What's the difference, so long as I saved the boys?"

Professor Harnack of Berlin has just issued a book on The Chronology of Ancient Literature, in which he presents his conclusions concerning the dates of the New Testament books. He believes Mark to be the oldest of the four gospels, perhaps written between 65–70 A. D.; Matthew about ten years later, Luke from 78–93 and John between 80–110 A. D. Seven of the thirteen epistles ascribed to Paul he regards as undoubtedly genuine, while the others contain Pauline elements. He has no new light to offer concerning the authorship of the epistle to the Hebrews. He is confident that the second epistle of Peter is a forgery. Professor Harnack ranks among the first of the Biblical scholars of Germany, and his views will no doubt attract much attention.

Mr. Moody says the book of Jonah is literal history. Dr. Lyman Abbott says it is fiction written for the purpose of satire. Each of them claims that President Harper agrees with his view. Mr. Moody declares that Dr. Harper at Northfield, in the presence of several hundred students, made this confession: "I believe that the whale swallowed Jonah." Which of these three eminent men shall we believe? Perhaps if the evidence which they claim to possess concerning the literary character of the book of Jonah were put before us we could judge for ourselves. Mr. Moody bases the evidence for his view on Matt. 12:40. On this passage, which many devout scholars regard as a gloss inserted by a copyist, Mr. Moody proceeds to draw the inference that ministers who do not agree with him about Jonah "are doing the devil's work"; and he writes to the Independent, "I am not gladder for having said anything in a long time than I am for my recent words about Jonah." Yet we doubt if any one is wiser or better because Mr. Moody said them. Perhaps neither of these expositors has yet found out the whole truth about the book of Jonah.

Ministers lead their people in the study of the Bible. The majority of their hearers trust to their judgment concerning the character of the Scriptures, though they do not follow them in the details of their analysis of the books and of the evidences they discover of date and authorship. But the people readily catch the tone of the preacher and respond to it. If his manner of treating the Bible shows that his confidence in its authority is shaken, they are quick either to abandon faith in it or to resent his attitude toward it. But if he utters the great truths of the Bible in the tone of assured conviction, especially if he points with unwavering confidence to the Christ who is there revealed, in his person, his character and his relations with them, they will find the Word of God in the Bible and will acknowledge its supreme authority. Nothing that has been discovered in the Scriptures themselves or in ancient monumental records has lessened in any degree the weight of that authority, and no minister can be faithful to his trust who does not treat the Scriptures as presenting the Word of God to men.

MARY LYON'S JUST REWARD.

The life, whose beginning 100 years ago will be called to mind in many places on the twenty-eighth of this month, was not a conspicuously long one. Mary Lyon was only fifty-two years old when, in the midst of the important interests which she helped to create and which had become a part of her very being, the call came to her to pass to her successors the splendid task of providing a higher education for the women of this country. But, measured not by years but by achievements, hers was the most fruitful life lived by any woman in the present century. We say this with due consideration of all that has been done, and is being done, by noble women in this and other countries. For we believe that no unprejudiced mind can read the fascinating story of Mary Lyon's mastery of self and conquest of adverse circumstances without concluding that the girl, born in an obscure corner of one of Massachusetts's farming counties, both because of her native gifts and because of her industry and foresight, deserves to be ranked with the commanding geniuses of this century.

What she did in her lifetime was enough to make her great, but what has been effected by the influence which she set in motion renders her immortal. She perpetuated herself first of all through her pupils. Among the most honored of them was Mrs. Marianne Dascomb, who for seventeen years of its early history was lady principal of the college at Oberlin, where men and women were accorded equal privileges. It was small wonder that when Vassar was looking for its first lady principal it sought her in the person of Miss Hannah Lyman, who had studied at Ipswich Seminary where Miss Lyon taught before founding Mt. Holyoke, or that Wellesley early in its career impressed into service on its faculty at least two Oberlin women—Miss Schafer and Miss Morgan. Miss Ada L. Howard, a Mt. Holyoke graduate and teacher, was first president of Wellesley College, and Mr. Durant always attributed his first impulse to found his noble institution to the impressions received from his visits to Mt. Holyoke, of which institution he was a trustee.

A direct trace of Mt. Holyoke influence is seen in such schools as Oxford and Painesville, O., in Mills College, California, in Huguenot Seminary, South Africa, in San Sebastian Institute in Spain, which look to Mt. Holyoke as their pattern and inspiration. Besides such institutions as willingly acknowledge their Mt. Holyoke origin, its touch in a thousand indirect ways has been felt in other schools and colleges for women North, South and West, and beyond the seas. And thousands of lives whose ideals were formed at South Hadley have contributed powerfully to the building up of the newer States in this country and to the ongoing of human life in healthy and benificent channels in the older States. "Not to be ministered unto, but to minister," is the motto of Mt. Holyoke women everywhere, and right faithfully are they carrying it out in homes and schools, and social circles and church relations, which are invariably brightened and bettered by their unselfish service.

If this century has come to be known as woman's century, if there has been little short of a revolution in the intellectual outlook and opportunities for women, if they have inaugurated and sustained great missionary and philanthropic movements which are slowly redeeming this world, it is, in part, because Mary Lyon arose in the might of her purpose and claimed for women their crown.

The general recognition, a week from Sunday, of Mary Lyon, will mean something more than the indorsement of a single institution that stands for the higher education of women. Honor paid to Mary Lyon will be honor to the finest type of womanhood. Recognition of her place and work will be a tribute to the amazing development which this century has registered of woman's conception of herself and of woman's realization of what God meant her to be.

Yet it is more than fitting that this public commemoration of Mary Lyon should express itself through gifts to the college which she founded after such strenuous endeavor. It is right for us to single that out at this time above all the other women's colleges of the land and pay it the tribute of appreciative and grateful hearts. It has no superior when weighed by the severest intellectual tests. By its transormation from seminary to college it has taken its place where it belongs, in the very front of the advancing line, without, at the same time, sacrificing what was best in its traditions. How can a man or woman of wealth better honor the sex, better speed forward the causes of education and religion than by giving at this time five, ten or fifty thousand dollars to the college? How can Christians generally, though possessed of only moderate resources, deny themselves the pleasure of at least a small gift to a college which has doubtless touched their lives in more ways than they realize, which represents so admirably the ideals that are to save this country, and whose future they may help to make still more glorious than its past?

THE PLACE OF REVIVALS IN THE CHURCH.

The presence of several noted evangelists in Boston has awakened much discussion concerning their methods. Some think these methods unwise in themselves. Others regard them as having been useful and effective, but now out of date. Many defend them earnestly and regard the opposition to them as a sign of spiritual apathy, and therefore the more convincing evidence that these methods are needed. The work of evangelists is to produce revivals. This question as to the wisdom of some of their methods of work has led to the question as to the value of the end they work for, which is revivals of religion.

We must be careful to avoid confusing these two things. The place of the evangelist in the church is one thing. The place of revivals in the church is quite another thing. The former we shall speak of at another time. We now face the questions, Are revivals to be sought; and, when they come, are they a permanent gain? President Jordan of Stanford University is reported as saying that religious revivals are a species of intoxication, and are no more worthy of respect than common drunkenness. We find it hard to believe that such a statement, without qualification, could come from one who has been known as a Christian educator. Newspaper reports are not always reliable. We hope the criticism was made only of certain so-called revivals, which are mainly emotional excitement and little more than caricatures. But too often by these the spiritual quickenings of the church are falsely judged.

No greater calamity could come on the Church of Christ than to lose faith in revivals and to cease to desire them. To do that would be to repudiate Pentecost. It would dishonor the Holy Spirit. It would put the stamp of failure on the most illustrious preachers of the gospel from the days of the apostles till now. It would discredit the noblest periods of church history. It would give the lie to a great multitude of witnesses who testify that they were born again in revivals of religion.

What is a revival? It is a quickening among Christians of a sense of sin. It is a renunciation of particular sinful habits. It is a new sense of helplessness in the grasp of sinful desires, a new appreciation of the holiness of God and of his presence. It is a renewed vision of his compassion as shown in his Son, Jesus Christ, living for love's sake among sinful men, crucified at their hands, rising from the dead for their justification before God, now their living intercessor, calling them to take up their cross and come after him. It leads to a new consciousness of the forgiveness of sin through him; a new sense of the measureless loss—here and hereafter—of being separated from him, out of sympathy with and opposed to his life and work in the world. It leads to the realizing of new purposes of righteous living, new habits of prayer and study of the Bible to find his will, to earnest efforts to bring others to acquaintance with Christ and peace with God through him.

When such experiences come to Christians they spread through the church and beyond it. They appeal to what is best in human lives. Holy emotions are kindled and bring men into close fellowship, uniting them in loving efforts to help one another, and all men to realize their noblest ideals which they see fulfilled in Jesus Christ. These experiences in their freshness are what we call a revival of religion. When the new life becomes habit the church is on a higher plane of living. Influences are always at work to lower it, and it would sink into despair if periods of renewal did not come with the power of the Holy Spirit mysteriously moving men to repentance and faith and the works of their first love for Christ. Whoever despises such revivals not only has a low and unworthy idea of his fellowmen, but despises him who re-creates in them the divine life.

Revivals are to the church what summer rains are to the fields and meadows. The parched soil longs for moisture. The stubble of the mown grass yellows and whitens in the dry heat. The earth opens its withering lips to pray that it may be refreshed. Sometimes the promise of answer appears in lowering clouds, which give forth only tantalizing winds that whirl the dust in the air and then disappear. At other times hail mingles with the rain and beats down the grass and grain, while fierce winds tear the trees and shrubbery, and the sun looks out again on scenes of destruction. Do we therefore move to abolish storms? Only in moments of foolish haste, for soft dews steal down in the night and gentle rains follow them, and the atmosphere gathers freshness and the earth is renewed. Therein we rejoice and take fresh courage to cultivate and gather its fruits.

Faithful pastors remember such seasons of spiritual refreshing, the sweetest rewards of all their labor. Heaven never seemed so near as then. Men and women and children never seemed so lovable, never revealed such divine possibilities. Work to save them from sin never seemed so important, so easy, so rewarding, so certain to be made effective by help from above. Revivals make the pastorate honorable. They make the church glorious within. They demonstrate to the world its reason for being. They hasten the coming of the kingdom of God. If there are churches which do not believe in revivals may God help them. If there are ministers who do not pray for revivals they may better leave the ministry. No sign of the coming of genuine prosperity would be so hopeful as a mighty, importunate, united cry of the churches to God, "Revive us again."

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Of a matchless generation which boasted Wellington and Napoleon, Burke and Pitt, Stein and Hardenberg, Hamilton, Jefferson, Adams and Franklin, one name, Washington, to quote Mr. Bryce, "stands alone and unapproachable, like a snow peak rising above its fellows into the clear air of the morning, with a dignity, constancy and purity which have made him the ideal type of civic virtue to succeeding generations."

Today the spirit of criticism is rife. Iconoclasts are abroad. Nothing is hidden. Persons and literature are subjected to remorseless dissection and analysis, and the New World's fiend, "publicity," is more rampant even than when Mr. Lowell first detected his presence and sway.

How does the character of Washington emerge from this play of the scalpel under the rays of the calcium light? He rode to the hounds, occasionally went to horse-races and bet, played cards, was not a total abstainer, owned slaves and swore when vexed; such are the most serious flaws in his conduct—judged by present day standards—which his most realistic recent biographer points out. Eliminate those habits, characteristic of all Virginia gentlemen of the period, and what have you left to be for a moment dwelt upon in the face of such majestic virtues as he displayed in his dealings with his kinsfolk, his neighbors of the Old Dominion, his subordinates during the Revolution and his countrymen during all his service as military chieftain and as president? The very fact that he was not flawless and impeccable endears him the more.

For Congress today what better prescription could be given than Washington's to the first Congress, in which message he held before them the ideal of legislators who would not permit "local prejudices or attachments, nor separate views, nor party animosities" to "misdirect the comprehensive and equal eye" with which they "ought to watch over this great assemblage of communities and interests"? Why this solicitude? Because he believed that "the propitious smiles of heaven can never be expected on a nation that disregards the eternal rules of order and right which heaven itself has ordained; and since the preservation of the sacred fire of liberty and the destiny of the republican form of government are justly considered as deeply, perhaps as finally, staked on the experiment intrusted to the hands of the American people."

In these days, when perjury is rife in our courts and men incline to abolish oaths because so lightly held, "Let it simply be asked," as Washington said, "where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths? . . . Reason and experience doth forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

In these days of extravagance and waste, expenditure exceeding receipts in almost every nation, state and municipality of Christendom, and especially where democracy prevails, it is well to recall Washington's exordium, "Cherish public credit by using it sparingly, and avoiding the accumulation of debt."

In these days, when the pieces in the kaleidoscope of contemporary history are changing so rapidly, when space is being annihilated and continents are becoming next door neighbors, it behooves us to recall the proper foreign policy outlined for us by Washington in his Farewell Address, and calmly, deliberately decide for or against its perpetuation or modification. Can we hold to it in its rigidity as outlined by him, and should we if we could? These are pregnant questions which the events of the past year have done much toward answering, while future months will do more. May all who are called upon to answer them face them and solve them with the sincerity of purpose and devotion to national welfare which made Washington the idol of his contemporaries and cause him to be universally revered today.

BELLIGERENT GREECE.

The peace of Europe is threatened in a new quarter. Crete has been in a state of unusual turmoil for the past year or two. At first the Mohammedans were said to be abusing the Christians. Lately the latter appear to have been retaliating and with vigor. Quiet has been restored now and then, only to be quickly succeeded by renewed fighting and subsequent mutual recrimination. The outbreak reported last week, whoever was to blame for it, has been one of the most severe, and many Cretans have taken refuge in Greece. But the Cretans are not given to running away. They rather enjoy fighting. They profess bitter grievances against the Turkish authorities and have long sought to persuade Greece to take up their quarrel. The sympathy of Greece is quite unanimous in their favor.

The news of a step in advance has just come. Greece has espoused the Cretan cause, in apparent disregard of treaties, and has declared war upon Turkey. Europe consequently is holding its breath to see what will happen. If the two countries are let alone, Greece probably will prove the superior at sea but Turkey may conquer her by force of numbers on land, so that the issue is doubtful. A general war in the Balkan region may result, if Turkey invades Thessaly, as she threatens. But it is far from certain that war will be allowed, because, if it be permitted, the other nations may be drawn in against their will, which probably none of them wishes. Yet it is suspected that England is quietly backing Greece, in the hope of forcing the hand of Russia and of hastening the overthrow of the sultan. Russia will do anything which will promote her own control of Constantinople, and it would not be surprising if this war, should it go on, were to leave Russia the mistress of the Bosphorus and England richer by the acquisition of Crete from Greece and stronger through a firmer hold upon Egypt. Nobody can tell what may happen in the conditions, but the shrewdest guessers do not expect to see England or Russia emerge at last without some gains. Nor is Greece likely to be much the worse off.

More likely, however, is a concert of the powers to preserve substantially the existing situation, excepting that Crete may be held and ruled by them unitedly for the present. All sorts of contradictory reports are current and the outcome remains indefinite. But little Greece has done a plucky thing in forcing matters to a crisis, and one result probably will be active interference by the other powers to prevent further Turkish atrocities.

SERVING OUR GENERATION.

The old conception of personal Christianity was that it meant hardly more than securing one's own salvation. This was its principal aim. Being of spiritual use to others was involved, but was secondary in importance. But now the purpose of service to others has assumed the greater prominence, and it is held that the surest way to secure one's own salvation is to spend one's self in loyal effort to win others to Jesus Christ. The personal aim is not lost to sight. But it is pursued from a new point of view and its relation to other motives is altered. This result has come about as the result of study and imitation of Jesus who came "not to be ministered unto but to minister," that is, to serve.

Of course personal consecration is vital if we are to be of any useful spiritual service to our fellowmen. We cannot teach what we do not know. We cannot be examples of that of which we have no experience. The stream does not rise higher than its fountain. Its waters are not purer than those which flow from its source. Our actions in the way of service depend upon our idea of what service ought to be. They are not Christlike and spiritually beneficial unless our theory of service is essentially like that of Jesus himself. To undervalue the importance of personal faith in Christ is a grave error. It is impossible to serve aright in his name without this. If we have no personal, spiritual alliance with him our service degenerates into mere philanthropy. However beautiful and useful this may be, it is not true Christianity.

Of course, too, we must serve our own generation, that is, the people who are our contemporaries. Our responsibility is great but so is our opportunity. We need to be ever watchful lest we fail of doing what, and all, that we might do. But in serving our own generation we also serve the whole human race and the distant future. This truth elevates the humblest service to the level of actual grandeur. Influence radiates indefinitely from its source and continues eternally. We help or hinder more persons than we know; thousands, often, of whom we never hear. Through the men and women of today, moreover, we reach out to those who are coming after them and help to shape the motives and the conditions which are to rule their soul's careers.

To say of one, as he dies, that he served his generation well, in the highest sense of the words, is to award him the noblest praise conceivable. For it is to say of him that he succeeded in imitating Jesus Christ.

CURRENT HISTORY.

The Arbitration Treaty.

The treaty, attacked in toto by senators like Mills of Texas, Teller of Colorado, Morgan of Alabama, Daniel of Virginia and Cameron of Pennsylvania, and emasculated in vital parts by senators like Lodge of Massachusetts and Chandler of New Hampshire, now rests in a precarious position, with very little chance of ratification, even in an amended form, by the Senate of this Congress. The pressure of other business, necessitous appropriation bills, etc., will account for this somewhat, but the chief obstacle to its ratification in its original form is the unreasoning, implacable hatred of the Administration by a coterie of men who, under the cloak of patriotism (pseudo) are covertly attempting to injure Messrs. Cleveland and Olney. This is no conjecture. It is proved by the events of the past week. In an effort to placate the opposition, the Foreign Relations Committee last week withdrew all former suggested amendments and introduced one which would insure that the Senate, as well as the Executive, should decide on all matters to be left to arbitration under the treaty. This to meet the objections of senators who resent any real or seeming disparagement of the rights of the Senate under the Constitution in determining our foreign policy. But this amendment, when reported to the Senate, was the subject of rather acrimonious debate, and failed utterly as a means of conciliation, and on Monday Senator Morgan, in open session, moved that consideration of the treaty be set aside and his resolution abrogating the Clayton-Bulwer treaty be debated. His motion was successful by the narrow margin of one vote. In the new Senate the original treaty will, we are confident, find more friends among the men fresh from the people, men who have a reputation to make and will not care at the start to run counter to public opinion. This Administration can do nothing to aid the treaty. The incoming one can, and must. Lord Salisbury will not grieve if the treaty is rejected or modified so as to confine its authority to a narrow range of subjects, for which he originally contended but which Mr. Olney would not accept. But the best men of Great Britain and the United States will deplore any reactionary step such as now seemingly impends. If the treaty fails we shall be humiliated, and stultify our past record as an advocate of the principle of arbitration.

Lincoln Day.

The birthday of Abraham Lincoln is observed as a legal holiday now in five States of the Union, and in most of the large centers of population in the country the evening of Feb. 12 is set apart for banquets, whereat men of affairs and eloquence use the facts and principles of Lincoln's unique life as texts for sermons on present day civic duties. In the public schools of the country the day also is remembered in a telling way, and is made to contribute to a growth of patriotism and proper hero worship in the minds of the young. Few newspapers fail to improve the opportunity to comment editorially on the significance of the life that Lincoln lived, and in many a pulpit last Sunday thanksgiving to God went up in the form of prayer and eulogy.

Here and there at the banquets a speaker forgot the proprieties of the hour and tried to make partisan capital out of Lincoln's fame, and one man—Congressman Grosvenor of Ohio—went so far as to use his opportunity to speak in savagely attacking the idea of a non-partisan civil service. But in the main the post-prandial eloquence was helpful and inspiring. In Boston Congressman Linney of North Carolina, an ex-Confederate, said: "The vanquished South is rapidly learning to love Lincoln as the gentlest memory of the world." In Buffalo, N. Y., Henry Watterson, also an ex Confederate, said: "Let no Southern man challenge me because I canonize Abraham Lincoln. He was the only friend of the South when she most needed a friend at court." In New York city President Stryker of Hamilton College, one of the most sententious and brilliant orators in this country today, roused phenomenal enthusiasm by his thrilling narrative and inspiring prophecies, and he improved the opportunity to tell his fellow-Republicans that

> By his [Lincoln's] immutable renown are you bidden to that patriotism to which all other narrower titles are but subordinate and instrumental. This people's man certifies to us that the republic must voice the people, else it shall sink into autocracy, plutocracy, oligarchy, anarchy! God purge us of bad men and their bad ways. . . .
>
> We shall be just as good a party as we are determined to be. We shall have just as good leaders as we deserve—no better! We must be sworn not to surrender our independence to unauthorized proxies. We must summon to our ranks and be worthy to keep there all who love our nation's truth. We must hold to the most exact audit the men we select and trust—to watch, to cheer, to correct, to promote, or to depose.

A New Note.

Fortunately, it seems certain that one man is to sit in Mr. McKinley's council of advisers who is in touch with the problems of today, and has sympathy for the plain people. Mr. Lyman Gage, Secretary of Treasury to be, at a farewell dinner given in his honor last week by men of intellect and wealth, said:

> Men of steady minds and strong hearts must, with temperance and charity in the exercise of right reason, find the true path which leads to peace and safety. There are real mistakes to be corrected. We have violated the natural laws which govern in the realm of economics with the same force and power that they do in the physical realm. Let the deep interest you really feel in the problems of the people be known to all the people. They know your strength, power and influence. Let them experience in a larger measure your sympathy, your sense of justice and your love.

It is refreshing to note the advent of a public man who talks about "sympathy" and "love."

Divorce Reform.

At a time when the courts of certain of our States are busy repudiating the validity of the divorce decrees of other States; when Mr. Moody is urging all women who have unfaithful husbands to seek separation; when an influential minority in the Protestant Episcopal Church is moving to secure such legislation at the next General Convention as will forbid the clergy from recognizing the validity of more than one reason for divorce; when Felix Adler, the Jew, is busy lecturing the Christians of Boston on the Ethics of Marriage; and when in general it may be said that there was never more diversity of opinion and practice respecting marriage and divorce, it is gratifying to be reminded by the annual meeting of the National Divorce Reform League, and the annual report of its secretary, Rev. Dr. S. W. Dike, that there are forces at work endeavoring to bring harmony out of chaos, to shed light where it is most needed—viz., in our legislatures and educational institutions. For sixteen years now this society in a modest way, with small expenditure of funds, has been influencing national and State legislation, and calling the attention of preachers, editors, teachers and all intelligent men to the imperative necessity of conserving the life of the family and retaining it as the unity of society. How much has been done, with what scanty funds, few realize. If more did the society would not now be in debt. It is our opinion that perhaps if the society were to broaden its legal title so as to make it as inclusive as the work it really does, it would appeal more to the public which it might naturally expect to reach. We note that the executive committee of the league and Dr. Dike now recommend such a change in name.

Dr. Dike's report for the last year certainly shows that there has been substantial gain both in reform legislation and in recognition by economists, penologists, pedagogues and temperance reformers of the importance of conserving sweet family life. Dr. Dike's statements respecting the failure of several of our great denominational publishing houses to provide for home instruction on temperance are not creditable to the derelict societies; and his plea for home training and family responsibility, instead of constant dependence upon church and Sunday school for the religious, moral and civic education of the child is a word that needed to be said.

The British Parliament.

How dead an issue disestablishment is now may be judged from the vote of the House of Commons last week, when a motion to disestablish the Church of England received only sixty-six votes, the Liberal leaders making no effort to have it poll their party's full strength. Displeasing as the educational bill is to all concerned, satisfying neither Anglican, Catholic, Nonconformist or Secularist, it will be closured and passed this week if Mr. Balfour can have his way. But he may be on the verge of a defeat which will wrest from him his position of authority, split wide apart the Tory and Unionist factions of the Conservative party and cause a dissolution of Parliament and an appeal to the people. Stranger things have happened.

Spain and Cuba.

Spain at last has consented to permit Miss Clara Barton and the Red Cross workers to enter Cuba, if funds to support them can be raised in this country, and Spaniards as well as Cubans can profit by their service. Direct messages from General Gomez and the president of the Cuban republic indicate plainly that nothing short of independence will satisfy the revolutionists. Hence it would seem as if the Spanish ministry had made great concessions only to have them spurned, and at the same time imperiled its own tenure of office.

Richard Harding Davis, who has recently been in Cuba as a correspondent of the New York Journal, confirms all that has been said by Bonsal of the Herald and Akers of the London Times respecting the awful brutalities and indecencies of the Spanish troops and officers, and the indignities suffered by citizens of this country. He describes the present situation as exactly that which President Cleveland said would justify our interference on the ground of "higher obligations," namely, those of sympathy for outraged humanity. He says that if President Cleveland, who must "be convinced thrice before he will act once," could make a week's tour through Cuba he would declare war on Spain by cable. "No European Power dare interfere, and it lies with him, and with him alone, to give the signal. If he gives it now he saves thousands of innocent lives; if he delays, just that many people perish." Mr. Davis being a personal friend of Mr. Cleveland, and hitherto an admirer, his words have weight. His letters have a manly ring, and sound out the same stirring plea for self-respect in our national foreign policy which was characteristic of his letter in the Boston Advertiser, in which he trounced F. Hopkinson Smith and the Administration's dealings with the Porte.

The Situation in Greece and Crete.

The vigorous way in which Greece last week set forth to conquer Crete commanded the admiration of the world, and if sympathy were to be the ruling motive with the Christian Powers the Christians of Crete and Greece would soon have opportunity to wield the sword against the hated Moslem. Whether the king of Greece and the ministry really believed that war was necessary and would be tolerated by the Powers, or whether they simply acted as they did to save themselves from popular indignation, is an open question, but they certainly for a time showed spirit and courage. The Grecian fleet at once blockaded the Cretan ports, detachments of infantry, artillery and engineers set sail at Piræus for Crete, and the army reserves were ordered to hold themselves to start in forty-eight hours' notice. On Sunday the representatives of the Powers conferred, agreed upon a program and then waited on the Greek premier, the French minister acting as spokesman. The recall of the Greek fleet was advised, and the promise given that the Powers would carefully consider the question of union of Crete and Greece. To this the Greeks replied that they must insist on aiding the Cretans.

Prof. J. Irving Manatt of Brown University, quite recently United States consul at Athens, who keeps close watch of Grecian doings, interprets the situation thus:

> King George is entirely too shrewd and cool-headed ever to be drawn into anything quixotic. His son and his ships are not in Turkish waters without backing. And the young czar and his French ally must know pretty well how substantial that backing is to be. There is evidently a well-considered program under way, and Prince George's part in it is no accident.
>
> So, time after time, the struggle has been renewed—plundering, rapine, massacre have become almost everyday incidents—and Christian Europe has kept an eye on the balance of power, and hands off! The cup of this iniquity must be full, and we must hope that the end draweth near. Not that a Russian protectorate can be looked upon with unmixed satisfaction. But England, having shirked her duty, deserves to see the island, whose scourging she has winked at so long, turned into a standing threat against her own holdings in Egypt and Cyprus. The master of Crete need be in no hurry about Constantinople.

Harold Frederic, cabling from London to the New York Times, confirms this view of the situation. Mr. Gladstone's opinion is characteristic of the man: "I do not dare to stimulate Greece when I cannot help her, but I shall profoundly rejoice at her success. I hope the Powers will recollect that they have their own character to redeem."

NOTES.

Idaho's Senate is to have a woman for chaplain.

Harvard and Yale have agreed to forget past differences, and have made a compact which will govern all their athletic contests until 1902.

Having sanctioned prize-fighting, it is not surprising to learn that Nevada's legislature now plans to establish a lottery. Here, however, it will run against Federal legislation.

New Hampshire will continue to observe Fast Day nominally. The governor recommended its abolition, the House concurred, but the Senate was conservative and said "Nay."

The National Assembly of the League of American Wheelmen did well last week to defeat the proposition, introduced by a California delegate and seconded by delegates from Colorado and Louisiana, giving local option to division officials in the matter of legalizing Sunday racing.

The German Government's decision to prosecute certain of the professors of the University of Berlin for contumacy in holding and expressing socialistic views is an interesting phenomenon not prophetic of Germany's permanent retention of leadership in the highest realms of human activity.

Carroll D. Wright's renomination and confirmation as United States Commissioner of Labor was to be expected. Now, if Congress will only give him charge of the next census, and make a permanent census bureau as a subdivision of the Department of Labor, another long step forward will be taken.

The electoral votes of the States were counted by Congress last week, Messrs. McKinley and Hobart receiving 271, Mr. Bryan 176, Mr. Sewall 149 and Mr. Watson 27. Strange to say, no formal notice of this action will be sent to the successful candidates. Their authority for presenting themselves on March 4, ready to be sworn into office, will be the authority of common knowledge.

Mrs. Dominis, now in Washington with ulterior motives, permits her resonant mouthpiece, Mr. Julius Palmer, to say for her that she abjures her abdication of the Hawaiian throne, and disavows her oath of allegiance to the new republic. All of which is not surprising, but it precludes her ever returning to Honolulu, and it will not induce our officials to grant any requests for indemnity which she may decide to proffer to this or the incoming Administration. Moreover, it will increase the probability of Hawaiian annexation to the United States.

IN BRIEF.

The unemployed rich women of Boston played whist for the financial benefit of the unemployed poor of Boston last week. Some people seem to struggle to do good in the most roundabout way.

Next week will bring to a close Mr. Moody's work in Boston and he will preach in the afternoon and evening instead of in the morning and afternoon. On Friday, the last day, he will speak morning, afternoon and evening.

The fact that the current international Sunday school lessons are in the book of Acts makes the following pertinent. A few Sundays ago the teacher in a class of boys about twelve asked one what it was that the lame man asked of Peter and John. The reply came, "Alms, but he got legs."

We have received a number of communications asking if Congregational Work is to be a substitute for the magazines and other periodicals of the six societies. In the letter sent to the churches by the societies asking support for the new periodical, it was expressly stated that it was "not to take the place of present publications," and the churches subscribed for it with that understanding.

The Free Church of Universal Religion, Tacoma, has voted to exclude from fellowship the Liberal Congress of Chicago, because the latter does not include everything in its fellowship. The Free Church is required by loyalty to its platform of "inclusiveness" to "include only that which is inclusive." The Free Church, in its haste after unity, appears to have reached its goal and been shunted beyond it on a side track.

The New York Examiner (Baptist) announces an excellent list of themes and writers for the present year. Of its seven chief articles promised five are to be written by as many prominent Congregationalists who are frequent contributors to our columns. They are Presidents M. E. Gates and C. F. Thwing and Drs. S. W. Dike, W. E. Griffis and Washington Gladden. Our able contemporary knows where to get good doctrine for its readers.

The Christian Intelligencer, commenting on our recent paragraph descriptive of Hon. Bourke Cochran's recent speech in Boston and his devout conduct as a Roman Catholic layman, asks pertinently: "Why can we not have a larger number of political leaders openly avowing their regard for God and his law? Why cannot Protestants devise some way by which the rich and the poor, the high and the low, can worship and pray together as they do in the Roman Church?"

Dr. Frederick Bliss, who has for some years been exploring for the old walls of Jerusalem, and has made many interesting discoveries, has lately come on a broad stairway of thirty-four stone steps descending to the Pool of Siloam. They appear to have connected Solomon's palace and garden, which stood on the Ophel ridge, with the pool [see Neh. 3: 15]. Dr. Bliss has done very important work, which could be made much more valuable if the resources of the Palestine Exploration Society were more adequate.

The directors of the Congregational Church Extension Society of New York and Brooklyn have acted wisely in choosing Rev. R. J. Kent, D. D., as superintendent. He will not resign his pastorate of the Lewis Avenue Church of Brooklyn, but will probably have an assistant pastor, and will thus be able to give considerable time to the society. To make the pastor of a strong and promising church the working head of an organization which looks to the federation of all Congregational churches is sure to keep the movement in close touch with the churches.

Dr. Grenfell, whose sermons and lectures on the Deep Sea Mission work in the North Sea and on the coast of Labrador so greatly interested the few churches he chanced to visit last winter, is to be in Boston and vicinity during next week. He is to speak at Dr. McKenzie's church in Cambridge on Sunday evening, Feb. 28; at Mr. Campbell's church in Roxbury on the previous Friday evening. There are two or three evenings still open, which pastors interested can learn of at this office. Dr. Grenfell is the friend and benefactor of Pomiuk, the Eskimo boy, well known to readers of our Conversation Corner.

Several Congregational churches of New York and Brooklyn met in the latter city last week, at the invitation of a committee of Plymouth Church, to discuss the religious corporations law of New York State, to which we referred in our last issue. Letters condemning the law as it stands were read from Drs. Storrs, Behrends and others. A committee was appointed to take steps looking to such change in the law as will leave the churches in the liberty they enjoyed before its passage in 1895. It is expected that another meeting will soon be held to further the same object. Either the law must be changed or Congregationalism must evacuate the State of New York.

Apropos of the recent ecclesiastical farce in Philadelphia let the following skit be quoted. William Penn's statue surmounts the dome of the City Hall near the church where the "martyr's portrait" is "enshrined."

A DIALOGUE.

Quoth William Penn to Martyr Charles,
"You'll scarcely feel at home
Down there upon a window-pane
While I enjoy the dome.

"Let me step down and out, I pray,
And you be patron saint.
A Friend ought not to stand in bronze
And leave a king in paint."

Quoth Martyr Charles to William Penn,
"'Tis best to let things be,
They're used to looking up to you,
And they can see through me."

Ambassador Bayard forwarded to her Majesty, Queen Victoria, a copy of The Congregationalist's Book of the Pilgrimage. The committees who had the Pilgrimage in charge do not claim to be a society, but they will appreciate the acknowledgment made to them by her Majesty, through her private secretary, which follows:

> The Queen has been pleased to accept the specially bound copy of the Book of the Pilgrimage, which the delegates of the American Society of the Pilgrim Fathers have been good enough to offer her Majesty through the ambassador of the United States. May I venture to ask that his Excellency may kindly convey to that body the thanks of the Queen for the above named book?
>
> Yours very truly, ARTHUR BIGGE.

The debt of the American Baptist Missionary Union on March 1 will approximate $306,000, and the debt of the Home Missionary Society of the same denomination at the same date will approximate $180,000. If the members of the Baptist churches of the North will give $236,000 before next July 1, Mr. John D. Rockefeller of New York city, president of the Standard Oil Company and founder of Chicago University, will give the other $250,000 necessary to extinguish the debt. Few men in the world, if any, are possessed of more wealth than Mr. Rockefeller, or more disposed to give lavishly to endow and strengthen institutions or societies calculated to foster humanity's best interests. Coincident with this fact, however, is the other fact that society by no means is agreed that all Mr. Rockefeller's wealth has been earned, or acquired legitimately. Hence the Baptist missionary societies will need to make it plain to the churches they serve that in accepting this gift they in no way indorse the methods by which the giver obtained it.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

A Snare to the Poor.

It is astonishing how many people fall into the pawnbroker's grip. A recent report says that there are sixty-seven pawnbrokers in Chicago, who pay the city a tax of $300 a year for the privilege of carrying on their business. There are 150 others, second class brokers, who pay a tax of $50 a year. Chattel mortgage dealers are not required to take out a license, although in some respects their business does not differ much from that of the pawnbroker. The legal rate of interest charged by the pawnbroker is put down at three per cent. a month. In reality the charge is ten per cent., or 120 per cent. a year. The pawnbroker does not receive the articles in pledge, but buys them outright, and gives the owner a paper or a contract to sell them back for so much within a certain time. It will readily be seen what a power the pawnbroker has. He decides how much money he will advance, takes out a month's interest from the amount he lends, requires ten per cent. every month thereafter, so that soon the owner of the article pawned pays more for it in interest than it is worth. He stands little chance of getting money enough ahead to meet the interest and the sum advanced by the pawnbroker. The Civic Federation, alive to the injustice of the present system, will ask the legislature to pass a bill which, like the Massachusetts and the New York law, will limit the amount of interest collected to twelve per cent. a year. It also suggests the formation of a company under reputable management, on whose stock no more than six per cent. shall be paid in dividends, and whose remaining profits shall be applied to reducing the interest charged the patron. It is believed that a central establishment, with branches in different sections of the State, will meet a real want and contribute to the happiness and prosperity of a large number of unfortunate people.

Ridgeland's New Minister.

This church, now known as the Second Congregational Church of Oak Park, has at length persuaded Rev. Sidney Strong of Cincinnati, its first choice after Rev. W. A. Bartlett, the former pastor, went to the Kirk Street Church, Lowell, to accept its twice repeated call. Mr. Strong is in the prime of life, has enthusiasm and experience, and from what he has accomplished in previous pastorates encourages large expectations of him here. His new field is in one of our best suburbs, and will undoubtedly grow so rapidly in the future as to render this church a worthy sister of the First Church in Oak Park, now one of the largest and most efficient churches of any denomination in the Interior. Mr. Strong is fortunate in his supporters. He will find men and women who have been trained to Christian work and Christian benevolence, and are ready to co-operate in large plans for the future. Under Professor Chamberlain as pulpit supply the church has held its own during the interim between the pastorates.

Ministers' Meeting.

The subject under discussion was the old one, which is yet ever fresh, of pastoral visitation. Every now and then some one enters our fellowship who is inclined to look upon pastoral visitation as useless. At present there seems to be no difference of opinion among us. All heartily commend pastoral work, and insist that without it nothing really permanent can be done for a parish. The subject was introduced by Dr. J. G. Johnson.

Compulsory Insurance.

The Rock River Conference at its last session passed a resolution asking its members to consider what could be done to secure the compulsory insurance of the immense property in churches and parsonages owned by Methodists in this country. An approximate estimate places its value at $127,000,000. The general opinion has favored the forming of a society controlled by Methodists to insure this property, and to insure it at the lowest rates consistent with safety. At their last meeting the Methodist ministers of Chicago and vicinity expressed their approval of the plan, and steps have now been taken to secure the formation of the company desired and to carry out the probably almost universal wish of the church. It certainly is important that churches and parsonages should be insured, although it is not certain that other denominations than the Methodist would act wisely in forming companies within their own fold to carry this insurance.

Colorado College Jubilee.

Very naturally a college which has obtained an endowment of $200,000 wishes to express its appreciation of the success of its effort and the efforts of its friends to do this in some sort of a public festival. Colorado College has decided to celebrate its completion of the Pearsons Endowment Fund in a two days' gathering, Feb. 22, 23. Thus the interest in Washington's Birthday will be utilized to bring people together, not only to commemorate one of the nation's greatest men, but to celebrate the success of a work which when undertaken three years ago had little to encourage the faith of those engaged in it. No man rejoices more in the triumph of this college than the largest donor to the endowment fund, Dr. Pearsons himself. The fact that the institutions he has been aiding are one after another getting "out of the woods" and into a position where they can take care of themselves is to him and Mrs. Pearsons a cause of greater joy than large additions to their estate have ever been. If the friends of Mount Holyoke will come to her rescue Feb. 28, West as well as East, the result of the appeals made on that day will be of an importance which no one can now rightly estimate.

Continued Distress in the City.

The Mayor's Fund has thus far been carefully distributed by the police. Chief Badenoch now says that help will be required at least six weeks longer. No money is given out. No attempts have been made to furnish work. The chief says that this, in the present conditions, would be impossible. From his report ending Feb. 6, we learn that supplies of food were supplied to 11,662 families during the previous seven days, of coal, in very small quantities to 2,660 families, and in half-ton lots to 3,438 families. All supplies are of the best quality and have been obtained from the great dealers at the lowest possible rates. Vast quantities of clothing have been distributed. It costs, so far as can be determined, fifteen cents a day for each person aided. The question with thoughtful people is, What is to be the outcome of all this suffering? The persons assisted do not seem to be intemperate, at least to any considerable extent, but to be in want of employment. Will there be any employment for them in the near future? Certainly the prospects here for any extensive revival of business are not encouraging. The financial exhibit of the Illinois Steel Company for last year, for example, shows a deficit of $349,399. It is now following Rockefeller and Carnegie in offering steel rails at $18 a ton and will probably make still lower offers if it be necessary. But no company can continue long in business which furnishes no profits. Nor will labor submit to a reduction of wages below a living standard. Still, on the whole, feeling is hopeful even among business men, and if Christian men discharge their duty the outcome must be favorable to all concerned.

Chicago, Feb. 13. FRANKLIN.

The New Mt. Holyoke.

A Bird's-Eye View of Present Conditions and Prospects.

WHEN the morning papers of Sept. 28, 1896, made known in all parts of this country the burning to the ground of Mt. Holyoke College, expressions of regret and of sympathy sprang to thousands of lips. Fathers and mothers whose girls were then members of the institution wondered how the disaster would affect the immediate work of the college. The hundreds of Holyoke graduates, teachers, wives and mothers, noble and faithful souls, the salt of the communities in which their lot is now cast, felt that they had met with a personal loss Mt. Holyoke would never be quite the same place to them without the large, prim, rectangular building around which gathered so many pleasant associations of girlish days. And the great public which reads its morning paper chiefly by headlines, or, at least, the intelligent part of it, paused long enough in its effort to master the events of the last twenty-four hours to be at least momentarily sorry that so severe a calamity had overtaken the mother of women's colleges in the United States.

THE ADMINISTRATION BUILDING—To Be Erected.

In due time the sad news found its way across the Atlantic and the Pacific to graduates and friends of the school in South Africa, India, Turkey, Japan, China, and to institutions like Mrs. Gulick's school at San Sebastian, and the American College for Girls on the banks of the Bosporus, to Bitlis and Aintab and Harpoot, and other centers of light and knowledge in the blood-stained Armenian country, wherever Mt. Holyoke women, true successors of Mary Lyon herself, are holding up the ideals and standards of Christ's gospel. There, and everywhere, the tidings gave rise to a sense of bereavement and pain, and little by little from these distant quarters of the earth are coming back to the old home of their love expressions of the abiding affection of these far-away daughters. Only the other day came a gift of $25 from alumnæ in South Africa, while from members of a girls' school in Japan arrived recently a letter in which occurs these significant sentences: "We heard the name of Mary Lyon who founded your school, and we admire her and thank God for her great work. We hope that your school will not be cast down by misfortune, but will be more prosperous than ever. We have not means to help your school in far distance, but we have the wish to help by prayer."

"All chastening seemeth for the present to be not joyous but grievous," said the apostle, but the lovers of Mt. Holyoke have already begun to see the fulfillment of what he goes on to say, "yet afterward it yieldeth peaceable fruit to them that have been exercised thereby," for no one now can deny that the fire was a blessing in disguise. It came at a time when plans of material extension and expansion commensurate with the broadening scope of the curriculum were already under way. The leveling of the old structure meant the opportunity to begin de novo, to work out unhampered by existing physical limitations a large, broad, progressive plan of collegiate development. While the ruins were still smoking the quick minds of President Mead, her associates on the faculty and the trustees knew that Sept. 27 marked for Mt. Holyoke the beginning of a new and glorious era.

WILLISTON HALL.

The fire was a great revealer. We have spoken of the ready and genuine sympathy of the alumnæ and the public generally. Moreover, through the fire came a disclosure of the stuff of which the Mt. Holyoke young women of today are made. When the flames burst forth late in the afternoon of that September Sunday the Freshman Class had been in the institution only ten days. The fire brigade, that long standing and honorable feature of Mt. Holyoke life, had not been thoroughly organized, but so far as conditions permitted the members of the older classes carried out faithfully the instructions received in previous years. The exit from the building was not a flight, but an orderly retreat, and the fire itself, as Mrs. Mead cleverly puts it, was "a well-conducted affair." "The girls were simply grand," she adds, "there was no panic, no uproar. They laid hands on their personal effects and carried what they could to a safe place, and then gathered in groups here and there and quietly watched the flames eat away, little by little, the historic structure. The complaining spirit was absolutely wanting. No girl was bewailing her own losses, though in some cases they were deprived of all that they had except what they wore. The old Mt. Holyoke spirit of cheerfulness and unselfishness seemed to animate the girls even on that solemn and awful night."

So it has been since. Scattered here and there among the families of the village, necessarily in many cases cramped for room, restricted in their opportunities of being together in large numbers for those social pleasures which mean so much to college girls, they have nevertheless kept steadily at their tasks, and regret over the past has been entirely swallowed up in ardent hopes for the future. Less than half a dozen girls returned to their homes because of the fire. On the very evening when it took place Mrs. Mead, with rare thoughtfulness, suggested the sending of dispatches to their parents, and the wires were kept hot for several hours with messages, not many of which were couched in despondent phrases.

It speaks much for the discipline of the college that on the next morning with scarcely an absentee the students assembled in the chapel of the village church almost as calmly as if they were in their accustomed meeting place, and as the roll was called and Mrs. Mead spoke reassuring words, and as the college spirit broke forth in the song beginning, "Holyoke, Holyoke," etc., every one present felt that she was attending one of the most thrilling and meaningful gatherings of her life. The report to which certain papers gave circulation that Mrs. Mead was prostrated by the fire was utterly unfounded. Her health has been excellent, and she has endured with great calmness and courage the unusual strain and shown herself equal, in a thousand ways, to the new problems forced upon the administration.

On the next day but one the teachers met their classes, and by Thursday the regular program was resumed. Fortunately, for some years past nearly all the recitations and lectures have been given in Williston Hall and the new Science Building, only one room in the main building, "Room B," dear to so many of the older graduates, being at the time of the fire utilized for recitations. Hence it was much easier to proceed with the customary routine.

MRS. E. S. MEAD—President of the College.

Another thing which the fire revealed was the genuine regard which the townspeople cherish for the college. For nearly sixty years it has lived on pleasant terms with the people of the village, and hardly any friction has marked the relations of "town and gown." But not until the night of the fire did the college fully appreciate the latent possibilities of South Hadley affection and hospitality. Citizen after citizen came forward offering to take from one to a dozen into his home. Mrs. Mead took up her temporary headquarters at the house of Mrs. Cook, just south of the grounds, from which, along toward midnight, she and her associates dispensed sandwiches to the wearied firemen. It is notable, too, that there was only one instance of thieving, though people poured in by the hundred from Northampton, Holyoke and neighboring cities. On the other hand, many willing hands aided in the work of rescue and protection, and one zealous soul was so consumed by the passion of altruism as to bear forth with the utmost care from the dining-room a number of casters, which to unprejudiced minds ought long ago to have been retired on a pension.

THE HALL FOR CHEMISTRY AND PHYSICS.

So much for the good will of townspeople and alumnæ, for the courage and fidelity of the girls and for the wisdom and resourcefulness of the faculty. Now what has been done towards making good the place of the edifice that is gone, and towards materializing plans for enlargement? To pick up the thread of continuity we must go back a year or more before the fire, to the time when Dr. Pearsons, that princely giver to educational institutions, offered $50,000 for an endowment fund provided $150,000 more could be secured. The fact that Dr. Pearsons when a physician years ago at Chicopee used to visit the college, and the fact that he had been in his boyhood under the spell of Mary Lyon's personal influence doubtless had much to do with this generous endowment offer, which was already being responded to by the alumnæ and friends of the college before the fire. Since that event efforts have been redoubled, and up to date about $90,000 of the necessary $150,000 have been secured. Alumnæ associations all over the country are putting forth strenuous endeavors, and all are animated by an enthusiasm and an expectation which shrink from no discouragements. Circulars and private letters by the score have been flying all over the country, and now that Mary Lyon Sunday is drawing near no effort is neglected that will arouse pastors and churches and individual givers. The executive responsibility for a large share of this correspondence is in the competent hands of Miss Anna C. Edwards, for so many years an honored associate principal, and of Miss Louise F. Cowles, secretary of the National Alumnæ Association. It is a significant fact that seven of the trustees voluntarily assembled around the smoking ruins the next morning after the fire to consult about immediate rebuilding, and too much cannot be said of the efficiency and energy with which the building committee have developed plans and pushed forward the erection of the buildings. Moreover, local sentiment in the Connecticut Valley, as expressed in the action of the Congregational Club and of the Franklin and Hampshire County Associations of Congregational ministers, have strongly favored aggressive and persistent measures to secure funds.

One group of alumnæ, those in and around New York and Brooklyn, as long ago as 1889 began to agitate the erection of a more modern house in which to place the overflow of girls from the main building, which was then beginning to be crowded. These graduates were spurred on in their undertaking by the memory of Miss Mary Brigham of Brooklyn, whose death in a railway accident in June, 1889, just after her election to the presidency of Mt. Holyoke, will be recalled. In honor of her they set out to secure $20,000 or more to build a Mary Brigham Hall, and to this enterprise Dr. Pearsons last spring promised $10,000. The balance has already been secured and the Mary Brigham Hall is already a reality, the probability being that it will be ready for occupancy early in April. As respects the resources for the remaining buildings, now an immediate necessity, the nucleus was the insurance money, which amounted to $127,000. To this Dr. Pearsons has added the generous sum of $40,000, and so his total gifts, present and prospective, to the institution already mount up to $100,000.

Mary Brigham Hall will accommodate perhaps fifty persons, but in addition to it four or five dormitories, at least, are needed in order to furnish sufficient housing accommodations for the girls now on the ground. These, with their furnishings, will cost in all not less than $125,000. Then an administration building and chapel must be provided, which cannot cost less than $75,000 and may cost $100,000, while an art building is another imperative need.

As soon as the question of rebuilding was faced the trustees were immediately confronted with the question of one dormitory or more. Should the old idea be re enshrined in one structure large enough to shelter the entire college, or should the more modern plan of several smaller edifices be adopted? There were prominent and influential alumnæ who advocated the single building on the ground that it would best conserve the traditions of Mt. Holyoke. But the weight of opinion speedily proved to be in favor of the other system. It was hoped for a time that arrangements could be made for a common dining-room. Memories of the place whither 300 girls and half a hundred teachers resorted three times a day, and which represented so much in the way of social intercourse and unity of life, doubtless fostered the desire for something corresponding to it in the new Mt. Holyoke. Further investigation, however, made it apparent that such provision could not be made with due regard for economy. Therefore for the present, at least, the separate houses will have their own dining-rooms, which are to be constructed in such a way, however, as to permit their transformation into studies should it ever be best to have one central dining-room.

The college, however, will not lack a unifying center. The Administration Building, with the chapel, which will probably be known as Mary Lyon Hall, will not only be central in the group of buildings, but there all the common interests of the college will be focused. The president will have her office there, as well as the registrar, treasurer and musical director. Unless some generous friend provides a special building for that purpose, the reading-room will be there, as well as the auditorium where the college will assemble for religious exercises and for certain social functions.

Any one familiar with the past of Mt. Holyoke, who visits South Hadley today, experiences a little shock of bewilderment, and it takes him at least a few moments to get his bearings. In the first place, it is a novel sensation to whirl up on the electric cars from Holyoke in less than half an hour. Visions of the lumbering old stagecoach from Smith's Ferry, which invariably had to wait for the drowsy boatman, flit through his mind. Yet the comfort of the newer method of approach on a winter's day dispels all regret. The only thing which looks natural, as he alights from the trolley, is the old library building, which the flames approached but did not invade, and yet even it has a strange look—an island of brick, with snow fields stretching away on every hand save to the south, where the ruins of the old edifice are much in evidence. They have been pretty well cleared up, however, the portable débris having been removed.

Work has not yet begun on the administration building, but 300 pairs of hands are busy on the four dormitories. The Mary Brigham Hall is furthest advanced. It stands to the south of the campus, just in the rear of the Cook homestead, facing the street, its north front facing the site of the old building. On a line with it, to the east, are two other dormitories, the walls of one of which are about half completed, while the other is just beginning to rise from the ground. These three, when completed, will constitute a splendid series of buildings, though the accommodations which they furnish will be adequate to the housing of less than one-half of the students. The college, by the way, has since the fire purchased about twenty-five acres of land to the south of the present campus. This admits of the building of these three dormitories, and provides for them ample grounds in the rear, which can be utilized for future structures if the need arises. Since Treasurer A. L. Williston assumed his present office the area of the college grounds has been doubled.

We have to cross the main street of the village to find the fourth dormitory, which is to be larger than either of the others and will accommodate perhaps 100 inmates. At present it is known as the West Cottage, but, like dormitories two and three, it is ready to change its name whenever any one will come forward with such substantial evidences of interest in the college as will justify his being allowed to name it. Building operations have been greatly facilitated by favorable weather up to the recent past, and it is quite remarkable that less than four months after the fire such progress should have been made toward recouping the loss. There was a temporary lull in operations one day when a strike went into effect because several non-union men dared to take part in proceedings and a foreman committed the unpardonable crime of taking hold with his own hands by way of variety on simply "bossing." The commotions in the industrial world, however, are not a serious impediment to the process of rebuilding, though South Hadley now is brought near enough to the outside world to feel to some extent the pulsations of the times.

It will be seen from the foregoing account that from a scenic point of view Mt. Holyoke will present quite a different front six months hence from what has been the familiar picture in the eyes of those who have hitherto looked upon it. It will cover more territory, but the fact that the services of so skilled a landscape gardener as Frederick Olmstead have been secured guarantees a picturesque and symmetrical disposition of the buildings, and certain old and dear landmarks will enable the returning graduate to orient herself after a little. The library may be moved back, but Williston Hall and the Hall for Chemistry and Physics will stand where they have ever stood. Mary Lyon's grave and the simple monument which marks it will, as heretofore, be a shrine beside which many will stand with bowed heads and reverent hearts, and the rugged Holyoke range to the north of the town, through whose Notch Amherst men will continue to come on errands similar to those which lured their fathers and grandfathers before them, will continue to look down in benediction upon Mary Lyon's school.

Yes, there is a new Mt. Holyoke. There will never again be the ceaseless ding-dong-ing of multitudinous bells. There will never again be quite the same sort of family life which prevailed when all were under one roof before the fire came. Changes of one sort and another had been creeping in —beneficent, wholesome changes against which none could remonstrate except those who are so anchored to the past that they refuse to keep step with the advancing spirit of our time. And the fire has sped forward this new era in Mt. Holyoke's life. Just as the college in all its departments has advanced intellectually at an equal rate of progress with all the collegiate institutions of the country, whether for men or women, so as respects its external equipment it will be in line with the best modern ideas.

But the new Mt. Holyoke will not part company with the old. There will be the same closeness of relation between pupils and teachers. No member of Mt. Holyoke's faculty thinks her duty to her scholars done when she leaves her lecture-room. Never was personal influence going forth more constantly and more effectively. The same ideals which have ruled at Mt. Holyoke for sixty years will be held up before the young lives intrusted to its care. Girls will come there as the years go on and be instructed in earthly lore by the most competent teachers that can be obtained, but they will be learning at the same time what to do with their education when they get it. Simplicity and earnestness will continue to animate the life within Mt. Holyoke's walls, and the graduates of the future, like the long line of those who have preceded them, will go forth to consecrate the ripe and beautiful fruits of training to the service of their fellowmen. H. A. B.

MARY LYON; HER BREADTH AND PROGRESSIVENESS.

BY ANNA C. EDWARDS.

No one who gives any attention to the career of this distinguished woman will deny her claim to originality. She was "the great innovator," the grand organizer of the nineteenth century movement for the education of woman. "If," as one has said, "the honor of discovery belongs to him who first puts a novel idea into such working order as to make it of practical value, that honor surely belongs to Mary Lyon. It is generally understood, also, that she was possessed of strong religious enthusiasm, which she impressed in a great degree upon the institution which she founded at South Hadley. She herself relates, "I used to wish for some quiet retreat in the woods, where I could gather all the young women, explain to them the great principles of benevolence and send them all over the world doing good."

The story of her efforts to raise money for the Mt. Holyoke Seminary yet to be, how she went from town to town, through the Connecticut Valley, is a fascinating one. "Yes," says one, "I remember Miss Lyon. I was one of about forty who gathered one Sabbath afternoon to hear her speak in a small schoolhouse in Ashfield. She sat by herself in that district school teacher's chair, and asked one of the ministers present to open the meeting with prayer. He did so in the dry, theological way of the time, and after the singing of a hymn, in which she joined to the best of her ability (it was a grief to her that she could not sing well), she read a few verses of Scripture and said: 'My friends, there is but one absorbing thing in this life, and that is our relation to God, his cause and our eternal future—you and I and God, nothing else.' So she went on, passing naturally to the great subject on her heart. 'You, my neighbors,' she said, 'know me and why I am here today. I am concerned for the cause of education, which, especially among women, is not what it should be. I really think it a less evil that the farmers and mechanics should be scantily educated than that their wives, the mothers of their children, should be. I want to establish an institution where the training of character, as well as knowledge of books, shall be made prominent. We have selected a site in the quiet town of South Hadley, under the shelter of Mt. Holyoke, and I am collecting funds for the building dollar by dollar, here a little and there, I hope, considerable; do not think any gift too small. I want large sums, indeed, but dollars and half-dollars with prayer go a great ways. This is to be a house of prayer; let it be built of money accompanied with prayer.'"

Many more testimonies to the religious earnestness of Mary Lyon might be added, yet there are other traits in her character that must not be overlooked. Breadth, balance, symmetry, knowledge of human nature, foresight, all necessary to the founder of a permanent institution, she possessed to an unusual degree. The very fact that she planned for the future, while others thought only of the present, and that she never narrowed her interest to the needs of Mt. Holyoke Seminary alone, shows this. At the same time that she seemed all absorbed in the effort to plant the new school, she sent of her small means to aid the similar work at Oberlin, and she found great comfort under all difficulties in the thought that schools and colleges (she meant her seminary to be a college) would soon spring up all over the United States.

Not least in her equipment for her mission was her general, and in some branches thorough, acquaintance with most of the studies included in college courses of the time. She was winning in her manners, not scorning the aid of suitable attire, and withal possessed of strong, practical common sense. Dr. Edward Hitchcock, after listening to her exposition of her ideas, seriously proposed that the new institution be called Pangynaskean Seminary, a Greek term well rendered in modern phrase, "all round woman."

Singularly enough—except as we can now see it was necessary to her highest influence—her intellectual development preceded that of the spiritual. Perhaps it was only a modest distrust of herself, brought up as she had been in the atmosphere of revivals, that led her to sit on the crooked trunk of a tree in Ashfield, during school intermissions, explaining to the younger children the plan of salvation, which she well understood but could not yet apply to herself. For years she "studiously avoided all reference to her own spiritual state," while an unbounded thirst for knowledge took possession of her soul. Her achievements in Latin are well known, and she earnestly desired Greek and even Hebrew for her students—a wish which recent years at Mt. Holyoke have seen fully realized. Literature and especially history were favorite studies with her, and her attainments in science were of no mean order.

Some of the master minds of the time did not disdain to assist in her instruction. With one she pursued the study of mathematics as far as the calculation of eclipses; with others she gained familiarity with laboratory practice in chemistry until she was able to perform experiments herself during the first year of the seminary, and this she always enjoyed next to Butler's Analogy. Her own carefully prepared herbarium still remains among the botanical treasures of Williston Hall, and she followed with keen delight Dr. Hitchcock's discoveries in geology. She was not troubled, as many were at that time, about the "six days of creation," but she kept her mind open to truth from whatever source, saying, "If only the Bible have the first place in our schools I care not how closely the sciences follow." *

Her independent attitude toward trivial matters appears on many occasions. She was brought up a Baptist, but joined the Congregational church and never troubled herself about denominational differences. She preferred South Hadley as the location for the seminary, for one reason because there was but one place of public worship in the village. Accustomed to the good old way of "keeping Saturday night," she readily changed to Sabbath evening, to suit better the convenience of her large household.

Her name was really Mary Mason Lyon, but the world knows her simply as Mary Lyon, because she dropped the middle initial altogether in order to save her valuable time. Her friend, Miss Grant, on the contrary, although she had a special dislike to the name Polly, never omitted the obnoxious P. from her signature.

As a teacher she was fresh, bright and stimulating, full of new plans and ready to listen to the suggestions of others. She was the first to introduce maps in the study of geography in the Buckland schools. She saw great possibilities in Colburn's Arithmetic, and as for grammar, her pupils believed her dictum, "Grammar measures the mind, and if you cannot go into grammar you cannot penetrate into anything." The graduates of her winter schools in Buckland were so much sought for as teachers in neighboring towns that "committee men" were often chosen in November instead of March, in order to secure the best candidates. She anticipated the modern system of object teaching, and gained much of her own education in what might be called summer schools.

"All her teaching," writes one of her early Holyoke students, "was realistic. Her Bible had one peculiarity; mine opens most readily at the gospels and Psalms, but hers opened as easily at Genesis, Deuteronomy and Daniel as anywhere. One cold winter she used to gather us all in the warm dining-room on Sabbath evenings and teach us the history of Israel in the wilderness by arranging us in the order of the tribes. I can see now just how we were located, and it would not have surprised us to hear the command, 'Move forward,' as Miss Lyon made us feel that God was guiding us as truly as he did his ancient people."

Her views on teaching, as given in her afternoon talks at Mt. Holyoke, would form a treatise by themselves, and show well the progressive tendency of her mind. "A young woman," she says, "is not properly educated until she has had some experience in teaching children. In no other way can one come to so well understand the human mind and heart. Prepare thoroughly for every exercise, but study the children more than any book; seek to have your mind reach their minds, make the dull eyes think once a day, make the dull eyes sparkle once a day, never compare one child with another or be in haste to believe a pupil has done wrong.

MARY LYON.

"I don't want you to spin and weave because I did; it was best for me to do it, but you can finish your studies earlier and have more time to work for the Lord." No one can doubt what would be her feeling in the present crisis in missionary operations. "I have two idols," she said, "the seminary and the missionary cause, and they were both God's before they were mine. Who can bear to think of retrenchment in the foreign work?" "I give to the college," writes an earnest Holyoke woman, "just as I do the American Board and home missions, and for the same reason." Yet Miss Lyon did not mean her institution to be specially a place of training for missionary work; she thought very few young women would go abroad, but that all should be fitted for their place in life, whatever that might prove to be.

How does Miss Lyon regard the present straits of her beloved institution? "I do not think she is troubled by the destruction of the old building," says one of her early graduates, "but she is interested, and the least we can do is to go on with the work she so grandly begun." On the approaching 100th anniversary of her birth her words uttered so long ago will revive in the memories of her daughters everywhere, but especially throughout the cities, towns and hamlets of New England, saying, "Arise ye, and build this latter house to the glory of the Lord."

THE LOUISIANA ASSOCIATION.

The 28th annual meeting was held with the University Church in the chapel of Straight University, New Orleans, Feb. 5-8. The association seems to grow young as it grows old. Never was the spirit of youth, energy and hopefulness so manifest. Fourteen churches were represented. Great interest centered in the reports from the churches. The story this year was one of gains and losses, of hopes and fears, but the gains exceeded the losses, and the fears were few and the hopes many. It is clearly perceived that the churches are making steady advancement under their present intelligent pastors in raising the standard of Christian character and broadening the scope of Christian service.

Especially gratifying is the unwearied attention given to temperance. A number of brethren stated that the use of intoxicants of any kind as a beverage, once regarded as proper, is now looked upon as disreputable by all Christians. One church, Belle Place, Rev. M. W. Whitt, pastor, has built a new house of worship at a cost of about $800, all but $60 of which has been paid.

Some notable addresses were given. Rev. F. I. Paradise, rector of Christ Church, spoke with power on The Social Structure as the Divinely Ordained Instrument for Realizing the Kingdom of God on Earth; Rev. C. H. Taintor ably represented the Church Building Society; President Atwood gave an instructive address on the A. M. A. System of Education. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. J. A. Herod, and Rev. M. W. Whitt gave an excellent report of the A. M. A. Jubilee Meeting in Boston. What New Openings for New Churches or Missionary Work and the Obstacles to the Progress of Our People were subjects that were discussed with interest and ability. Rev. G. W. Henderson was moderator, Rev. C. W. Johnson the new corresponding secretary.

An afternoon was given up to the interesting meeting of the Woman's Missionary Union and in the evening the union was addressed by Mrs. C. H. Taintor. Mrs. Hitchcock is the new president.

The Sunday School Association convened on the 8th. New life has been infused into this organization by the labors of Mr. Alfred Lawless, who for some years has been a kind of general superintendent, and was enabled by the aid of the Sunday School Society to visit the different country schools last summer.

G. W. H.

The conservative Churchman has come to the conclusion that "Christian socialism is the most sane, the most practical, the most reasonable scheme for the amelioration of the lot of labor and poverty that has ever been proposed."

---

* Her fondness for natural science gave a certain bent in that direction to the seminary, which the college retains to the present time.

The Home

BE SWIFT TO LOVE.

BY ELIZABETH J. WOODS.

Be swift to love, O heart,
Be slow to hate;
While thy love tarrieth
It may be late.

Too late to cheer and bless
The heart next thine;
Too late to wake in it
The life divine.

Only with "cords of love"
Souls may be drawn,
Love only vanquisheth
Hatred and scorn.

Is it impossible
Say'st thou, dear heart?
Naught is impossible,
For thou art part—

Part of God's heart of love,
He dwells in thee,
And through thy humble love
Give his so free.

So be thou swift to love
With love divine.
Nothing can love withstand,
This power is thine.

The Educational and Industrial Union of Boston has inaugurated a scheme which, it is hoped, will help straighten out what has been for a long time despairingly called "the domestic problem." Believing that there are many housekeepers who would be willing to take an intelligent woman and give her the training which she needs for the sake of having responsible service, the union invites women wage-earners, whether experienced or not in housework, to consult with its committee on domestic reform at its headquarters on Boylston Street as to the possibility of entering domestic service. It is expected that good conditions and fair wages will be given in exchange for intelligent and faithful service.

One who is deeply interested in bringing about a better observance of Sunday avers that in large cities, at least, the habits of busy professional women form a serious obstacle against reform. Many such women are a desirable accession to social circles, but their regular engagements during week days preclude their acceptance of invitations. Consequently "informal" receptions are held for them at the houses of their friends on Sunday evenings, or they themselves arrange for dainty suppers in their own homes. While this class may be a small one, even in cosmopolitan centers, yet their influence cannot be ignored upon the careless multitude who are ever ready to follow in the wake of social leadership.

The case of the poor women just burned out of their tenement homes, mentioned in our issue of Jan. 21, who refused garments because they were out of style, is paralleled elsewhere. A worker among the mountain whites tells us that women coming from cheerless, carpetless, two-roomed shanties critically examined the comfortable cloaks sent them from the North and actually refused them because the sleeves were small. They, too, would rather be cold than out of style. The writer then adds: "But do not condemn these poor sisters. Until Christian women have the courage to wear their clothes as long as they are good instead of spending time and strength remodeling them or money buying new, up-to-date clothing, there is great danger that the people whom we would help, both in this land and across the sea, will follow the Christians' style, instead of their Christ."

GIVEN TO HOSPITALITY.

BY ELIZABETH ELLIOT.

There is much truth in the trenchant Mrs. Poyser's remark that, "I'd sooner ha' brewin' day an' washin' day together than one o' these pleasurin' days. There's no work so tirin' as danglin' about an 'starin' an' not rightly knowin' what you're goin' to do next, an' keepin' your face i' smilin' order, like a grocer o' market day, for fear people shouldna' think you civil enough. An' you've nothin' to show for it when it's done if it isn't a yallow face wi' eatin' things as disagree."

For these practical reasons, and some others, it is not altogether a matter of regret that the day of long visits has about passed away. Life, at least in cities, has become so busy and complicated an affair that nobody has time either to make or to receive them. Time was when friends would at certain intervals take up their abode with each other and remain for an indefinite period, and when even a friendly call was not felt to be really friendly unless it was "spending the day." In those days our more leisurely, or perhaps more unselfish, mothers and grandmothers, in inviting a friend for a visit would have disdained to say "spend a week with us," or "come Friday and stay over Sunday." Their invitations were always unlimited, and the faintest hint of a desire to know when a guest would leave would have been regarded as red revolution.

Now your friends "put you up over night," and though they cordially welcome the coming they no less happily speed the parting guest. For they must at once take up the threads of the life fabric they are spinning, and which they but laid down for a moment to pause and chat with you, or the threads will be tangled, and there will be breaks and snarls which it would take days to unravel. And you, on your part, have only turned aside for a brief rest, and must hasten back to your beaten path of daily cares and duties, though with a little fresher interest in the ceaseless round for the change of horizon.

With your friends in your own town, also, it is just as much a touch and go intercourse. Your old school friend marries and comes to live near you. You used to see her daily and hourly, every thought and plan was discussed with her and you held interminable conversations and compared the feelings and sentiments, which you called opinions, on every subject under heaven. A change in the arrangement of your hair or the ribbon round your throat was of no more interest to yourself than it was to her. She knew just as much about the making of your new gown and who came to see you last night as did the dressmaker and the visitor. You think how pleasant it will be to have her near you, what nice long talks you will have, what cozy mornings together with your work.

You promptly ask her and her husband to dinner, and are invited in return, and entertained with a lavish display of her bridal bravery in elaborate centercloth and doilies, sparkling cut glass, and glittering silver in various abstruse new kinds of spoons and forks, invented since your own wedding, and with whose mysterious uses only the bride is familiar. Then follows a brief period of a brisk interchange of visits, but the intervals between grow longer and longer, and by and by she calls on you one winter and you return her call the next.

Occasionally you meet in a shop or on a street car, or at Mrs. Somebody's crowded and noisy reception, and clasp hands for a moment and exchange a few hurried inquiries about your respective Jacks and Dorothys, and say, "Do come and see me," and then pass on. But these brief encounters, as if between those rari nantes in gurgite vasto that Virgil tells of, seem to give a very scrappy and exclamatory character to your intimacy. Of course you include her in the list to whom you send cards for your Thursdays in February, or for the one general afternoon crush by which you clear off all your social debts. But, as in the same breath you greet her, urge her to go out in the dining room and turn to receive the smiling woman entering behind her, it does dawn upon you that you have lost your old friend, and you scarcely know whether it is resentment or repentance you feel.

It is just so, too, with your husband. He used to like so much to have his friends to dinner or for a quiet smoke and talk in the evening. When he first had a home of his own one of its great delights was to have Tom or Harry drop in, and, without much urging, sit down to dinner, and one of its charms was that his wife was there to make things homey and comfortable. But if Tom and Harry have to have two weeks' notice, and they must appear in their evening clothes, and he must hurry home from the office and jump into his own, and he can only talk to them across two or three décolleté women, why, the game is hardly worth the candle. So when he has a special desire to see his old friends he meets them at his club and dines there, and telegraphs you that he won't be up to dinner tonight.

So we let slip out of our lives one of the things which give them their keenest zest—the habit of hospitality. To be hospitable doesn't necessarily mean eight courses and a man to wait. Most of our friends know we do not keep a butler, and the man is the last finishing touch of formality which freezes the whole thing. Two parlors and a dining-room densely crowded with shrieking women, each one trying to make herself heard above the din made by the whole aggregation, isn't hospitality. Every woman emerges from that mêlée in a mental condition suggestive of the scoffing football lyric:

After the game is over,
After the field is clear,
Straighten my nose and shoulder,
Help me to find my ear!

Clubs are not hospitality, if a man has a home to which to ask his friends. There is more hospitality in a chop and a baked potato, well cooked and well served, on your own table, with your own family around it, than in all the resources of the most accomplished French chef at the club, though these are by no means to be lightly undervalued as additions to your simple menu if you can afford them.

As Lowell tells us, "The gift without the giver is bare." The true essence of hospitality is the bit of yourself that you give your friend, in your habit as you live; the bit of your home as it really is, with perhaps a little extra garnish of flowers and light in his honor, but not transformed into an unreal semblance. So I would urge upon busy women to take time to be friendly, to make a little sacrifice to keep your friendships in repair, as Dr. Johnson says, to remember the outcasts who live in boarding houses, to consider it a part of your regular routine to have now and again a friend to lunch, or two to dinner, and a leisurely talk afterwards. Give them just as much good cheer as you can without feeling anxious about either the expense or the domestic machinery. Give them, above all else, a cordial welcome and the feeling that their coming adds to your pleasure without increasing your burdens. And then see if you do not find your horizon broadened, your life sweetened, and to others as well as yourself the weary weight

Of all this unintelligible world lightened.

FOOD FOR THE CHILD UP TO SCHOOL AGE.

II.

BY MARY E. GREEN, M. D.

Many mothers seem to think that when the child is weaned it may begin life in quite an independent manner as regards its food, eating the same as grown people and fostering its likes and dislikes in a similar manner. There could be no greater mistake than this idea, for the care and anxiety which has made the mother watchful during the first two years should be in no way diminished during the next five years of the child's life. For it is in these early years that the laws of hygiene should be mastered, and the foundation laid for that perfect and ideal life to come in which there will be neither sickness nor pain—a condition which we call health.

The body must be properly cared for and nourished by those material substances called food, which are to build it up and maintain the strength, yielding exact results in the laboratory of the human system. Hence it is necessary to have a knowledge of the relative value of foods, their proper combination and the best method of cooking. Whatever else a woman may or may not know she cannot be excused from a knowledge of those things which may determine the weal or woe of her family. After the child is given solid food instead of milk the digestive organs are often sorely taxed to assimilate it and frequent attacks of indigestion and bowel trouble are the result. Some one has said that a healthy child is a well-fed animal. This is true inasmuch as a child should be able to eat, sleep and play, alternately, with the absolute enjoyment of life which belongs to a lamb or a kitten.

Dr. Willard Parker used to say, "If you would have your children lambs give them milk, if you want them lions feed them upon meat." That is to say, meat stimulates the passions and certainly is not the food for the young as a daily diet. It is not my purpose to discuss the merits or demerits of vegetarianism, for the controversy would be endless with an array of science on both sides. There is one point, however, on which every one does agree and that is the American people consume more meat than any other nation, which is altogether too much, and, again, we have not learned the value of cereals as food. Once a day is as often as a child should have meat, and even this is not at all necessary.

Wheat contains all the elements essential to build up the body and maintain it in a state of health. Pliny tells us "the people of Rome for 300 years together used no other food than groats made from common wheat," and he further states that the Roman gladiators were called Hordearii from the word hordeum, meaning barley, as this was their daily food, and these men were the strongest, most perfectly formed men in the world. Oats, rye, corn and barley all make excellent food and rank next to wheat in nutritive value. Thus the cereals, together with milk and well-selected fruit, should form the principal diet of the child, for it will develop the best blood, bone and muscle. "My children will not eat oatmeal or any of the cooked grains," says many a mother to me. To such mothers I can only say either the food is badly cooked or the child is badly managed. I have frequently seen both in otherwise well-ordered homes. It is the mother who must plan and direct what the child should have, and not the child who should dictate. I have been in homes where cookies, griddle-cakes and pastry were meltingly perfect, and the children's delight, but the bread was poor, the oatmeal was pasty, underdone and wholly unfit to eat. No child will ever refuse well-cooked cereal food unless it has been spoiled by having what it fancies, like my pale, sickly little friend whose mother bakes a big jar of molasses cookies each week as "Robbie will scarcely eat anything else." Robbie has a hard struggle for life between the doctor's visits and innutritious food. Should he reach manhood it will be with a ruined digestion, a weakened body, a life full of ills scarce worth the struggle of living.

Quite in contrast to this home is the one of my Scotch friend, who has four sturdy, rosy-cheeked boys full of life and health, requiring not much more care than the kittens with whom they romp and play. The breakfast of these boys consists of a big dish of "porridge," or oatmeal with milk, the supper the same, or bread and milk if they prefer. They do not eat the regulation family dinner and the mother tells me they never have. "I am raising my boys to be strong men," says this eminently sensible mother, and so in feeding her children she has a purpose, an end in view. If there were more such mothers there would be less sickness among children, as a properly fed child has a marvelous power for resisting disease.

If mothers will only give more time and thought to the study of foods they will soon have a dietary made out for the children containing many nice dishes made of oatmeal, rye, barley, corn, combined at times with apples, bananas, figs, dates, cherries and other fruits. Always have the best bread and butter with milk or water for a drink. Soups may be made from vegetables or meat, with the addition of barley or oatmeal, and when variously flavored are always liked. Macaroni is especially recommended in every household, as it is one of the most nutritious and easily digested foods. It is said that the Italians who live upon it, cook it three times a day and seven days each week, yet each time differently, now with a dressing of milk, again with butter and tomato sauce, then with cheese or mushrooms, and so on, making a great variety of appetizing dishes from the same article of food, which is the highest art of cookery.

While I do not intend to give recipes in these articles, yet I will give one for cooking oatmeal, which may be cooked in any home and does not take one half the time that the double boiler does. Three cups of water, one cup of oatmeal, salt to taste, put all in a granite saucepan, stir until it boils, then cover and set it where it will cook slowly half an hour. When partially cool it will be jelly-like; eaten with milk, cream or sugar this is the perfection of all breakfast foods.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

'Tis splendid to live so grandly
 That, long after you are gone,
The things you did are remembered,
 And recounted under the sun;
To live so bravely and purely
 That a nation stops on its way,
And once a year, with banner and drum,
 Keeps its thought of your natal day.

'Tis splendid to have a record
 So white and free from stain
That, held to the light, it shows no blot,
 Though tested and tried amain;
That age to age forever
 Repeats its story of love,
And your birthday lives in a nation's heart,
 All other days above.

And this is Washington's glory,
 A steadfast soul and true,
Who stood for his country's honor
 When his country's days were few.
And now when its days are many,
 And its flag of stars is flung
To the breeze in defiant challenge,
 His name is on every tongue.

Yes, it's splendid to live so bravely,
 To be so great and strong,
That your memory is ever a tocsin
 To rally the foes of the wrong;
To live so proudly and purely,
 That your people pause in their way,
And year by year, with banner and drum,
 Keep the thought of your natal day.

—Harper's Round Table.

THE GOOD OF SORROW.

Great sorrows never leave us what we were before. Then none can pass under that hammer and remain the same. But even if we are left without chastisement something is daily passing from us, always passing, that something which comes with youth and hope and love. After a great baptism of sorrow we must be different; but what we should pray and strive for is that we may emerge from it better, richer, more faithful, more helpful, more filled with a heartfelt delight in God's will, more able to make a true answer to God's surprises and wonders of love.

There are periods in life, years and years, when no great trouble visits us. Then the storms of sorrow fall, and we are apt to say, I have passed through and I may hope for an immunity for the future. It is not so. The troubles may come back, they may come back again worse. As has been said, our Pharaohs are seldom drowned in the Red Sea, and we do not often behold their corpses stretched upon the sand. The bitterness of death may return. What then? At the very worst the memory of the past will help us. We shall retrace the slow, difficult way to peace; our trust in God will be deepened, and we shall realize that, after all, the range of sins and sorrows is limited, though the sea of troubles may roll its white-crested billows as far as the horizon. What are truly numberless are God's mercies. What is truly infinite is God's love.—Robertson Nicoll.

The happiness of life depends very much on little things; and one can be brave and great and good while making small sacrifices and doing small duties faithfully and cheerfully. —L. M. Alcott.

Closet and Altar

No man need be without comfort while the gates of prayer are open to him.

In Christ. Those two words contain the very secret, the sole secret of the Christian life. To have died with Christ unto sin, to have risen with Christ to righteousness, to grow in Christ by holiness—that is to be a Christian.—F. W. Farrar.

To give ourselves to thee, to blend
Our weakness with thy strength, O Lord our Friend,
This is life's truest privilege and end.
—Susan Coolidge.

It is a straight way to God from anywhere if we will, from silent room or open field or busy shop or street; but a very excellent route to his house in heaven is by way of his house on earth. Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary.—E. T. Fairbanks.

I love my God, but with no love of mine,
For I have none to give;
I love thee, Lord, but all the love is thine,
For by thy life I live.

There can be no doubt of what is signified by our catching and sending out again the light beheld in "the Face." Not as St. John and Mary saw do we see, but we see when we look for him we are sure to find him, with the other eyes, faith and communion, imagination and adoration, bringing out of the dim distance that Presence comforting and most dear; the wondrous and blessed countenance which painters and sculptors at their best, for fifty generations, have striven in vain to represent, grace upon grace, glory upon glory, in blended majesty and tenderness. The greater your need the more "open" the Face will be. Sometimes the medium may be hazy, dimmed by earthly dust or smoke or tears. But to high spirits and low, to loneliness and weariness, to the penitent and to the faint yet pursuing, he appears.—Bishop Huntington.

To think his thoughts is blessedness supreme;
To know himself, the Thinker, is our life;
To rest this weary intellect on his,
Is the glad ending of mind's endless strife.

For this is life eternal him to know,
And Jesus Christ his son whom he hath sent;
And this is light, to walk in his dear love,
Light brighter than the noon-bright firmament.
—Bonar.

O God, our Father, whose will it is that none should perish but that all should live, enable us so to use thy gift of freedom that it shall prepare us for the eternal life of holiness with thee. When in the temptations of the world we are sifted as wheat, grant us that our faith fail not. When we are in peril from the lusts that war against the soul, be thou our guard. For thine own pity and for the love of those who need us and who suffer when we fall, preserve us in the hour of weakness. For the love wherewith Christ loved us, grant us the fellowship of his Spirit when we are tried in the likeness of his temptations. And thou who hast helped us to the victory of faith shalt receive our grateful service evermore through Christ who for our redemption was tempted and overcame. Amen.

Mothers in Council.

Dear Saviour, we thank thee, that when thou wast upon earth thou didst take little children up in thine arms and bless them. Now thou art gone into the heavens, we rejoice to feel that thy love is none the less tender and watchful, and that thy hands even now are laid upon them in blessing. Thou dost abide with us still, and art nearer to us and dearer than when thou didst walk the earth in human form, for thou dost never leave us. We pray thee to illumine our hearts, that we may see thee with the eye of faith. Give us to feel thy touch upon us, that we may go forth to our duties in the greatness of thy strength, and rejoice evermore in thee. May we be so filled with the precious love of Christ that we shall reflect it upon our children, and they, in turn, shall taste its sweetness and power, and grow up into thee in all things. Help us, as a family, to take hold of hands today with a new covenant, with a higher and deeper joy; and pledge to thee our love and loyalty and service. If there come times of darkness and struggle, when the burdens press and perplexities thwart us, O, may we lean the harder upon thine almighty arm, and find strength in thee for every time of need. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

MANAGING CHILDREN.

I was glad to read, in a recent Congregationalist, the strong, sensible words in regard to controlling or exorcising the evil spirit which at times seems to possess active, excitable children. Such a child was I, and the bitter tempest of wrath and resentment which was roused in me by the violent measures used to bring me to terms proves that, in one case at least, the remedy was many times worse than the disease. The reference to some one's having tried tying a cloth over a child's mouth, and firmly holding his hands during an outbreak, brought back forcibly my own childish feelings of inward rage that I was not big enough to punish my oppressors, or in some way express my opinion of their attempts at controlling others.

The society with a long name interferes, with flashing eyes and the law at its back, when a nervous, mettlesome animal is goaded to desperation. But for a sensitive, highstrung human being there is no appeal. He can only submit, and wait for mature years to keep him from repeating the mistakes of his ancestors. Dr. Weir Mitchell, in Hugh Wynne, says: "A child's early life is such as those who rule over him make it, but they can only modify what he is. Yet, as all know, after their influence has ceased the man himself has to deal with the effects of blood and breed, and, too, with the consequences of the mistakes of his elders in the way of education." Truly the question of how to control wisely those under our care is an immense one, whether as applied to the more serious hysterics or the common, everyday "cloud no bigger than a man's hand." While we are in a transition stage from the old school to the new in matters of stern or lax discipline, we feel a strong sympathy for those who lament the new régime.

A father lately wrote, with reference to his children: "They are at that thoughtless period when they can hardly be held responsible for anything. I would that they might be so held, but the new theology and the new training for children do not permit any punishment, present or future."

In reading Black Beauty one is struck by the analogy between the training of an animal and the training of a child. "If a high-mettled horse (child) cannot be broken in by fair means, it will never be good for anything." And again, "He must have no will of his own, but must always do his master's will, even though he be very tired or very hungry, so you see this breaking in is a great thing." Then comes the famous remedy, "Bertwick balls," warranted to "cure almost any vicious horse"—a compound of "patience, gentleness, firmness and petting, one pint of each to be mixed with half a pint of common sense and given every day." Obedience to the latter phrase would do away with many spasmodic attempts at parental control in our households.

A young man remarked the other day, "My heart is touched by the small amount of sympathy that children get. I've been in many homes where they were well trained, but not sympathized with."

How sad this is if true! After all, what is government but simply the influence of a stronger, wiser will over an untrained one? A subtle something which quietly brings order out of would-be confusion.

No law can possibly be laid down for all mothers. If the genius for firm but gentle government is not in one, nothing else avails. Like a genius for music or cookery, it cannot be explained or handed about; it is inherent.

There is much sense and kindness in the old-fashioned saying that in learning to manage a child who is particularly difficult one must "get at him around the edges." The picture always presented to my mind by this mode of expression is that of a bird-lover with extended hand and gentle words trying to win a shy songster to a nearer acquaintance. When we learn how to get at, and not go at, children, the perplexing problem of government will be simplified, if not solved, for us mothers. EUGENIE L. BECKWITH.

SELF-CONTROL ONCE MORE.

I always read with interest what the Mothers in Council have to say, for, though my own children are grown up and I have no grandchildren to "spoil," my interest in the little ones and in the mothers who are prayerfully trying to fulfill their great trust is unabated. From our own mistakes we elders are sometimes fitted to give a word of caution to the younger generation. Therefore, I would offer a few hints regarding the child as it arrives at the age when its will begins consciously to conflict with the others. These conflicts will occur in even the "best regulated families," and how shall they be met by a mother burdened oftentimes beyond her strength by the multitude of household and other cares?

Dear young mother, when one of these occasions arises consider for a moment that no other duty is just then equal in importance to this, and, with a silent prayer for guidance, take the matter in hand at once. We will suppose that your child knows, so far as may be, your love for him. Then do not, in your insistance upon obedience, give him the least ground for supposing that it is in order to have your own way. Give him to understand that the work of control is for him to do, and that you are the loving, sympathetic adviser and helper. Don't be afraid to tell him that you had such struggles yourself when you were little. After a word or two of this sort a good way is to tell him to run away into a room by himself—don't forcibly shut him up—and when he feels pleasant again he can come out. If he is old enough to have learned to ask his Heavenly Father to help him, a word and look rightly given will tell him what to do when alone there. And his smiling, loving face when he comes back, and you receive him into your arms, more than repays the interruption and time taken from other duties.

Don't "lecture" much at the time of his excitement. Wait till the quiet bedtime hour when his heart is tender with your brooding and with the thought of the dear Jesus who so loves the little children. Then carefully and wisely bring up the day's experiences; show him the danger of yielding to his temper and how every victory is going to make him stronger next time. You can make a story of it sometimes—a fight with a big lion, or some such figure that will appeal to his imagination.

If the child is quite young it may be well to give him something to divert his mind at the time until he is calm and you are at liberty to attend to the matter. This is not the "let alone" policy by any means. Sometimes he will set up his will against yours when it is impossible to wait for him. Then just take him without a word and bear him where he must go; show him your power and authority, but don't scold. Surprise at his naughtiness and sorrow at his opposition to you who love him so much are far better weapons than harshness. As for scolding, it never did a particle of good anywhere under any circumstances. It is the outcome of your own nervousness, and is for you to subdue.

A word as to the general training of these high-tempered, headstrong natures. Such children usually have good points equally strong. Work upon the child through these. He is almost sure to be warm-hearted and affectionate. Give him a pet, if only a kitten, and put the responsibility of its comfort and happiness, so far as you can, in his hands. This will help develop control of himself.

Of course it is needless to urge care in the selection of the maids who are to have more or less authority with the children. When my children were so far out of babyhood that the nursemaid could be dispensed with, I made the nursery my sewing-room and spent my mornings there, and I look back to those as some of the happiest days of my life. At two o'clock the one servant of general work was expected to assume charge. On one occasion I happened to go up to my room adjoining the nursery and heard the sound of slaps on a little hand. I at once entered the nursery and said, "Mary, never do that again. Of course the children must mind what you say; but if they are disobedient report to me. No one but myself punishes the children." The truth of the matter was Mary wanted to finish some sewing of her own, and the children must "keep still" and not bother her. This repression is the worst thing possible for a nervous child. Always see that they have something to occupy them. Do not expect them to "keep still" without it. Otherwise you run a great risk of grave injury, even of affecting the mental balance.

I have never forgotten the first time I took one of my babies to church. I had enlightened her somewhat as to the meaning of the service and the quiet proper to the place. My attention being held by the sermon it was some time before I was struck by the preternatural stillness of the usually roisterous little body beside me. I glanced down at her and my thought was, if I don't get her out soon she will burst. After the service a lady in the next pew reached over and kissed her, saying, "What a dear little girl she has been!" Yes, but she did not go to church again for a long time.

Do we mothers sufficiently realize what life means to a young child? He has his own thoughts, tastes and desires, innocent enough usually. He sees every one around him doing, as he supposes, what they like, but as soon as he endeavors to act upon some desire for knowledge, some plan which he thinks will give him pleasure, he is met with denial, often hasty and thoughtless. He is merely carrying out the law of his own being, his natural method of growth, in much that he does. Give yourself time to consider why he wants to do what you think he ought not, and in most cases you will find this impulse of his can be satisfied in some other way without conflict. That little girl gave an unconscious rebuke to her friends who, when asked what her name was, said: "I guess it's Don't! That's what they most always call me."

How many fine natures must have been sadly injured by the old-time system of "breaking the will." These children with strong wills are to make the strong men and women of their generation. Let us feel our obligation to teach them to control and properly direct this God-given instrument of power.

H.

BABIE OLIVE.

HAVING A PHOTO TAKEN.

BY REV. W. T. SLEEPER.

Wee bit Babie Olive,
  What is it she spies,
Peerin' in the camera
  Wi' her bright blue eyes?
Ah, it is an angel
  Frae her ain countrie,
Where grow babie dimples an'
  Ilka cannie e'e.

Did the angels lose her
  'Mang the flowers braw?
Did the angels miss her
  When she cam' awa'?
Lang may mither keep her,
  Teaching her to be
Fit to live wi' angels
  In their ain countrie.

A LITTLE BOY'S INTERVIEW WITH WASHINGTON.

Among the romances of the American Revolution is an incident in the life of a brave young English lad, who became separated from his father and fell into the hands of the Americans. One day the boy heard that Washington was at a house near by, and he begged the Irish sentry to let him pass with his dog Barney. The way in which Maurice was restored to his father, who afterward embraced the patriot cause, is thus described by a writer in St. Nicholas:

> Maurice yielded up Barney and stepped into the hall, went along it and paused just inside an open door. He was trembling. A voice said, "What is your errand?" a voice even, grave and rather severe.
>
> Maurice raised his eyes. Just before the fireplace stood the great commander. To the boy's excited thought he seemed even larger than he was. Washington's hands were behind his back, his handsome head bent a little forward.
>
> "What is your errand, my lad?" said he again, with a note of command in the tone.
>
> "O, my father, my father!" he said. "I have been lost from him so very long!"
>
> Something in the thrilling child's voice, something in the piteous and forlorn expression of his face, went straight to the warm heart that the general carried beneath his calm exterior. He crossed the room in quick strides, and laying his hand on the boy's shoulder said, kindly, "My poor child!"
>
> This was too much. Maurice had borne bravely the long strain of waiting, the repeated disappointments, but the unexpected sympathy broke down his self-possession. He put his head in the crook of his arm and sobs came fast—sobs that shook him from head to foot. The general drew him aside, sat down in an armchair, and, taking the little hanging hand in both his own, said, "There, there, stop crying and tell me all about it!"
>
> Maurice choked down his sobs and told his story. At his father's name the general rose quickly.
>
> "Colonel Terraine's son! Why, then, your father was here a short time ago. He may be upstairs now!"
>
> Maurice forgot even the great chief and sprang for the door. But Washington caught him by the arm.
>
> "My dear boy—he does not know—I will go."
>
> Maurice stood still in the center of the room and pressed his hands hard together. The general went out and upstairs. It seemed to Maurice that he stepped very slowly.
>
> Colonel Terraine sat in an upstairs room writing. He laid down his pen and rose as the general entered.
>
> "Colonel," said Washington, "I have some wonderful news for you." He paused. The officer took a step forward and opened his lips, but did not speak.
>
> "Come downstairs with me," continued the general slowly, "and remember as you go that passage in the Scriptures, 'But the father said, Let us be merry, for this my son'"—Colonel Terraine caught the back of a chair—"'for this my son,'" went on the sweet, grave voice, "'was dead and is alive again. He was lost and is—found.'"
>
> Colonel Terraine stood an instant, with wide, questioning eyes. Then he rushed through the doorway and down the stairs. The general followed him quickly. There was a loud cry as the colonel entered the room and Maurice sprang into his father's arms. General Washington closed the door and stood guard over it himself. Barney, having escaped from the soldier, tore in, and the general stooped from his great hight to pat the little dog. If Barney had been a man, he would have seen that there were tears in the bright blue eyes.

ABOUT PEOPLE.

Rev. Dr. William Hayes Ward of The Independent is joining with Mrs. Lanier in giving fashionable afternoon readings and talks on the poetry of Sidney Lanier.

The Angel Princess, a book soon to be issued in England, is an allegorical tale of the life of Princess Alice of England, consequently the Tsaritsa of Russia, her daughter, has accepted the author's dedication of the book.

T. W. Higginson, who led a regiment of Afro-Americans in the Civil War, shows his abiding interest in the race in many ways. He has just been re-elected president of the Home for Aged Colored Women in Boston.

"What do you consider the greatest discovery you ever made?" an interviewer asked Sir James Y. Simpson, the eminent Scotch surgeon and the discoverer of chloroform. "That I have a Saviour," he replied, without hesitation.

Mr. Barry Pain, the English author, recently took his life in his hands and deliberately told the women of the Pioneer Club, London, that in one realm of literature, namely humor, they were without a first grade representative of their sex. In saying this he said he was paying the highest compliment that a man could pay to a woman—telling the truth without regarding her feelings.

Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll is quite right in saying as he does, contrasting Ian Maclaren with other British lecturers who have visited us: "Since Dickens, English lecturers have not been fortunate in America. They have, in some instances, been too anxious to bring themselves to the level of their audiences, and have been elaborately and condescendingly simple. The average American is not a simple person, and he does not consider himself flattered when he is taken as such. Others, again, like Matthew Arnold, have gone with the benevolent intention of setting things to rights. The American prefers to manage his own business, and does not appreciate that plentiful commodity, good advice, any more than the rest of the world."

"We know it makes the nicest cakes."

Cleveland's
Baking Powder

The Conversation Corner.

KITTY CLOVER, sound asleep on my table, is faithfully guarding two sets of letters which I have laid out for this week's Corner, as I did for last week's, but as the Despotic Foreman left out a part of the "old children's" set, I will insert their letters first this time.

"STARS OF MY COUNTRY'S SKY."

On our page of Jan. 14 was a letter from a venerable and beloved lady in Vermont, hoping that some other grandmother would tell her about a certain old poem of Mrs. Sigourney's. Within two days several answers came, with a part or whole of the poem. One copy, specially addressed to the Vermont lady by a lady in Manchester, N. H.—she had "committed it to memory years ago to speak in school"—was forwarded.

CHILTONVILLE, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am not a grandmother, but I remember "Stars of my country's sky," as a newspaper poem familiar to my young days. The first stanza ran like this:

> Are ye all there? Are ye all there,
> Stars of my country's sky?
> Are ye all there? Are ye all there,
> In your shining homes on high?

This may strengthen the clew already given.
MRS. M.

HARTFORD, CT.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am not a grandmother, but I am a constant reader of the "Corner." In my mother's big Bible, which she left to her children, more than twenty-five years ago, I found tucked away with other choice pieces the poem asked for by your Vermont correspondent. It was evidently written for the National Intelligencer, but bears no date. On the back of the clipping are dates in December, 1860, so the poem must have been published soon after the election of President Lincoln. I remember how the poem impressed us at the time when over our country hung "a cloud with sable rim," and a terrible civil war seemed inevitable. I send an exact copy.
MRS. F.

WOODSTOCK, CT.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have read Mrs. M.'s inquiry in the Corner, and your words are prophetic—this "grandmother" has it in her scrap-book and sends copy to you! My friend wishes me to ask if any of your readers know of an old book for children called "The Two Lambs"? The name of one lamb was Inexperience, but she had forgotten the other name. It was probably published in the 20's.
MRS. C.

That is beyond me!

THE BLACKBERRY GIRL.

RIDGEFIELD, CT.

Mr. Martin: . . . I am encouraged in appealing to you about an old school-book piece, entitled the Blackberry Girl, and the beginning was, as I have it in my memory:

> Why, Phebe, are you come so soon,
> Where are your berries, child?
> You cannot sure have sold them all,
> You had a basket pil'd.

These verses were in a book entitled "The Child's Guide." Will you make an effort to secure the verses? I have rehearsed the verses still in my memory to young children, who always made the vehement request, "Say it again"!
B. K. N.

Not much effort needed to secure the "Child's Guide"! It is on my upper shelf—I used to read it in my boyhood. It was published by G. & C. Merriam, Springfield, over sixty years ago. Your memory is perfect as to the verses you quote, only I have given above the italics of the old reader. There were twenty-one verses, and the poem was followed by another, "What the Blackberry Girl learned at church." I do not think you will find the "Child's Guide" easily, but the poem was printed years ago in the "Songs for the Little Ones at Home." I learn by inquiry at the Tract Society that it is still in print (price, 60 cents). You will also find it in Mrs. Lowell's "Posies for Children," a book of poems published by Roberts Brothers, Boston (price, $1). Its authorship is attributed to Mrs. Sproat of Taunton. (Mrs. Eliza S. Sproat, once a Philadelphia teacher?) Neither of these books contains the second piece, but I can tell you where it was printed. Mrs. Martin says that it was on Ellen Gifford's handkerchief, which she used to bring to school—a good many years ago!

OTHER QUERIES.

A lady in Portland, Me., writes:

Can you or some of your Cornerers tell me the author of a "Silly Young Cricket"? It was sent me more than sixty years ago by an aunt to teach to a little sister, and I have repeated it to my children and grandchildren.
S. P. S.

Another lady asks for the poem including these lines, relating to St. Paul at the stoning of Stephen:

> His form was tall and his bearing high,
> And courage sat in his deep blue eye,
> But the hate of his spirit no tongue can tell.

I have many other questions and answers of similar sort, but they must wait.

FROM AND ABOUT THE CHILDREN.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

. . . I have heard that Japan has a new set of stamps. Do you know how much they cost, and how I could get them?
WALTER R.

There are two twos and two fives, but with different designs. They would probably cost about twenty-five cents. Cornerers might inquire of H. D. Noyes, 13 1-2 Bromfield Street, Boston, who agreed in our last stamp leaflet to sell stamp albums, etc., to us at a considerable discount. I saw on his counter, the other day, a lot of Corner Scrap books, the 1897 edition; better look at them! As Washington's Birthday is coming, I will give you a patriotic item:

BRIDGEWATER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I think I can answer Charles P.'s question [Jan. 14] about the old Liberty Bell, unless it has gone visiting lately. Not long after the Atlanta Exposition we were in a store on Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, and heard the sound of martial music. We hurried to the door and saw a long procession of men on foot, in carriages and on horseback, fire engine companies with their engines, school regiments and police. In the midst of the procession was a large float, elaborately trimmed with flowers, on which was the old bell. It was thus escorted in triumph, after its visit to Atlanta, to its home in Independence Hall, while the bands played Sousa's "Liberty Bell March." It was all very inspiring. It is said that the bell is not to be allowed to go away again, for fear something might happen to it.
CLARA P.

WORCESTER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: Inclosed please find —— for the Armenian orphans. Can you tell me on whose chest the Pilgrims' compact was signed? We all enjoyed the story about the animal that is found in all the world!
EMERY W.

Lossing's Cyclopædia of United States History says that it was signed on Elder Brewster's chest, and gives a picture of it, indicating that the chest is somewhere preserved (Vol. 1, 158; 2, 107). I saw in the Pilgrim Hall at Plymouth Elder Brewster's table, but do not find in the catalogue of its collection any mention of the chest.

MARSHFIELD, VT.

Dear Mr. Martin: . . . Mamma read us Afield and Afloat with Young Naturalists, and we liked it very much. We have five of those animals and we know all about their pranks. You ought to see them play in the snow. Sometimes they go in all over. I wonder if the other girls and boys guessed the name of the animal. I am ten years old and should like to join the Corner.
MARY B.

Mrs Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Has Robinson Crusoe's Island Gone to the Bottom? Have any of our readers seen any reliable contradiction or confirmation of the report published two or three months ago, asserting that the famous island of Juan Fernandez had been destroyed by volcanic action, and had entirely disappeared from the Pacific Ocean? I think that all of us would be rather sorry to find it really true, for we had always felt that if we were ever cruising in those waters we should certainly go ashore and see the very spots associated with the beloved hero of our childhood, his goats, his savages and his man Friday! We cling fondly to the tradition of the island, although I suppose most of us know that it never had, and could not have had, any connection with our dear old friend of Defoe's immortal story. We do know that there has been—until now—an actual island off the coast of Chile, discovered by John (Juan) Fernandez, a Spanish pilot, two hundred years ago and named for him, although often called Mas-a-Tierra, that is, "more landward," in distinction from Mas-a-Fuera, another island near by, that is, "more outward." A Swiss colony dwelt there several years, but at last accounts only a few men remained to make jam for a German company.

Alexander Selkirk's Island. It was his island, really and truly. He was an actual Scotch sailor, born in Fifeshire, and a buccaneer of the old times, dying at sea in 1723. It is doubtless veritable truth that he was "marooned"—look up that word in the dictionary—by his fellow-pirates in 1704 and there lived four years. Of him Cowper wrote his familiar "Alexander Selkirk's Lament," which we boys used to declaim on Wednesday afternoons—taking care to point significantly to a schoolmate as we reached the last word:

> I'm monarch of all I survey,
> My right there is none to dispute;
> From the center all round to the sea,
> I'm lord of the fowl and the brute!

And did I not see in the Antiquarian Museum at Edinburgh some relic of that Scotchman? (I have forgotten whether it was gun or an ax or a book.) But Alexander Selkirk was not Robinson Crusoe. Defoe published his book in 1719, not long after the real adventures on Juan Fernandez, and so people insisted that he founded his story upon them. If you will refer to the book you will see that Robinson's ship was wrecked on a voyage from Africa to Brazil, and apparently somewhere in the latitude of Barbadoes. A naval officer once told me which of the West India islands he thought it was! But is Juan Fernandez sunk?

John Gilpin's Ride. And now we must give up not only Washington's hatchet, Tell's arrow and Robinson Crusoe's island, but John Gilpin, the "train-band captain of famous London town." Some cruel truth-seeker has been over the course where Gilpin did ride abroad, and writes an article to say that there was no "Bell at Edmonton," and that the distances were altogether too great for the exploit. It seems that one Mr. Beyer, who lived at the corner of Paternoster Row and Cheapside—in the very shop where Cowper's works are now sold!—did take a curious ride of some kind, which Lady Austen mentioned to the poet, and he turned it into rhyme which for a hundred years has carried amusement wherever the English language is known.

What the Children Say. One of them, describing her adventures in Worcester, said she had a ride in a ventilator—a conveyance called by a boy in the same vicinity an alligator!

This same young miss, hearing people ask if her father's fever had turned, remarked: "I wish I could see papa when his fever turns, I s'pose he will be whirling round like anything."

L. H. M

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR FEB. 28. Acts 8: 1-25.

THE DISCIPLES DISPERSED.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

Great events follow in quick succession in the record of the early history of the church. This lesson invites us to consider:

1. The effect of Stephen's death. It had a powerful influence in Jerusalem. "Devout men buried Stephen and made great lamentation over him." These were Jews on whom this scene was making a transforming impression. Many, because of it, were to become preachers of the new faith. But a more important effect was that on the young man of the Cilician synagogue. He then and there learned his first lesson of the salvation through Christ and of what it could accomplish in transfiguring men. Those who threw the stones at Stephen took off their outer garments that they might do their work unhampered and laid them at this young man's feet, and thus he shared their misguided zeal. "And Saul was consenting unto his death."

Most important of all was the effect of the persecution which broke out that day in leading the disciples to fulfill their Master's final instructions before his ascension. Too long they had stayed in Jerusalem. Too slowly they had apprehended their mission. Then, as ever since, the church was forced to its greatest triumphs under stress of trial. "They were all scattered abroad throughout the region of Judea and Samaria." "They that were scattered abroad went about preaching the Word." That dark day in Jerusalem was a sunrise to the world. Let us not fear nor fret when the forces of this world appear too strong for those of righteousness. When we are working to do God's will we are always on the winning side; and truth gains its greatest victories out of seeming defeat.

2. The joy in Samaria. Another deacon, Philip, went down to that city, and there proclaimed Christ to the people. The Jews despised them, and had never preached to them. Jesus had done it once, nine or ten years before, at Sychar, and with such success that he had declared that the field there was white for harvest. But he had forbidden his disciples to preach to them when he sent them on their first missionary journey. Still, he had taught respect for that people when he had made the Samaritan befriend the robbed and wounded traveler whom priest and Levite neglected. Now the Jews had treated Stephen as robbers had treated that traveler, and Philip had fled to Samaria to escape the same fate. Perhaps he told them of the parable by which Christ had honored their name.

At any rate, Philip's act and the co-operation of the disciples in it was a turning point in the history of the church. Then, for the first time, the gospel went beyond the bounds of Judaism. Only the Holy Spirit could have led these Christians in that wonderful way in which, though at first they often faltered, they finally trod boldly, declaring that there was salvation through the one Name, not for Jews only, but for all men, and that the acceptance of that salvation made all men brethren.

The Samaritans joyfully received the gospel. They showed themselves more worthy of it than the inhabitants of the holy city itself. The prophecy of Jesus already began to be fulfilled—that the Jews should see men of every nation sitting down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God and themselves thrust out.

3. The conversion of Simon. This noted magician had exercised his art with great effect on the Samaritans. But now he saw things done by Philip greater than any he could do. Apparently the greatest triumph of this preaching was the winning of Simon. He did not try to outdo Philip, but surrendered to him, acknowledged the genuineness of the signs he wrought and proclaimed himself a convert. That was a strange thing then. It is not strange now. There is hardly a genuine revival in which some who have prominently opposed the Christian faith have not frankly confessed that the power which moves the people is greater than their own and must be divine.

4. The Holy Spirit given to Samaritans. The apostles had the gift of the Holy Spirit, but it had not brought them grace enough to look on men of other nations as brethren. They would no sooner have sat down to eat with a Samaritan than a white citizen of South Carolina would invite a Negro to his table. But they were open-minded enough to investigate the strange report that these despised people were becoming fellow-disciples of Christ. They sent to Samaria Peter and John, who speedily became convinced of the fact. They did not shrink from the consequences, which meant that these brethren should have all the benefits which they themselves possessed. Peter and John prayed that the Samaritan disciples might receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, and then laid hands on them as the symbol of imparting it. Nothing, probably, would have enlarged their hearts to admit Samaritans to fraternal fellowship but their evident devotion to the Saviour whom the apostles loved, and their evident possession of the same divine gift which the apostles possessed. The only thing which will break down barriers of nations and races is the evidence in them all of capacity to reproduce in themselves the image of Christ. That, ever since the preaching of the gospel in Samaria, has been working the greatest revolution in history.

5. Simon's mistake. He did not receive the gift of the Holy Spirit imparted to other Samaritans who believed. He had been baptized as they had been. Why was he left out? First, because he placed an utterly false estimate on the gift. He thought he could measure it by money. Next, he did not know how to use it. He thought he could impart it and could decide who should receive it.

There are many who profess to be followers of Christ who claim that they can cure sicknesses without medicine and can impart to others, for a consideration, the control of spiritual powers of healing. Like Simon, some of them have attracted much attention and performed some astonishing signs. But this kind of business no more has the divine approval now than it had then.

6. The spread of the truth among Samaritans. A single verse [25], chronicles an extended preaching tour by the apostles. Churches sprang up in many Samaritan villages, and the foundations of Christianity were broadly laid. From that time it was evident that the new faith was not to be confined to Jews alone, nor bound to Jewish customs.

A most important lesson is here taught which in these days needs to be relearned. The Christian Church may take varied forms and fit itself to any soil without changing its essential character. In every nation where men acknowledge supreme allegiance to Jesus Christ they are fitted to receive the Holy Spirit; and wherever such men covenant together to serve Christ there is a true Christian church. It is not necessary that such an organization should be American, or observe the customs of American churches, in order to be genuinely Christian. Japanese, Chinese or Hindus may make such churches, with forms different and beliefs differently expressed from ours; but, if they are truly loyal to Christ, we cannot refuse them Christian fellowship without displeasing him.

◆

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

Topic, Feb. 21-27. Serving Our Generation. Acts 13: 36; John 9: 1-5; Mark 13: 32-37.

The responsibility of life. The limits of opportunity. The need of watchfulness.

(See prayer meeting editorial.)

AN ESSENTIAL IN ALL HOMES.

13 Millions Made and Sold.

Always improving.
Never better than now.
See the Latest Model.

The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

Liebig
Company's Extract of Beef

is the essence of all that is best in beef. Only the best parts of the best cattle, raised by the company on their own grazing fields in Uruguay, are used. That's why it is the best, and for over thirty years unapproached for purity and fine flavor.

For improved and economic Cookery
For refreshing, nourishing Beef Tea

Food for the Baby

If mother can't nourish it; if it is pale and thin, try

Somatose

Mother's Milk.

Somatose is a powder made from the most nourishing elements of meat, and used in proper proportion with sterilized milk forms the best substitute known for mother's milk. Send for formula, mailed free.

At druggists, in 2-oz., ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.

Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate — each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER,
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St, Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

OUR OWN WORK.

A Step in the Right Direction.

For the first time during this fiscal year the American Board is able to report in January a decided increase in receipts amounting to nearly $4,000 as compared with the corresponding month last year. But not unless the contributions are sustained and increased month by month can the total decrease of $19,256 during the five months of the year already passed be made good. It will be seen that not only have legacies fallen off $16,161, but regular donations are $18,520 behind those of last year.

	Jan., 1896.	Jan., 1897.
Regular donations	$44,122.10	$46,777.03
Donations for special objects	3,178.84	4,620.93
Legacies	8,827.11	8,487.98
	$56,128.05	$59,885.94

	5 mos. last year.	5 mos. this year.
Regular donations	$165,884.31	$147,363.80
Donations for special objects	19,170.45	34,595.38
Legacies	35,890.70	19,729.50
	$220,945.46	$201,688.68

Building up the Waste Places. A long, interesting letter from Rev. J. K. Browne, who returned to Turkey in the fall, appears in The Missionary Herald. He has been visiting some of the stricken cities in Eastern Turkey and describes the present condition of Arabkir, Egin and Malatia. His pathetic tale of material desolation and bereaved families is relieved somewhat by the brightness of the spiritual outlook. Chapels and school buildings are too small to contain the eager listeners. At the ordination of a preacher in Arabkir the congregation contained almost as many Gregorians as Protestants. Mr. Browne draws a touching picture of the first meeting in the renovated chapel of Egin. He writes: "There was a pitifully small number at first on the men's side, and they but boys and youth hitherto not identified with the work. These young men heroically assumed the burdens of their fathers, and I was amazed that the amount they were willing to pledge towards the support of their pastor, teachers, Bible woman and benevolence fell but little short of their former noble giving!"

The Work at Home for February is a particularly interesting number. Those who through books and newspapers have become familiar with the thrilling stories of Marcus Whitman and Cushing Eells, no less than those who had the privilege of hearing and meeting President Penrose, will appreciate Mrs. Penrose's article, Whitman College from a Newcomer's Standpoint. She writes that the main college building is not so uncomely as it appears in some woodcuts which have been published. The well-kept grounds around this and the two other buildings "make it a less desolate and melancholy place than the pictures would lead one to imagine." The writer adds, "Moreover, there is an interest and pathos in these three wooden buildings, plain as they are, when one remembers the love, the energy, the prayers, the sacrifices that have been builded into their very walls." Whitman had before Christmas about 150 students and thirteen instructors. Mrs. Penrose regards the success of the college as assured now that the endowment fund is almost secured. She says, hopefully: "If we can live on nothing until the fund begins to draw interest and gives something for current expenses, then the crisis will be over and the college can begin to live. It has only existed before." Another interesting article in the same issue is by a home missionary in Red Lodge, Mont.

THE WORLD AROUND.

Two Missionary Deputations. The Church Missionary Society is taking steps to inaugurate a new aggressive work in West Africa. The limits of the Colony of Sierra Leone have been extended and government stations far in the interior have outrun missionary outposts, so there is an urgent call for Christian leaders to carry forward evangelistic work in the "hinterland." The society has sent out Rev. F. Baylis, secretary of the African group of missions, to look over the ground and arouse the Sierra Leone Church, which is somewhat lacking in missionary zeal. There is as yet no response from the town congregations to the call for workers, but volunteers are offering from the villages. The C. M. S. is looking forward, however, to employing Jamaican native agents in this field and has dispatched Bishop Lugwell and Rev. D. H. D. Wilkinson to the West Indies to make the necessary arrangements. The trustees of the Lady Mico Charity are willing to give free education at Mico College in Kingston, Jamaica, to a certain number of young men of African descent, to be selected by representatives of the C. M. S., with a view to their going to West Africa for further training and for service under the society. The outcome of this experiment of employing Jamaicans in African evangelization will be watched with interest. The United Presbyterian Church has employed natives of Jamaica in its Old Calabar Mission, but it was not found that they stood the climate better than Europeans. It will be remembered that a similar scheme of Dr. James Johnston was a signal failure.

Presbyterians and Romanists in Manchuria.

Glowing accounts of the growth of Christianity in Manchuria come from the Presbyterian missionaries. Few missions, indeed, can point to such results after only a quarter of a century of effort. In Moukden, the capital, is to be found a handsome church, supporting its own native pastor, the center of a congregation of 800 communicants. A presbytery, whose members are native elders, and in which the missionaries sit only provisionally as assessors, is a formal witness to a living native church with a membership already reckoned by thousands. The chain of mission stations extends up through three provinces of Manchuria almost within sight of Siberia. Dr. John Ross writes of extraordinary interest in Yilu: "There are still nearly 300 applicants for baptism on the list of Yilu Chapel. They come from as many as fifty different villages in all directions. Many more could be added but that the preacher in charge is specially cautious lest he admit on the list men who seek what the Roman Catholics give so readily." This suggests a darker side of the missionary work in Manchuria. Roman Catholic intrusion at some of the most prosperous stations is a continual source of difficulty and suffering. The Romish priests take care to let it be known and seen that the power of France is behind them, and from this vantage ground of political influence they defy and browbeat the local authorities, terrorize the people and secure immunity to base adherents. The Missionary Record says truly, "It is a political ecclesiasticism of this sort which provokes hatred of Christianity and of the foreigner among the better Chinese."

From a Pagan to a Christian State. Henry M. Stanley, in an editorial in the Illustrated Christian World, says: "I do not think Americans are fully aware of the marvelous change that has come over Uganda," and points to it as a "wonderful example of the ease and certainty with which a powerful pagan state can be made Christian when a band of good and competent men unite together for such a work." He declares that faith and perseverance have made it one of the brightest regions in Africa, thereby more than fulfilling his most sanguine hopes. Bishop Tucker returned to England in December with fresh news. The churches now number 320, the native teachers 800. No less than 8,000 persons are under daily instruction. The Uganda mission party, who left the coast Nov. 28, were to be conveyed the first fourteen miles of the journey by the new railway. It was hoped that the Ruwenzori, the new steamer supplied by the Stanley and Record Fund, would meet the missionaries on the shores of the Victoria Nyanza and take them on to their destination. This would save a fortnight's marching. The efforts of the missionaries in regard to things spiritual are ably supplemented along lines of material progress by the present administrator, Mr. Ernest Berkeley. Besides establishing a native police he has organized a local postal service between the government office and the various mission stations scattered throughout the country. Another recent development is the Parliament House, in which the king and the British resident meet the nobles once a week to discuss affairs of state. This building seats about 2,000.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Feb. 28–March 6. From What Does Christ Save Men? Titus 3: 1–7.

If we could have known Jerry McAuley before the Water Street Mission in New York got hold of him, and thus could contrast what he was before Jesus saved him with what he became through repentance and faith, we should have a fine concrete illustration of our subject. Yet, after all, perhaps it is a mistake to single out noted sinners. Every one of us who passes from death unto life, from the love and service of self to the love and service of God, is an evidence of Christ's redeeming work. However carefully trained we may have been, however much of virtue we may have inherited, the yielding of our lives to Christ means their transformation and reconstruction. We have been facing one way and we turn about and face the other. It is a simple story, but by the step Jesus frees us from the weight of sin and shame which we have brought upon ourselves by our repeated choices of evil instead of good.

But the salvation which Jesus brings is not so general that it does not take into consideration our personal faults and limitations. Until a man's individuality is thoroughly permeated by Christ he is not thoroughly saved. When on earth Jesus's saving power went out in a great many directions. One man he cured of his deafness, another of his blindness. Another, an inquirer, he taught the way into his kingdom. For a fourth, a woman, he cleared up hazy ideas about worship. Peter, in time, was saved from his pride, Thomas from his doubt, Martha from her fret and worry. It is just so today; the thought of Jesus saves one man from atheism, another from hatred and cynical views of his fellowmen. To still another he brings salvation from a peculiar fault of temperament.

It is an ever enlarging salvation which Jesus brings. As Mr. Meyer says, "What seemed harmless ten years ago seems sinful today, and what may be all right today may look wrong ten years hence." There are great regions of industrial and political life yet unpenetrated by the justice and merciful spirit of Christ. In addition to being saved to ourselves and to our families we must become the salt and light of the city, the social circle and the industrial relation in which we are placed.

OUR ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND.

Amount received for the two weeks ending Tuesday noon and acknowledged in detail by individual receipts	$332.21
Previously acknowledged	22,614.58
Total	$22,946.79

Inquiries have come to us, prompted by a paragraph in a recent issue, concerning the relative attendance at Yale and Harvard Universities. Statistics published lately in the Transcript show that Harvard leads by about fifty per cent., having 3,674 students, while Yale has 2,530. For 100 years, down to 1869, Yale was the larger of the two colleges. She still has more students from the Middle States and the Middle Western States. But the local support of Harvard is much the greater, Massachusetts giving her 2,166 students to 158 at Yale.

In and About Boston.

MR. MURPHY AT FANEUIL HALL.

Any one in the vicinity of Dock Square at high noon, during the last few weeks, would have noticed a decided drift of the humanity that ebbs and flows through that historic breathing place toward Faneuil Hall. Business men and shop girls out for their luncheon are hurrying thither, and thither tend the steps of many whom it is not uncharitable to denominate loafers.

Once within the Cradle of Liberty the visitor finds the floor occupied by an array of men, some of whom have secured seats, while large numbers stand in the rear and under the galleries. Upstairs the feminine contingent has a monopoly of the space. On the platform, flanked by local ministers and Christian laymen, is Francis Murphy, who for twenty years has been an apostle of temperance. His dissipation in early years has left no traces on his sturdy frame. He stands erect and alert and there is something in his attitude which reminds you of a general watching a battle and ready for any emergency. He conducts his meetings in a familiar fashion. There is a good deal of gospel singing, and at every gathering Mr. Murphy appeals to those bound by the rum habit to break their shackles and to come into the liberty with which Christ makes men free. His is a broad platform, inclusive of Roman Catholics and, in fact, of everybody who is facing toward the kingdom of heaven. He has an Irishman's ready gift of repartee and a Methodist's delight in ejaculatory praise and comment.

Perhaps the most interesting part of the services is when he brings forward his reformed men, all quite new to platform speaking. But the transformation through which they have passed makes their simple words of testimony more moving than studied eloquence. They tell of a new joy and life in the place of despair, of the gratitude of wives and mothers for their rescue, of scenes around their family firesides such as have not been witnessed there for years, and of their intention, with God's help, to take their old places again in society and business.

Mr. Murphy, in his seven weeks' campaign in Boston, claims to have received not less than 7,000 signatures to his temperance pledge. Last week he transferred his evening meetings from Berkeley Temple to Park Street Church.

THE FREE ORGAN RECITALS.

One of the happiest efforts of the season toward enriching the lives of the masses is the series of twenty free organ recitals under the auspices of the art department of the Twentieth Century Club. These are held in prominent churches in various sections of the city, the interpreters being first-class organists, such as B. J. Lang, S. B. Whitney, Philip Hale and other eminent musicians. The programs, which include attractive selections from the best composers, ancient and modern, are interpreted with rare conscientiousness and artistic feeling. That these efforts are not unappreciated one glance at the eager crowd of music lovers pressing for entrance suffices to show. From each of the downtown midday recitals at least 500 people have been turned away, and a representative evening audience at the Ruggles Street Church in Roxbury numbered 1,100. All walks of life are represented, but in the main the faces are cultivated and appreciative. At the first note of the organ the doors are closed, and while the music continues absolute quiet reigns in the audience. The enjoyment is evident and hearty, though as a rule undemonstrative, applause being prohibited, yet here and there a transparent face reports every emotion aroused by the marvelous, many-voiced instrument.

The conspicuous success of this movement is peculiarly gratifying, in view of the fact that it met with discouragement from the very first, fourteen out of the fifteen organists who were approached on the subject prophesying failure, while signifying their willingness to help. In this year of unusual privation, when so much is being done to relieve physical distress, the club is to be congratulated upon having grasped the idea that this alone is not enough to satisfy humanity, and that to provide for soul hunger is an even greater boon than ministering to bodily necessities.

AN INSTALLATION IN CAMBRIDGE.

REV F. E RAMSDELL

For several months the unusual picture has presented itself in Cambridge of three pastorless Congregational churches. The number is now reduced to two by the installation last week Wednesday of Rev. F E. Ramsdell over the Pilgrim Church. Located in Cambridgeport, and with a somewhat shifting population, for over thirty years it has stood for a warm evangelical and evangelistic faith. The remarkably fruitful pastorate of Rev. G. R. Leavitt, D. D., will be recalled, and since his time in Messrs. Tewksbury and Olmstead the church has been favored with earnest leaders. Its problems being those of a downtown organization, Mr. Ramsdell before accepting his urgent call naturally informed himself thoroughly with reference to the possibilities of the field. He became satisfied that both as respects the stable elements of the congregation and the floating class, which it is so desirable and so necessary to reach, Pilgrim Church offers a great opportunity to a man of pluck and enthusiasm.

In the judgment of all who know him Mr. Ramsdell is marked by just such qualities. He is about thirty-five years of age, but has had far more preaching experience than the attainment of that period of life would indicate. Before he entered Amherst College in 1884 he had led evangelistic meetings in country districts and all through his college course he preached at Shutesbury, where from time immemorial Amherst men preparing for the ministry have found a profitable training ground. After graduation Mr. Ramsdell entered Andover, finishing there in 1891, accepting immediately a call to Gardner, where he has remained for five years. His work there was thorough and fruitful. He identified himself with all the moral forces of the town and was specially active in aggressive temperance work.

The council which installed him was presided over by Rev. A. E. Winship. The statement of his Christian experience was ample and satisfactory. The factors especially influential were his mother's words and the memory of her when she passed away, and in his early manhood the stimulating and helpful atmosphere of Porter Church, Brockton. His statement of Christian doctrine gave evidence that he has reached his present convictions through careful thought and study and through open-mindedness to the spirit of truth. He was in hearty accord with the fundamental truths held by our churches and it would be difficult to term him either a conservative or a liberal, though there is no absence in his mental furnishings of positive convictions. The council did not indulge to any large extent in questions but voted promptly that his examination was satisfactory.

The unusual feature of the evening session was a symposium on the city church, treated in three sub-divisions. Rev. S. L. Loomis spoke of the Religious Problems of the City, Rev. C. E. Jefferson of Methods and Men Demanded, Rev. A. E. Dunning, D. D., of Assured Results. The length of the program was offset by the uniformly excellent quality of the different parts.

The church and its new pastor now buckle down to a persistent and aggressive work. With a membership of over 600, a morning congregation fully as large and an evening congregation of three or four hundred, and with a pastor especially gifted in readiness of speech and numerous requisites for successful pastoral work the immediate future of the church would seem to be assured.

AN HONORED SOCIAL SETTLEMENT WORKER.

There is probably no woman in the country who has done a work on social settlement lines equal to that of Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago. She has not only founded and built up that institution with its numerous ramifications, but she has been widely influential throughout the country as an acknowledged leader and guide in this form of modern philanthropy. Her presence in Boston, therefore, for the last week, has been made much of by those individuals and organizations that are definitely bent on social amelioration. She has spoken to large audiences at the Twentieth Century Club, at Trinity Church, at Brookline and elsewhere. And many persons have had the privilege of meeting her socially at such informal conferences as that which was held at South End House last Saturday evening.

Miss Addams does not impress one as aggressive or strong-minded. You would not think that this modest, fair-haired, self-contained woman had made herself a potent factor in Chicago civic life by taking on important duties connected with the sanitary care and improvement of the slum district of that section in which Hull House is located. Nor does her bearing indicate at all the strain her sympathies have been subjected to as she has dwelt among the poor and met side by side with them the hard times arising from strikes and riots in the seething city of Chicago.

Her views on the subject of lifting the working classes seem particularly discreet. She does not exalt the college settlement idea above every other agency for good. She is not so sympathetic with working men that she cannot see the employers' side of the problem. She evidently does not look for revolution but for evolution. All who have come in contact with her here have gained a new idea of what one sensible, devoted woman can do for her fellowmen in these modern days, and the influence of her brief visit will be felt in many ways.

Our mind is the window into our neighbor's.—E. Scott O'Connor.

Literature

REVIEWING BY EXTRACTS.

A lawsuit, interesting to the literary world, to which the London correspondent of The Critic recently devoted considerable space, has just been compromised in London. Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., who are understood to have acted on behalf of the Publishers' Association, recently prosecuted Mr. Stead for publishing a so-called review of Mrs. Humphry Ward's last book, Sir George Tressady, which was little more than a summary of the tale, illustrated by long verbatim extracts. Other features entered into the case, but we have to do with only this particular one. As we have stated, the case was compromised, Mr. Stead consenting to an injunction on the October number of the Review of Reviews, in which the notice appeared, and to submit all such notices in future to the publishers of the books discussed.

The practice of reviewing thus by copious extracts is common in some quarters, and it is not without its advantages. Ordinarily it requires so much space that no journal receiving large numbers of books from week to week, certainly no weekly journal, can indulge in it. Its principal merit is that it enables the reader of the journal to form a more nearly complete idea of the plot and the style of a given work than otherwise could be gained. That is to say, he is enabled to make up his own opinion of the book instead of taking that of the reviewer. In some cases this undoubtedly is an advantage, but, on the other hand, and quite apart from the difficulties connected with space, the sort of review under consideration is objectionable for several reasons. It often serves as a substitute for honest work on the part of the reviewer, it being frequently much easier, in spite of the mechanical labor involved, than to weigh and describe clearly the worth of the volume.

Virtually, in many cases, although the contrary sometimes occurs, such a review interferes substantially with the sale of the work. It gives the reader a taste of the book, but in so broken and necessarily unattractive a form as to dull instead of kindle his possible interest. Moreover there are readers not a few who desire rather to inform themselves about a book than to be put to the trouble of reading it, and who would purchase it but who now are spared the cost of so doing and the labor of reading by being able to gather from the review an idea of the contents of the work sufficient for their purposes. They like to know enough about a book in order to talk about it, but that is all they desire.

So far as the author is concerned, it is probable that his interests will be advanced by the result of this lawsuit. As far as any difference is made at all, the tendency must be to increase sales, thereby increasing the payments which publishers will make to writers. We have sometimes been asked why we do not ourselves introduce more extracts from new books into these columns. Our primary reason is that already stated, lack of sufficient space, and an even more important one is that we prefer, and we believe that a large majority of our readers prefer, that our reviewer should do his work for them and not turn it over to them to be done. We do not expect that our readers always will be able to indorse our opinions, but no reviewer who aims to furnish candid and careful notices need have any fear that his work will go unappreciated.

BOOK REVIEWS.

ENGLISH SECULARISM.

Mr. George J. Holyoake has long been one of the foremost, if not the foremost, of English secularists, and his courage, honesty and good temper have won him a large measure of the respect of those who differ most radically from his views in regard to religion. He is the author of the volume before us, which is a confession of the secularist belief. It contains a series of articles which originally appeared in the Open Court, not because the management of the Open Court indorses them altogether but because it permits large range in discussion. We have read the book with interest and with increasing respect for its author, although we are among those whom he opposes uniformly and often criticises severely.

We wish he could look at the subject of religion for a short time from the point of view of the enlightened Christian believer. Even if he were able to do so only by way of an experiment, it would alter his ideas materially. He is unconsciously unfair to us. He claims that secularism should be judged by its best examples. This is equally true of Christianity, which he sometimes judges by its worst and seldom by its best examples, although he speaks cordially of some of its representatives. He seems to be ignorant that to Christian minds there is change from generation to generation in the relative proportions of doctrines, and in the accepted method of urging them, and that Christians do not profess to have passed beyond the need and the obligation of enlightenment, and have grown not only more intelligent but more large-minded in the last half-century. To claim that "Christians do not, as a rule, want to know what can be said against their views and they keep out of libraries all books which can inform others" is simply untrue, as a very slight examination of libraries under their control would convince him.

It is, indeed, a matter of common remark, as he says, that "the sons of clergymen turn out worse than the sons of parents in other professions," but the statement has been exploded a hundred times by actual examination of the facts. Mr. Holyoake makes the same mistake of which he accuses others, viz., he makes assumptions. He declares that "prayer is of no avail for protection or food," for example. How does he know? The testimony of hundreds, not to say thousands, equally trustworthy with himself, is to the effect that material blessings sometimes do follow prayer, and evidently as the result of it. That all prayer is not thus answered does not prove that no prayer ever is.

The objects of the secularists, as he declares them, are largely commendable. A chief objection to them is that they do not include enough. The distinction which he makes between secularism and secularist teachings is just, and should be borne in mind, but the impression made by his book is that secularism, although elevating in a certain degree, deceives even the noblest of its advocates by teaching that there is and can be no higher truth than that which it embodies. Whatever he may think of the progress of secularism and also of the faults of Christianity, the latter, in spite of all its defects, can be depended upon to win a thousand-fold stronger hold over humanity than such a nerveless and uninspiring form of religion as his. Such criticism as this book contains should be heeded by Christians, because it is conscientious and candid and not without some elements of truth, but it need not disturb their allegiance to their divine master in the least. [Open Court Publishing Co. 50 cents.]

RELIGIOUS.

The Bible and the Child [Macmillan Co. $1.00] contains eight papers, five by Englishmen—Dean Farrar, Dr. Horton, Mr. A. S. Peake, Prof. W. F. Adeney and Dean Fremantle—and three Americans—Dr. Gladden, Dr. F. C. Porter and Dr. Lyman Abbott. The main question which these gentlemen set themselves to answer is how to deal with the results of the higher criticism in educating the young to read and love the Bible. In substance they take the same view, namely, that above all things truthfulness is vital; that some of the results claimed to have been reached by the higher criticism are to be conceded as established, and that nothing should be taught the young which is not consistent with them, but that there is no necessity of interfering with the profound reverence for the Bible and the submission to its authority as a spiritual guide which more conservative scholars are so eager to preserve. These are insisted upon by representatives of all schools of thought, and it is important to teach the young that, whatever criticism may prove or fail to prove about details as to the construction and meaning of the Bible, its vital relation to human salvation cannot be shaken. In some passages of this book, however, much more is conceded to the destructive criticism, it appears to us, than ever has been proved, and we have no confidence in any treatment of the Bible which regards it as inspired only in the same manner as the writings of Shakespeare, for instance, and hardly in a much higher degree. That this is the view held by some of these contributors seems a natural inference from their words.

The Chronicles [Macmillan Co. 50 cents] is another volume in the Modern Reader's Bible, issued in the compact and attractive style of its predecessors and composed and edited with the same competent scholarship which we have so frequently commended.——Prof. J. M. Stifler, D. D., is the author of an Introduction to the Study of the Acts of the Apostles [F. H. Revell Co. 75 cents], first published some years ago, which is not a commentary, but which, assuming that the meaning of the writer's words is sufficiently clear, devotes itself to tracing and explaining the course of thought. It is such a book as would be composed by the discourses of an expository preacher who should attempt to set forth in plain terms what the book of the Acts undertakes to say, rendering the meaning of the text in more ample language and with abundant explanations and expositions, not textual but practical and spiritual. It is very interesting reading and will serve as a useful accompaniment to the more critical literature on the subject. All who are studying the book of the Acts, whether expert scholars or ordinary readers, will appreciate it.

STORIES.

Phroso [F. A. Stokes Co. $1.75] is a romance by Anthony Hope, which appeared as a serial in McClure's Magazine last year.

It describes the purchase of an island on the Greek coast by an English nobleman and the romantic, exciting and tragic adventures which befell him as consequences of the attempt to enter into possession. It is dramatic and entertaining and illustrates well the author's now familiar skill in constructing an ingenious plot, and in maintaining the interest of the reader and even increasing it to the end of his story.——Miss Ayr of Virginia and Other Stories [H. S. Stone & Co. $1.25] is by Julia Magruder and contains eight short stories, and we like them better than we have the author's more elaborate productions. Some of them exhibit genuine skill in the portrayal of character, together with decided vivacity of style and some felicity in the arrangement of incident. As light reading the volume will furnish pleasant entertainment.

Mademoiselle Blanche [Stone & Kimball. $1.25], by J. D. Barry, is a French novel, not in the sense which has come to be so generally accepted, but simply in that it is a story of French people. There is nothing objectionable in it. It is a study of the supposed love of a young business man for an acrobatic performer of high character and many charms, which proves at last to be admiration for her wonderful performances rather than for herself. The psychological element of the narrative is well managed and the story is spirited and entertaining, albeit somewhat sad. The hero is an admirably well drawn type of a large class of Frenchmen.——A Fair Jewess [Cassell Pub. Co. 50 cents] is by B. L. Farjeon. It is a rather striking picture of the stress of circumstances in some lives, the subtlety of temptation and the strength of heredity. It increases one's respect for the Jewish race and is very readable.

The Cassell Pub. Co. has republished Parson Thwing's Secret [50 cents], by A. W. Marchmont. It is a readable narrative of English rural life in which villainy is allowed to exalt itself to a great hight, only to be triumphantly overthrown at last. Diamond cuts diamond before one is done with it, and virtue is triumphant in the end and the reader grateful, but he cannot help wondering if any such scoundrelism as is here described really exists. Two more volumes of the same library of paper covered novels are Sons of Belial, by William Westall, and At Heart a Rake, by Florence Marryatt [Each 50 cents]. The former describes one or two families of working people in a typical British manufacturing town, who by shrewdness and industry accumulate property and whose fortunes, although not strikingly eventful, are described with success in entertaining the reader. The latter deals with English people higher in the social scale but mostly far less worthy of respect. And although its general purpose to condemn the extravagance of some who, under pretense of advocating the rights of women, assume license to say and do things better left unsaid and undone is to be commended, the story is not sufficiently elevating to be worth reading.

Children's Stories in American Literature [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25], by Henrietta C. Wright, is a collection of short stories, well chosen, graphic and enjoyable.

MUSICAL.

Mr. John W. Tufts, who is widely known as a distinguished composer and teacher, is the author of a Handbook of Vocal Music [Silver, Burdett & Co. $1.00], which is a remarkable book in its way. It is not a collection of songs but a treatise on musical theory and training. It is, as he calls it, a contribution to pedagogy in music and a valuable one. It makes large reference to the normal music course and the Cecilian Series of Study in Song, the different exercises and songs in which are analyzed carefully, the special lessons to be learned from each being pointed out instructively. It is a work intended for teachers rather than for pupils, and it will aid them to a correct and comprehensive theory of musical education and promote uniformity and intelligence in the use of such a theory. The skill with which different themes are handled is conspicuous, and simplicity and directness are prominent characteristics of the work. Some topics of collateral, yet considerable, importance are treated in separate sections, and a great deal of musical information is introduced usefully, so that all who are concerned in musical instruction can depend upon finding the volume a thoroughly practical and suggestive aid to their endeavor. It is handsomely printed and is as compact as it is comprehensive.

The College Hymnal [Biglow & Main Co. 80 cents] is a selection of hymns prepared, as the title suggests, with special reference to use in universities and colleges, although many of our higher schools may be glad to introduce it. The initials at the end of the preface indicate that President M. W. Stryker has been concerned in its compilation. It is a choice collection in respect to both hymns and music and is attractively issued. It contains hymns enough, nearly four hundred, to supply variety, but there is no superfluous material. The usual indexes are carefully gotten up.——A somewhat similar volume, perhaps a little more popular in the general character of its contents, is Life Time Hymns [R R. McCabe & Co. 55 cents], edited by H. R. Palmer, C. C. McCabe and M. R. Brouse. This, too, illustrates discriminating skill in selection and combination and is published in a tasteful and convenient shape.——Sacred Songs, No. 1 [Biglow & Main Co. 30 cents], is by Messrs. Sankey, McGranahan and Stebbins, three well-known revival singers. It is much in the vein of the familiar Moody and Sankey books and contains some of the familiar hymns and some new ones which are believed to be worthy of inclusion in such a collection. It will answer its purpose successfully.

A more distinctively patriotic song-book is Songs of the Nation [Silver, Burdett & Co. 60 cents], by C. W. Johnson, to which Mr. L. P. Marshall has furnished an introduction. American national hymns come first, including not only familiar ones but some which cannot be said to have attained any wide popularity, however deserving they may be, and there are a few selections from the national hymns of other countries, some miscellaneous popular songs, mostly old favorites—like The Old Folks at Home, The Heart Bowed Down and Integer Vitæ—and a few hymns and sacred songs. Such a collection will find a welcome in a great many homes.

EDUCATIONAL.

Dr. Alice E. Sawtell's book, The Sources of Spenser's Classical Mythology [Silver, Burdett & Co. 90 cents], was undertaken as a doctoral thesis in the English department at Yale. It is a modest but thorough piece of work. The mythological terms are arranged alphabetically with enough comment under each to explain what is needed. It is a piece of work which will interest students of the English classics.——A volume of Selections from the Works of Sir Richard Steele [Ginn & Co. $1.00] has been edited for the Athenæum Press series by Prof. G. R. Carpenter. It contains selections from his plays, poems, letters, political tracts and periodical writings, which are arranged in the order of time. Professor Carpenter's announced purpose is to give as full an idea as possible of the whole field of Steele's works and to allow and enable the student to trace for himself the development of the author's style and genius. Notes are furnished and the volume is well suited to its aim.

Two more volumes of the Riverside Literature series are Edmund Burke's famous speech, Conciliation with the Colonies, edited by Robert Andersen, and four books of Pope's Iliad [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Each 25 cents], the first, sixth, twenty second and twenty-fourth. They are carefully edited, supplied with the necessary introductory sketches and other collateral material and are issued in the familiar and tasteful form.——A new volume of Heath's Modern Language series is Köpernickerstrasse 120 [30 cents] by Meyer and Heiden, edited by Prof. B. W. Wells, Ph D. The play brings out conspicuously the peculiar flavor of Berlin middle class humor and Professor Wells has supplied notes and comments which greatly aid the reader to catch its significance.——Prof. Alcée Fortier in Napoléon [Ginn & Co. 55 cents] has compiled a brief history of the career of the first Napoleon for the use of students. Extracts from his own writings and those of others, favorable or unfavorable to him, are introduced so that the student may form his own judgment about the character of the hero. The selections are connected by links of narrative by the editor and there are historical notes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A journalist, who remains anonymous, has undertaken to explain what many well-educated people need to have explained in his volume, Why We Punctuate [Lancet Pub. Co. $1.00]. He controverts with some ability the rules of Mr. John Wilson, which hitherto have been a chief authority on the subject, and attempts to outline a sufficient statement in a much smaller compass than that of the earlier work. We appreciate the need of popular instruction on the subject and are glad of any such treatise as this. There is a danger, however, of becoming too finical, not to say unduly dogmatic, which the author has not always escaped. Two opinions are plainly possible in regard to many of his statements, and his book needs to be followed, like all such books, with considerable discrimination. But it is surprising how much even educated persons, and even those accustomed to composition, may gain from such a treatise. The subject of punctuation seldom receives sufficient attention in our schools and colleges, and its importance is so great that any such well-meant and generally intelligent discussion of it as that contained in these pages deserves commendation.——Scribner's Magazine for 1896 has been issued, as usual, in two exceedingly handsome volumes [Each $2 25], rich in every attraction which magazines of its class, and none more than itself, customarily present. We need only say that in every detail it is a triumph of intellectual, illustrative and mechanical art.

Eating and Drinking [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50], by Dr. A. H. Hoy, is a useful treatise emphasizing specially the alkalinity of the blood as the test of food and drink in health or disease. It is a practical presentation of scientific, medical and hygienic knowledge, not attempting to go much into detail as to food but discussing the broad principles of diet. The author seems to have some peculiar ideas, but, if we understand him, his general principle, that by studying the effects of different foods upon the individual one can alone determine what that individual ought to eat or drink, is sound. One has a feeling in reading, however, that in the author's judgment hardly anything is truly fit to be eaten, and it is a comfort to realize that most of us enjoy fairly good health in spite of the unfortunate conditions under which, according to Dr. Hoy, we eat and drink. But such a treatise as this undoubtedly deserves thoughtful consideration.——The Fat of the Land and How to Live on It [Carpenter & Morehouse. $1.50], by Dr. Ellen G. Smith, is a practical cookery and text-book for general use. It deals largely with broad principles and less with special recipes than most cookery books, yet many recipes are furnished. Dr. Smith seems to disagree with Dr. Hoy in a number of points. She fails to give in regard to the kola nut the timely warning which Dr. Hoy offers. She seems to sympathize with the vegetarians to a certain extent. She diverges from her main subject too far at times. For instance, we do not see what the cost of war has to do with her book.

The Yale University Catalogue for 1896–7 and the Harvard University Catalogue for the same year are handsome volumes, giving the usual statistics in regard to the government, course of instruction, membership, degrees, conditions of admission, etc. They are bound in the familiar blue and crimson and each is a first-class piece of work in its way. They illustrate well the immense progress which the universities are making, and remind the reader that intellectual aims control them firmly in spite of the current newspaper prominence given to athletics.

NOTES.

—— The largest and busiest bookmaking and publishing establishment in this country, if not in the world, is the Government Printing Office at Washington.

—— Paul Laurence Dunbar, the young Negro poet whose book, Lyrics of Lowly Life, we recently commended, is to give a series of readings from his own writings in London.

—— A copy of Coverdale's Bible of 1535 recently brought $825 at auction in England, although lacking several pages and having a number of others only in facsimile. Only one or two perfect copies are known to exist.

—— The works of Dickens, Thackeray and Charles Lever, although still read extensively, no longer bring large prices in the book auctions, unless they happen to be original, or very early editions and in the very best preservation.

—— The English papers are having great fun at the expense of Mr. Alfred Austin, the poet laureate. He has just published a new volume of poems, accompanied by an allusion to a supposed public opinion that he has allowed too long an interval to pass since he was last heard from in verse. Part of the fun is because of this utterance and part is due to the poems themselves.

—— Last year 5,581 new works were published in England. Of these 501 were theological, 660 educational, 1,544 stories, including juveniles, 57 legal, 163 economical, 96 scientific or artistic, 263 books of travel or geographical research, 353 historical or biographical, 231 poetical or dramatic, 311 year-books or serials in volumes, 153 medical or surgical, 400 essays and 749 were of miscellaneous character.

—— The late Constance Fenimore Woolson once replied to an inquiry about the "inner methods" of literary success in these sensible words, in the Ladies' Home Journal:

> How did I prepare myself for literary work, you ask? Not at all—that is, any more than having had an excellent education, which I kept up all the years after I left school, and before I began to write, by always having masters and taking lessons in something or other to amuse myself. There are no "avenues to success" in literature, save the commonplace one of sending a manuscript to an editor with a line or two, offering it, without explanation or comment, to his magazine, and inclosing return stamps. There is no favoritism, no "ring." I used to fancy there was, but I know better now.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. Boston.

GREEK AND ROMAN MYTHOLOGY. By K. P. Harrington and H. C. Tolman. pp. 179. $1.00.

NEW LATIN COMPOSITION. By Moses G. Daniell. pp. 214. $1.00.

Lamson, Wolffe & Co. Boston.

AN OPAL. By Ednah Proctor Clarke. pp. 89. $1.00.

Ginn & Co. Boston.

EASY LATIN FOR SIGHT READING. By B. L. D'Ooge. pp. 146. 45 cents.

Pilgrim Press. Boston.

MARRIAGE CHIMES FOR TRUE LOVERS. By M. C. Hazard, Ph.D. pp. 98. 75 cents.

Charles Scribner's Sons. New York.

CONTEMPORARY THEOLOGY AND THEISM. By R. M. Wenley. pp. 262. $1.25.

THE ENGLISH NOVEL. By Sidney Lanier. pp. 302. $2.00.

A HISTORY OF THE HEBREW PEOPLE. By Charles F. Kent, Ph D. pp. 218. $1.25.

A BRIDE FROM THE BUSH. By E. W. Hornung. pp. 235. 75 cents.

AN ESSAY ON COMEDY. By George Meredith. pp. 99. $1.25.

F. H. Revell Co. New York.

GRECIAN DAYS. By Lucia A. Palmer. pp. 92. $2.50.

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR. Second Corinthians. By Rev. J. S. Excell, M. A. pp. 549. $2.00.

ST. PAUL, HIS LIFE AND TIMES. By James Iverach. pp. 216. 75 cents.

ERIC'S GOOD NEWS. pp. 47. 30 cents.

E. P. Dutton & Co. New York.

THE MORE ABUNDANT LIFE. Selected chiefly from unpublished manuscripts of the Rt. Rev. Phillips Brooks, D.D. pp. 244 $1.25.

THE DAILY ROUND FOR LENT. pp. 144. 50 cents.

Continental Pub. Co. New York.

LO-TO-KAH. By Verner Z. Reed. pp. 229. $1.00.

Eaton & Mains. New York.

THE FIRST TEMPTATION. By Mary L. Stark. pp. 86. 50 cents.

Bonnell, Silver & Co. New York.

AN AMERICAN TRANSPORT IN THE CRIMEAN WAR. By John Codman. pp. 198. 75 cents.

Macmillan Co. New York.

ON THE FACE OF THE WATERS. By Flora A. Steel. pp. 475. $1.50.

American Book Co. New York.

OUR LITTLE BOOK FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Arranged by W. E. Crosby. pp. 106. 30 cents.

J. B. Lippincott Co. Philadelphia.

THE FAULT OF ONE. By Effie A. Rowlands. pp. 358. $1.00.

PAPER COVERS.

G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.

LITTLE JOURNEYS TO THE HOMES OF FAMOUS WOMEN. Mrs. Browning, Madame Guyon. By Elbert Hubbard. Each 10 cents.

Evening Post Pub. Co. New York.

THE INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT OF IRELAND.

F. H. Revell Co. New York.

CRIPPLE TOM. By Mrs. W. Searle and Rev. C. H. Mead. 10 cents.

Bible Institute Colportage Association. Chicago.

A ROYAL EXILE. By T. DeWitt Talmage. 15 cents.

Dr. Arthur Macdonald. Washington.

INTELLECTUAL WOMEN AND MATRIMONY.

MAGAZINES.

January. AUBURN SEMINARY REVIEW.—LEND A HAND.—BOOK NEWS.

February. CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.—CENTURY.—FORUM.—NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.—KINDERGARTEN NEWS.—HARTFORD SEMINARY RECORD.—ART AMATEUR.—THE YOUNG MAN.—BULLETIN OF BOOKS ADDED TO THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.—GOOD WORDS.—SUNDAY.—JOURNAL OF HYGIENE.—SCHOOL REVIEW.—BOOK BUYER.

◆

The ideal, after all, is truer than the real; for the ideal is the eternal element in perishable things.—Amiel.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come.

FOREIGN MISSIONARY PRAYER MEETING, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 o'clock A. M.

Benevolent Societies.

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, No. 9 Congregational House, Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00 Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Rooms 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street.; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY.—(Including work of former New West Commission.) Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices, 10 Congregational House, Boston, 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

CONG. SUNDAY SCHOOL & PUBLISHING SOCIETY.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF MINISTERIAL AID.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev. N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

THE BOSTON SEAMAN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome. Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

To be "a true witness" was the first endeavor of a Massachusetts church not far from Boston in entering upon a series of special meetings. The people set themselves right at the start, then looked chiefly among themselves for workers. The result was a new start on the part of a larger number of persons than the whole membership of the church. This was not the outcome of a few weeks of earnestness, but "the year past" had exerted its influence. The growth will not stop there, since thorough preparations for its continuance have been accomplished.

When a church which cannot get what it wants from its own denomination proposes to go into some other denomination in order to get more money from missionary organizations, it is likely to find unlooked-for disappointments. But in a case mentioned this week the only difficulty which so far appears is that of choosing between several denominations said to be bidding for it. Which will finally give the most? And for what?

To lose identity by union with another must be something of a sacrifice for a church as well as for an individual, but one in St. Paul is contemplating such action in the interest of the kingdom. Should the marriage be consummated, may the blessings be multiplied and the burdens divided. All honor to its pastor, too, who has unselfishly stepped out of the way to leave the church free as to future action.

A Cambridge club has started right in aiming first at reaching its beneficiaries in a social way. Still better is the proof of the higher good which is found in the fact that often reform has led to conversion. The majority of the members have shown the influence of the club on their personal lives and but two have violated the pledge.

Nothing strengthens like overcoming. The Nebraska people who, by "a long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together," have succeeded in raising the amount needed to retain a valued pastor are likely to go on to fresh achievements—financial and spiritual.

The attitude in temperance shown at the Louisiana State meeting is indeed a change for that section. It is not easy for Northerners to appreciate the status of the drink question as it presents itself to our churches of the South.

We are glad to welcome back that ecclesiastical lamb in Minnesota which strayed into the Presbyterian fold, and trust that hereafter it will be content with home comforts.

Revival work with a Mormon background must be a vastly different thing from the same work in a Christian community, and infinitely more difficult.

No better stimulus to the religious life can be found than a genuine revival of missionary interest such as Minneapolis has recently been blessed with.

The one Japanese in Oakland not yet a Christian Endeavorer cannot have a very lively time "flocking all alone by himself."

Pastors who find individual work by their church members languishing would perhaps benefit by a Canada item.

Success to the proposed civic federation so sorely needed in Salt Lake City.

Friends who aided the Boston Swedish church so generously will be glad to read this week of its condition.

Of Special Note.

Good work against cigarettes by a woman pastor in Wisconsin.

Heartening results of faithful Sunday school work in Missouri.

Institutional work in extended application in Cleveland.

A Chinese celebration in western Massachusetts.

An infant institutional church on the Iron Range.

Dartmouth College evangelistic efforts.

Joys at dedications all around.

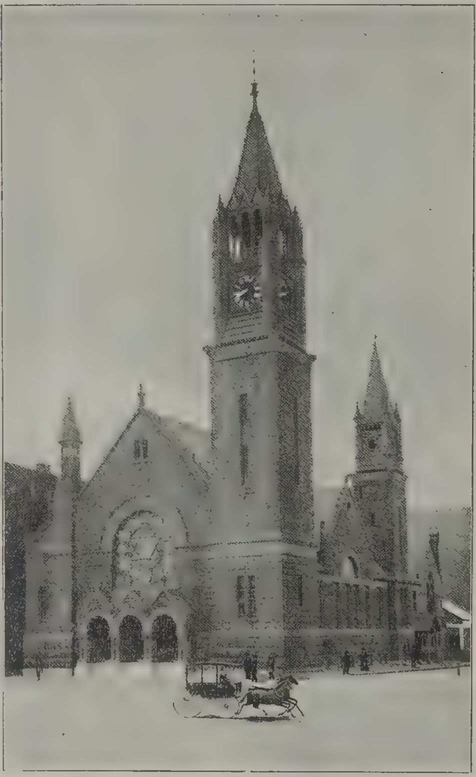
A CITY MEETING HOUSE DEDICATED.

When the second meeting house of the Calvinistic Church, Fitchburg, Mass., had rounded out a strong half-century of service, plans for its successor were made, and a little over a year has wrought changes on the church lot such as to affect the appearance of the whole neighborhood. The new edifice stands on the original site occupied by this organization during its life of about ninety years.

If "a house of worship is an index of the character of the church that owns it," as a speaker at the services stated, one can view the Calvinistic meeting house with pleasure and satisfaction. It stands conspicuously on a corner lot, with a triple arched entrance on the main street, the frontage along this side being eighty feet, and on the other ninety. The building is of stone, Romanesque in architecture, and contains on each side six windows, a number of them memorials. A great rose window, twenty feet in diameter, is placed in the front side. It contains a figure of the angel of the resurrection in the center, surrounded by other angels—the spirits of praise. The towers of the building are handsome additions, one being 158 feet high, containing a clock and bell and being visible from a long distance on all sides.

The auditorium is finished in birch except the choir gallery and pulpit, which are of mahogany. The circular pews, upon an inclined floor, have a capacity of 600, and a gallery accommodates 200. The frescoed ceiling and odd-shaped roof and arches are brilliantly illumined by electric lights. The basement is finished in cypress. The chapel stands, as formerly, in the rear of the meeting house, and is connected with it conveniently. Social and class rooms are on the upper floor, and the pastor's study is in the main tower.

The exercises for dedicating the new property were held in the afternoon and evening of Feb. 10 before a large congregation. A preliminary recital on the organ purchased ten years ago displayed its present good condition, and then reports of committees reviewed the construction of the building. Within the church alone about $50,000 were raised. The total cost of the structure was $70,000. Addresses by two former pastors, Prof H. M. Tyler and Rev. Dr. S. L. Blake, were full of interest, and the evening sermon was preached by Dr. Alexander McKenzie from the text: "At the door of the temple which is called Beautiful." A responsive service of dedication followed, led by the pastor, Rev. G. R. Hewitt, who also offered the prayer. Choice choral selections were rendered during the services.



THE NEW CALVINISTIC EDIFICE, FITCHBURG.

A neat program of the occasion includes pictures of the former and present edifice, a historical statement of the church, acknowledgments of appreciation and thanks to the workmen, besides lists of officers and former pastors in the church.

A NEW HAMPSHIRE CELEBRATION.

The sunny winter day, the tasteful decorations of evergreen, flowers and potted plants, and the appropriate and delightful services made the celebration of the 125th anniversary of the Warner church, Feb. 5, an occasion long to be remembered. The welcome was happily given by the pastor, Rev. A. H. Armes. Social festivities followed at the tables bountifully spread by the ladies. The principal historical address was given by Rev. H. S. Huntington, the only living pastor of the first century of the church's existence. He was followed by Miss A. B. Harris's valuable paper on the sterling character of the early deacons and prominent members of the church. Other notable papers were read of historic interest. A log church edifice first sheltered the gathered worshipers, which was later superseded by a frame structure. Since formation 641 persons have been added to the church, which at the end of its first century enrolled 107. The present membership is 100. The oldest continuous member is Mrs. L. K. Davis, a granddaughter of the first pastor, Rev. William Kelley. Twenty ministers have served as pastors. The Sunday school was one of the first organized in the State, and for the last 25 years has had an average membership of 80. At present the home department numbers 115, and the two grades of the C. E. Society nearly 100. The communion season which closed the afternoon service was one of the most pleasant and helpful features. In the evening brief addresses were made by Rev. W. E. Renshaw, Rev. A. T. Ferguson, former pastors, and Rev. A. T. Hillman. An original poem by Mrs. A. G. Bennett was also read, followed by interesting letters from friends who were unable to be present. Pleasant mention was made of those who in times past had generously aided the church in its need, and tender allusion to the recent death of the pastor's wife.

THE TORONTO DISTRICT ASSOCIATION.

The regular quarterly gathering was held successfully in Toronto, Feb. 9. The devotional hour was conducted by Rev. Hugh Bentley. The reports of the churches were more than usually encouraging. Rev. C. A. Wookey of Mandeville, Jamaica, followed with a capital address on Educational Work in the West Indies, where the Congregationalists, though few in number, stand in the front ranks of all progressive movements. Mr. J. C. Copp then addressed the association on Sunday Observance, urging strongly for Toronto the present maintenance of the day of rest, and declaring that if it were once lost by the introduction of Sunday street cars it could never be restored. In the evening Mr. E. L. Yeigh, the president, delivered an appropriate inaugural address. Rev. A. F. McGregor gave an earnest and much needed address on the claims of the Home Missionary Society, of which he is the efficient secretary, and Rev. J. K. Unsworth spoke ably on Good Citizenship. The presence of these two brethren, with Mr. Wookey, contributed greatly to the interest of the association.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

Bangor.

The public semi-annual meeting of the Students' Association has been postponed for the present on account of the revival meetings in the city.——E. H. Newcomb, '97, delivered an address on Abraham Lincoln at Ware, Mass., Feb. 12.——Professor Denio presented R. E. Gleason, C. P. Emery and W. F. Slade, of the Junior Class, copies of Driver's Commentary on Deuteronomy as a reward for high standing in a recent test in Hebrew.

Hartford.

Mr. H. E. Krehbiel gave an interesting lecture last Saturday on American Folk Songs. Mrs. Krehbiel assisted with songs.——The Junior Class has begun the course in Biblical dogmatics under Professor Beardslee.——The mission study class has finished its study of the lives of some of the great missionaries, and now will study different fields in which the American Board carries on its work.

Yale.

Papers were read before the Biblical Club last week on Haggadic Stories.——The subject in the course by Prof. D. G. Brinton of the University of Pennsylvania was Primitive Religious Expression; In the Object.——The Senior address before the school was by C. C. Merrill on a Plea for the Right Kind of Revivals.——The preacher before the class was E. H Bronson.

Oberlin.

The seminary was addressed last week by Rev. G. A. Burgess, D. D., of Toledo on A Minister's Christian Experience the Measure of His Usefulness.——President Fairchild's work with his class in systematic theology was interrupted by the sad death of his daughter, but with characteristic self-possession he resumes it again.——During the present week Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, D. D., of Detroit lectures to the seminary upon Extemporaneous Preaching.——Booker T. Washington gave a lecture Tuesday evening.

CLUBS.

R. I.—The Providence Club discussed the Institu-ional Church at its meeting, Feb. 8. Dr. Alexan-er McKenzie of Cambridge was an unexpected, ut welcome, guest, and in his happy greeting, pre-ious to his appointment to address Brown Univer-ity students, compensated in a way for the neces-ary absence of Rev. C. L. Thompson, D. D., of New 'ork, who was to give the chief address. Hon. 'rederic Fuller, president of the Y. M. C. A., spoke n the institutional work of the association, Hon. Rathbone Gardner spoke in the happiest way of nstitutional ideas illustrated by practical attempts. Hon. T. B. Stockwell and Rev. F. B. Pullan were alled upon to round out the program of one of the tirring meetings of the club.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

[For other Boston news see page 238.]

Central. Mr. Henry Rivoire was ordained as an vangelist in the chapel, Feb. 9. He is a Walden-ian by birth, and studied at the Methodist Theo-ogical Seminary in Florence, Italy, before coming o this country. He is also a graduate of the theo-ogical department of Boston University and has been conducting mission services for some time in French and English in this city. He passed an ex-ellent examination. The ordaining prayer was offered by Rev. E. L. Clark, D. D., and the combined charge to the pastor and right hand of fellowship were given by Rev. Joshua Coit.——The annual pub-ic meeting of the New England Sabbath Protective League was held in this church last Sunday after-noon. Rev. Reuen Thomas, D. D., presided. The report of Rev. M. D. Kneeland, D. D., secretary of the league, summarized its work for the year. An indication of the wisdom with which it has been prosecuted is found in the fact that every movement which has been made with the object of stopping certain abuses or to enact certain reforms has been successful.

Old South. Last Sunday the pulpit was occupied by Rev. Dr. N. H. Whittlesey, who spoke in the morning of the National Council's Ministerial Relief Fund, of which he is secretary. A generous collection for this fund was taken, amounting to $975. Dr. Whittlesey also preached the evening sermon.

Swedish. Recent times have been encouraging in the church. The members have been more devoted to the work than for a long time, and the unconverted begin to feel the power of the Holy Spirit. Some of them have already given themselves to Christ. It is testified that this spiritual quickening is also a result of the meetings conducted by Mr. Moody. Rev. Peter Vincentius is pastor.

Brighton.—Dr. A. A. Berle has prepared a series of Sunday evening discourses on the great arguments for Christianity, presenting discussions of defenders and adversaries of the faith. The Bible school has chosen a superintendent who, like his predecessor and his assistant, has always been an attendant and member of the church.

Massachusetts.

Cambridge.—Wood Memorial held special services during the month of January. Members were quickened spiritually and about 20 persons gave their hearts to Christ. During the Week of Prayer a half-hour social gathering for mutual acquaintance resulted in an increased attendance and greater interest, and in no way interfered with the spiritual part of the service. Rev. I. W. Sneath is pastor.——Hope has carried on a class of temperance work for men under the name Hope Social Club since the spring of 1895, which aims directly at aiding men who are addicted to the drink habit. It provides a social evening, which has aroused good interest and has drawn 52 men into membership. At the monthly open meeting ladies attend, and music and an entertainment are furnished. In January an oyster supper was successfully held. The club is undenominational, and social rather than religious.

Everett.—Courtland Street. The spiritual condition was never so good as at the present time. At the close of a recent Sunday evening service, at the request of the pastor, Rev. R. H. McGown, a number of persons came forward with a prayer for a better preparation for Christian service. The finances of the church are in a healthful state.

Medford.—Union. Beginning with the Week of Prayer meetings were held for five weeks. At three of them Rev. George Suart of Tennessee spoke and his earnest appeals were helpful. But with this exception the workers were found within the church. Over 70 persons have confessed a purpose to live new lives. The membership of the church is less than 60. The church has been laboring earnestly during the year past to be "a true witness" for Christ in the field which lies about it. This spirit has led to the reorganization of the church on the basis of the Council's Manual and that of the C. E. Society on the Model Constitution, the organization of the Young Men's Christian League and of the Woman's Christian League and of the primary department of the Sunday school. The church has also undertaken to bear its own financial burdens, and has thus more than doubled its regular contributions and increased its benevolences largely. Rev. Isaac Pierson is pastor.

Saxonville.—We erred last week in chronicling the dismission of Rev. G. A. Brock, who has been pastor here since his ordination, in 1891, and continues as such. His church of over 150 members is active and courageous in support of his leadership.

Taunton.—Union. Rev. E. H. Chandler has accepted his call to Wellesley. During the nearly five years of his pastorate in this city he has accomplished an excellent work and has identified himself with all progressive movements for the welfare of the community. It is with regret that the church and town learned of his intention to depart.——A series of Sunday evening union services has begun in the theater in which all the Protestant denominations in town participate. The movement starts off wonderfully well.

Worcester.—At the Ministers' Meeting last week Rev. I. L. Willcox gave a review of Dr. Watson's The Mind of the Master. A resolution was passed urging the pastors to request that their Sunday notices should not be published in the Sunday papers.——Old South. A deep religious interest pervades the church and more than 50 persons have recently begun the Christian life.——Union worshiped in the auditorium of its new building last Sunday for the first time. At its morning service it took up a thank offering for the A. B. C. F. M. amounting to $1,667. This makes over $3,100 the church has given to foreign missions in less than a year. It has had pledges to pay also the past year toward the new edifice.

Spencer.—The Men's League recently gave a banquet to a large number of gentlemen friends, and greater interest was awakened in connection with the organization. The league has been helpful in increasing the attendance at church, so that the seating capacity is often taxed to its utmost. In the future the league will undertake more social features, with discussions on the practical uqestions and occasional lectures.

Southbridge.—Union. The past year has been prosperous, and its close finds the parish out of debt. The population is fluctuating, and although about 200 fewer persons are connected with the parish than at the commencement of the present pastorate over 15 years ago, still an encouraging fact is that the resident membership is somewhat larger than at that time. Six were added last year, three on confession. Benevolences were $205. All departments are prosperous. Rev. Silvanus Hayward has been pastor for 16 years.

Springfield.—North. The pastor, Rev. F. B. Makepeace, has arranged a series of Thursday evening preaching services, among the speakers being Rev. Arthur Titcomb, Rev. Dr. F. L. Robbins, formerly of Philadelphia, and Rev. W. T. Hutchins. Mr. Makepeace began last Sunday a series of discourses on Three Great American Characters—Lincoln, Washington and Mary Lyon.——Park recently took a collection for the benefit of the city rescue mission amounting to $50. Rev. Ki Hi Kazanjian, an Armenian who escaped from Aintab, Turkey, while the Turks were burning his church, spoke at the church recently. He has also told of his work among his persecuted brethren, at South, Hope and Emmanuel Churches.——First. A new feature was introduced last Sunday evening, when the solo cornetist of the Philharmonic Orchestra assisted the choir. Rev. F. L. Goodspeed's subject was, The Heart of God Unveiled.——St. John's. Rev. J. W. Tolliver, the pastor, who has been seriously ill with scarlet fever, was able to preach to his people last Sunday.——The pupils of the Chinese Sunday school entertained their teachers, past and present, at the Y. M. C. A. building recently. The affair was arranged by the Chinamen alone, as a surprise. The best orchestra in the city was engaged and a caterer served the supper, the tables being set for 65 persons. The floral decorations and the entertainment were specially pleasing. After exercises by the scholars themselves, Rev. Harlan P. Beach, for several years a missionary in China, and Rev. F. B. Makepeace spoke. The school now has about 20 pupils, most of whom are laundrymen.

Conway has held a successful series of evangelistic services in the Town Hall with Rev. J. B. Jordan assisting. On some evenings the hall was filled. A number of persons acknowledged Christ for the first time. The churches were stimulated also and Mr. Jordan was here long enough to set them at work with courage. Last week about 40 young people from 14 to 25 years old met at the parsonage and organized a "Second Society of Christian Endeavor," with 20 active and several associate members. Others will join. The work will be along the same lines as in the older society. The new society will meet on Sunday evening with the older, but will also hold each week a meeting of its own on Tuesday evening. Rev. E. F. Hunt is pastor.

Pittsfield.—First. The benevolences last year amounted to $5,650 and home expenses $9,650. Twenty additions were received, making a present total of 526. The average S. S. attendance is 320 out of an enrollment of 515. In legacies the church received over $3,400.

Maine.

Bangor.—Evangelist H. L. Gale is holding meetings at City Hall, which are largely attended, and the interest is constantly increasing. The hall is filled at every service, and many testimonies and requests for prayer are heard. Miss Rice's singing is a valuable aid, as is also the chorus.——Central. Rev. J. S. Penman, the pastor, has just preached an earnest sermon on the arbitration treaty, and at the close of the service the church, by a rising vote, passed a resolution asking Congress for ratification, and, with the signatures of pastor and officers, it was forwarded to Hon. Eugene Hale.

Little Deer Isle.—The edifice which Rev. Charles Whittier has been largely instrumental in erecting was dedicated Feb. 4. A sermon was preached by Rev. J. S. Richards. The women of the parish served a free dinner to the large number in attendance. The debt of $150 was lessened by $54.

Augusta.—A novel Sunday evening service is tried by inviting prominent laymen to speak on special subjects on which they are well qualified to instruct.

The East Sumner Congregational and Baptist churches have the help of Rev. and Mrs. G. S. Boynton in evangelistic meetings.——Additions of 21 members at Houlton were welcome and encouraging.——Several business men in Bluehill are among the number who have expressed a desire to live Christian lives as a result of meetings.

New Hampshire.

Antrim Center, beginning its work as an organization in 1893 with 51 members, has increased its membership 60 per cent. in three years. Rev. Dr. A. H. Quint was moderator at its formation and always remained loyal to it. The church is over four miles distant from any other of its order, and its members are working heroically to erect a suitable building in place of the rented hall now used. The house will be of field stone and will cost $4,500. Half this amount is looked for outside of the church, and already nearly all the rest is in sight. Rev. L. W. Morey is acting pastor.

Pittsfield.—A recent meeting of the society for the consideration of the resignation of Rev. Samuel Bell resulted in the choice of a committee to urge him to withdraw his letter. The efforts however, were unavailing, as the pastor felt there was such need of rest and change as to make his going at the end of March imperative. The pastoral relations of the past six years have been pleasant and happy.

Concord.—First. In view of the resignation of Rev. F. D. Ayer, D. D., to take effect at the close of the 30th year of his pastorate, the Ministers' Conference, comprising all the ministers of Concord, passed complimentary resolutions at a late meeting to bear witness and put on record their high appreciation of his character and services as a minister, as a citizen, as a man and as a helpful friend.

Hanover.—At three o'clock Sunday afternoons the Y. M. C. A. of the college holds meetings in the southern part of the town for the purpose of reaching a class who for various reasons are not regular church-goers. The movement began with a few conversions during the Week of Prayer.

Manchester.—Franklin Street. Notwithstanding the increased expenses for improvements on the meeting house and parsonage, all bills are paid and a balance of $446 remains. A special collection is taken every two months for one of the six missionary societies.

One hundred and twenty-two new books have lately been added to the Sunday school library in Hampstead.——Meriden has recently realized money on notes, and only $900 more are needed to insure a new building.——Donation parties at Hebron and Campton left with the respective pastors substantial tokens of good will and esteem.

Vermont.

West Brattleboro.—The annual report shows a church membership of 185, an S. S. membership of 149, a total C. E. membership of 83 and a King's Daughters and Sons membership of 50. The benevolent donations amounted to $1,464 and the home expenditures to $1,325. Legacies were paid amounting to $8,000.

Newfane.—Rev. Smith Norton has been assisted in a series of evangelistic meetings by Rev. F. V. D. Garretson. The afternoon meetings were specially well attended and profitable.

Brattleboro.—The C. E. Society has just been reorganized. The pastor being absent on a vacation, Prof. H. M. Tyler preached recently.

All but 10 of the entire membership of 78 in Jamaica responded at the reunion.——Union meetings in Putney since the Week of Prayer have been marked by spiritual interest.

Connecticut.

Hartford.—First had last year a net gain of 20, all but one on confession. The present membership is 638. The societies are all in a flourishing condition. Rev. Dr. C. M. Lamson is pastor.——Asylum Hill. The home department, started last spring, now numbers over 200 members.——Pearl Street. The recent reception tendered by the pupils of the Chinese Sunday school to their teachers was attended by over 80, including teachers and friends. Recitations and songs were part of the program by the Chinese.

New Haven.—The Branch of the Woman's Board meeting in Center Church chapel, Feb. 9, was addressed by Dr. Mary A. Holbrook, formerly of China and Japan.——United. Last Sunday evening the Men's Club service was addressed by Dr. G. A. Gordon on Principles of the Puritan Faith.

Willimantic has 331 members, 22 new members being received last year. The S. S. membership is 254. A feature of the annual meeting was a paper, giving in detail the historical facts relating to the organization of the church and the erection of the present house of worship.

Norwalk.—The meeting house took fire from an overheated flue about midnight last Friday night, and before the flames could be extinguished about $2,000 damage was done. Had it not been for the snow the conflagration would probably have been much more extensive.

Plainville, after two years of free pews, has found that system unsatisfactory financially. At the annual meeting it was unanimously voted to return to the old plan of auctioning off the seats.

Naugatuck gave nearly $1,500 in benevolences last year.——The average S. S. attendance at South Church, New Britain, for January was 703 ——First Church, Derby, has organized new committees on strangers and visitation.——Bloomfield is holding special services with Rev. I. N. Earle.——At a recent reception to Rev. C. C. Redgrave and bride at Morris, choice gifts included two easy-chairs from the pastor's class of young men.——The chapel at Oakville has added 300 new books to its library.——Twenty-eight boys and girls were given Bibles at Union Church, Rockville, Jan. 31.——The prayer meetings at Somers have outgrown the chapel.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

Niagara Falls, under its new leader, Rev. W. E. Dudley, formerly of South Natick, looks forward to renewed prosperity, and, situated in a rapidly growing center, is destined to become a stronghold of the denomination. Mr. Dudley is a young man of energy, and meets with a hearty welcome from a united people. The church gave a reception to the pastor and his wife, Feb. 12. In spite of bad weather nearly 500 persons attended the prettily decorated rooms to meet the new pastor and his wife. An address of welcome was given by Rev. John Bacon of the Presbyterian church, and the pastor responded for himself and family. All the pastors of the city were present to extend a cordial greeting, and an enjoyable evening was spent. The new work has already shown its effects in the size of the congregations, fully 700 persons being present on a recent Sunday.

Owego.—On a recent Friday evening a reception was tendered Rev. and Mrs. C. M. Bartholomew in honor of their 20th wedding anniversary. The church parlors and three front rooms were artistically decorated with evergreens, in the center of a great bank being suggestive dates. After the reception and a short musical program refreshments were served. At their home the pastor and his wife received many useful and beautiful gifts.

Brooklyn.—Plymouth. Dr. Lyman Abbott is approaching the close of his series of lectures on The Bible as Literature. So much interest has been aroused that he proposes to extend the course by five subjects: The Bible as Literature, in an analysis of results from the present course, The Message of Israel, Spiritual Contents of the Bible, Spiritual History of the Bible and The Bible and the Christ.

Bangor and Brandon are both under the care of Rev. R. E. Andrews, who now enters his third year. The latter has doubled its membership during his pastorate. The house was painted, carpeted and furnished with a bell in 1896. The former has also been recarpeted recently, and a pleasant prayer meeting room has been fitted up in the basement.

Copenhagen.—This church is much bereaved in the death of its pastor, Rev. J. K. Griffith, on the 8th. He was a quiet man, but of unusually acute intellect and large information. His pastorate had been specially successful. His funeral was held on the 10th. His wife died some years ago. Three children are left.

Ithaca.—First. On the last communion Sunday 12 persons were received to membership, five on confession. In 1896 $744 were given to benevolences, and the total outlay was $6,448. The King's Daughters rent one pew, which is free to those not able to own one.

Binghamton.—First. Rev. G. H. Filian, pastor of the largest Protestant church in Armenia, gave an interesting address in the First Church on the evening of Feb. 7 upon the situation in Armenia, illustrating his lecture by a map.

Olean, Rev. J. H. McKee, pastor, has enjoyed a real quickening under the labors of Rev. H. E. Gurney, who has now begun work at Grand Island.

THE SOUTH.

Georgia.

Atlanta.—First. At the February communion, as a result of recent evangelistic effort, 33 united with the church, 17 of them men. The honor of the fifth life membership from this church in the A. M. A. falls upon a woman. The women have recently provided for new heaters in the church. The Parish Visitor, the monthly organ, is increasing in usefulness in its second year.

Savannah.—First. Rev. L. B. Maxwell, the pastor, who is also superintendent of S. S. work among the colored people, is afforded much help by an assistant pastor, Mr. T. G. Hazel.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

Cleveland.—Mt. Zion is united and enthusiastic under the wise and earnestly spiritual leadership of Rev. J. H. Moorland, who has been pastor since last October, and was installed by council Feb. 9. Special meetings had been held the previous five weeks, with a great deepening of the religious life, the reclaiming of neglectful ones and a good number of conversions, largely among heads of families. Mr. Moorland was for two years a Y. M. C. A. secretary in Washington, D. C., and for three years pastor of Howard Chapel in Nashville, Tenn. The examination was in the highest degree satisfactory, and the churches and ministers of the city welcome the new pastor with great cordiality.——Denison Avenue Mission held a week of special services, in which the pastor, Rev. Rufus Apthorp, was assisted by Evangelist Charles Frew. Members of the city missionary committee in special charge of the mission also assisted every evening. There was excellent attendance and interest. The mission has begun to hold morning as well as evening services on Sunday.——The February Ministers' Meeting was addressed by Rev. James Brand, D. D., and Rev. J. E. Moorland upon Present Day Preaching.——Pilgrim had 402 members seated at tables for its annual banquet, Feb. 11. After-dinner speaking followed, with a history of the year, roll-call by years, and letters from the church missionaries and former pastors and absent members. Special messages were adopted by vote to be sent to the aged and sick. During the year 116 new members were received. The total membership is now 726. The C. E. Society reported 800 calls; visitation committee, 1,200; pastoral force, 1,150. For home expenses $27,345 were paid, including $14,000 on the new building. Benevolences were $5,533. The S. S. enrollment is 1,226, and three C. E. Societies have 246 members. Institute work shows steady growth. The reading-room attendance was 7,157, the library issued 6 410 books, and the kindergarten average daily attendance was 44. Institute classes enroll 400 members in Bible study, French, German, penmanship, fine arts, municipal affairs, travel, piano and gymnasium, the largest single class being the Bible class taught by Professor King of Oberlin, which has 99 members.

Illinois.

Sandoval has dedicated its new and beautiful house of worship. The church has been wonderfully blessed during the past few years. It has more than doubled its membership and greatly widened its influence in the community and the region around. A larger house was a necessity. Rev. R. W. Purdue and Pres. F. B. Hines assisted the pastor, Rev. F. V. Moslander, morning and evening. About $1,400 indebtedness was promptly paid. Much credit is due the faithful pastor, who has labored unceasingly in all lines of work.

Austin.—First, Rev. Thomas Westerdale, D. D., pastor, had many reports at its annual meeting, all of which told of prosperity. They showed 35 accessions, 12 on confession, a present membership of 181, with a net gain of 28; S. S. membership 259, a gain of 44. During the year $2,000 were raised for home expenses, $415 for benevolence and $1,700 for the church debt, making a total of $4,115.

Quincy.—First. Last year 28 accessions were received, making the membership at present 460. The S. S. roll contains 468 names. Last year $5,600 were given for benevolences, $5,225 for expenses and $10,000 for church improvements. Rev. S. H. Dana, D. D., is pastor.

Gridley has been much strengthened and refreshed by a fortnight's special services, conducted by Evangelist J. D. Wyckoff.——Rev. W. H. Chandler has assisted at Summer Hill in protracted meetings. There were some conversions, but the great blessing came to the church itself in its spiritual uplift.

Indiana.

Indianapolis.—The State Executive Committee met here Feb. 2 to consider the schedule of missionary appropriations for the coming year. Despite the severe stringency of the times, the churches in most cases have loyally met the severe reduction which has been made necessary in the appropriations. In most cases a reduction of 20 per cent. was made. Gas City, a new enterprise, was put upon the list and a small grant allowed. A grateful sense of appreciation for the valuable and generous assistance which the National C. H. M. S. has rendered in the work of planting churches was manifest, and great sympathy for the present burdened condition of its treasury.——Union. Protracted meetings are being held, Rev. O. D. Fisher being assisted by the Congregational pastors.——Northeast. Special revival meetings are in progress. Rev. George K. Miller is pastor. A number have entered upon a new life.

Kokomo.—The union revival meetings, assisted by Rev. B. Fay Mills, have grown to large proportions. The second Sunday the meeting houses were full in the morning, and at the Opera House, which was packed largely with unconverted persons, Mr. Mills gave an address of great power, and 100 rose for prayers. In the afternoon meeting about 400 people pledged themselves to a better life. At night Mr. Mills preached to 2,000 men, and Rev. R. J. Smith, the Congregational pastor, preached at the Christian Church, where standing room was limited. One week day the business houses throughout the city closed in the afternoon. As many as 700 persons have remained for the inquiry meetings. The work is reaching the non-church-going classes. Mr. Mills is aided by a large choir.

Anderson.—The annual meeting was held recently, and disclosed a hopeful condition of affairs. During the year $1,800 have been raised for all purposes, of which the Ladies' Society contributed $300. The benevolences were $210. E. J. Buffington, Esq., one of the trustees, has actively assisted in the formation of a Y. M. C. A., which is a great need here. He has been elected president. The church had 11 additions and the Sunday school has four new classes. Dr. A. H. Ball is pastor.

Michigan.

Detroit.—The ministers of the city and vicinity at their latest monthly meeting discussed The Midweek Meeting. Rev. M. H. Wallace introduced the subject briefly and was followed by all present. Supper was served at 6.30 P. M., and a pleasant social hour was had.——Canfield Avenue. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton of First Church has just closed a successful series of mission meetings with this church, which has been greatly stirred to better work. Some persons have decided to begin the Christian life.——People's. The auditorium is crowded every Sunday evening to its utmost capacity. It holds over 1,500. As a result of two weeks' meetings, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Morgan Wood, over 100 persons have professed the Christian life. Governor Pingree has just appointed Mr. Wood a commissioner on the State Board of Charities.——Mount Hope. This church has a committee at work considering the question of building a new edifice at the present or some other location.

Litchfield, Rev. C. K. Stockwell, pastor, has just closed a series of revival meetings in which several persons professed conversion. He was assisted by Rev. T. C. Jones. At the close of 1896 22 members of the Sunday school were given gold ars, which indicate that the wearers have been resent every Sunday for four years unless preented by sickness. The Senior and Junior C. E. ocieties are doing good work, as are also the other rganizations.

Belding is being moved in a remarkable way and never before. The awakening began with union rayer meetings during the Week of Prayer and the ork has increased in intensity ever since. The aurch auditoriums cannot hold the congregations nd even the Opera House is too small. A large amber of persons have decided to lead a Christian fe.

Lansing.—Pilgrim. The pastor, Rev. E. B. Allen, conducting a series of special mission services ith good success. Last week 28 new members ere received, 18 on confession.

Wisconsin.

Eau Claire.—First. A Christian League has een formed by the pastor, Rev. T. C. Hunt. It ometimes takes charge of a service and has been pecially instrumental in increasing the Sunday vening attendance.——Second, Rev. D. R. Anderon, pastor, has recovered from his sprain of last eptember enough to be able to walk about without rutches. He is busy among his parishioners. The ome department of the Sunday school now numers 100.

New London celebrated its 40th anniversary, eb. 9. Several former pastors were present and so Rev. F. B. Doe, who was missionary superinendent when the church was young. Interesting istorical addresses were given, and Pres. R. C. lagg of Ripon College gave an inspiring address on ne Functions of the Church. The church has reently received a legacy of $8,000.

Lone Rock.—Through the efforts of the pastor, Irs. H. E. Williams, an ordinance has been passed y the board prohibiting the sale and gift of cigarttes within the village limits. The church has beun a systematic offering for each of the benevoent societies. A choir of 35 children has been rganized.

Poller.—As a result of special meetings, conucted by Rev. C. A. Wight, 16 persons made a ublic profession and eight were baptized. A Church of the Covenant" with 14 members was rganized.

Davis Corners, though pastorless, has recently eld special revival meetings, led by outside workrs. Great interest has been awakened and many vere converted.

After a three weeks' series of evangelistic meetngs in Manning 19 members were received into the hurch.——Meetings are begun at Camp Creek with rowded houses.

THE WEST.

Missouri.

Peirce City.—For several years this Sunday chool has had thorough and careful training. A ome department, now numbering 70, has been susained for four years with great interest and profit. uarterly written reviews with grades and honors ave been held. For some months a deepening spirtual interest has been manifest. The church has een burdened especially for the young. This has ulminated in a gracious revival. Evangelist R. L. ayfield is assisting the pastor in meetings, in which ther churches have shared. Whole S. S. classes ave confessed Christ. Most of the associate C. E. nembers have become active Christians. Nearly all he youth of the congregation, numbering about 00, have entered upon a new life.

Carthage.—First. The 200 persons attending he annual supper were surprised to find the buildng newly lighted by electricity. The first anniersary of the coming of Rev. A. J. Van Wagner vas celebrated at this time.

Iowa.

Gaza.—Seven months of missionary service by [illegible] and Mrs. J. K. Nutting have resulted in a memership of over 30 and a pretty little church buildng, costing $700. The organization was completed nd recognized by council Feb. 5. This is the only hurch in the community.

Buffalo Center.—During the nine months of Rev. N. L. Packard's pastorate the membership has rown from 15 to more than 60, old debts have been aid, a bell has been secured and the congregations ave increased fourfold.

Madison County.—First. The recent ingathering into this little country church of 16 persons on onfession followed a series of meetings in which Rev. Joseph Steele, Jr., assisted the pastor, Rev. C. J. B. Salter.

Hope.—This new church of 37 members was developed from an out-station appointment by the pastor at Exira, Rev. H. L. Wissler. It was recognized by council Feb. 2.

Des Moines.—Pilgrim. A parsonage is in prospect. The people celebrated recently the fifth anniversary of the coming of their pastor, Rev. Clinton Douglass.

Castana rejoices in freedom from debt. The parsonage loan has been paid. This thriving plant is ten years old. Rev. F. C. Lewis is pastor.

Ottumwa.—First, Rev. L. F. Berry, pastor, reports a membership of 309. The benevolences for 1896 were $271 and the total expenditures $3,592.

Atlantic.—Rev. E. S. Hill, D. D., has ministered here for more than 30 years. In 1896 the additions to membership numbered 43.

Seven years since there was only one Congregational church in a valley 90 miles in extent. Now there are six. These have developed from Sunday schools and have been aided by the State H. M. S. Many of the Iowa churches are holding revival services conducted by neighboring pastors. Through this kind of exchange good results have been obtained.

The church at Rodney received 13 members during 1896, eight of them in December.——At Sheldon 74 persons united last year, 67 on confession. The benevolences were $223.

Minnesota.

St. Paul.—Plymouth is facing the problem arising from its location. Originally it accommodated all portions of the city. With the increase of population and the forming of new organizations, Park Church in particular, the constituency of Plymouth has been diverted to these. The pastor has resigned and will close work in a few months that the church may be left untrammeled. Various plans are suggested, such as union with People's Church, Dr. S. G. Smith, pastor, or with Park, Dr. E. P. Ingersoll, pastor. Other plans considered would keep the historic name of Plymouth.

Biwabik.—Owing to financial stringency and the closing of some of the mines, church work has been interrupted. A pastor has just been secured. The church owns a building, formerly used as a theater, which has been fitted up as a reading-room with auditorium, and plans are formed to develop institutional work on a small scale. Rev. C. B. Fellows is serving as general missionary at Biwabik and other points on the Iron Range. Did H. M. funds allow, one or two greatly-needed men would be sent at once to the Range.

Minneapolis.—All the churches in the city united Feb. 7 in a grand missionary rally. In the evening 13 district meetings were held, and at every place there was a crowded house. Never in the history of this city has there been such a general and concerted action on behalf of missions, and already the fruits are beginning to appear in closer fellowship among the different denominations, a deeper sense of individual responsibility and greater seriousness in endeavoring to carry out Christ's last command.

Lake City.—Swedish a few years age, after having been under the care of the H. M. S., was attracted to the Presbyterians by the offer of help in paying for its church building. It has now refunded the money furnished by the Presbyterians and expressed a desire to return to the Congregational fold. Rev. E. A. Anderson of Winona has been called to the pastorate.

Nebraska.

Exeter, which has been among the most faithful and efficient churches in the State, has been so weakened by removals and losses in the community that only with great difficulty and sacrifice has it retained its pastor, Rev. C. H. Huestis. It was unwilling again to ask aid of the H. M. S. in its straitened condition, and yet was anxious to keep the pastor. For the year ending September, 1896, Mr. Huestis accepted half salary, with the understanding that he might use alternate Sundays for appointments elsewhere. No permanent appointment offered and the church resolved at the meeting last September to make a heroic effort to increase the pledges by $100. Apparently this could not be done, but at the close of the service Feb. 7 the whole congregation stayed, talked up the matter with enthusiasm and pledged the balance. Hearty assistance to the pastor in other ways was promised. This successful effort has greatly strengthened the church.

Aten and Blyville, in the northeastern part of the State, have developed slowly since Father Seccombe began work in 1873 at the old town of Green Island, which was swept away by the great flood of 1881, when the meeting house, with all the other buildings in town, was carried down the Missouri. Aten, just across the river from Yankton, is the successor to Green Island, but is about four miles further up the river and on higher ground. This is to be the initial point of the Yankton and Norfolk Railroad, and it is expected that work will be resumed upon it in the spring. It is hoped that a church building can then be erected and that other workers will come to help. The Blyville church has united with that at Dolphin to be organized at Crofton, a point on the proposed

ROYAL

The absolutely pure

BAKING POWDER

ROYAL—the most celebrated of all the baking powders in the world—celebrated for its great leavening strength and purity. It makes your cakes, biscuit, bread, etc., healthful, it assures you against alum and all forms of adulteration that go with the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

railroad. Rev. W. T. Williams is pastor of this double field.

Omaha.—Plymouth. It now appears as if financial matters were about to come to an issue. The holders of the mortgage have a suit pending for foreclosure. It has been long delayed and cannot wait much longer. As soon as there is a decree entered the property is to be sold without stay. An arrangement had been partly consummated to lift the indebtedness. The members of the society had pledged nearly $3,000. The C. C. B. S. was asked for enough to make the balance agreed upon, but has not seen its way to give the needed assistance. The church has now about agreed that, unless it can secure some relief in the direction indicated, and thus adjust its indebtedness, it will entertain the suggestions of several other denominations which appear to be willing to take the property and the congregation and care for the debt.

Fairfield.—During the Week of Prayer a strong interest was manifest which seemed to demand further special services, and as the meetings progressed for three weeks the interest deepened and widened. The church was much refreshed and strengthened, and a number expressed hope in Christ. At the communion service, Feb. 7, 15 persons united with the church, all on confession, seven of these being baptized. The house was filled for the service, and deep and tender feeling pervaded the assembly. Rev. B. O. Snow is pastor.

Lincoln.—First. The Men's Club has wrought a marked change in the Sunday evening attendance, which at a recent service reached 400, the only extra attractions being a harp solo and a male quartet. While the club has furnished considerable money, the receipts from patrons have about equaled the expense. The pastor is encouraged to larger effort by the increased attendance. He is presenting interesting comments on the Lord's prayer.

Long Pine.—The pastor, Rev. J. H. Andress, has been assisted in special meetings by Rev. J. F. Bacon of Neligh. The interest culminated in a delightful communion service, Feb. 7, when 12 persons united, all but one on confession. The members have been greatly helped and a spirit of harmony and fellowship between the different churches has been promoted.

Kearney, which has been pastorless for some time and much discouraged by losses and removals, has now united in a hearty and unanimous call to Rev. J. P. King of Bon Homme, S. D., and it is expected that he will accept.

North Dakota.

Valley City.—Eight accessions, with more to follow, growing congregations and efficient S. S. and C. E. departments are encouraging features. The pastor, Rev. William Gimblett, is planning some evangelistic services for the near future.

Wyoming.

Rock Springs.—During the six years' pastorate of Rev. H. N. Smith, who resigned in order to secure a change of climate, 138 persons were received to fellowship, while increased interest and zeal marked all departments. The resignation has been accepted with resolutions of regret.

Utah.

Salt Lake.—By request of the union Ministers' Association nearly all the local pulpits rang out Jan. 31, with startling facts regarding law and crime in the city. Steps have been taken looking to the establishment of a civic federation or similar organization, which is greatly needed.——Dr. Munhall spoke Jan. 31 to a great crowd of men only in the Grand Opera House, and preached in the evening at the First Presbyterian.

Park City, Provo and Plymouth Church, Salt Lake, held special services following the Week of Prayer, each resident minister being assisted by a neighboring pastor. Rev. J. D. Nutting of the last named church has a helpful form of covenant for the use of those just entering the Christian life He is also giving a series of sermons on the Life of Christ, with the help of the stereopticon.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

Ferndale.—The new pastor, Rev. G. H. Merrill, is greatly cheered by the large attendance, especially on Sunday evenings. Besides the two services in town he preaches alternate Sunday afternoons at Grant's and at Swauger, a promising new town six miles distant. At present without a church edifice, its first one is likely to be Congregational, as the people prefer that polity Porterville.—Rev. J. A. Milligan, the new minister, has among his workers two former pastors, the only ones the church has ever had, Rev. C. N. Flanders, who is now cultivating an orange grove, and Rev. J. G. Eckles, whose family conduct the local paper. Mr. Flanders is also chorister.

Oleander.—A boys' club has been organized for gymnastics, singing and literary exercises, with amusement if time permits. On similar lines, with sewing added, the girls are to be cared for. Rev. Joseph Overton is pastor.

Sonoma.—A song service recently given by the choir to feeble-minded children at the State home, some six miles distant, was heartily appreciated.

Santa Cruz.—The Japanese C. E. Society connected with this church numbers 11, and includes all but one of that nationality in the city.

San Francisco.—Plymouth. Mr. S. S. Smith has just been re-elected deacon, having served the church in that capacity for 34 years.

At the annual meeting, Pacific Grove, the treasurer's report showed current expenses paid with balance on hand.——The pastor at Lockeford finds a hektograph leaflet helpful.——A recent bazar at Clayton netted over $100.

CANADA.

Ontario.

Brantford.—First. The pastor, Rev. John Schofield, believes in "a work for every life, and life for every work," and to that end ascertains from his people just what of many duties indicated on a slip his individual parishioners will agree to do. Since last April 18 new members were received.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

Friends of the Springfield School for Christian Workers had abundant reason for rejoicing last week in the formal opening of the women's hall, which furnishes excellent dormitory privileges for the young women students, who have hitherto been without such special accommodations. Local pastors participating in the exercises indicated their hearty sympathy with the school. An efficient board of woman managers has had much to do with helping on this forward movement.

For Weekly Register see page 251.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

The striking personality of Mr. Cheever and his active participation in various reforms gave him unusual prominence in the denomination and in the city of Worcester, in which for the last 35 years he made his home. Born at Hallowell, Me., Feb 6, 1814, he graduated at Bowdoin in 1834. After several years of travel he studied theology at Andover and Bangor, and was ordained at Lodi, N. J., in 1847. He held several other pastorates in the vicinity of New York, but since 1861 has resided in Worcester. He helped to found the Summer Street Church and was pastor of it for nine years. His years have been full of activity, for his wide interest in human life led him to champion many worthy causes. He wrote freely for the papers and published, also, several volumes, including the memoir of his brother, the late Dr. George B. Cheever. One of his four daughters is the wife of Pres. William J. Tucker, D. D.

For Nervous Headache Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. F. A. Roberts, Waterville, Me., says: "Have found it of great benefit in nervous diseases—nervous headache, nervous dyspepsia, neuralgia—and think it is giving great satisfaction when it is thoroughly tried."

Prepare

For spring. It is a trying season. If it finds your blood impure, impoverished, weak and thin, you will be tired, dull, languid and an easy victim of disease. Do not wait till these troubles overtake you. Build up your system at once with Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine will fit you

For Spring

It will make your blood rich, pure and nourishing; cure that tired, nervous feeling, enable you to sleep, give you a good appetite. Thousands have been saved from or cured of disease and thousands are kept in good health today by Hood's Sarsaparilla. It will do as much for you. It is of the utmost importance that you

Take

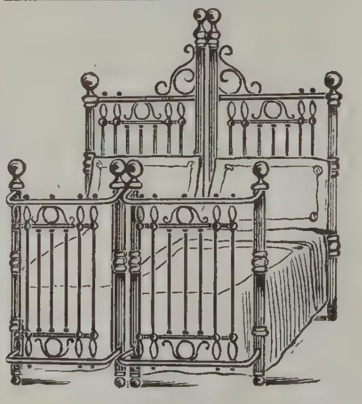
Care of your health now. Do not allow your blood to remain in that impure condition in which the winter months are sure to leave it. Take a thorough course of Hood's Sarsaparilla and expel those impurities. It thoroughly eradicates the dangerous poisons with which the blood is loaded. It invigorates the system and builds up and sustains all the organs by feeding them upon pure, rich blood.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the Best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills act harmoniously with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

GRANULA "THE PERFECT HEALTH FOOD" Specially suitable for invalids and children. Sample Book of Recipes FREE.
packages 25 cents.
GRANULA CO., DANSVILLE, N. Y.



In Halves.

How few, among the hundreds of sensible persons who are now considering the feasibility of twin beds, realize the ease and advantages of the plan. If they did, they would decide it more quickly.

As we now build them they are not separate beds, but strictly halves of one bed. The general design is carried across from one bed to the other. The beds themselves may be 3 feet in width, and this will make the pair occupy no more floor space than a generous single bedstead.

We equip them with the extension foot and every latest improvement. At trifling expense an Arabian or half-canopy top may be attached to the head, thus still further carrying out the idea of a single bed.

The pattern here shown is solid brass. We have them in tubular white iron with burnished brass trimmings, and in this form they cost next to nothing.

Our designs permit the use of three and a half foot frames, if desired.

General Catalogue for 1897. Square octavo, 256 pp., 300 illustrations. Sent to any address on receipt of five 2-cent stamps for postage.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The feature of the past week in the world f trade was the dissolution of the steel rail ool and the drop in the price of rails to $17 o $18 per ton, the lowest on record. The ool comprised all the great makers of steel ails in the country, and, unless some new greement is patched up, a very interesting ar may be fought between the former mem- ers of the pool.

There is considerable doubt expressed in ome quarters, however, as to the genuine- ess of the breaking up of the pool, some laiming that the whole affair is but a move- ent to dispose of large quantities of rails at rices which must naturally be attractive to he purchaser. Some very large orders have een placed, and already there are reports hat the threatened war between the compa- ies has been averted and that all will be nce more harmonious.

In other lines trade is quiet. Print cloths t Fall River have improved as expected be- ause of the Borden purchase of 750,000 pieces, ut cotton goods have as yet failed to sym- athize. Cotton mill treasurers say the out- ook for profits is not particularly bright and hey are not looking for much improvement n business until the fall. The Lowell mills re the latest to pass their dividend.

Wool continues firm and woolen mills are eported fairly busy. A little better demand or boots and shoes is noted, but iron and teel products continue in the doldrums. oney is a drug at low rates, although the ew York bank statement last Saturday howed an increase of nearly three millions n loans. This would seem to indicate that oney is in a little better demand for mercan- le purposes.

Up to the first of the week the stock mar- et was extremely dull with prices easier on he troubled situation of European politics ver the Cretan crisis. The Lexow investiga- on of trusts was used by bear traders in all Street to hammer the industrial stocks, nd as a result more or less heavy declines oc- urred in rubber, sugar, tobacco and leather ecurities.

Mr. J. H. Plummer, publisher of Woman's World nd Jenness Miller Monthly, offers $100 in prizes to he persons making the largest number of words rom the word Endeavors. See his advertisement n another column.

Where History Is Being Made.—The attention f the whole country at the present time is turned oward the national Capitol where so many ques- ons of great public interest are being debated by oth houses of Congress. The personally conducted ours operated under the management of the Royal lue Line afford an opportunity for every one to isit Washington under the most favorable condi- ons and at a minimum of expense. The parties art Tuesday, Feb. 16, Thursday, March 18, Friday, pril 2, and Tuesday, May 4. The rate of $27.00 rom Boston pays for transportation for the round rip, staterooms, meals en route, transfers, five days t the Riggs House, Ebbitt House or Willard's, de trip to Alexandria and Mount Vernon, a stop t Philadelphia and privilege of stop over in New ork as long as desired. Rates in proportion are ade from other points in New England. Al- hough the rate is low the accommodations are ab- olutely first class and the managers cater to the est people. A special "Inauguration Tour" has een arranged for March 2, and two tours to Old oint Comfort and Washington will leave March 26 nd April 20. Illustrated itinerary and further in- ormation can be obtained from A. J. Simmons, .E. A., 211 Washington Street, Boston.

My neighbor told me about Hood's Sarsaparilla and dvised me to try it. This is the kind of advertising hich gives Hood's Sarsaparilla the largest sales in he world. Friend tells friend that Hood's Sarsapa- lla cures, that it gives strength, health, vitality and igor, and whole neighborhoods use it as a family edicine.

Hood's Pills act easily and promptly on the liver nd bowels. Cure sick headache.

1851. 1897.

FORTY-SIXTH ANNUAL STATEMENT

OF THE

Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company,

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

JANUARY 1, 1897.

ASSETS.

Loans on First Mortgages of Real Estate		$5,793,119 51
Premium Notes and Loans on Policies in force		722,100 68
Loans on Collateral		6,600.00
Cost Value of Real Estate owned by the Company		994,312 96
City and Municipal and Railroad Bonds and Stocks		2.290,516 16
Bank Stocks		184,328 00
Cash in Office		188 95
Cash Deposited in Banks		294 392 91
Add:		$10,285,559.17
Market Value of Stocks and Bonds over cost	$47,465.04
Interest Accrued and Due	165,643.71
Net Deferred and Outstanding Premiums	159 374 79	372,483 54
Gross Assets January 1, 1897		$10,658,042 71

LIABILITIES.

Reserve on policies in force at 4 per cent. interest (Conn. and N. Y. standard)	$9,798,470 00
Claims by Death Outstanding	32,694.00
Premiums Paid in Advance	7,248 00
Special Policy and Investment Reserves	248,078 00	$10,086,490 00
Surplus at 4 per cent.		$571,552.71

	1894.	1895.	1896.
Total Premiums received	1,198,561	1,330,804	1,430,228
Policies in force	22,797	24,999	25,981
Insurance in force	$36,381,049	$40,460,331	$42,216 841
Paid Policy-holders	1,087,556	1,112 849	1 212 151

This Company has paid since organization for DEATH LOSSES, MATURED ENDOWMENTS, DIVIDENDS TO POLICY-HOLDERS and SURRENDERED POLICIES, more than $36,000,000.00.

JONATHAN B. BUNCE, President.
CHARLES H. LAWRENCE, Secretary.
JOHN M. HOLCOMBE, Vice-President.
ARCHIBALD A. WELCH, Actuary.
WILLIAM D. MORGAN, M. D., Medical Director.
GEORGE S. MILLER, Supt. of Agencies.

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York.
Mutual Life Building,
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.

CAPITAL, - - - - $2,000,000
SURPLUS, - - - - - $2,000,000

ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS
subject to check or on certificate.

WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, Jr., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.

DIRECTORS.
Samuel D. Babcock,
George F. Baker,
George S. Bowdoin,
August Belmont,
Frederic Cromwell,
Walter R Gillette,
Robert Goelet,
G. G. Haven,
Oliver Harriman,
R. Somers Hayes,
Charles R. Henderson,
Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
Augustus D. Juilliard,
James N. Jarvie,
Richard A. McCurdy,
Alexander E. Orr,
Walter G. Oakman,
Henry H. Rogers,
H. McK. Twombly,
Frederick W. Vanderbilt,
William C. Whitney.

CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES
DON'T TRAVEL WITHOUT THEM.
Cheque Bank Cheques
will add greatly to your comfort while abroad. See circular.
Agency of the U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
Frederick W. Perry, Manager,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

7 PER CENT. NET.

First Mortgage Loans on Improved Farms in the Wonderfully Fertile Red River Valley and in North Dakota and Minnesota. 20 years of experience in the business, and an actual residence of over 8 years in the Red River Valley and of over 22 in Minnesota and North Dakota. A personal knowledge of lands and values. Loans only made to industrious, thrifty farmers, on well improved farms. I give my personal supervision to the business. Loans made in your name and interest coupon-notes and mortgages and applications sent to you and held by you. Interest collected by me and forwarded to you by New York Check. Funds now earning you only 2, 3, or 4 per cent. in Savings Banks will here earn you 7 per cent.—about doubling your income. Remit funds for investment by New York or Boston draft, or by personal check payable to my order. Address

E. P. GATES,
2628 Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

8% Municipal Warrants Safe as bonds and pay much better. Write for details. Robt. E. Strahorn & Co., Equitable Building, Boston.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON.

Hotels and Travel.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'S TOURS.

ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED.

A party will leave Boston Feb. 25, for a Grand Tour of 72 days through the Southern States, in Vestibuled Sleeping, Dining and Composite Library Observation Cars.

MEXICO AND CALIFORNIA

Ample time will be devoted to all the leading cities and other places of historic and picturesque interest in Mexico, including the Wonderful Tampico Division of the Mexican Central Railway, a Week in the City of Mexico and a Four Days' Trip over the Vera Cruz Railway.

In California, San Diego, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Santa Barbara, San Francisco, Monterey, etc., will be visited.

The return tickets may be used from California on Any Regular Train until July, 1897, or with any one of Nine Parties under Special Escort, with a Choice of Three Different Routes.

On same date a party will leave Boston for a 35 days' tour to

Omitting California MEXICO Omitting California

Florida Tours, Feb. 25.
Jamaica, Feb. 25.
Washington Tours, March 26, April 5 and May 11.
Washington Inauguration Trip, Feb. 25.
California Tours, Feb. 25, March 15.
European Tours, March 27, May 4, 15, 19, June 9 and 26.
Independent Railroad Tickets via the Boston & Albany, Boston & Maine and Other Lines; also Steamship Tickets to all points.

☞ Send for descriptive book, mentioning the particular trip desired.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB,
296 Washington Street, opposite School St., Boston,

GAZE'S TOURS ESTABLISHED 1844.

Nile, Bermuda, Florida, West Indies, Holy Land, Egypt, Europe.

Programs ready, post free. Mention tour.

GAZE'S TOURIST GAZETTE FREE.

H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd., 113 B'way, N. Y.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.

ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,
BY THE
AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"
Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.

Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to

International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

ANNUAL EUROPEAN TOURS

Limited party, personally conducted by Prof. CAMILLE THURWANGER, now forming, 31 Pierce Bldg., Boston.

VACATION TRIP TO EUROPE.

ENGLAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, GERMANY, SWITZERLAND, and FRANCE. Carefully planned; fine accommodations; party limited; two conductors; sixteenth season. For programme, with full information, address Prof. H. B. RICHARDSON, Amherst, Mass.

EUROPE, HOLY LAND, ROUND THE WORLD.—Parties leave February 27 for Holy Land; May 8, June 5, 12, July 3, 7 for Europe. $260 and up. F. C. CLARK, 306 Washington St., Boston.

St. Denis Broadway & 11th Street, NEW YORK.

Opposite Grace Church.

EUROPEAN PLAN.

In a modest and unobtrusive way there are few better conducted hotels in the metropolis than the St. Denis.

The great popularity it has acquired can readily be traced to its unique location, its homelike atmosphere, the peculiar excellence of its cuisine, and its very moderate prices.

William Taylor & Son.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, FEB. 12.

Woburn again furnished an interesting leader in Mrs. M. C. Cotton, who read Isa. 35 and called attention to the encouragement which missionary work presents at the present time in spite of so much that is dark. The power of woman's missionary organizations, as they exist today, presents a marked contrast when compared with what women did in this direction thirty years ago. The converted Cuban, Diaz, and his story of his mother's conversion, when her appearance in his audience made him tremble with fear, and of his father's conversion after being induced to read the Scriptures, were cited by way of illustration.

The calendar topic, prayer for Life and Light, being suggested, the interests of this magazine and its importance as a means of information furnished a theme upon which many present had something to say. Mrs. Kellogg spoke of the treasures contained in her row of bound volumes, of the unity which appears in the presentation of the work of the three Woman's Boards, which, although separate organizations, work together.

Mrs. Judson Smith spoke of the importance of missionary magazine literature in planning programs for meetings, and the advantage of different individuals helping carry out these programs, rather than depending upon the addresses of returned missionaries, which must always be limited. Testimony was given, incidents related and suggestions made by Mrs. Haskell, Mrs. Billings, Mrs. Demain, Mrs. Greene, Mrs. Thompson and Miss Stanwood. Miss Child anticipated Saturday's topic in speaking of the Mission Dayspring, and Miss Lamson made it clear that more attention to the fact that it is the only foreign missionary periodical for children published by the denomination, the only one which tells children especially of the work of the American Board, would lead Sunday school superintendents and committees to consider whether it is not worth while, even at the cost of some effort, to circulate it among the children under their care. The hour proved that even magazines may be prayed for with unction.

'96 1897-1847 '48

'95 '94 '93 '92 '91 '90 '89 '88 '87 '86 '85 '84 '83 '82 '81 '80 '79 '78 '77 '76 '75

'49 '50 '51 '52 '53 '54 '55 '56 '57 '58 '59 '60 '61 '62 '63 '64 '65 '66 '67 '68 '69

This Year is the Golden Jubilee Anniversary of

Peter Henderson & Co

To commemorate our fiftieth business year, we have prepared the most beautiful and valuable SEED and PLANT CATALOGUE the gardening world has ever seen. Every copy costs us 25 cts. to produce, but in honor of this our "JUBILEE" year, we will send it this season FREE to any one on receipt of 10c. (in stamps) to cover postage and mailing. This "JUBILEE" CATALOGUE of "EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN" is a magnificent book of 170 pages, on which are displayed over 500 beautiful illustrations of Seeds and Plants, the work of our own artists. Also six full-size colored plates which in artistic beauty have probably never been equaled, certainly never surpassed.

A "JUBILEE SURPRISE SOUVENIR" will also be sent without charge to all applicants for the Catalogue who will state where they saw this advertisement.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.,
35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST., NEW YORK.

'74 '73 '72 '71 '70

THIS JUBILEE BORDER IS COPYRIGHTED.

Ladies' Waists

A special lot of Velveteen and Surah Silk Waists—handsome, chic and stylish—every one an exceptional value at the price named.

VELVETEEN WAISTS, of stylish cut and made in the best manner, special price................ 4.50

Fine quality CHANGEABLE SURAH SILK WAISTS, latest styles, nicely trimmed, a great value at... 4.50

BLACK SURAH SILK WAISTS, just received from one of the most famous manufacturers of stylish waists, a regular $7.00 value at only 4.98

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

Styles correct,
Prices right!

Only four words but what a world of meaning!

Macullar Parker Company,
Clothiers and Outfitters for Men, Youths and Boys.

400 Washington St., Boston.
166 Westminster Street, Providence.

FERRY'S SEEDS

There has never been a time when growers should guard against failure with more care. There has never been a time when Ferry's Seeds were more essential. They are always the best. For sale by leading dealers everywhere. Insist on having them.

FERRY'S SEED ANNUAL

is full of information for gardeners and planters. There will never be a better time than now to send for the 1897 edition. Free.

D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich.

SEEDS New Complete Catalogue of BEST SEEDS that Grow mailed FREE to any address. W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO. Philadelphia.

Hotels and Travel.

THE HYGEIA HOTEL,

Old Point Comfort, Va.,

Recently improved and beautified, is now the most complete, homelike and comfortable resort hotel between New York and Florida.

Spacious and delightfully situated rooms, elegant private suites. Finest plumbing and perfect drainage.

F. N. PIKE, Proprietor.
A. C. PIKE, Manager.

EUROPEAN TOURS.

15th Year. Terms reasonable. Parties limited. Conducted by
DR. & MRS. H. S. PAINE, Glens Falls, N. Y.

Tours to Europe & Palestine

Sailing June, July & Aug. Low prices; ranging from $250 to $650. Itineraries of Edwin Jones, 462 Putnam Av., Brooklyn, N. Y. Tour Round the World: $1,675.

REV. WILLIAM KINCAID, D. D.

Rev. Dr. William Kincaid, for the last nine years a secretary of the Congregational Home Missionary Society, died at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 12, aged 55 years.

Born in London, Eng., in 1841, he came to this country in early childhood, was graduated from Oberlin College in 1865, studied theology at Princeton and Oberlin, graduating from the latter seminary in 1868. With marked acceptance he filled pastorates in the Congregational churches of Rushville, N. Y., Leavenworth, Kan., Oberlin (Second), Ohio, and Oswego, N. Y. Thence he was called to represent the American Board as its district secretary in New York city.

From this position he was elected, in 1888, one of the secretaries of the American (now Congregational) Home Missionary Society. The duties of this office he fulfilled with untiring energy and self-denial, eminent sagacity and an unfaltering trust in the divine warrant for the society's mission and its abundant ultimate success. He was a man of faith, of prayer and of genuine consecration. His genial, cordial spirit made co-operation with him easy and pleasant. By the society's superintendents and faithful laborers in its widely-scattered fields his periodical visits were warmly welcomed for the light and strength and cheer gained from his counsels, sympathy and prayers. There are few helpers of good men and women whose decease will be mourned by a wider circle of our Lord's chosen ones. He has been a valuable member of the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church in Brooklyn. He leaves a widow, a son and a daughter.

But nowhere outside of his own home will he be more sadly missed than in the band of his coworkers in the Bible House, where he was most intimately known and sincerely loved. Those brethren met in informal conference on the day after his death and passed resolutions expressing their high esteem and love for him, and their profound sense of the loss they have suffered through his death.

THE offer of Mr. A. S. Hinds of Portland, Me., made in our issue of last week, to send a large size sample bottle of his excellent preparation, Hinds's Almond Cream, for six cents, is still open to our readers. The offer is a very liberal one and is made with only one condition—that mention be made of the paper where his advertisement was seen. Mr. Hinds takes this method of introducing his article into homes where it is not in constant use, feeling confident that a trial makes a customer.

GROWTH IN HYGIENE.—The world is arriving at a better understanding of the laws of hygiene with each succeeding year. One evidence of this is the present demand for twin beds. There can be little doubt that for the majority of persons separate beds are a distinct advantage. The Paine Furniture Co., who are the largest dealers in twin beds in this city, report an enormous increase in their sale during the last two of three years. They are just now in the very hight of fashion, and their popularity is increasing daily.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN	Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS	Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK	Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR	Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC	New York.
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN	Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER	St. Louis.
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY	Cleveland.
SALEM	Salem, Mass.
CORNELL	Buffalo.
KENTUCKY	Louisville.

IT is a significant fact that responsible dealers sell and responsible painters use Pure White Lead (see list of genuine brands) and Pure Linseed Oil. They know their business. Those who don't know, try to sell and use the "just-as-good mixtures," "so called White Lead," &c., &c.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

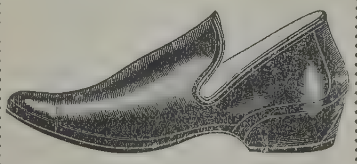
National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

GOOD HEALTH NEVER GOES ON WET FEET

Wet feet are always running for the doctor. Colds, pneumonia, consumption—they're the children of wet feet. The best life insurance is a pair of dry feet,—and the dryest feet are in

"CANDEE" RUBBERS

The Candee Co. are the oldest rubber makers in the world. They make every kind of rubber footwear. They were the first to make the high front rubber for driving storms.



"Candee" on a rubber means the best that can be made.

Any shoe store.

"1847" Rogers Bros.

Silver Plate that Wears

It's easy to tell the quality of silver plated ware after a few years use. But you can know the quality in advance if the trade-mark is '1847 Rogers Bros.' That mark guarantees long wear.

Meriden Britannia Company

MERIDEN, Conn.,
208 Fifth Ave., New York.

SOLD BY LEADING DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

ART EMBROIDERY

We send you an 18-inch center-piece stamped with violets on fine linen for twenty cents; also a six-inch delft design and a nine-inch rose design with a book on embroidering these flowers and our catalogue of stamped linens, all postpaid, 20c.

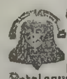
P. B. WORTHINGTON, 245 Canal St., N. Y. City.

CHURCH REMODELING.

THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect,

10 Park Square, Boston.

Mr. Silloway's long practice in building or remodeling over 400 church edifices enables him to save and utilize all the valuable parts, and for a comparatively small outlay produce a building preferable to a new one of much greater cost. He proposes to continue the work of remodeling as a specialty, and tenders his services to committees who would practice economy, and where the means are limited.



THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO
CINCINNATI, OHIO.
SOLE MAKERS OF THE "BLYMYER" BELLS
FOR CHURCH SCHOOL, FIRE ALARM &c.
Catalogue with 2500 testimonials. Prices and terms FREE

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS In the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E. W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. ☞Send f
Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro,

In advanced stages of Consumption, Scott's Emulsion soothes the cough, checks the night sweats and prevents extreme emaciation. In this way it prolongs life and makes more comfortable the last days. In every case of consumption—from its first appearance to its most advanced stages—no remedy promises a greater hope for recovery or brings comfort and relief equal to Scott's Emulsion. Book on the subject free for the asking.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, New York.

One-Half Off

the price on Buggies, Carriages and Harness. Highest quality. Fully guaranteed. Freight paid. Illus. Buyers' Guide mailed free. 8th year in business.

MIAMI MFG. CO., 104 West 4th Street. CINCINNATI, OHIO.

68 Pages.

Handbook for 1897

NOW READY.

Handbook for 1897 incorporates all the best features of the eight previous annual editions and adds several new and valuable pages.

So satisfactory was last year's plan of subdividing the weekly topics for the prayer meetings that it has been followed again.

The daily Bible readings will have a bearing upon the prayer meeting topics

Contents of 1897 Handbook in Part.

Daily Bible Readings.
Church Prayer Meeting Topics, with subdivisions.
Week of Prayer Topics.
Missionary Meeting Topics.
Passion-Tide Topics.
Sunday School Lessons.
Y. P. S. C. E. Prayer Meeting Topics.
Junior " " Prayer Meeting Topics.
Congregational Statistics.
Our Churches Abroad.
General Religious Statistics.
S. S. and Y. P. S. C. E. Statistics.
A Program of Travel to Pilgrim Shrines in England and Holland.
Our Benevolent Societies.
Congregational Colleges. Seminaries.
Calendar of Meetings for 1897
Creed of 1883.
A Popular Catechism of Congregationalism.
Popular Books on Congregationalism.

☞ 100 Copies, $1.25, postpaid. ☜

4 cents each; 50 copies, 75 cents; 25 copies, 50 cents

Order early and send cash with order.

The Handbook Series.

Quarterly, 15 cents per year; 4 cents per copy.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset St., Boston, Mass.

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

GRIFFITH—In Copenhagen, N. Y., Feb. 8, Rev. Joseph K. Griffith, aged 53 years, pastor there since 1890. He was born in Wales and graduated from the Congregational College in Montreal in 1873

LEONARD—In Quincy, N. J., Feb. 11, Rev. Stephen C. Leonard, aged 76 yrs. From 1867 to 1870 he was professor of ecclesiastical history at Oberlin Theological Seminary. He held pastorates in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York and Ohio.

MOORE—In Denver, Col., Jan. 26, T. Henry Moore, aged 71.

NORTHROP—In Ivoryton, Ct., Feb. 9, John E. Northrop, aged 60 yrs.

NOURSE—In Westboro, Feb. 2, Deacon B. Alden Nourse, aged 60 yrs., 6 mos., 14 dys.

WOODCOCK—In Ahtanum, Wn., Jan. 26, Deacon Fenn B. Woodcock. He was greatly interested in Christian education, contributing the ground for the church and parsonage, as well as for the district school. He was one of the original trustees and treasurer of Ahtanum Academy and a liberal contributor to its support.

MRS. ANNA E. R. DE WITT.

In Elyria, O., Jan. 23, Mrs. Anna Elizabeth Rich De Witt died in her eighty-sixth year. Mrs. De Witt was born in Warwick, Mass. She was proprietor of successful private schools in Boston and Bangor, Me., and later principal of young ladies' seminaries in Westfield, N. Y., and Racine, Wis. In 1853 she was married to Dr Elijah De Witt, and her home was in Elyria until her death. Mrs. De Witt was a woman of the finest qualities of mind and heart and of very strong and helpful influence in a wide circle of friends She was all her life an active worker in church and Sunday school, was one of the founders of the very efficient Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Elyria Congregational church, was its president for many years and then elected president emeritus for life.

MRS. ELIZA W. RICHARDSON

Died in Lawrence, Kan., Feb. 4, in the seventy-eighth year of her age. She was born in Sherborn, Mass., April 7, 1819, and married, May 30, 1845, to Rev. Albert M. Richardson of Franklin. For almost fifty-two years she has cheerfully and faithfully borne the burdens and shared the vicissitudes of a minister's wife. Nearly one-half of her married life has been spent in foreign and home missionary work, the former in Jamaica, West Indies, the latter in Kansas. She has been an earnest worker at home and abroad, in every branch of Christian activity. She was in the forefront of the battle when the Woman's Crusade was inaugurated in Kansas, and an active member of the W. C. T. U. when first organized.

While quiet and unassuming, she was true to her convictions and firm in maintaining them. As a wife and mother she was most devoted and self-sacrificing, always thinking and caring more for her family than for herself.

Her children rise up and call her blessed;
Her husband also praiseth her.

Two children survive her, Rev. Charles A. Richardson of Lawrence Kan., and Mrs. Minnie E. Lawrence of Chicago. Her end was peace. *

MRS. MARY ANN FARWELL.

Mrs. Mary Ann (Sexton) Farwell, daughter of Chester and Linda (Warriner) Sexton, widow of the late Rev. Asa Farwell, was born Aug. 17, 1818, in Wilbraham, Mass., and died Feb. 7, 1897, at the residence of her son, Charles G. Farwell, at Wollaston Heights, Mass. When she was ten years old her parents moved to Springfield, and she was educated in the public and private schools of that city and at Lawrenceville, N. J. Before her marriage she taught in Monson Academy, having charge of the young ladies' department, Mr. Charles L. Hammond at that time being principal of the academy and Mr. Richard Salter Storrs at the head of the English department. She next taught several years in the public schools of Springfield. Later on she was associated with Mr. Farwell as teacher of Abbot Academy, Andover, and was married to him Aug. 10, 1849. In 1853 her husband resigned the principalship of Abbot Academy and accepted a call to West Parish Congregational Church, Haverhill, where he was ordained. After a ministry here of thirteen years he became acting pastor of the Congregational church at Bentonsport, Io. As home missionaries they next removed to Ashland, Neb., where they founded a church. In 1877-8 her husband served Doane College, Crete, Neb., as professor, whence they returned to Ashland, residing there 1879-81. In 1881 they came East to live, and in 1888 her husband died at Ludlow, Vt. For the past few years Mrs. Farwell has been a member of the family of her son, at whose residence she died.

It is difficult to write a brief history of Mrs. Farwell, because her life was so very eventful: teacher, mistress of the manse in an Eastern city, her husband's devoted helpmeet in home mission work and finally the crowning years of the last decade of her life. The transition from the place which Mr. Farwell held as principal of Abbot Academy and his position later on as a home missionary is one of the experiences that the world cannot understand. But both lines of work demand consecrated talent, such as this saintly couple possessed. This short sketch of Mrs. Farwell is meant to be chiefly suggestive, and loving ones in every locality where she lived will rise up and call her blessed when they learn that she has gone home. A rare woman she was, with a well-rounded character. Her unbounded faith was not gained at the expense of Christian activity. Her intense practicality and her constant communion with Christ made her a Martha and a Mary combined.

Her going forth was so joyous as to forbid gloom and grief at her departure.

A gentle spirit, sweetly good,
  The pearl of precious womanhood;
Who heard the voice of duty clear,
  And found her mission soon and near.

She loved all nature, flowers fair,
  The warmth of sun, the kiss of air,
The birds that filled the sky with song,
  The stream that laughed its way along.
Her home to her was shrine and throne,
  But one love held her not alone;
She sought out poverty and grief,
  Who touched her robe and found relief.

And can you blame her that her gaze
  Is turned away from earthly ways,
When to her eyes God's light and love
  Have giv'n the view of things above?

SUFFERERS from coughs, sore throat, etc., should be constantly supplied with "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Avoid imitations.

ITCHING SKIN DISEASES

Instant Relief for torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly skin and scalp diseases with loss of hair, in a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, a single application of CUTICURA (ointment), and a full dose of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, greatest of blood purifiers and humor cures

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. POTTER D. AND C. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. ☞ "How to Cure Itching Skin Diseases," free.

RED ROUGH HANDS Healed, Softened, and Beautified by CUTICURA SOAP.

For Catarrh Hay-Fever and Cold in Head
ELY'S CREAM BALM CURES COLD IN HEAD CATARRH ROSE-COLD HAY-FEVER DEAFNESS HEADACHE
ELY BRO'S NEW YORK
TRADE MARK

ELY'S CREAM BALM is a positive cure. Apply into the nostrils. It is quickly absorbed. 50 cents at Druggists or by mail; samples 10c. by mail. ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren St., New York City

Here's Hope! BRIGHT'S DISEASE AND DIABETES CAN BE CURED.

SEND for History of Cures and all details. We invite inquiry as to what we have done and are doing. We guarantee no misrepresentation. Investigation will compel belief.

CONSULTATION FREE.

The Tompkins-Corbin Co.
1300 Broadway, New York City.
ESTABLISHED 1890.

J. W. CORBIN, Gen'l Manager. | A. W. TOMPKINS, M.D. Consulting Physician.

Grand National Prize of 16,600 francs at Paris

Quina-Laroche

Possesses in the highest degree the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark. Endorsed by the medical faculty as the best remedy for Fever and Ague, Malaria, Poorness of the Blood, General Debility and Wasting Diseases; Increases the Appetite, Strengthens the Nerves and builds up the entire system.

Paris: 22 Rue Drouot
New York: E. FOUGERA & CO.
26-30 N. William St.

The "Harris" Method of Giving

This little tract has been of immense service to the churches in suggesting systematic methods of giving. It was first published as an article in the Congregationalist, and attracted wide notice. Many large editions of the "True Method of Giving" in its present form have been sold. Price, 100 copies, $2.50; 35 copies, $1.00.

For sale at the office of The Congregationalist, Boston.

TEMPERANCE.

—— The local option law of Massachusetts has now been in force fifteen years. The city majority for license during that period has decreased from 21,211 to 8,879, and the town majority for no license has increased from 9,752 to 16,636

—— The following table shows the amount of malt liquor consumed in the leading cities of the United States during 1896, and the increase or decrease compared with 1895:

	1896, bbls.	Increase.
Albany, N. Y.	369,937	65,116
Baltimore, Md.	663,090	127,516
Boston	1,224,524	132,145
Brooklyn	1,926,858	112,305
Chicago	3,198,222	549,887
Cincinnati	1,217,343	*7,029
Milwaukee	2,222,818	185,794
New Orleans	246,202	*3,362
New York	4,918,808	227,344
Philadelphia	1,996,743	177,630
St. Louis	2,070,331	157,462
Newark, N. J	1,227,506	101,187

*Decrease.

—— In a paper read at the last meeting of the British Society for the Study of Inebriety the author, a physician of much experience in British penal and reformatory work, cited approvingly Seguin's statement, "The question of the radical sequestration of inveterate drinkers is forced upon us. . . . Social, anthropological and humanitarian considerations plead for the suppression of a freedom which is abused," and for himself declared, "None but the most superficial observer could deny that the habitual inebriate was one whose loss of self-respect and impaired moral sense had lessened his responsibility to the law, necessitating the regimen of an asylum, not the discipline of a jail."

—— The new Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Temple, is a total abstainer, and his influence will no doubt be felt for total abstinence in the Episcopal Church. Bishop Potter says:

> We will rejoice that at the head of the English Church is a man who, for the sake of his brother, is willing to stand as a total abstainer. There are many others. Dr. Lightfoot was one; when asked why he never used any stimulant he would simply say, "I can do my work better without it." It is all a question of conviction. If sure that by abstaining any man can bring the power of cultivation and education to bear upon a people who are suffering from indulgence in strong drink, it is simply a case of noblesse oblige thus to translate the gospel to the world. It is the same principle that lies at the basis of arbitration, the principle of human brotherhood, which finds its inspiration in the life of Jesus Christ.

◆

WEEKLY REGISTER.

Calls.

ANDERSON, Emil A., Scandinavian Ch., Winona, Minn., to Swedish Ch., Lake City.

BANKS, Edgar J., to N. Java and Johnsonburg, N. Y. Accepts.

BUSSEY, Robt. D., Jr., Chicago, Sem., accepts call to Grand Island, N. Y.

DE PEU, John, Norfolk, Ct., to North Ch., Bridgeport.

DIBBLE, Wm. L., Second Ch., Winona, Minn., to Plymouth Ch., Guthrie, Okl. Accepts, and has begun work.

DOLE, Chas. J., to remain another year at Cleburne, Tex. Declines.

EDMANDS, T. Merrill, First Ch., Brainerd, Minn., to Mankato.

HALL, Albert E., to remain another year at Canterbury, N H.

HAMPTON, Wm. H., Moravia, N.Y., to First Ch., Smyrna. Declines.

HYATT, W. H. (Presb.. formerly of English Cong. Ch.), to Tabernacle Ch., Coaldale, Pa. Accepts, and has begun work.

HYDE, Albert M., Greenville, Mich., to First Ch., Kalamazoo.

KING, Jas. P., Tyndall and Bon Homme, S. D., to Kearney, Neb.

LADD, Henry M., Euclid Ave. Ch., Cleveland, O., to be general manager of the Ohio Anti-Saloon League. Accepts.

LLOYD, Geo., late of Huntington, W. Va., to Henry, Ill., where he has been supplying. Accepts.

MARGETTS, Henry, late of Sturgeon Bay, Wis., to Tallman, N. Y.

NEWLANDS, Robt. W., late of Port Byron, Ill., to Mattoon. Accepts.

SELL, Henry T., Chicago, to First Ch., Tabor, Io.

SHAW, Gilbert A., late of Deer River and Denmark, N. Y., to Stanwich, Ct. Accepts.

WALKER, John J., late asst. pastor Central Ch., Providence, R. I., accepts call to Yarmouth, Mass.

WATRY, Francis, to permanent pastorate at Clayton, Cal., where he has supplied two years. Accepts.

WEGENER, C. J A., Austin, Ill., to Swedish Ch., Pittsburg, Pa. Accepts.

Ordinations and Installations.

CARROLL, W. Irving, i. Grand Ave. Ch., Dallas, Tex., Feb. 2. Sermon. Rev. Luther Rees; other parts, Rev. Messrs. C. J. Dole, J H. Dobbs, L. B. Parker.

MOORLAND, Jesse E., i. Mt. Zion Ch., Cleveland, O., Feb. 9. Sermon, Rev. H. M. Ladd, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. E. M. May, C. H. Small, J. G. Fraser, D. D.; J. W. Malcolm, A. B. Cristy.

RAMSDELL, Frank E., i. Pilgrm Ch., Cambridgeport, Mass., Feb 10. Addresses, Rev. Messrs. S. L. Loomis, C. E. Jefferson, A. E. Dunning, D.D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. I. W. Sneath, Chas. Olmstead, Drs. R. C. Houghton. J. W. Churchill, Alex. Blackburn.

RIVOIRE. Enrico, o. Central Ch., Boston, Feb. 9. Parts were taken by Dr. E. L. Clark, Rev. Messrs. Morton Dexter and Joshua Coit.

SANTIKIAN, H. K., o. Lowell, Mass., Feb. 2. Parts were taken by Prof. E. C. Smyth, D. D., Rev. Messrs. M. H. Hitchcock and W. E. Wolcott. Mr. Santikian, an Armenian, preaches to his countrymen in Lowell, Lawrence and Nashua, N. H.

YORK. Fred. E., rec. p. South Ch., Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 2. Parts were taken by Rev. Drs. Jas. Gallup, W. H. Warren, D. F. Bradley, Rev. Messrs. R. M. Higgins and J. T. Husted.

Resignations.

ATWOOD, Lewis P., Lowell, Vt.

COLE, Thos. W., Sterling, Kan.

DIFFENBACHER, Benj. F., Ulysses, Neb.

EDDY, Wm. D., Rensselaer Falls, N.Y., to take effect Apr. 1.

ESTABROOK, Frank P., Biddeford, Me., withdraws resignation.

GRIFFITH, W. Robinson, Welsh Ch., Denver, Col., to take effect April 25.

IRONS, Benj , Belle Fourche, S. D., to take effect in April.

MILLARD, Watson B., Plymouth Ch., St. Paul, Minn., to take effect May 1.

PINKERTON, Adam, First Ch., Arena, Wis., to take effect April 1.

Dismissions.

BARD, Geo. I., Walpole, N. H., Feb. 2.

BROCK, Geo. A., not dismissed from Saxonville, Mass.

CHANDLER, Jos. H., Rhinelander, Wis., Feb. 1.

Churches Organized.

DALLAS, Tex., Grand Avenue, rec. 2 Feb., 81 members.

GAZA, Io., rec. 5 Feb., 30 members

HOPE, Io., rec. 2 Feb., 37 members.

POLLER, Wis., Covenant, — Feb., 14 members.

Miscellaneous.

DUNN, Jas. B., formerly acting pastor of Third Ch., Chelsea, Mass., and afterward prominently connected with the A. P. A., has become secretary of the National Temperance Society in New York city—an office which he held many years ago.

HICKMOTT, John V., of Mendon, Mich., has been made an honorary member of the A. B. C. F. M., through the gifts of Mrs. H. V. Quick of Angola, Ind.

KERN, Andrew, Lansing, Io., recently found at the parsonage door 30 loads of wood ready for the stove, the gift of an unknown friend.

LEWIS, Thos. S, recently of Webster, N. H., began work at Green's Landing, Me., Feb. 7.

MOON, Hiram E., Portland, Ind., lies critically ill with pneumonia. Supt. E. D. Curtis preached for him Feb. 7.

SANFORD, John I., closed his work at Mayflower Ch., New Duluth, Minn., Jan. 31.

SARGENT, Chas F., of Denmark, Me., has received news of the death of his father and mother at their home in Thomasville, Ga.

WILCOX, Chas. E., Northfield, Minn., has begun work at Biwabik.

◆

In days when men make sport of the sweetest certainties, the sweet certainty of the Christian character abides, and the other certainties are involved and guaranteed by that. For nothing is more sure than that the Christian character is the result of Christianity.—Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll.

THE EFFECT MAGICAL.—The most distressing and obstinate cough can be permanently cured by Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam. Its effect on the throat and lungs is magical, and the thousands of testimonials from grateful friends would convince the most skeptical. Sold by all druggists.

Peter Möller,

who in 1853 revolutionized the whole system of Cod Liver Oil manufacture by the introduction of the "steam process," has now introduced a new method which is as superior to the steam process as that was to the old and crude methods. By the new process the Oil is kept free from impurities, and does not come in contact with the atmosphere at any time during the manufacture. Moller's is not sold in bulk, but is bottled when manufactured. The Oil is free from disagreeable taste or odor, and causes no eructation.

Cod Liver Oil

In flat oval bottles only, dated. See that our name appears on bottle as agents. Explanatory pamphlets mailed free.

Schieffelin & Co., New York.

Quick as Thought

No time lost with
WHITMAN'S
INSTANTANEOUS
CHOCOLATE.

Taste, flavor and quality the best. Put up in pound and half-pound tins.

Stephen F. Whitman & Son,
Sole Mfrs. Philadelphia.

IS YOUR BLOOD POOR?

Your Nerves Weak, Your System Out of Order?

Do You Feel Weak, Nervous and Sick All Over?

Take Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy.

It Will Make You Strong, Vigorous and Well.

Dr. Greene's Nervura is the Best Spring Remedy.

Now is the time to take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy as a spring medicine. Now is the best time of year to cleanse and purify your blood, to enrich that vital fluid and make the rich, red blood of perfect health. Your relaxed nerves also need strengthening, vitalizing and invigorating, and your stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels require toning up and regulating. This is why you need a spring medicine. This is why you should take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, the best of all spring medicines, the only remedy which works upon both the blood and nerves, which, while it purifies and builds up the blood, at the same time gives strength and vigor to the nerves and creates a healthy action of the stomach, liver and kidneys. Take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy now, for now is when you need it as a spring medicine, and now is when it will do you the greatest good. Dr. Greene's Cathartic Pills are the best pills for biliousness and constipation. Dr. Greene, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful physician in effecting cures, can be consulted free, in person or by letter.

KNICKERBOCKER.

No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.

The Congregationalist
. . SERVICES . .

THIRTY-THREE SERVICES READY.

100 Copies, 60 Cents, postpaid.

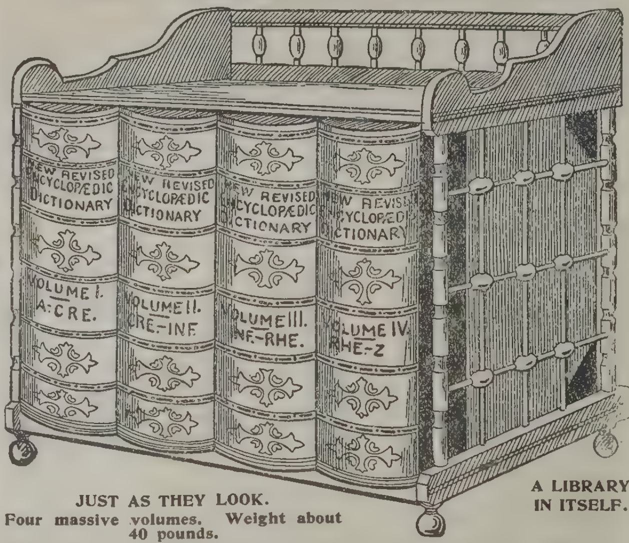
THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset Street, Boston.

"FOOL'S HASTE IS NAE SPEED." DON'T HURRY THE WORK UNLESS YOU USE . . . . . . SAPOLIO

FINAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

NOTICE TO READERS. To make sure of one of these special sets the $1 should accompany your letter. Remember, you have one whole week for careful examination, with privilege of returning if not entirely satisfactory and your money will be promptly refunded.

AT ONCE A DICTIONARY AND AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA.



NEW REVISED ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY
VOLUME I. A-CRE.
NEW REVISED ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY
VOLUME II. CRE-INF
NEW REVISED ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY
VOLUME III. INF-RHE.
NEW REVISED ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY
VOLUME IV. RHE-Z

JUST AS THEY LOOK.
Four massive volumes. Weight about 40 pounds.

A LIBRARY IN ITSELF.

50,000 Encyclopædic Topics. 250,000 words defined. About 5,000 Royal Quarto Pages. Cost $750,000 to produce.

Very few of these special sets now remain, and fair warning is given that these will soon be claimed. Every reader now knows that the work is not only an Encyclopædia, treating over 50,000 topics, but the most exhaustive Dictionary published, defining over 250,000 words, which is 25,000 more than any other. They also know that they are securing the work for less than one-third the regular price, and as a consequence orders are being received daily from all sections of the country.

In making an inventory at the close of our recent Introductory Distribution, we find in stock a few sets of The Encyclopædic Dictionary (in cloth and half-Russia bindings only) of which the sides of some of the volumes are slightly rubbed—not enough to impair their real value or appearance in your library, but sufficient to prevent their shipment as perfect stock at our regular prices of $42 to $70 a set. There being only a limited number of these sets we shall not go to the trouble of rebinding them, but have decided to let them go on easy payments of $1 down and $1 per month until paid for—less than one-third the regular price. By prompt action now, therefore, a number of ambitious and deserving readers of The Congregationalist who desire an up-to-date reference library may now secure these special sets at about cost of making.

WHILE THEY LAST THEY ARE YOURS FOR A LIFETIME THIS EASY WAY: $1.00 DOWN SECURES IMMEDIATE POSSESSION of the entire set of four volumes. BALANCE PAYABLE - - - $1 MONTHLY.

Readers must not think that these sets are in any way incomplete or out-of-date. On the contrary, they are revised to June, 1896, and are from the regular stock, the prices of sets ranging from $42.00 to $70.00, according to binding.

WE GUARANTEE that these sets, except for slight rubs or abrasions on the sides of some of the volumes, are precisely the same as those sold at full prices; yet we cannot offer them as perfect stock, and our loss shall be your gain. This is positively the Greatest Bargain ever offered in a strictly high-class standard publication.

WHAT THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY IS.

It contains over 250,000 defined words—nearly twice as many as the largest "unabridged"—and is now accepted as an unquestioned authority wherever the English language is spoken. It is one of the best of all encyclopædias, treating over 50,000 encyclopædic subjects—the Britannica has about 27,000. Just think of it! The whole range of human knowledge condensed for your instant use by such world famous scientists as Huxley, Proctor, and a hundred other educators of hardly less renown. It easily takes the place of any half-dozen other reference books that could be named.

It is an ornament to any library; beautifully printed, substantially bound, profusely illustrated, costing more than $750,000 to produce, the regular price being from $42 to $70 a set.

WHAT THE ABLEST CRITICS SAY.

"Not only are more words defined in this New Dictionary than in any other, but its definitions are more exhaustive."—Chicago Tribune.

"A standard reference book, treating every branch of knowledge and research in a masterly manner."—Philadelphia Press.

"It forms in itself a library for the busy man of affairs, the mechanic ambitious to advance himself in his line, or the student or apprentice just making a beginning."—Scientific American.

"At the very head of all contemporary publications of its kind and firmly established as one of the few great reference books of the world."—Christian Herald, N. Y.

REMEMBER These sets are as good for all practical purposes and look as well in your book-case as those for which we are getting regular prices. We guarantee that the interiors and backs are not injured, and the bindings of our standard grade. The most serious injury to any set is no greater than might occur in a few days' use in your own home or office. As absolute proof of this statement, you may retain the set for careful examination for one whole week. If not entirely satisfactory you may return the volumes and money will be promptly and cheerfully refunded. THIS IS POSITIVELY THE CHANCE OF A LIFETIME.

HOW TO SECURE THIS GREAT BARGAIN. Bring or send $1.00 to the New England Newspaper Syndicate, 364 Washington Street, Boston, and entire set of four superb volumes, bound in cloth, will be forwarded. The balance is to be paid at rate of $1 00 monthly for 1 year. The first payment for either binding is only $1.00. In sending your first payment please designate the style of binding you desire, and indicate how you wish the volumes sent, as the charges for delivery must be paid by the purchaser. Remittances received after this special lot is exhausted will be immediately returned. The limited stock at our disposal cannot last long. To protect ourselves against bookdealers, etc., we must decline to send more than 2 sets to any one party, and in every case we must require the full name and address of each person receiving a set. We have only two styles of binding in this lot—cloth and half-Russia—about an equal quantity of each. Order at once, to make sure. The absolute confidence of the Syndicate that the work will be thoroughly appreciated, highly valued and cheerfully paid for is clearly shown by sending such a valuable set of books, the subscription price of which is from $42 to 70, on an advance payment of only $1. We refer to any newspaper in New York, Boston, Chicago or San Francisco. The Half-Russia Binding will be supplied for 25 cents additional per month.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSPAPER SYNDICATE, 364 Washington Street, Boston.

Volume LXXXII Number 8

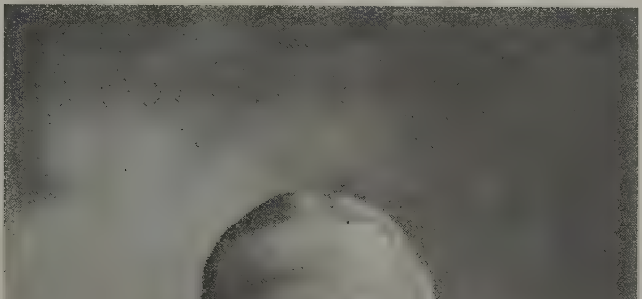
THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 25 February 1897



REV. JOHN E. TUTTLE, D. D.
The new pastor of Union Church, Worcester.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN AND COMPANY'S

NEW BOOKS.

The Cambridge Lowell.

Complete Poetical Works of JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. Cambridge Edition. Uniform with the Cambridge Editions of Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes and Browning. From new plates, large type, on opaque paper and attractively bound. With a Biographical Sketch, Notes, Indexes, a fine new portrait and an engraved title-page with a vignette of Lowell's home, Elmwood. Large crown 8vo, gilt top, $2 00; half calf, gilt top, $3 50; tree calf, or full levant, $5 50.

The first complete edition of Lowell's poems in a single volume. Both in the character of the poetry and the mechanical execution of the book it is of remarkable excellence.

The Liquor Problem

In its Legislative Aspect. Embodying the results of investigations made by Dr. FREDERIC H. WINES and JOHN KOREN, Esq., under the direction of Pres. Charles W. Eliot, Pres. Seth Low and James C. Carter, Esq., a sub-committee of the Committee of Fifty to investigate the Drink Problem. With maps. 12mo, $1.25.

A work of great importance, giving the results of a very careful investigation of the working of prohibitory and license laws of various kinds in Maine, Iowa, South Carolina, Massachusetts, Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania and Missouri.

The Chief End of Man.

By GEORGE S. MERRIAM, author of "The Story of William and Lucy Smith," etc. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1 50.

This book is an attempt to show the nature and method of the spiritual life as it manifests itself in new clearness and beauty after the old foundations of dogma and miracle have passed away. It is in part a rapid survey of "our spiritual ancestry," in the classic, Jewish and Christian lines; it includes an exposition of "the ideal of today," and it makes familiar and homely application of the new yet old truths as "daily bread."

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

About Your Sunday School Library

Do you realize the importance of keeping it supplied with the best books? An impressive story which teaches needed lessons may influence your scholars more even than their teaching in the class.

We aim to publish and supply books of this kind. Send for our APPROVED LIST of the best books. We send books to you for examination and selection and furnish them at wholesale prices.

If you must have inexpensive books, we have good ones, not the latest publications, at only a small fraction of catalogue price. Easy terms of payment if desired. May we send you our catalogue and library order blank?

Our Clearance Catalogue is now ready and will be sent to any address on application. We offer a variety of Bibles and some excellent books, part of them a trifle shelfworn, at absurdly low prices that must close them out at an early date. We need the room for new books which are constantly being received.

Congregational S. S. & Publishing Society,
BOSTON. CHICAGO.
New York. Minneapolis. San Francisco.

Within two weeks of issue

"IN EXCELSIS"

THE CENTURY CO'S

NEW HYMN AND TUNE BOOK

was adopted by

The New "Old South" of Boston, 1000 copies.

The Union Church, Worcester, 500 copies.

The Second St. Pres. Church, Troy, 250 copies.

May we send you a sample copy at the quantity price, $1.35, postpaid? Money refunded if you do not keep the book,—we want only to have it seen.

Returnable sample copies free to pastors and music committees.

THE CENTURY CO.,
Union Square, New York.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Boarders. A minister's widow living in Wellesley would like to take one or two ladies, or two schoolgirls into her family as boarders. Pleasant house, good location and excellent schools near by. Good references can be given. Address Mrs C. W. Park, Wellesley, Mass.

Housekeeper. A Protestant American woman desires a position as housekeeper, mother's assistant, or companion. Is trustworthy and capable. Good references. Address "W," Box 275, South Framingham, Mass.

A lady, having facilities therefor, would receive into her family for a pleasant home, and teaching, one or two children. Parents making plans for the summer, or for another year, are invited to correspond with Miss G., care Congregationalist.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.

4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-paged Agency Manual free. EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

MAINE, BANGOR.

BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Choice between two courses of study, Classical and English Biblical, in Junior year; one course in Middle and Senior years. Optionals in Hebrew and Cognates, and in Greek. Entrance examination on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 9 A. M. Apply to Prof. C. A. Beckwith, or Prof. G. W. Gilmore, Bangor, Me.

TWO STENOGRAPHERS

And Typewriters wanted immediately (young men preferred) at the office of the VERMONT FARM MACHINE CO., BELLOWS FALLS, VT.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E. W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America

---

Palestine in Pictures.

396 Plates (8 in. x 10 in. each).

(25 Parts, Colored Map with each Part.)

This series of views by an American artist is the best ever published, and is indispensable to every Bible student. Two years ago we filled orders for 50,000. WE RECOMMEND THEM WITHOUT RESERVE.

Price, postpaid, $2.50.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset St., Boston, Mass.

EPD&Co.

THE MORE ABUNDANT LIFE.

Forty-six Readings, of from 4 to 6 pages each, selected from unpublished manuscripts of the RT. REV. PHILLIPS BROOKS, D. D., giving help in cultivating the religious life.

16mo, 250 pages, cloth, $1 25.

"The words of Phillips Brooks are so precious that Lenten Readings, selected from his unpublished manuscripts, will be greeted with delight by the many who have been strengthened and helped by his wonderful personality. These readings have been well named THE MORE ABUNDANT LIFE, for no man believed more in receiving and in giving of an abounding life than did Bishop Brooks. He says, 'It is deficient vitality which makes the mischief and trouble of the world.' And again, 'Life is not life, freedom is not freedom, unless the live thing is set in the ground of its true nourishment, and keeps open the connection with the eternal source of its strength. Man is not living except as he lives in God.' Such thoughts are good food for Lenten meditation."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"Among the books of religious meditation which the Lenten season always brings to light none will be more widely read or more generally helpful this year than the series of Lenten readings selected from the unpublished manuscripts of Bishop Brooks and published under the characteristic title, 'THE MORE ABUNDANT LIFE.' . . . It is not only a book for the Lenten season, but for all seasons"—The Outlook.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price,

E. P. DUTTON & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
31 West Twenty-third Street, New York.

UP TO DATE

Barnes' Popular History of the United States.

Edition for 1897 now ready.

1 volume. 800 pages, Cloth. 8vo, Illustrated, Price $3.50

(Extract from a letter to the publishers by HON. MARK HANNA.)

Cleveland, O., Feb. 4, 1897.

"I desire to assure you of my high appreciation . . . of the just chronicle of the recent campaign. A cursory examination satisfies me that your history is a very valuable and interesting one."

M. A. HANNA.

For sale by booksellers, or sent postpaid on receipt of the price by the publishers,

A. S. BARNES & CO., 156 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

Fillmores' Easter Music for Choirs and Sunday-schools now ready. Send for descriptive list. FILLMORE BROS., 119 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, or 40 Bible House, New York.

Sacred Songs No. 1.

By Sankey, McGranahan and Stebbins.

IS THE BEST ONE YET!

Messrs. MOODY, SANKEY, CHAPMAN, MUNHALL, DIXON, and others use it.

$25 per 100; add 5c. a copy if ordered by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
Chicago House, 215 Wabash Ave. 76 E. 9th St., N. Y.

BARGAIN IN BRAINS!

"HURT" BOOKS AT LITTLE PRICES

POSITIVELY LIMITED TO THE SMALL STOCK NOW ON HAND.

On December 24, 1896, prices of the only genuine, complete and thoroughly revised edition of The Encyclopædic Dictionary were restored to regular rates, viz.: Cloth Style, $42.00 a set; Half Russia, $52.50; Full Sheep, $60.00; Full Morocco, $70.00. These are now the regular prices for the only authentic and complete edition, published solely by ourselves.

In making our annual inventory we have found on hand a few sets that are very slightly damaged on the covers only—a rub here, a scratch there—hardly worth mentioning, but just enough to prevent their shipment at full prices. We guarantee that the interiors are perfect. For all practical purposes these sets are precisely the same as new; but they are now offered to the earliest applicants at and on the easiest possible terms of payment. This special limited offer deserves the immediate attention of every reader who, although needing a modern reference work of the highest class, has failed to take advantage of our recent Introductory Offer, or has been beguiled into buying an inferior imitation work of comparatively little value.

LESS THAN HALF PRICE, WHILE THEY LAST

THE ENCYCLOPEDIC DICTIONARY VOLUME I. A-CRE
THE ENCYCLOPEDIC DICTIONARY VOLUME II. CRE-INF
THE ENCYCLOPEDIC DICTIONARY VOLUME III. INF-RHE
THE ENCYCLOPEDIC DICTIONARY VOLUME IV. RHE-Z

JUST AS THEY LOOK

Four massive volumes, each 9 in. wide. 11½ in. long, 3 in. thick, containing 5,359 pages, 16,000 columns of clear type matter, 3,000 illustrations; 250,000 words defined, 50.000 encyclopædic topics. Weight, about 40 lbs.

THIS HANDSOME BOOKCASE FREE OF CHARGE.

MAKE NO MISTAKE

These special sets are made from our very latest edition of last November (1896), and contain all the new words, phrases and definitions of 1896, the most recent inventions, discoveries and explorations, and scores of handsome new engravings in monotone, besides the

16 FULL PAGES OF BRILLIANT CHROMATIC PLATES IN 17 COLORS including the following: Flags of all Nations (115 designs); Races of Mankind (33 subjects); Marine Life (37 strange creatures of the deep sea); Postage Stamps of Foreign Nations (representing over 100 countries); Birds of Beauty (12 designs); Precious Gems as they are Found (16 designs); Ceramic and Decorative Art (17 subjects), and many others, aggregating in all 489 designs in 17 beautiful colors. Never again will there be an opportunity to secure this only genuine and completely revised edition of our

PERFECT HOME EDUCATOR

at the bare cost of paper, printing and binding. We cannot tell how long this wonderful opportunity will remain open. Perhaps a month, possibly only a few days. Our last year's "hurt" sets disappeared within a week. Order today and make sure. Remember a first payment of only

$1.00 SECURES THE ENTIRE SET

(IF IN TIME)

while the small stock of special sets remain, but forever thereafter it will cost from $42.00 to $70.00 to possess this matchless home library of general reference.

YOU KNOW THESE GENTLEMEN—READ!

RT. REV. OZI W. WHITAKER, Bishop of Pennsylvania: "Your dictionary is what its title indicates—an encyclopædia and a dictionary in one. Its definitions and summaries are sufficiently complete. I know of no other work which furnishes so much information within so limited a space."

REV. DR. CYRUS D. FOSS, Bishop of M. E. Church: "It does wonderfully well the double duty of a dictionary and an encyclopædia. I could wish I might have had, from my boyhood, such a valuable thesaurus of immense knowledge, made instantly accessible. Parents could do their bright boys and girls no greater service than by putting this treasure before them and teaching them to use it."

COST $750,000—YOURS TODAY AT HALF-PRICE AND ON EASY TERMS.

IT IS THE ONLY REFERENCE WORK ON EARTH that contains satisfactory and up-to-date encyclopædic treatment of such important topics of today as the following: Battleship, Bimetallism, Money, Wages, Germ Theory, Arctic Explorations, Tariff, Christian Endeavor, Appendicitis, Shadow Photography, Electrocution, X-ray, Vitascope, Steam Navigation, and hundreds of others.

IT IS THE LATEST AND BEST DICTIONARY of our language. Each legitimate English word is exhaustively treated as to its origin, history, development, spelling, pronunciation and various meanings.

IT IS A CONCISE ENCYCLOPÆDIA of anatomy, botany, chemistry, zoölogy, geology, art, music, philosophy, mathematics, mechanics, theology, Biblical research, etc. 50,000 separate encyclopædic subjects, including the latest inventions and discoveries, tersely treated by educators of vast renown.

IT IS A SUPERB LIBRARY BOOK, printed on high grade white paper, from plates never before on press, durably bound, and containing the most superb illustrations, in 17 colors and in monotone, ever made for any reference work.

IT IS BETTER THAN ALL OTHER DICTIONARIES, because it is the latest and most complete, containing nearly twice as many words as are in the largest "unabridged," and treating 20,000 more encyclopædic subjects than are covered by other cyclopædias costing from $50 to $200.

Book of 100 Specimen Pages and Illustrations Mailed Free on Receipt of 2c. Stamp.

HOW TO ORDER. Send $1.00 and the four handsome volumes will be forwarded. Subsequent payments are made as follows: Cloth binding, $1 50 per month for one year; Half-Russia binding, $2 00 per month; and Full Sheep binding, $2.50 per month. First payment in any case is only One Dollar. To cash buyers we allow a discount of 10 per cent. and furnish the bookcase free of charge; otherwise the bookcase is $1.50, which must be paid in advance. This allowance represents cost of keeping monthly payment accounts. We recommend Half-Russia binding as the most serviceable. When ordering be sure to mention style binding wanted. All transportation charges must be paid by purchasers. We refer to any Commercial Agency, Newspaper, or Bank in Philadelphia. AGENTS WANTED. (Mention this paper.) Books Guaranteed as Represented or Money Refunded if Returned in Ten Days.

CAUTION! Beware of imitators who have copied our methods of advertising, even to the wording, and are offering various ancient publications, slightly revamped and under new titles, as new and original works. The genuine Encyclopædic Dictionary is complete in four volumes, with 5,359 pages. We can be responsible for no orders except those sent directly to us.

SYNDICATE PUBLISHING CO., 234 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

MARY LYON.

Extracts from her writings and sayings as collected in the Mary Lyon Year Book reveal her thought, purpose, strength, devotion and enthusiasm in a most striking manner. Every college girl will be glad of it and will get inspiration and profit from it $1.25.

Unique buckram binding, gilt top, deckeled edges.

The Pilgrim Press,
Beacon St., Boston. 175 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

CHURCH ORGANS

Hook & Hastings Co.
Boston. Mass.

If you are Planning to BUILD

Our Books of Designs and Plans Will Help You.

They will awaken ideas and furnish much helpful information.

Our New (1897) Book "Artistic Home Designs"

Shows many BEAUTIFUL HOMES built from our plans; also Designs for laying out Grounds. Sent for 10 CTS. stamps or silver if you mention price of house w'nt'd.
GEO. F. BARBER & CO., Architects, Knoxville, Tenn.

Nelson's New Series of Teachers' Bibles

NEW ILLUSTRATIONS NEW CONCORDANCE
NEW HELPS NEW MAPS

These Teachers' Bibles contain new Bible Helps, written by Leading Scholars in America and Great Britain, entitled the ILLUSTRATED BIBLE TREASURY.

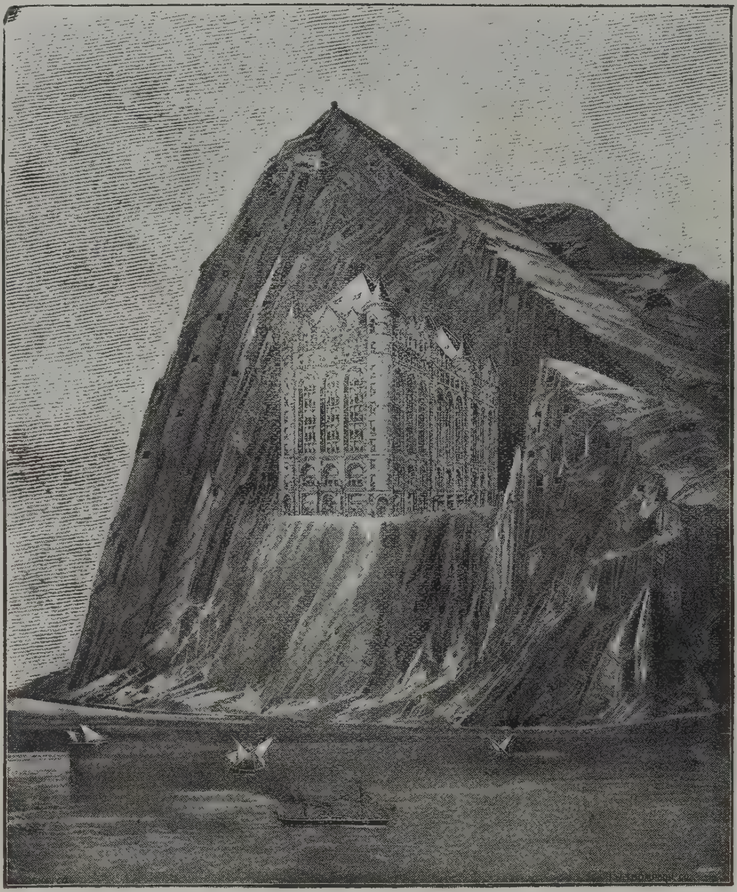
Illustrations of Ancient Monuments, Scenes in Bible Lands, Animals, Plants, Antiquities, Coins, etc., to the number of 350 are distributed through the text of the Helps.

"THE ILLUSTRATED BIBLE TREASURY. There is no book like this. Its aim is to place the student in the age and atmosphere when each book of the Bible was written, to enable the reader to study the book amid its surroundings and to become permeated with its life. The writers who have combined to make the volume are among the most celebrated Bible students, scholars, Egyptologists and divines of Great Britain and America. . . . The book contains helps to the study of the Old and New Testaments, with an analysis of the books and articles on the Canon, Monumental Testimony, etc., a series of articles on History, Chronology, Geography and Bible Science; notes on Bible antiquities, Jewish worship and sects—a carefully compiled concordance with a Bible atlas. More than three hundred and fifty illustrations accompany the text, and all of them are of value to the students of the Bible. They are not pictures so much as guides and expositors in the Holy Word. The teacher who has this treasury will be able to bring forth things new and old for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness, to answer objections, refute arguments, and uphold the truth of God. Such a book demands attentive study and rewards it. It is a result of ripe learning consecrated to the best of uses and will be of great service to those who read and teach the word of God. This treasury will be bound with several new editions of the Bible, which will make it of special value and convenience."—New York Observer, December 31, 1896.

For Sale by all Booksellers. Write for a Complete List, giving Sizes of Type, Prices, etc.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, Publishers,
33 EAST 17TH STREET (UNION SQUARE) - - - NEW YORK.

THE PRUDENTIAL



...HAS...

Assets,
$19,541,827
Income,
$14,158,445
Surplus,
$4,034,116
Insurance in force,
$320,453,483

Protects over half a million homes through nearly 2,500,000 policies.

The youngest of the great leaders of the Life Insurance Companies of the world, THE PRUDENTIAL, furnishes Life Insurance for the whole family. Premiums payable weekly, quarterly, half-yearly and yearly.

Five Years Steady Sweep Onward

	Dec. 31-1891.	Dec. 31—1896.	Increase in 5 years.
Assets	$6,889,674.32	$19,541,827.95	$12,652,153.63
Surplus	1,449,057.06	4,034,116.93	2,585,059.87
Income	6,703,631.63	14,158,445.53	7,454,813.90
Insurance in force	157,560,342.00	320,453,483.00	162,893,141.00
Interest Earnings	290,348.97	825,801.85	535,452.88

$1,260 of Assets for Every $1,000 of Liabilities

The New Industrial (weekly) premium policy of The Prudential is profit sharing. Write

The Prudential Insurance Company of America

Home Office: Newark, N. J. JOHN F. DRYDEN, President.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 25 February 1897 Numbei 8

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 257
The Parish System 258
Let Us Understand Each Other 258
Mr. Meyer's American Visit 259
Prayer for the Incoming Administration 259
Current History 259
In Brief 261

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

New York 262
CURRENT THOUGHT 265

CONTRIBUTIONS:

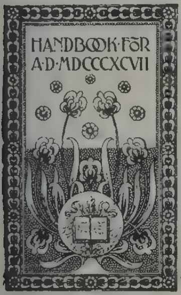
Dolly's Millions. Harriet Prescott Spofford 263

THE HOME:

Worth While—a selected poem 268
Paragraph 268
Love or Duty 268
Confidence and Candor in Home Relationships. Mrs. M. E. Sangster 268
Saturday Night—a selected poem 268
Food During School and College Life. III. Mary E. Green, M. D. 269
About People 269
A Rational Fourth of July—a selection 269
Closet and Altar 269
Tangles 270
One Cause of Ill Temper—a selection 270
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 271
Corner Scrap-Book 271
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for March 7 272
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for March 7-13 285
LITERATURE 273
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 278
New Beginnings in Worcester, Mass. 279
Weekly Register 286

MISCELLANEOUS:

The Congress of Mothers 266
In and About Chicago. Franklin 267
Half a Century of Y. M. C. A. Work 277
The Moody Meetings Drawing to an End 277
The Moody Meetings from the Press Table 277
The Work in Newton 277
The Placing of the Armenian Refugees 277
Phillips Brooks's Broadening Influence 278
Union Theater Services 278
Notices 278
Business Outlook 282
Marriages and Deaths 282
Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 285
Young Ladies' Missionary Rally 286
Dr. Gordon on Phillips Brooks 287
Our Armenian Orphans' Fund 287



THE HANDBOOK FOR 1897 CONTAINS CHURCH PRAYER MEETING TOPICS, WITH SUB-DIVISIONS, Y. P. S. C. E. PRAYER MEETING TOPICS, JUNIOR C. E. TOPICS, S. S. LESSONS, AND A GREAT VARIETY OF OTHER IMPORTANT MATTER. 100 COPIES, $1.25 POSTPAID.

✠ TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS. ✠
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

FEW of our younger circle of ministers are better or more favorably known than Rev. J. E. Tuttle, D. D., whose picture appears on our cover. His has been an uncommonly fruitful ministerial career, and the elements of leadership which he possesses have already made him widely influential in the affairs of the denomination. A New Englander by birth and training, he is well adapted to this section of the country, where in several pastorates he has already rooted himself strongly in the hearts of many friends. The three years which he has just spent at Amherst College have matured his powers and equipped him for all the better service in the regular pastorate. The Union Church, Worcester, already one of the strongest and most prosperous in the denomination, is to be congratulated on its present outlook, both from the point of view of its material equipment and its spiritual leader. On page 279 we review briefly Dr. Tuttle's life and service in the denomination and the auspicious beginning of his new pastorate.

Every returning holiday raises the question as to whether the public is putting it to the best uses. We are glad to note an awakening of sentiment in the direction of a better and wiser observance of these important days in the year. The Connecticut Valley Congregational Club devoted a recent meeting to the subject. Rev. C. H. Hamlin and other speakers brought out the point that holidays like Washington's Birthday and Fourth of July were originally instituted not to be seasons of mirth and relaxation merely, but in order that the people, and particularly the rising generation, might take to heart the lessons suggested by the lives and sacrifices of our forefathers. Our holidays should not be allowed to degenerate. There is room, to be sure, for sport and social festivities and a reasonable amount of noise, but in many ways these days ought to make plain and exalt the sober and strenuous duties of patriotic citizens.

The bill before the Massachusetts Legislature providing for a weekly rest day for working men is receiving strong support, not only from those who have spoken in its behalf in the hearing before the committee, but from incidental testimony of men in a position to know the needs of working men and the advantages of such a law. The chairman of the Board of Railroad Commissioners, Hon. John E. Sanford, speaking of the decision of the board some years ago prohibiting the running of Sunday trains to Newport, said: "Many a gray-haired conductor and many young men came to me and expressed their gratification at the decision which would prevent their being obliged to work on Sunday. These men have as much right to their Sunday as any others, and on many a Monday morning I have seen train men who were unfit for duty because the day before they had been working on excursion trains, work that is generally the hardest of any day in the week." The safety of the public, as well as the welfare of employés, requires that those who have the lives and property of men in their keeping shall be in condition to exercise due care over them.

Those who advocate the taxation of churches and colleges have before them an illustration of its working in the State of California. During the last twenty years the policy has been followed there of taxing all benevolent enterprises. The effect has been to repress charity and to turn many gifts to institutions outside of the State. It has not only laid burdens on private educational enterprises so far as to kill some and cripple others, but it has prejudiced the people against benevolence and against the instincts of refinement and culture. Libraries, art galleries, museums, all the enterprises which generous men and women delight to provide for appreciative citizens, have little encouragement in California. The result of this policy as related to churches is thus told by a writer in the San Francisco Call:

> Again and again have the churches been driven from their location by the tax collector. They have been compelled to move away from the centers of population and relocate upon obscure streets. There is no State in the Union with such poor churches. The average tax upon each church is more than $10 per month. Nearly $3,000,000 is spent annually for the moral and religious training of the citizens of this State, and that, too, by less than ten per cent. of the population. The State will not allow her church corporations to engage in any business for gain, and yet they are taxed precisely the same as the factory in the same block. How can such a law be just?

Education is necessary to citizenship, but without moral safeguards it may make citizens more dangerous. The recent annual report of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children says that child criminals are increasing in New York and that they are largely of ignorant, foreign born parentage. But they have learned to read, and they eagerly seize the penny newspapers, whose pages are filled with accounts of crime and immorality and pictures of criminals. These are held up before the reader as heroes, and their exploits are described in the most attractive style to make them readable. President Gerry regards the cheap newspaper as far more damaging in its influence than the dime novel. He says: "Criminal news costs almost nothing to purchase. It is the enemy of the human race, and especially of the poor and ignorant." And the most vicious editions of these papers, with the worst and most abundant pictorial illustrations, are those issued for Sunday reading.

The topic of the leading editorial in the Christian Register last week was What Is Orthodoxy? and the pith of it was that the question is unanswerable. Our Unitarian contemporary might have answered it easily enough. It might have said, "Orthodoxy is the thing we are always attacking, which we are always surprised that we have not vanquished." But then it might truthfully have added, "Perhaps we have failed because, as we confess, we have never yet known what orthodoxy is." But Dr. Lyman Abbott seems to know exactly what orthodoxy is. In his leading editorial in the Outlook of Feb. 13 he defines it as a belief in sin and salvation. But these two terms he proceeds so to define that he makes, as he repeatedly affirms, only a shadowy line between orthodoxy and heterodoxy. Then he proceeds to point out that those who would treat men of his views as unorthodox "mistake their self-will for the law of God, their creed for the Christian faith." If we had not the fullest confidence in Dr. Abbott's sincerity, we should think that of late he has been saying a good many things on purpose to stir up a chorus of dissent from every quarter of the religious horizon. At any rate he has done this, and has brought himself before the public afresh as neither orthodox nor heterodox but, as Dr. Buckley says, a paradox.

THE PARISH SYSTEM.

We have received several inquiries recently as to the wisdom of incorporating churches and abolishing the societies, the legal bodies which hold the property of the churches and administer their temporal affairs. There are two sides to this question. Old institutions commonly have some ground of reason for their existence. Even if we think they ought to be abolished it is best to try to save all that we can of the good that is in them.

Judge Simeon Baldwin, in an address lately given at New Haven, has made a strong defense of the parish system, or of that arrangement by which we have an ecclesiastical society placed alongside a Congregational church. He approves of it because we have it, a growth out of our own soil. He thinks it better in the nature of the case that there should be two bodies —the church, charged with the cares of the spiritual life and of active benevolence, and the society, intrusted with distinctively business interests. He holds that the society, by the nature of its membership and by its legal requirements for the warning of meetings and for due notice of all proposed action, is likely to manage these business affairs most wisely. He thinks that even in the choice of a pastor the veto power of the society is often used to good purpose. He compares the working of these two bodies to that of the two houses of a legislature, whose concurrent action is more safe than the action of either alone would be. For this reason, in part, he deprecates the proposal to incorporate the church and put all things into its hands. And he also thinks that the church would lose in this way a needful ally, whose place could not be filled.

Such considerations have weight, but they are not conclusive. Things may have their use for a time, and then give way to better things. The ecclesiastical society, as we now have it, is very unlike what went before it and much better. The stages of this progress in the past are suggestive and promising as to coming things. The giving up of compulsory taxation for the support of public worship, looked upon once by many with great misgivings, has wrought nothing but good. The state was not an indispensable ally but a source of weakness to the church. It may be so with the society.

Safeguards against hasty or inconsiderate action of the church in business affairs, or any other, can easily be provided and ought to be in the rules of the church itself. Due notice should be required, both of meetings and of all matters to be acted upon. If it is judged best that in certain cases nothing shall be done until after the report of a committee to which the subject shall have been referred, provision may be made for such a committee. In the same manner provision may be made for ascertaining the preferences of all regular occupants of pews with respect to the settlement or dismissal of a pastor, or upon any other subject of great importance. Permanent committees composed of business men, or any others representing the congregation, may be appointed. The church may engage, if that seems best, to accord a certain weight to the views of those thus represented, as by providing that contrary action shall not be taken except by a two-thirds vote of its own members, or by some other similar limitation upon itself. The co-operation of those not members of the church may thus be secured and deference may be shown to their judgment, without putting a power of final control in vital matters wholly outside the church itself.

For whether it is regarded theoretically or practically it is doubtful if it can ever be most safe for the church to be subject altogether in anything to such external control. The working together of the church and the society is wholly unlike that of our two legislative bodies. These two branches of the legislature represent one and the same constituency. They exist because one constituency judges that its interests are best secured by requiring this duplicate and concurrent action of its own representatives. But the church and the society have not of necessity, nor commonly, the same constituency. They are not representatives acting in behalf of the same constituency, or of any constituency at all. They are two original, distinct bodies undertaking to act together for themselves. If differences arise between them there is no one power behind them both, as the State is behind its two legislative branches, to put its hand upon them and to command order out of their confusions. The way is open for disagreements, for which no sufficient remedy is provided.

Such disagreements do in fact arise. It is true that the church and society often go on well together, and particularly when the leading members of one body are members also of the other. It may be, too, that in cases of disagreement the church may sometimes be in the wrong and the society in the right. But the opposite is far more common. In the great matter of the pastoral office, especially, there is a constant tendency for the society to take the lead, both in engaging and dismissing the minister. The society pays him. In his absence for vacation, or for any cause, the committee of the society commonly provides some one to take his place. When he resigns his office the same committee naturally moves to find his successor.

There are churches in New England which have had nothing whatever to do with the choice of their pastors for long periods of years. Setting aside extreme cases, this tendency to leadership on the part of the society in procuring candidates and engaging pastors appears on every hand. It is most unfortunate in its results. The society thinks it may properly choose, or hire, the man it has to pay. Business considerations incline to go foremost. The hired man must be smart and earn his money. The spiritual force of his life and teaching is less thought of.

In all this there is a reversal, or a practical perversion, of the theory that we should have two bodies—one to manage spiritual, the other business, interests. We find the business body controlling or powerfully influencing the direction of the most vital spiritual concerns. But if there is to be defective management anywhere it is surely better that the church should fail somewhat in the ordering of business affairs left in its charge, rather than that the society should have the handling of spiritual interests and should fail to do it fitly.

This going on together of the two bodies, with the weight always likely to be attached to the business side, involves a strengthening continually of the less spiritual and more worldly influences or elements within the church. It often weakens the powers of faith and Christian courage so that the church goes limping, leaning upon its crutch, when it ought to stand and walk in a strength of its own. The risk of dissension is also greatly increased. And it must not be forgotten that the condition of every church attached as an adjunct to a parish is legally a precarious one, and that when a division arises it is without the power to defend even its own life.

On the whole, we believe that the parish system ought to be abolished. We think, too, that this is the prevailing opinion with those who know most of what is going on among our churches. But the doing away of it must be a matter of patience and practical good sense. It is not a thing to be pressed hotly. The safest and most effective forms of separate church equipment will be found out with time, and with experiments upon them. And with some steady effort to keep the subject before the public mind the old system will continue to be quietly slipping away until it is gone.

But about one thing there should not be much delay where the church can act unitedly. Leaving the society to stand and to hold its property if it wishes to, every church ought still to be incorporated. Then it has a continuous public life of its own. It can keep its name, its records, its identity. It can hold properties, too, of any sort which may pass into its possession. And it will be in readiness to take entire charge of its own financial interests whenever they may come into its keeping.

LET US UNDERSTAND EACH OTHER.

The "Christian" Church makes the Bible its only creed. In view of some advances toward union between this body and Congregationalists, the organ of the Christians, the Herald of Gospel Liberty, is dismayed to find in our Handbook for 1897 the Creed of 1883. Our contemporary is sure that this creed is not imposed arbitrarily on Congregational churches, but says "it must have been adopted by them, since it is dated 1883." No, brother; the date simply tells when it was published by the committee which prepared it. It was never adopted by the National Council, but only by such local churches as have chosen it.

Our contemporary says that in order that the two denominations may come together, the one which it represents must lay aside the name of Christian, the Bible, fellowship for all Christians and Christian character, which is the test of such fellowship. Well, hardly. Congregationalists would not be likely to invite into closer relations with themselves any denomination that had laid aside these things, which are the basis of Christian fellowship. Our "Christian" brethren do not fully understand us, if this editorial of Dr. Summerbell represents their view of us. Perhaps we do not understand them. Certainly union would only promote divisions until we arrive at a better mutual understanding. Dr. Gladden, in a frank and cordial letter which has called forth the Herald's editorial, sums up the entire matter in saying: "All I want is that we should know each other better and help each other all we can. I hope that this will not be thought a dangerous thing to do."

MR. MEYER'S AMERICAN VISIT.

Mr. Moody fulfilled his promise to Rev. F. B. Meyer when he persuaded him to leave his London pastorate for a fortnight's work in America. The promise was that Mr. Meyer should have special audiences composed entirely of ministers and aggregating 1,500. Fully that number were brought together in the conferences at Boston, New York and Philadelphia. But, desirous as Mr. Meyer was of helping his fellow-pastors, he probably would not have laid down in midwinter his own ministerial duties at Christ Church unless he had felt that in the providence of God he could be made widely useful to American Christians generally. He cannot have been disappointed in either of the two errands that brought him to this country. As respect enthusiasm and effectiveness his meetings in New York and Philadelphia were but repetitions of his three days' campaign in Boston. The culmination of interest, however, came in Philadelphia, and he himself declares that the meeting held there last week just before he sailed for England was the most wonderful which he ever attended. He has participated in many noteworthy gatherings at Keswick, Northfield and elsewhere, and the Philadelphia one must have been phenomenal to deserve such a verdict from him.

Mr. Meyer's visit has left a far-reaching train of wholesome influences. From Christians of all shades of belief and varying temperaments we have heard only words of praise and gratitude. Even those to whom his teachings have hitherto seemed too abstract and mystical have confessed that they have grasped his central thought clearly and to their own advantage. Mr. Meyer avoids utterances that wound and antagonize. He leaves one side questions of Biblical criticism, and one could hardly guess from his addresses his own personal attitude concerning questions now under debate. He holds up ideals that command the approval of all who consider Christian living a serious business. If there be in his teaching anything that fosters self-righteousness and censoriousness of others it has not obtruded itself. Only good can come to the church if his thought of the enduement of the Holy Spirit for the ends of service is kept constantly in view. Already many persons have been made familiar with this thought through such books as Christian Living and the Present Tenses of the Blessed Life. This higher Christian living which he advocates in his writings and his sermons is, as we understand it, not an esoteric affair differentiating those who are already in the kingdom, but a process in which all Christians share according to their desires, their receptivity and their consecration.

We should like in this connection to call attention to the fact that Mr. Meyer's evangelistic labors were all the more successful because he is a pastor with large and important parochial cares. What these are may, to some extent, be inferred from his little book, The Bells of Is. Churches are ready to listen to a man who is carrying out in a definite field the ideas and methods which he urges upon Christians generally. In the background of Mr. Meyer's earnest words of exhortation was his big London parish, where for at least nine months of the year he copes with the perplexing problems that confront many ministers. To such evangelistic labor as this no exception can be taken. Dr. Edward Judson's recent work in Newton, described on page 277, has, in our judgment, been helped forward because he too, like Mr. Meyer, is the pastor of a large and engrossing city church. We notice also that Dr. Nehemiah Boynton is conducting special meetings in Detroit outside his own church. A good deal of exchanging for evangelistic ends is going on this winter between pastors and we are glad to observe the fact. Those churches whose pastors are especially well equipped for such general work ought to be willing to spare them for it now and then. Only good can result to all concerned.

PRAYER FOR THE INCOMING ADMINISTRATION.

It is a source of profound gratification that President-elect McKinley is a Christian believer. It is to be hoped that the members of his cabinet will prove to be in substantial sympathy with him in recognizing their dependence upon the Almighty. It is certain that he appreciates clearly the tremendous difficulties which he cannot avoid encountering during the coming four years, and that he will turn often to the great Ruler of all nations for help. He cannot fail to be grateful for the sympathy and prayers of all Christian citizens, whatever their religious affiliations may be.

There should be more frequent prayer for the President and for all our rulers in our homes and our closets. Whatever those who love God may disagree about, surely we all are at one in the earnest desire to see the principles of righteousness prevail throughout our nation, to have our rulers controlled by divine influences instead of personal ambitions or merely partisan motives. To pray earnestly to God in their behalf is at once a high privilege and a solemn duty. And no time is more appropriate for such petitions—although they should be offered day by day continually—than just now, when the new and untried administration is entering upon its active duties. With heartfelt gratitude for the past, let us pray that the future may surpass it, and that the President and his advisers may be given wisdom to rule the nation so wisely and so conscientiously that peace and prosperity may exist, that the dangerous problems of our day may be solved rightly and permanently, and that our national character and life may be purified and ennobled.

Let nobody suppose that such prayer may prove futile. There could be no graver error. It is in the power of the praying people of this country to help every righteous purpose and endeavor of the new administration so that their attainment shall become less difficult and often effectual. Let no one be disturbed by talk about the rigidity of natural law and the uselessness of prayer. God has declared that prayer avails and every true Christian knows it by his own experience. Let our prayers for our new rulers therefore be earnest, confident and frequent, and let no one doubt that they will be answered.

CURRENT HISTORY.

The Arbitration Treaty.

After a somewhat prolonged and thorough debate the treaty was informally set aside on Friday and further discussion of it deferred until after March 4. Senators Sherman, Hoar, Lodge, Frye, Platt and Lindsay urged its ratification at this session. But Senators Teller of Colorado and Daniel of Virginia were so obstructive and so determined to defeat its final consideration at this session that it became apparent to all that there was nothing else to do, the rules of the Senate permitting an obstructive minority to defeat the will of the people far more effectually than the will of any European ministry can dispute the mandate of its legislators. The debate thus far justifies us in again asserting that the opposition to the treaty is not based on genuine disbelief in the principle of arbitration, or distrust of the provisions of the treaty as drafted by Secretary Olney, but rather is due to contemptible disregard of national repute by men intent on satisfying personal grudges. There is scarcely a free silver senator who is not an enemy of the treaty.

Our British friends will understand the situation, we are sure. We beg them to judge us by John Fiske's notable article in the March Atlantic rather than by the vain imaginings of Senator Morgan or the editorials of the New York Sun. Professor Fiske, eminent as a historian and philosopher, enthusiastically hails the treaty as an event whose consequences, even if the treaty is not ratified now, will be "enduring and profound," calculated to aid in pacifying Europe, and a long step toward "a sublime result of 'peace on earth and good will to men,'" which "it is our solemn duty to welcome and encourage by every means within our power."

It is interesting to note that Professor Fiske, in this article, distinctly answers the query with which we closed our editorial on George Washington last week. His reply to Washington's exhortation for a permanent, national policy of exclusion and isolation is: Times have changed and are changing. Railways, telegraphs and international industries are making every part of the world the neighbor of every other part, and a policy of isolation will not always be possible, nor will it be desirable.

The Investigation of Trusts.

Notwithstanding there are few who have confidence in the purity of motive prompting the investigation of trusts now proceeding before a committee of the legislature of New York, some facts have been made public which will not be forgotten. Chief among these will be the pronounced unwillingness of the trust officials to produce documents and books giving information respecting capitalization and profits; their confessions that the trusts, so long as they last, practically determine the price of given products to all consumers in this country; that jobbers and middlemen are helpless in face of the authority of the combination, and that the lowered price to the consumer is not at all commensurate with the lessened expenditure caused by the closing of unnecessary plants and the reduced wage lists; that stock watering on a gigantic scale has prevailed, and dividends have been paid on thousands of dollars of stock representing no actual investment. The most important member of Mr. McKinley's Cabinet, next to the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury, will be the Attorney-General, whose duty it will be to grapple with these gigantic organizations. If present Federal legislation is defective it must be remedied, and Congressman Gillette of this State is to be credited with a bill already before Congress, which, if passed, will, it is thought, close those loopholes through which the Federal courts hitherto have decreed that the trusts might escape. May Mr. McKinley's nominee for this important place be a man of character, courage and ability. He will be called upon to grapple with the most astute lawyers of the nation, who have no scruple in taking fees from any client. If it be said that legislation is useless to effect the interplay of natural laws, that trusts are disintegrating now faster than they are forming, it may be answered that since legislation and judicial decrees have done so much to create and foster artificial and unmoral bodies called corporations, it is not illogical to assume that what society has sanctioned it can condemn, what it has fostered it can destroy or curb if it desires to. For better, for worse, the era of investigation has begun, and to try and dam the current of popular curiosity is senseless and useless.

Cause and Effect.

The stringency of the times and changes in administration are bringing to the surface facts respecting personal and official dishonesty which otherwise might never have come to light. Agents for foreign investors, bank officials and State officials are found to have been speculating with funds that were not theirs. Thus Turkey's former consul in Boston, a Roman Catholic Armenian, is now in jail in New York city, awaiting extradition and trial for perversion of funds belonging to French investors in American property. Thus the treasurer of the ancient town of Plymouth, a Congregationalist, is declared to be guilty of stealing town funds, but is not under arrest owing to a surprising and lamentable disposition among the townspeople to condone his offense because he is highly connected. Thus also Nebraska finds a shortage of $537,762 in its treasury, and a State auditor whose accounts are $27,000 short.

Now these events are typical and not at all surprising in view of the ethical standards which dominate in too many circles of society, and they will multiply unless the malefactors are brought up with a round turn. Every agent of a trust fund who speculates with that which is not his plays with fire, and whether successful or not plays false with his clients and society. Restitution of funds cannot atone for theft. If political influence can save the guilty Republican officials in Nebraska then Populism will flourish on the ruins of Republicanism, and ought to.

The truth of the matter is the country is full of men crazed with the hope of getting something for nothing, and indifferent to the ways and means of attaining their ends. Instead of meeting with reprobation, swift and certain justice if they steal, they too often meet with soft phrases and every facility to escape through the meshes of laws seemingly woven so as to protect the criminal.

Extravagance and Waste.

Akin to deliberate theft from society, and in many cases the cause of it, is the extravagance of the individual or the public official. Despite the fact that Speaker Reed of the House of Representatives stands exercising his autocratic power in behalf of economy in expenditure, though by so doing he is losing popularity among congressmen, the present Congress bids fair to appropriate more than $1,000,000,000, a good portion of it for objects that could not stand the scrutiny of debate, and most of it for men who are now demanding pay for that which they originally volunteered to do for nothing. The treasury of the State of Wisconsin is practically empty and Illinois is not much better off, owing to the lavish expenditure of its past legislatures. It is so easy to introduce measures that call for expenditure. It is not so easy to resist pressure from constituents or local interests, nor to devise revenue-producing laws that bear equitably upon all, and that cannot be evaded.

Fortunately there are some signs of a reaction. Not a few of the recently inaugurated governors served notice that they would rigorously veto all unnecessary laws, and several legislatures that have always felt it proper to send State militia to Washington for the presidential inauguration and at the expense of the taxpayers have refused to do it this year on the plea of economy. Best of all signs, the Republicans in the House of Representatives last week called a halt on pensioning the children of veterans of the Revolution and War of 1812, realizing, doubtless, what the precedent would mean to children of veterans of the Civil War. There also are some signs of retrenchment in the administration of municipal affairs, but only where the idea of non-partisan administration is dominant. The spoilsman cares nothing for the taxpayer.

Loans Without Usury.

The second annual report of the Provident Loan Society of New York city, just issued, says that it has been demonstrated "by actual experiment on a scale sufficiently large, and continued over a period sufficiently long to warrant final conclusions, that aid can be given on a strictly business basis by loans of money at one per cent. a month, or one-third of the legal charge made by pawnbrokers on loans for a short time."

The character of those who have found this society to be "a friend in need and a friend indeed" is worth noting. Says the report:

> Few of those who obtained loans are upon the records of any charitable organization or are applicants for charitable relief. They are men and women accustomed to rely upon their own resources, who apply to the society to tide over periods of sickness or lack of work.

The competition of the society already has compelled some extortionate pawnbrokers to reduce their rates. In every city where usurers bleed the poor and unfortunate this society should find imitators. As a purely business enterprise, it guarantees all stockholders six per cent. and its aid to the unfortunate yet self respecting man or woman is beyond description.

A Body-blow at Vicious Journalism.

The United States Supreme Court last week rendered an important verdict which will go far toward purifying society. Joseph Dunlop, editor of the Chicago Despatch, in February, 1896, was found guilty of publishing obscene matter and sending it through the mails. He was sentenced to Joliet Prison for two years, and ordered to pay a fine of $2,000. He appealed to the Supreme Court, and that august body unanimously sustains the verdict of the lower court. The vice-president of the Western branch of the Society for the Suppression of Vice says of this verdict:

> It is a victory for public purity and for the post office department. It is considered, I am told, the greatest victory the department has ever won. This establishes the fact that the United States mails cannot be made an organ for questionable resorts by carrying their advertisements through the country. Citizens everywhere now have protection which they did not know of before.

There are newspapers in nearly all our large cities which publish exactly such advertisements as the Despatch did. They are nothing more nor less than brokers for harlots and panderers to vice.

Greece, Crete and the Powers.

There have been several clashes between the Cretan Christians and Mussulmans during the past week. Greece has continued to pour men and supplies into Crete, though some ships bearing supplies have been stopped by the allied fleet. The Grecian attitude remaining as belligerent as ever, on Sunday, after due warning had been given, the allied fleet shelled an insurgent camp near Canea, but desisted as soon as the Greek flag was hauled down. Thus we have the significant spectacle of the great Christian Powers joining in an attempt to suppress an uprising of Cretan Christians against Moslem rule. If it is only a nominal act, calculated to maintain the Powers' record for consistency and dignity, it may be tolerated by public opinion in Europe, providing Cretan autonomy or Grecian authority over Crete follows speedily. But if it proves to be a genuine, permanent concert of Powers to suppress the legitimate aspirations of a Christian people, then we are confident Lord Salisbury, M. Honataux and Signor Rudini will find that the British, French and Italian peoples will not tolerate any such effort to aid Turkey or Russia.

Lord Salisbury's prompt rejection of Emperor William's suggestion that the allied fleet blockade the Piræus shows that he knows there is a limit to his coercive power, and that much can be gained for Great Britain by letting events take their course. Macedonia is ready to break forth in revolt in a moment. The Balkan states are armed and restive. Russia's Black Sea fleet awaits orders, and her troops on the Turkish border are mobilized. Turkey's fleet is worthless and counts for naught, but her army is still formidable and is being marshaled near the Thessalian border. William of Germany is indignant at Grecian indifference to his opinion, is mad at Lord Salisbury's curt rejection of Germany's plan for settling the controversy, and courts war. Out from the confused reports of facts and the differing theories respecting the motives of the actors in the play two or three clear facts emerge—the splendid Grecian courage and enthusiasm, popular sympathy with Crete, which may set at naught all the craven devices of diplomats, and the certainty that before the end is reached there will be a new realignment of forces in the East. Turkey already shows by her quiescence that she feels the grip of a new power. Russia's hand is being forced. France is in a quandary. Germany, more reactionary than ever, finds that her opinions carry little weight. Great Britain and Italy, joining navies, still can dominate in the Mediterranean, and Lord Salisbury, if sufficiently shrewd and alert, stands to win more than any other diplomat. As for Americans, they have naught but sympathy for Greece and Crete, as is demonstrated by the Senate's resolutions of sympathy, passed without a dissenting vote. They rejoice to see the love of liberty asserting itself so generally in Europe, confident that in the end it will triumph over tyranny. As for war, it may be needed to purge Europe of evils which flourish now, stifle personal happiness and undermine true national welfare.

The latest news from Europe indicates a clear purpose of the Powers to give Cretan autonomy, but an equally definite purpose to discipline Greece for her contumacy.

IN BRIEF.

Archbishop Kain of St. Louis is using his authority to drive Protestant organists and singers out of choirs in Catholic churches in his diocese. He is consistent, to say nothing more.

Washington already has had a mass meeting to voice the popular will respecting the arbitration treaty. Baltimore is planning to have one. Are New York, Chicago and Boston less interested in the cause?

The wastefulness of the rich has received considerable attention of late, and the Bradley-Martin ball has furnished a fruitful illustration. But the wastefulness of the poor, if it were chronicled, would in its way be quite as distressing.

Our Western contemporaries are fast outstripping us. The Western Christian Advocate heads its obituary department with appropriate poetry and the general title, The Rainbow Round the Throne; and the Interior has taken to publishing portraits of the worthy but obscure dead.

Lent in the Episcopal Church calendar begins March 3. But so far as any special gifts of the Holy Spirit are concerned, they are ready whenever we are ready to receive them. The Bible speaks of "a set time" to favor Zion. But it nowhere indicates that the church is to set the time. "Now is the acceptable time."

The A. M. A. has accepted the invitation of the Minneapolis churches to hold its annual meeting there next October. This is the farthest point West it will have reached in its yearly migration. To keep the balance the American Board will convene in the East, at New Haven, while the Home Missionary Society in June will seek its customary haunts in leafy Saratoga.

An educated millionaire was executed last week in Missouri for murder, and the fact that his wealth could not save him has brought out many expressions of astonishment. But men of education and wealth have greater responsibilities than the poor and ignorant, and when such men commit crimes they have less claims for mercy.

The recent rationalistic statements by Professor Howison of the University of California and President Jordan of Leland Stanford, Jr., University are giving much concern to the evangelical Christians of California, and they are stating in unequivocal terms their dissatisfaction with a situation which finds them lacking in strong denominational colleges.

In connection with the observance next Sunday of Mary Lyon Day it will be of interest to know that a booklet compiled from Mary Lyon's letters and entitled The Inception of Mt. Holyoke College Described by the Founder is soon to appear. We of a later generation will be surprised to discover how differently the subject of the education of women was viewed only about half a century ago, from the way in which it is regarded today. We are glad to hear of many prospective observances of this important day.

As we intimated was to be expected, the ministers of the Manhattan Association in Brooklyn are taking up in their pulpits the subject of the divine origin of the Bible and the trustworthiness of its record. Dr. Behrends preached an eloquent sermon, Feb. 14, on Christ and the Old Testament, from John 5: 39. It was an able reply to many assumptions of the higher criticism, laying emphasis on the fact that Christ used the Old Testament as his Bible, and that it was then substantially the same as we now have it.

That outrageous New York law which makes the Church Building Society a governing body, with power to declare Congregational churches extinct and to take possession of their property, has come under the ecclesiastical eye of the Churchman. After scrutinizing the law from a safe distance, it comes to the conclusion that the law is the result of a yearning of Congregationalists for some kind of episcopate. Our contemporary seldom admits risibles into its editorial columns, and is perhaps unconscious that it has done so in this instance.

Fashionable and busy Washington laid aside to a large extent, last week, its social functions and its usual occupations to consider the interests of childhood. Our correspondent, whose account of this Mothers' Congress appears on another page, says, in her private letter, "It is a tremendous affair, far exceeding the thought of the originators." What a revelation this congress is of the patience and devotion that are surrounding children today. This cannot be a very bad world when the welfare of the little ones is considered worthy of the thought of philosophers as well as the chief concern of ordinary men and women.

We have received several letters of late, of from fifteen to forty pages each, closely written. Apparently some of our readers, as an evidence of their appreciation of the reading matter in The Congregationalist, seek to repay us in kind, and generously. We are compelled by limitations of time to take these letters, as we do the copies of a contemporary which publishes occasional symposiums with excellent but very long articles, and file them away to be read on our first leisure day. These letters and articles have been accumulating for years. But the short letters, of course, we read as soon as they are received.

Ask any candid Unitarian the simple question, Is truth the source of life? and he will reply, "Yes." Then face him with such a confession as this, from Rev. J. C. Kimball, writing in a recent Christian Register, and what can he say?

> If Unitarianism has the larger truth, its very truthfulness must prompt it to confess that orthodoxy has the larger life. There is nothing which our denomination wants for its success more than this life. Unitarian to the core as I now am in my faith, there is nothing in this world for which I thank God more, as I look back, than that I was brought up in an orthodox home and church and Sunday school.

If Unitarianism has the larger truth, why has not it the larger life also?

The editor of the Christian Advocate, Dr. J. M. Buckley, said last week in a Methodist Ministers' Meeting that he didn't believe in the verbal infallibility of the English translation of the Bible. At once the daily papers pointed him out by large headlines as a heretic, a defender of Dr Lyman Abbott and a disbeliever in the Bible. This is a sad indication that editors of the secular press are not familiar with the Bible, nor with the Christian Advocate and the Outlook. But some of them made amends by printing in advance Dr. Buckley's editorial of this week declaring that Dr. Abbott is exerting a more dangerous influence in evangelical churches than any man since the early days of the Unitarian secession in New England.

Last Sunday a Boston suburban church, the Central, Chelsea, had the rare pleasure of hearing one of Chicago's foremost preachers, Rev. Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, whose visits to the East are all too infrequent. This exchange with the Chelsea pastor, Rev. C. E. Jefferson, who had been called to Chicago to lecture before the Union League Club, gave our Western brother a view of a live Eastern church, whose magnificent morning congregation was further enlarged in the evening by an invitation from the Central Church to its neighbor, the First, to worship with it. Dr. Gunsaulus must have returned with the conviction that small cities need only live men to build up strong churches and great congregations.

The standing committee of the Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts has a serious matter to consider. The Church, the new Broad Church paper published in Boston, whose editors are Rev. Messrs. Suter of Winchester and Addison of Fitchburg, lately said editorially that the pastoral letter sent out with the signatures of several of the bishops of the Episcopal Church in 1894 was "forged." In a later number of the paper it was explained that what was meant was that the letter did not carry the canonical obligation of a real pastoral, and the editors expressed regret that they had used language so open to misinterpretation. But this explanation has not satisfied those who were, with good reason, indignant that the charge had been made, and an ecclesiastical trial seems likely to result.

When a man of Hon. Neal Dow's usefulness and fame is rapidly approaching his ninety-third birthday it is certainly fitting that there should be general notice of the fact. So long as this veteran worker is spared, his natal days ought to be made occasions not only for congratulating him, but for speeding forward the temperance reform to which he has given the best services of his life. His Boston friends and admirers will hold, on Thursday, March 18, a banquet in Lorimer Hall of Tremont Temple, at which Dr. Lorimer, Mrs. Fessenden, Messrs. J. W. Baer, Wolcott Hamlin and B. R. Jewell will speak. Preparations will be made for 450 persons, the tickets being $1 each. After the banquet and its attendant festivities Mr. J. G. Woolley will lecture in Tremont Temple on Neal Dow, his life and his work.

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, the superintendent of the London Deep Sea Mission, whose unique medical work among the sailors of the North Sea and on the coast of Labrador has excited so much interest, is spending the week here. He spoke at Andover four times on Sunday, at Exeter on Monday evening, and at the Leyden Church in Brookline on Tuesday evening—everywhere with great acceptance. His other appointments for his illustrated lecture are at the Pilgrim Church, Cambridgeport, on Wednesday evening, at the Highland Church, Roxbury, on Friday evening, at Dr. Mc-

Kenzie's church in Cambridge on Sunday evening and at Dr. Berle's church in Brighton on Monday evening. He will preach at Rev. W. A. Bacon's church in Beverly next Sunday morning. Any church is fortunate which can secure an address from this devoted missionary.

The Nashville Christian Advocate is authority for the genuineness of the following quotation from a recently published editorial in a paper edited by a Southern Negro:

> In the editorial sanctum sanctorum, where thought struggles to catch the listening ear and sway the judging heart, and where from the great deep of the mental ocean vivid oscillations of heavenly torches flash from the pent-up fires within, Editor —— shows a fitness, clothed and attired in a brilliant paraphernalia, brighter than the rings of Saturn and more golden than "Arcturus with his sons," spanning the sea of journalism with a cloudless eye and a potent elegance of chaste diction that belongs only to men of lofty mold and magnificent mental parts, appurtenances and splendid formula for the adjustment and the recombination of those resources and personal accomplishments that belong to great molders of thought and founders of human tastes.

This rivals the florid English of the inaugural of New York's lieutenant governor.

The Pacific and the Atlantic coast do not seem so far apart when a minister can preach in Oakland one Sunday and in Boston the next without traveling at all on Sunday either. This particular minister was Rev. C. R. Brown, and right royal was the welcome that his former flock at the Winthrop Church, Charlestown, gave him last Sunday. No less warm was the greeting when he and his wife appeared as the members of the Monday Club were just seated for their annual dinner and the concurrent festivities pertaining to Ladies' Day. The Egypt and Palestine pictures which were exhibited later in the afternoon were designed not alone to freshen recollections of The Congregationalist's tour of 1895, but to quicken anticipations on the part of Mr. and Mrs. Brown, who sailed on the Spree Tuesday for three months' absence in Europe and the Holy Land. The new pastor of the big church in Oakland is by no means worn out with his untiring labors of the past five months, but this tour has long been planned for recreative and educative purposes. Joy go with the happy pair over the Atlantic.

Every now and then some newspaper or preacher sends out letters to a number of individuals asking why they do not go to church. We have once or twice done it ourselves, but we have concluded that we can use our space to better advantage than in setting forth the reasons which non-church-goers allege for the stay-at-home habit. They are always very good reasons, of course. How true it is, as is alleged in a recent symposium on this subject in a Lincoln (Neb.) paper, that the "church is out of joint with the world," that "not one man in 500 today believes in the supernatural," that "there is nothing about the average sermon which is entertaining or instructive," that "one hears at church bigotry, self-righteousness and cant when he is looking for something broadening and uplifting." In the face of all these charges how could any man have the effrontery to say in the same symposium that the reason he didn't go to church was that he was too lazy! Perish the thought that laziness keeps anybody away from God's house, and may the thinker of the thought retract it before it is too late.

Rev. Dr. George F. Pentecost tells a British Weekly interviewer that if he had known the warmth of feeling with which he was regarded by the Marylebone church and the London Presbytery he never would have accepted the call to the Yonkers church; that he is "heart-broken at the thought of leaving London"; and that England is the most beautiful country in the world. He interprets the refusal of the London Presbytery to release him as "a graceful expression of regret at the prospect of his leaving," a decision which he is under no obligations to consider for a moment. But we note that Rev. Dr. George D. Matthews, well known to Pan-Presbyterians, says that for Dr. Pentecost to question the authority or serious purpose of the presbytery is to make a serious charge against its members, and he insists that "the decision is in the last resort with the presbytery, which is bound to prefer the greater good of the whole. Whatever changes our English Presbyterian Church may make in its future administration, I trust it may continue to be Presbyterian in its polity." Nevertheless, the American Baptist-Congregational preacher is to have his own way, even if it involves "a breaking heart."

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM NEW YORK.

An Interesting Discussion.

The Congregational Club at its February meeting discussed The Student Christian Movement throughout the world. Drs. Judson Smith of Boston, Charles Cuthbert Hall of Brooklyn and Mr. Luther D. Wishard of this city were the speakers. Dr. Smith, whose official connection with the work of foreign missions had made this students' movement one of exceeding interest to him, spoke of its origin, its development, management and results. Of the results one of the most prominent is the fact that about 1,200 men and women of different denominations connected with this movement are now at work in mission fields and 6,000 are enlisted in a course of preparation.

Dr. Hall spoke of the under-graduates in our colleges and seminaries with whom he is brought into close contact. He had lately spent four days in one of the colleges holding daily meetings with the students, and had been greatly cheered by seeing their excellent Christian spirit and earnest search after religious truth. These "student volunteers" felt that a special trust was committed to them, their opportunities making them "debtors" to others around them, and their influence for the Master was very positive and active.

Mr. Wishard, being the general secretary of this movement, in the interest of which he had been around the world, closed with an exceedingly interesting account of its composition, purpose, methods, results and prospects—statements that won the favor of all his hearers.

Doubtful Charity.

Rather a sharp difference of opinion is finding expression between our regular organizations for the wise and systematic care of the really poor, willing to work if they could find work to do, and those responsible for calling hither the horde of loafing impostors now thronging the city, drawn to it by the offer of free food and shelter given indiscriminately to all who will accept it, without conditions, questions as to character, ability to work or real need, not to say desert, of help. Among offenders in this line is one of the sensational daily papers of the city, and the judgment of some of our careful students of charitable work has coupled with it the new movement of the Salvation Army for the too indiscriminate aid and encouragement of the vilest of the vile, of whom the city always has a full supply without special bids for them. However good people may differ as to these opposite methods, no one with his eyes open will deny that never before did so many of these unfragrant parasites pollute our streets, parks and public places. Few cities have more or as wisely conducted methods of liberally ministering to the deserving poor, but our citizens do hate to be imposed upon in the name of charity.

Brooklyn Lectures and Sermons.

Brooklyn's course of lectures on the Graham Foundation was opened this season by Dr. P. S. Moxom of Springfield. His subject was The Wisdom of God as Shown in the Evolution of the World and of Life. In its illustration he took a rapid but comprehensive survey of the process of creation, beginning with the probable nebular hypothesis and coming down to the creation of man.

The Brooklyn Ethical Association is having a series of lectures on The Evolution of Ethics. The tenth of the course was given this week by Professor Toy of Harvard College on The Ethics of the New Testament, which he compared in its spirit and ideal with the ethics of the Egyptians, Greeks and Romans, showing wherein Christ's ethical teaching agreed with these and the points in which it was characteristic and peculiar. Dr. Toy also gave an address in the (Unitarian) Church of the Saviour on The Historical Criticism of the Pentateuch.

Dr. Meredith is preaching on Sunday evenings a series of brief discourses on The Minor Characters of the Bible.

A Brother Beloved.

Dr. William Kincaid's funeral was held in the Clinton Avenue Church on Monday afternoon, his pastor, Dr. McLeod, leading in the services. Many New York and Brooklyn ministers of his own and other denominations attended. Addresses were made by Rev. Judson Smith, D. D., senior secretary of the American Board, and Dr. Joseph B. Clark, senior secretary of the Congregational Home Missionary Society. Dr. Smith was teaching in Oberlin College during Dr. Kincaid's courses in the college and seminary, and there formed a close friendship with him which had grown in intimacy and strength till it was interrupted by death.

Dr. Clark had been in near association with Dr. Kincaid from the time of his coming to the Bible House as a representative of the American Board and since 1888 still more intimately as his co-secretary in home missionary work. Both speakers were therefore well qualified to speak of their friend from personal knowledge of his character and life, and they spoke freely and with full and tender appreciation, but without exaggeration, of his salient qualities as an earnest, spiritual, conscientious Christian, and of his noble work for the Master in the pulpit, and in the wider relations to the churches and pastors of the land in his later years. Dr. McLeod followed with a pastor's testimony as to his influence in the church gained by his eminent piety and consecration. Prayer was offered by Drs. Cobb and Clapp, also intimate associates of the departed, and favorite hymns of Dr. Kincaid effectively sung by the choir completed the service in memory of our beloved and honored brother. The burial was in Greenwood Cemetery beside a beloved son, who died in June, 1894. The Clerical Union has passed appreciative resolutions concerning Dr. Kincaid. HUNTINGTON.

Dolly's Millions.

A Story by Harriet Prescott Spofford.

A dozen millions!—it conveyed absolutely no idea to Dolly. She had never had quite all she wanted to wear, and by no means all she wanted to spend, and nothing like what she wanted to give away. And now she simply saw her fingers twinkling through an infinite progression of beautiful green dollar bills, and further her fancy did not unfurl its wings.

The money had been left to accumulate for another person, no relative of hers at all, and she had never known of the vague possibility of her inheritance. A singular series of deaths, by which the fund fell from one individual to another, had brought it at last to her, just after her twenty-first birthday, and now the trust had ceased and the great sum had been placed at her disposal. "I certainly will have a horse and buggy," she said, "and the dear old minister need not go tiring himself to death after his poor people and after his orchids and arenarias any longer. And I am going to have a white chip hat with sweet-brier roses and black velvet ribbons next summer. And, O, if I only can have as many white gowns as I want! I must get great-grandmother a big white chuddah shawl, anyway. Poor soul, she won't seem to know it, but she'll look nice in it. And Aunt Hannah shall have the lorgnon she says it looks so high-bred to use. And Grandmother Green—I wonder what I can get her. There's nothing in the world she wants, she says. But she's awfully fond of chocolates—O yes, chocolates. And I'll have some bottles of Pinaud's violet-water sent to Aunt Lucia; she said once she'd like to swim in it, but she couldn't do that, you know. One thing I am resolved on—little Polly Teague shall go to the private school. And then if I send a bolt of cloth to the sewing guild, and some flour and apples and raisins down to the family in the Hollow, I wonder if it will take all that comes in first. I do want enough left for a bill, a fresh, new bill, in the offertory—I am so tired of putting in a silver piece." And that was Dolly's idea of the income of her dozen millions.

She was not so old as most girls of her age; she had lived here where she was younger than her aunts, and they were younger than the grandmother, and she again was younger than the great-grandmother, and age had in a way been held at bay. But, except in matters of money, with which she had had but little to do, Dolly was not the child they thought her, and her thoughts and feelings were the stronger for being kept entirely to herself.

She had attended the little private school till its resources were exhausted, and of late she had been reading Virgil with the minister—the old minister! Perhaps the poor man was thirty-five. Her aunts thought the study necessary to a polite education, and believed she would be an accomplished Latinist after the fourth book of the Æneid. "If money bought education," said Miss Hannah, coming into the room where Dolly was dreaming over her book, "what learning you would have! But even queens have to study." And the good lady shook her head over her discovery.

"I should like to know the use of learning now to Dolly," said her Aunt Lucia, who was sitting there making pink fly-away bows for her breakfast jacket. "A pretty girl, and with all that money—there's no need of her knowing more than how to write her own name."

"I'm ashamed of you, Lucia!" said Miss Hannah, looking over her spectacles.

"But it's the truth," said Miss Lucia. "A girl with that fortune doesn't need to be a beauty, doesn't need to have more accomplishments than those of making change and speaking French to be a social success and to marry a duke—I don't know but a royal prince."

"Why in the world should she want to marry a royal prince and have him spend her money, and his people look down on her? No, it behooves her to take her place by virtue of herself, to become a leader and be a power. The possession of so much money sets her apart. And if she doesn't want to be married for her money she must be worth marrying for herself."

"O!" said Dolly. "Is it so very much money? I don't want it! The idea of me, little Dolly! I shall just divide it round. You take it, Aunt Hannah—I'd rather you would—and make me an allowance."

"Make you an allowance, Dolly?" said the minister, coming in. "Haven't you enough already?"

"Too much," said Dolly, the carnation staining her cheeks a moment. "O, altogether too much! I didn't understand before. I don't want to be set apart. I want to go on just as I was."

"I am afraid that is impossible, Dolly," said the minister.

"That is what I say!" exclaimed Aunt Lucia, her mouth full of pins.

"But I can give it away, can't I?" her pretty face burning. "I don't—I don't want to be married for my money!"

The fancy of any one's marrying Dolly for her money! The color swept over the minister's brow, too. He made no reply to that part of her remark. "Give it away?" he said. "But it has been given to you. Do you think you know better who should have it than the Power that has placed it in your hands?"

Dolly was in no mood for preaching. If she made an impertinent little rosy moue she also looked up at the minister with a disarming smile.

"It is a responsibility, a great one, to which you are called," said Aunt Hannah.

"I don't like responsibility. If there's so much money why can't I have a good time with it?" she pouted now.

"The very best," said the minister, smiling back at her.

"How can I have the best, or any sort of a good time," she said, "if I am to take a position and be set apart and have responsibility and all that! Why, I'd rather not have any money! I meant to have a horse and buggy and some pretty gowns, and give away what I could spare"—

"What you could spare!" cried Aunt Lucia.

The minister laughed. "She must go out and see the world," he said. And if he sighed it was under his breath.

"That is just my opinion," commented Aunt Lucia. "She must travel. She must see what society is like. She must get used to things before she, as you may say, takes her stand."

"How?" demanded Dolly.

"Why, at hotels, at watering-places, I suppose. I will go with you. It will not take long to catch on."

"Well, then," said Dolly, with great relief, "it is too late in the season now."

"Perhaps I do not quite take your idea, Miss Lucia," said the minister, breaking just then the paper-knife he was bending up and down.

"Why, I don't know that there is any idea to take," said Miss Lucia. "It is only that if Dolly is to take a place in society, as sister says, she can have a chance that way to learn the tricks and the manners of the great world."

"When you shall have taken her on this expedition," said the minister then, slowly, "possibly you will let me show her the greater world—in your company, of course."

"Now I don't know that I quite take your idea," said Miss Lucia, with a little bridling.

"My idea is that you intend Dolly to have the opportunity of choosing between two ways of using her fortune—or that she intends it. You are going to show her one way, Miss Lucia. And before she decides she will, perhaps, allow me to give her a glimpse—only a glimpse—of the other. It is so wide, so vast, so dark a world, that very few have more than a glimpse of it, indeed."

"O," said Dolly, "you frighten me!"

"I should be sorry to do that," said the minister, gently, his eyes resting on her half a moment.

"And I don't see why all this comes to me at all, and I such a little simpleton! O, I didn't know how happy I was before! I had rather go without pretty things than have all this to decide upon. I don't see what there is to decide, any way. And I don't see why, just because some money has come, I should have everything I like upset, and all my pleasant life spoiled and the Indian summer days I was looking forward to! Any way," said Dolly, then looking up brightly, "I am going to have one good rest from thinking about it all and have a horse and wagon, all the same, and drive everywhere you'll take me to find the blue gentian and the witch-hazel flowers, and enjoy myself my own way before I try Aunt Lucia's way or yours."

It seemed from that afternoon that little Dolly, who had been every one's plaything, had now a very decided will of her own. She agreed to do as the others wished, provided not a word concerning the fortune and the future were spoken to her for the time being. Doubtless she kept up a weary thinking, but she gave no sign of it. And so the minister found himself on the pleasant afternoons of every week taking long drives to the haunts he loved best so long as there was a flower in bloom, and after that down to the lonely sea where the smooth azure of the still expanse broke in the long roller creaming up the shore.

"I know you love to see it," said Dolly, dropping the reins. "It brings—well, infinite things to you."

"You couldn't know that, Dolly, unless it brought them also to you."

"Not more than looking out between the stars at night does, or into the deep sky on any summer afternoon. Not more, I think, than looking at the fringed gentian and its color"—

"Its ineffable color!"

"Than looking at that does to you."

"Where did you find out all these things, Dolly?"

"Why, with my eyes."

"With your soul."

"I suppose," said Dolly, timidly, "with my sympathy."

And they drove back without saying much more, only when the minister went home he took down the Angel in the House and read certain passages, and lost himself in sighing revery.

And one day, at length, Miss Lucia announced that it was time to go to New York, where they would stay at a hotel and have some dresses made, and then wend their way to the capital. "I say Washington," said Miss Lucia, who had been studying up the ways of polite life, as Dolly said, for all she was worth, "because every one has admittance there to a certain amount of society. One can call on the Cabinet people, you know, and one can call on all the official families, and see fine dresses and fine houses and sometimes fine manners. Now I know, Dorothy, that under other circumstances it would be very ignoble to do this. But there is no other way that I know of to let you know what society is—in a flash, as it were. And of course that is only the outskirts of it."

"It seems a mighty mean way," said Dolly.

"Well, I don't see what else there is to do. You must see something of it before you decide if you want to be part of it. And you could queen it, Dolly, with all your money! And if you like it well enough to go on, then we will go to Europe and learn French colloquially, and have a chaperon who knows the way, and see about the dukes and princes."

"Aunt Lucia!"

"Some one must plan ahead and speak plainly. Your Aunt Hannah can talk, but she takes it out in talking, and your grandmothers just look on and admire you, and as for what the minister wants"—

"What does he want, Aunt Lucia? To have me go into a cloister and give the money"—

"To buy spectacles for blind men!" said Miss Lucia. "He doesn't know what he wants himself."

But Dolly had been brought up to be docile, and it was not very difficult to be docile when all that her Aunt Lucia wanted was that she should go away and have a good time, she who had never been anywhere. And Sinbad on the roc's back had no more enchanted journey than Dolly had on the way to New York; while the delightful flutter of shopping on the scale of a bottomless purse was something she could never have appreciated if she had not had to compare and stint and relinquish at the village store all her life before. And then she made the round of the official calls in Washington, with what seemed to her, with its jingling and prancing, its cockaded coachman and footman, so real a Cinderella coach and pair that she half expected to see it all vanish; and she wore a little Paris suit of light cloth and grebe, while Miss Lucia wore some sables that were almost enough in themselves to make her a person of consequence. "Any one can wear seal," she had said at the furrier's, "and I mean to have what I want to wear for once. You can afford it, Dolly, and you owe it to me," and she gave her order with as magnificent a manner as if she had been quite in the habit of paying $500 for a muff when she wanted one.

It was an accident of great good luck in Miss Lucia's view that she presently came across an old school friend and intimate who had gone West and married a shopkeeper in her youth; now the mistress of great wealth she made her home in the capital city in semi-royal style, and being impressively told by Miss Lucia of Dolly's possessions, she had opened her doors to them and made them free of the penetralia of fashion. And Dolly shyly and uncomfortably saw what a spectacle was a fine dinner party, and knew the bliss of having more possible partners at a ball than there were possible dances.

And with this Miss Lucia was in her glory. "It is only the first step," she said to Dolly, when they came home from a charming pink luncheon, where Dolly was the sweetest rosebud of all. "We will go abroad presently and see a little of the life of castles and countryhouses. We can have nice introductions now, and a pretty girl with some millions of money doesn't need much in the way of introductions."

Of course the movement, the sparkle of this life, and the kindness and attentions she met made it extraordinarily attractive to Dolly. But often it seemed to her she was in a dream; and half the time the minister seemed to be walking beside her and looking out of the dream with her, and she did not ask herself what she thought of it but what he did. And now and then she had a season of homesickness and felt that they must start for home at once to see—not the grandmothers particularly, not Aunt Hannah, but, at any rate, the minister too. One night at the opera, of which there was a rather short and very splendid season, Dolly seemed to wake from her dream and look about her. The night before she had been the guest of a box where she was very visible herself but had not found the stage visible, and, being so new that she considered she had come to see and hear, she had found seats this time in the middle of the house, and for a while had been rapt in the wonder of the music and the charm of the playing. It was in one of the long waits between the acts, the richness of the harmonies still pulsing in her ears, that she found herself asking how she had endured the old dull life, flowing along like a half stagnant stream with nothing to brighten it to a ripple. The dinner from which they had arisen, with its gold and silver and Sèvres and Venetian glass, the wines, the soft glow of the candles among the innumerable flowers, was in her mind as something that belonged to palaces. "You can give a far handsomer dinner than this when you choose," Aunt Lucia had said. And after the first act her aunt, who, where she had not the necessary social knowledge had assumed it and carried things with the high hand, had gone out with her to the waiting carriage and had taken her over to the White House, where a great diplomatic function was going on, and had brought her back again, and what with dinner and diplomats and opera and the youths who appeared to take shape out of airy nothing wherever she went Dolly felt that she was in the very vortex of gay life. She looked about her at the brilliant scene, at the wild dancing after victory on the drop curtain, at the glance and glitter and color in the audience and at the boxes on the floor where there seemed to be no barrier between the common world of every day and that world of flashing splendor, but where there was the invisible and impenetrable barrier made by the sheen of all the velvets, the radiance of all the jewels, the bloom of all the bare-haired and bare-breasted beauty, that of the lovely woman whose white satin was just dulled with silver and in whose hair was a coronet of sunbursts, that of the tall young girls on whom the gallants were calling and who moved from box to box like restless, rosy butterflies, while secretaries and diplomats talked with their dark-haired mother, more beautiful than they, who shed radiance from her tiara, from her throat clothed in diamonds, from the medallioned necklace of huge rubies and brilliants with ruby pendants that lay on her white bosom. And through all Dolly's sense of the splendor of the great, new world which had opened for her crept the richness of the slumber motive and the glittering unrest of the fire music.

It was on reaching their hotel that night, after these hours of enchantment, that a telegram was given them announcing the serious illness of the great grandmother, and high as Miss Lucia had been soaring she fell as low. The sword song broke off with a clang in Dolly's head. What business had great-grandmothers in such a world? None, it seemed.

"O, dear, dear me!" sobbed Miss Lucia, "I ought to have thought. But grandmother has always been there, and I felt as if she always would be there. I ought to be there, any way, instead of masquerading here! O, the needles I've threaded for that poor soul! Well, you always were kind to your great-grandmother, Dolly. I'm not pretending to mourn her when she's been half gone, these dozen years, only a thin-minded shadow of her left. But somehow"—

And when they had reached home all the gayety and luster of which they had been part seemed to throw the new grave into blacker shadow. "O, death hasn't any place in such a world," said Miss Lucia through her tears one day a week later, when the minister had come in.

"I don't know why people shouldn't have a good time just because they had to die," said Dolly.

"But it's all such a mockery."

"That," said the minister, "is perhaps because you don't regard death in the right way. You think of it as a disaster. Death is only the opening of the husk. Look at the falling of the leaf—it is because the life pushing upward loosens it to make way for life in its new form. The body is that husk, that sheath, that leaf, it falls away from the pushing life."

"You are young," said Miss Lucia, and Dolly looked up in quick surprise. Why, yes, the minister was young. "To the young death is only a remote fancy, but to the middle-aged it is a black reality."

"I cannot think of death as a black reality," said the minister. "Life is sweet here, but it will be sweeter there. You are a little morbid, Miss Lucia. You have had a shock. And it came when you were something tired with your gay life. Now I think it is time to let me have my turn at showing Miss Dolly the other side of things. You will have to come along, won't you? It is a side that sometimes makes death seem the sweetest thing of all. We will not be gone long—I think a week will be enough—I am not sure but one day will do."

"Well," said Miss Lucia, "I suppose you're right. Something ought to be done. I did my best at spending, but the cheques and coupons and things have been piling up in sister Hannah's hands, so that she makes John sit up all night with a gun now, she is so afraid, and she says, 'Blessed be nothing.'"

And so they awoke next morning in the great city, and the minister joined them early, and they followed him submissively down into the thick of the dark city in charge of a pair of brawny policemen. Sometimes they needed the policemen, sometimes it almost seemed as if the policemen needed them. They made their way through a wilderness of alleys, and streets that were only gutters between broken houses, picking their steps through filth, and holding their breath at foul smells and starting and shivering at the sounds they heard, meeting drunken men and half-drunken women leering and winking at the policemen; and men with strange cuts on their faces, with an eye gone, an ear, with a broken nose; and lean children, whose bare skin looked through their rags, staggering with the pitchers of beer they carried. Dolly's face was already white and set before they began to explore the first cellar.

"I really don't think," said Miss Lucia, "that there's any need of exposing us to this. There's typhus and goodness knows what else in every breath we draw!"

"There are such numbers who have no other breath to draw," said the minister.

"Of course we always meant, Dolly meant, to give a good deal to the poor. Haven't we seen enough?"

"We have only begun," said the minister. "What I mean is to show you the life of the city within the city—the life that goes slipping and writhing underneath all the tide of light and splendor."

So they went on. And they saw people dying of fevers, and working as they died, in underground holes that reeked with ooze and slime; they found hungry, half-clad girls busied breathlessly, with the fiend looking over their shoulders, unable to spare the time to see the sympathy in Dolly's burning eyes; they found families in frosty attics where there had been no breakfast and was no fire; they found a dead mother with a living baby on her breast; they found men sodden in drunken sleep and their children starving, and other men starving with their children for want of work; they found old men with gangrened feet untended in foul, dark rooms that had no window; they found nameless and unnameable misery, people insane, these through want and those through crime, and everywhere shameless shame and dull despair. Was it the same world, the same bright, beautiful world? "We will not do any more," said Dolly at length, as they came out of one building, the Burrows, "unless we want to go insane ourselves." And there was a little air of command about her that even the minister could not disobey.

Miss Lucia went to bed, half sick, soon after returning to the hotel, and Dolly was alone in their parlor when the minister came up. She was very white, and her big eyes were dark with a darkness that seemed to have gathered from the miseries she had seen that day. There was a change about her, as if she had suddenly grown from a child to a woman. "Why did you never tell me of all this before?" she asked, looking up.

"To what purpose," said the minister, gently, "before you had the money? And after that, it was right you should have your choice where the ways divide."

"And you would have let me make that wicked choice?"

"I do not say that it is wicked. I suppose in any event I should have urged this side of life upon your notice."

"Upon my notice! O, they live it, and I—may notice it! O, you don't need to urge me. I shall give them all I have, the cruel money"—

"My dear child, that is no way to do. Of course I can't approve that."

"I mustn't give them the money?" she cried.

"My Dolly, all the money you have would be but a drop in the deluge of this poverty. You give them all you possess, and they will have a day and night's relief"—

"A day and night is better than nothing!"

"And be worse off tomorrow. You must keep a good part of your money in hand to help with in the way it will do most. You must give them something more than your money, too—your days, your thoughts, your prayers, your work."

"O, to think of the time I have been dancing, the money I have been wasting! And they"—

"It is well to see all sides of life. I doubt if you waste any more. But I will confess, these gay, dancing people often seem to me like the flies skimming over deeps where the slimy monsters, sin and poverty, lie in wait and wallow. But now we are not going to think of the pain, we are going to think of the way in which we can relieve it and prevent it." And the minister himself was surprised to see how Dolly took hold of the plans he had, in their breadth and in their detail—the plans for the model tenement house that should be built down on the very site of the Burrows, and of the others that were to follow, of the home for young girls, too, not far away, of the hospital for babies, the House of Nurses who should go about by day and night, of the buildings that should be torn down, the streets that should be opened, the daylight that should be let in. "You will not have much left for yourself," he said at last.

"I want so little," she replied, her hand lying along the plans.

She was doing such a tremendous thing—and she looked so small and helpless and sweet. The minister could not help it—he laid his hand on hers.

"I hoped you would do that," she said. "You know I never can manage this alone, or unless you are always with me to help, to show me how"—

"Dolly," said the minister, "I really believe you are proposing to me!" And Dolly, worn out with all she had seen and felt and suffered, burst into tears and sobbed her grief and her joy out on his breast.

"There is going to be a wedding in the spring," said Dolly to her Aunt Lucia, the next morning, "on the same day that the ground is broken for the first tenement house, if the architects are ready. You can go to Europe if you want to go, or you can come to the wedding"—

"Whose wedding?"

"Mine," said Dolly. "Mine and the minister's."

"O, Dolly!" cried Miss Lucia. "And it might have been a duke!"

"It is a duke, a leader of the people, a prince of a royal house!"

"Dolly," said Miss Lucia. "It seems very surprising. I didn't observe the minister—are you sure you haven't been a little forward?"

"No," said Dolly. "I have been very backward. I ought to have asked him long ago!"

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

Edward Everett Hale, in the Christian Register, indorses all that Albert Shaw of the Review of Reviews says about "that steady pecking away on public men which brings them to the grave before the community is ready to have them die," and he cites the premature deaths of John A. Andrew, Edward Everett and Phillips Brooks as illustrations of this evil in recent New England history. Some day his own case will be cited by a future commentator.

The Western Christian Advocate sensibly holds that arbitration is the proper method of settling disputes between denominational societies where there is difficulty in determining the right and wrong of matters in dispute. Carrying such matters into civil courts, paying fees to lawyers and court officials "scandalizes the church, and directly tends to discourage bequests to societies."

ABROAD.

The recently installed Bishop of London, seemingly having asserted that many British Congregationalists were Unitarians, Rev. Dr. J. Guinness Rogers, in The Independent, says: "For myself, having an extensive knowledge of Congregational ministers and churches, I do not know one who, with an approach to truth, can de described as Unitarian . . . Of late, both among Churchmen and Dissenters, the tendency has been to give considerable prominence to the humanity of our Lord and to the humanitarian side of his teaching. The movement, both in Church and Dissent, very often has been in excess. But it would be unjust to say that it involved any uncertainty as to the doctrine of God manifest in the flesh. At all events, it is an influence which has affected Church and Dissent alike." The British Weekly, commenting on this, says: "We believe that a more absolutely false charge was never made in this world against any body of Christians. . . . We do not know of a single Unitarian in the whole Congregational body. . . . The whole drift of thought amongst Congregationalists generally is towards a firmer and more serious grasp, not only of the doctrine of the deity of Christ, but of the other doctrines connected therewith." The Bishop of London now denies that he made any such charge against English Congregationalists.

Stopford Brooke, the biographer of Robertson of Brighton, the interpreter of Tennyson's poetry, and the pervert from the Anglican to the Unitarian fold, interviewed by a New Age reporter says: "Modern liberal theology seems to have reached that point of negation from which there is no 'advance' possible except into unbelief in God. . . . It is ethical, humanitarian, positivist, scientific, utilitarian, agnostic, anything, but it is not spiritual. It will not move the deeper life of humanity. It will not minister to progress. Liberal theology will have to go back into more belief, to have and maintain a few clear faiths, if it is to serve the cause of mankind."

The Congress of Mothers.

A Novel and Remarkable Gathering at the Nation's Capital.

For the past three days the Congress of the United States has been eclipsed in popularity by the Congress of Mothers. We have had many meetings of the W. C. T. U. in Washington. The Council of Women has honored us more than once by its presence, we have had half a dozen stormy meetings of the Daughters of the Revolution, and auxiliaries, branches and boards of the woman's missionary societies are always with us, but never before have the mothers been summoned to a congress at the nation's capital. The idea started at Chautauqua, in connection with kindergarten work. Mrs. Theodore Birney of Washington is the president and originator of the movement. Miss Butler of Chicago, who is an able writer for children, is the corresponding secretary. Her brain largely shaped the arrangements for this unique congress, while Mrs. Phœbe Hearst, the first vice-president, furnished the means. It is a disposition of money that no one will question. Many ministers have preached upon the general subject of child culture since the time of the congress was fixed—2,500 were asked to do so by circular. Hundreds of circulars were sent to mothers' clubs; and to other organizations of women. As the first meeting is not a delegated body, every mother, every person in touch with children was asked to come. Those most interested go so far as to say that the permanent organization will be for mothers and fathers and that the next assembly will be a Parents' Congress. This year a mothers' club in San Francisco sent a young man to the congress to glean what ideas he could.

Mrs. Hearst engaged the banquet room and adjoining parlors at the Arlington for the congress. It was a little unusual to have a model nursery set up in one parlor of this highly fashionable hotel, a long table of kindergarten literature spread out in another, photographs of family groups displayed in a corridor, etc. But not an attendant dared to smile, for was not the hotel pre-empted by Mrs. Hearst and is not the wife of the vice-president of the United States a vice-president of the congress, and were not all the ladies specially invited to go across La Fayette Square and call upon Mrs. Cleveland the very first morning?

These facts, coupled with a warm, sunny day, brought a crowd to the Arlington long before ten o'clock. The room that is crowded with 800 was jammed with half as many more, The ladies whose contributions of pen and purse had raised all this commotion sat quietly upon the platform. Mrs. Stevenson, still in black on account of the loss of her daughter, gave no token by voice or expression of her thought of the congress, but her presence was sufficient. Mrs. Hearst's appearance suggests the word gentlewoman. She was gowned in dark green cloth, took the gavel and called the meeting to order with evident timidity, and sat with downcast eyes during the several fulsome allusions to her generosity. Miss Butler's energetic figure was able to make its way among the leaders, and she was about the only one who took off her hat. The singing of America opened the congress. Mrs. Birney followed with an address of welcome. Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson made the response for the delegates, who she said were all the women of the world. She is the president of the National Council of Women, prominent in the organization of King's Daughters and editor of The Silver Cross. She is stout, with full face, deep dimples and regular features.

Those who could not follow the papers spent the time studying the interesting booklets that form the program. They are beautifully gotten up. The photograph of a little child, the youngest daughter of the president, is on the cover, and beneath it the words, "A little child shall lead them." There is a blank leaf for notes, and at the top and bottom of each of the dozen and more pages are choice little hits like these: "An atmosphere of love is as essential to the child as sunshine to the plant," "Character cannot be talked into or taught into a child, it must be lived into him," "Love is most divine when it loves according to needs and not according to merit." I noticed an entire absence of the quotations from King Solomon.

In the nursery is a crib properly made up; a little chiffonier is filled with a layette made after the most approved reformed patterns; there is a medicine case, nursing bottles, night lamps, many toys, each with a kindergarten thought. There are dolls in beds and dolls in chairs, showing how the child should be taught to lie down and to sit up. One day a live baby was brought from the Foundlings' Home as an exhibit, and was bathed and dressed in this nursery in the proper manner. The samples of children's books are fresh and fascinating. One looks in vain for Songs for the Little Ones at Home, and Peep o' Day and dear old Mother Goose is not there, but there is Emilie Poulsson's Child Life, Beckonings from Little Hands, Home Occupations for Little Children and What the Dragon Fly Told the Children. And there are books for mothers professing to tell them how to develop their children with sound bodies, clear minds and true hearts. The fading photograph of a Virginia family group of sixty-nine persons, taken on the golden wedding day of the grandparents, is a silent indication that the population of America is on the increase. A chairman of one of the committees appears with her nine children; a proud citizen of the district sent a photograph of his triplets, one year old.

We are caught in the corridor by a crush from two exits from the hall. The congress has adjourned to the White House. After the 1,000 cards of admission were exhausted Mrs. Cleveland kindly sent word that she would see all who came, whether with cards or without. Word is also passed around that, finding the hall too small, Mrs. Hearst sent out and hired a church for the remaining sessions. "Five hundred from out of town have registered this morning," says a flushed but happy officer. "We said if twenty-five came we should be satisfied, if fifty delighted, and now we hardly know what to do." Evidently many of the ladies did not know what to do at the White House, for they crowded into the east room before Mrs. Cleveland came down stairs, and while the late comers were being graciously received they were struggling to get out and into line. Mrs. Cleveland is known to be even more lovely as a mother than she was winning as a bride. The White House kindergarten this winter has included several of the children in the families of the Cabinet, and its beautiful mistress is their close friend. She received in a dark crimson gown, heavily braided in black, and No. 1,999 was greeted as cordially as was the first comer.

It was said that the audience at the second session will be a test as to whether or not the ladies came out to see Mrs. Cleveland. It proved to be a test of the capacity of the church. Overflow meetings had to be arranged the second morning, and a large hall over one of the markets engaged for the evening session. The hall was filled in spite of a pouring rain. The helpful talk on Reading Courses for Mothers, by Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, was a rich reward for leaving one's fireside on such a night. She began by saying that there is a more tender heart than that of a mother—the heart of a grandmother, and she spoke from experience. Her gray hair, beaming face and quiet tones are in keeping with the beautiful thoughts that she knows so well how to scatter through The Congregationalist and other religious papers. She mentioned books new and old for mothers to read, for the sake of their children or with them. She would cultivate the imagination, "that leaf from the sky," by fairy tales and Mother Goose rhymes. She wished she were rich enough to put the Rollo books into every Christmas stocking. She favors the memorizing of choice verses by the children, and would have the mothers read good fiction, warmly mentioning Margaret Ogilvy and Sentimental Tommy among the newer books. Care of Children by Dr. Scoville, Cradle and Nursery, Our Children, and a book by Jacob Abbott, Gentle Measures with the Young, make a series of four books valuable to all mothers, whether associated in clubs or otherwise. Personally, next to the Bible, she finds biographies helpful, and says that reading the lives of people is like going to prayer meeting. There is never one so dreary that good is not to be gotten out of it.

Mr. Hamilton Mabie has a paper on the Importance of Bringing the Youth in Touch with Great Literature. When the stenographic report is published it will be full of wisdom for writers for children as well as for the mothers. Parental Reverence as Taught in Hebrew Homes, by Mrs. Rebecca Kohut, was suggestive, and the Moral Responsibility of Women in Heredity, by Mrs. Helen Gardener of Boston, was a strong paper. Interest and profound sympathy were awakened by Mr. Frank Hamilton Cushing's talk on Mother and Child of the Primitive World, and by Mrs. Lucy Bainbridge's pictures of Mothers of the Submerged World.

It has been a most Christian congress; the words most often quoted are, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth left her prison work and came over from New York to stand before the great audience and hold them spellbound as she poured out her soul in a plea for love and sympathy for humanity that shall take in the helpless and the erring everywhere. Her voice, vibrant with emotion, thrilled her hearers. The light in the room seemed to focus on the slender figure in its clinging gown of blue. Looking on her shining, upturned face, for she had taken off her poke bonnet, I thought of Joan of Arc listening to the voices.

This congress has come in with such a high tide that it has swept out criticism. The local press give it their first and second pages, profuse illustration and praiseworthy editorials. It comes as a revival of sentiment concerning home and motherhood. But it is to be more than that; these women are in dead earnest that something very practical shall result. Mrs. Ellen Henrotin of Chicago, the president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, told how to organize clubs, and the little circular, Suggestions for Mothers' Clubs, is to go all over the country.

Given a good book on child culture, several mothers who will meet often to read and discuss it, adding their personal experiences, and the club is started on behalf of fewer expensive toys, plainer clothing and food for the children of the rich, better housing and free kindergartens for the poor, and a fine culture and development for all. It is with good reason expected that from the date of this congress Mothers in Council will not be confined to the pages of The Congregationalist. Thousands of circles will be in every State in the Union. They will send delegates to an annual Parents' Congress at the capital. Then will the republic realize that its greatest work is to save the children.

Washington, Feb. 19. L. C. W.

In and About Chicago.

Religious Interest in the Churches.

As has already been reported, in several of the Chicago churches there has been a deep religious interest. In Warren Avenue Church, Rev. J. W. Fifield, pastor, fifty-one were received to fellowship, thirty-three on confession of faith, at the last communion. As in the Douglass Park Church, where the same number were received the same day, others are waiting to connect themselves with the church at the coming communion. The Church of the Redeemer has held special communions for several months in order to receive those who were anxious to make a public confession of their faith. At the Waveland Avenue Church, Rev. Arthur Armstrong, pastor, between twenty and twenty-five have recently united with the church, an unusually large proportion of the number heads of families. In connection with these conversions nothing has been more encouraging to the pastor than the fact that he has been asked by heads of families to come into their homes and help them establish a family altar. The work in the California Avenue Church, as usual, has been characterized by a revival spirit, and in most of the smaller churches the interest in spiritual things has been deepening. This is especially true of Millard Avenue Church, where Rev. W. A. Waterman, long laid aside as the result of an accident last fall, is now hard at work, and is encouraged by manifestations of the presence of the Holy Spirit.

Even the topics in the Ministers' Meetings have lately been of a practical spiritual character rather than of a controversial or of a purely intellectual nature. Last week the relation of the church to the plain people was considered, Rev. Mr. Boller, of the Tabernacle, leading. He made the point that all social settlement work, all rescue work and the work of the Y. M. C. A.—indeed, of all societies which seem to have sprung up to meet some special need—should be done by the church. Upon the whole the address was one with which most of the brethren would agree, although they would be inclined to doubt the assertion that the church does not welcome laboring men to its services or to its membership. Very few of our churches here have shown anything like an exclusive or aristocratic spirit, even if they have not always been as aggressive as they ought to be. Mr. Boller has a hard field, and is cultivating it with great earnestness and wisdom. He is familiar also with the spirit of the Chicago Commons, but is not inclined to accept its work as in any sense a substitute for that of the church.

A Variety of Pulpit Topics.

This year the tendency in Sunday evening services seems to be toward discourses on themes which call for special preparation and for a good deal of thought on the side of the listener. One course is in progress in Central Music Hall. The same lectures are given Sunday afternoons in the university to students and people residing in the vicinity of the university. Another course began Sunday evening, Feb. 14, in the University Congregational Church, Dr. N. I. Rubinkam, pastor. They are to be on such topics as: Religion a God Quest, God and the Life Hereafter Among the Egyptians, The Bible and Other Bibles, The Testimony of Jesus, The Religious Aspects of Philosophy, The Search After God Through Science, The Testimony from Plant Life, The Religious Element in English Literature, Religion and the State. These lectures are to be given by those who worship in the University Church, and with two exceptions by men who are connected with the university. The same evening Dr. Noble's course on Current Religious Questions, in the Union Park Church, began. The first lecture, by Professor Hobson of McCormick Theological Seminary, was on the Philosophical Basis of Theology, and while very able was rather beyond the capacity of the average listener. The attendance was large and the attention encouraging. Dr. Noble began the same day a series of Sunday morning sermons on Sin and Salvation. Judging from the first sermon the quality of these discourses will be of a high grade, and from the satisfaction expressed at the close of the morning service the discourses will produce a profound impression. It looks now as if men would no longer be justified in staying away from church on the ground that sermons are not upon important themes and contain little depth of thought. For the coming three months a number of our Chicago churches will furnish intellectual food in as large quantities as most persons will desire. At the same time it must not be supposed that the spiritual need will be overlooked.

Charity Concerts.

The receipts from the concert in the Auditorium were more than $4,000. A goodly sum has been added to this by an entertainment furnished by Mrs. Potter Palmer at her residence on the Lake Shore Drive. As soon as Chicago people are aware of pressing need they contribute generously. It is not certain that they contribute wisely or that their gifts are always wisely distributed. Dr. Gunsaulus, for example, has had some sad experiences with pretenders during the last week or two. A woman with an infant in her arms came to him for help. He found through inquiry that the child had been baptized in five different churches and that through her pretended lack of clothing she had secured gifts from each of the churches she had patronized. Several others had been in the habit of obtaining coal, not only from the relief committee of Armour Mission but from four or five other sources. Recommendatory letters, some of them ten years old, have also been presented to Dr. Gunsaulus, and persons claiming to have been Roman Catholics have begged for aid on the ground that their conscience is taking them over into the Protestant Church. It is evidently high time that the charity organization principle were applied to our charities.

We have had an illustration of the power of public opinion in the refusal of one of the recently appointed commissioners of the West Side parks to serve. It was ascertained that the pressure of the machine had led to his appointment by Governor Tanner, but learning that his character was not good the daily press demanded and secured his resignation. His successor is a business man of foreign birth, but of good antecedents and considerable wealth.

Department Stores.

There seems to be a growing determination not only to prevent their increase, but to kill them out. A bill has been introduced into the legislature proposing to tax them out of existence. Many business men in Chicago have organized against them. It looks as if the department store would have a hard time to live. It is said that not less than 7,500 business men in the city have organized against these stores. These men say that these stores are not destructive to the small trader only, but illegal. It is too soon even to surmise what the outcome of the present effort to weaken or annihilate these stores will be. They are certainly very convenient and by their patrons will not be given up readily.

Railway Men and the Y. M. C. A.

We have had a gathering of notable railway magnates recently, not to consider railway interests on their pecuniary side, but the moral and religious interests of employés. Some time ago the managers of the Northwestern Road told their men that if they wished a building, to be under the control of the Y. M. C. A., they would furnish $15,000 of the $20,000 which it would cost. The men quickly subscribed their quota and a fine building at West Fortieth Street, near the railway shops, will be built. It was the discussion of the work of the Y. M. C. A. among railway men which brought the railway managers together and led them to devise liberal things for those in their employ.

The committee for the interior to consider ways and means for meeting the debt of the A. M. A. has appealed to churches and Sunday schools benevolently disposed in this region for extra contributions amounting to $13,000. Illinois is asked to add $5,000 to her regular gifts, Iowa $2,000, Wisconsin $1,500, Missouri $1,000 and other States for less than $300 each. California is asked to give $750. It is hoped that the money will be in hand by May 1. Dr. F. A. Noble is chairman of the committee.

The Historical Society.

The last monthly lecture before the members of this vigorous society was by R. G. Thwaites, secretary of the Wisconsin Historical Society, upon George Rogers Clark, the man who saved the Northwest to the union. The story of Mr. Clark's life and deeds was told in a vivid and attractive style and with a sympathy which imparted itself to the audience. It may be doubted if in the annals of American history there is any account of a more heroic expedition than that of Mr. Clark for the capture from the French in 1778–9 of Forts Kaskaskia and Vincennes. It is sad to think of the neglect from which, during his later years, this great military patriot suffered, and of the reasons which led him and a few others to organize an expedition against the Spaniards for the capture of the mouth of the Mississippi River and the union of the Northwest Territory into an independent state. When the story of General Clark's life is fully told it will form one of the most interesting biographies in our language.

Theological Students in the University of Chicago.

The latest report makes the number of these students 200. Seventeen donominations are represented. Naturally the Baptists lead with 146; Congregationalists come next with ten. The Disciples and Methodists have each eight. Regular Presbyterians have seven, Cumberland Presbyterians five and United Presbyterians two students. There are three Seventh Day Adventists, two German Evangelicals, two Protestant Methodists among the students. The Free Baptists, the Seventh Day Baptists, the United Brethren, the Independent Liberals, the Unitarians, the Roman Catholics and the Jews are represented by a single student each.

FRANKLIN.

The Rand lectures in Iowa College, provided for by a gift from Mrs. E. D. Rand and connected with the department of applied Christianity, will this year be delivered by Dr. Washington Gladden. The first of these courses was given by the late John P. Coyle, and were subsequently published under the title The Spirit in Literature and Life. Dr. Gladden will discuss The Factory, The Labor Union, The Corporation, The Railway, The City and The Church. The lectures will be given in the Congregational church and will be free. Arrangements have been made to take care of visitors to Grinnell who may desire to hear them.

Yale University is to be the residuary legatee of William Lampson of Leroy, N. Y., one of its alumni, who left an estate of $750,000 and made but few bequests.

George W. Chadwick, the distinguished American composer, has been elected director of the New England Conservatory of Music

The Home

WORTH WHILE.

'Tis easy enough to be pleasant,
When life flows along like a song:
But the man worth while is the one who will smile
When everything goes dead wrong;
For the test of the heart is trouble,
And it always comes with the years,
And the smile that is worth the praise of earth
Is the smile that comes through tears.

It is easy enough to be prudent,
When nothing tempts you to stray;
When without or within no voice of sin
Is luring your soul away;
But it's only a negative virtue
Until it is tried by fire,
And the life that is worth the honor of earth
Is the one that resists desire.

By the cynic, the sad, the fallen,
Who had no strength for the strife,
The world's highway is cumbered today;
They make up the item of life.
But the virtue that conquers passion,
And the sorrow that hides in a smile—
It is these that are worth the homage of earth,
For we find them but once in a while.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

A thoughtful woman recently remarked that the real harm which comes from such criticisms on the book of Jonah as have been current lately lies in their power to develop irreverence in young people. Whether the Bible is verbally inspired or not, it is a book which should ever be spoken of with the greatest respect and not made a target for flippant jokes. Whether Jonah went through the actual experience described or not, a lesson of deep meaning is embodied in the narrative and for this, at least, as much deference should be shown as for other literature studied by our boys and girls. Lack of regard for everything sacred is a growing evil among American youth and a wholesome, old fashioned reverence for the Bible needs to be cultivated. In this respect the Jews often put us Christians to shame. An eminent rabbi said the other day, "Expound Jonah as you will—see in it a call to Israel to repent or a summons to missionary work, it is serious enough to be seriously treated."

LOVE OR DUTY?

What Mrs. Sangster says below concerning Margaret Ogilvy, with its matchless revelation of the unity of life which is possible between a mother and a son, suggests, by way of contrast, Mr. Ford's recently published work, The True George Washington. It is with somewhat of a shock that one reads how distant were Mary and George Washington, mother and son. Nothing that he could do to make her comfortable and happy was left undone. She always received the filial respect which was her due, and probably a certain sort of love was not lacking. But as for any communion of soul or spiritual tie, any community of thought and aspiration, it was lacking. In this respect the great soldier and greater statesman was a typical man, as in so many other ways.

How many are the families where the same state of affairs exists, and fortunate are the parents who, when love is lacking, are not also made aware of their children's ingratitude and neglect of attentions prompted by a sense of duty. Love is the best of all cements for families, churches and states, but Duty ofttimes binds where and what Love cannot, and frequently it produces nobler results. Why? For the reason that Jesus hinted at when he put love for the unlovable and repulsive sinner above love for the lovable and attractive one. There are parents whose children love them because they intrinsically deserve it, and there are others whose children cannot love them because they, as persons, do not compel it or deserve it, but as parents they frequently receive from their children a measure of loyal service and care which is proof of a nobler and higher type of love—love for the soul in posse.

CONFIDENCE AND CANDOR IN HOME RELATIONSHIPS.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

In a recent number of The Congregationalist we all read a beautiful tribute to Margaret Ogilvy, that dear and tender story of a mother and a son, which none can read and forget. It has taken its place among the books which people cherish, and for me it will henceforth be regarded with the reverence which I have always given to Dr. John Brown's essay entitled My Father's Memoir, in its way as separate and unique in literature as this little volume of Barrie's.

Reading Margaret Ogilvy, I was impressed with the perfect candor and openness which prevailed in the little household over which that beloved mother reigned a queen. There were reserves for the outside world, and a stranger was regarded with a curious mixture of dislike and dread, an aversion which held them back for a long time from even letting a servant enter their sanctuary. But in the home itself there were no reserves. On the contrary, one sees that the trust was so instinctive that it was like a flawless crystal. It permeated the daily life. The buying and selling, the home finances, the ambitions and strivings, everything which belonged to the home as a center, and to the individual lives, which, however they reached forth, always came back to the home—these were transparent to all who had a right to knowledge.

Whether or not we are wise in our customs is a question for grave thought, but in many of our homes there is a reticence, not to say a deceit, always going on, which has not in its outcome the sweet harvest of homely happiness which that small Scottish household knew. Our sons and daughters are, from motives of mistaken kindness, kept in ignorance of their parents' struggles for a foothold in the world. They would willingly share the sacrifices if they were admitted into the confidence of their fathers and mothers, but, kept on the outside, they misjudge and resent where they might help and encourage. Fathers grow old prematurely in their efforts to meet the demands made by their families, the families straining after a false standard of living, the young people indignant that certain restrictions are placed on them which seem unnecessary and despotic, while, if only the household life were built upon perfect sincerity, burdens would be distributed and trials would grow light. In temporalities, at least, the ideal home should be fortified by sincerity.

The rule works in another way and has its exceptions, which are equally unjust in another department. A year ago, in a Western town, a man died, all of whose life, so far as his family knew, had been a losing battle. Strenuous care had been the portion of his wife, constant and irritating limitations had hedged about his children, and his own days had been passed in a long and exhausting strife to make both ends meet. Lo! when he had been laid to rest with his fathers it transpired that the toiler had been laying up treasures and that he had left a large fortune, into the possession of which the bewildered heirs came, pleased perhaps, but still hurt that their lives had been needlessly hampered and clouded through the father's iron will and relentless self-denial. The wife, kept back like a child from acquaintance with her husband's affairs, was ill prepared for the changed conditions, and for the older children the change came too late to give them the culture and the wider opportunities they should have had in full measure at an earlier period. Deceit, even for a purpose of ultimate advantage, is never justifiable. Who erects his house on falsehood builds on the shifting sands.

The very tenderness of love sometimes seeks refuge in the veiling of truth in home relationships. We see in one very dear to us a defect of manner, a fault which mars the otherwise lovely and amiable character and hinders the symmetry which we desire to see from gaining its just proportions; yet we hesitate to speak, are evasive or silent or cowardly, where to speak in plainness and gentleness would be kind. "Experience will teach that child," we say, forgetful that experience is often a very hard taskmaster, whose wounds are grievous and leave ineffaceable scars. Surely from the lips of the home circle the truth might be borne, and the candor of true love might aid the one criticised to escape into freedom from the fault which invited censure.

We err, too, in home relationships, in our attempts to shield some dear one of whom we habitually think tenderly, and whom we try to shield from the world's rough winds. Such a one must at all hazards, we say, be protected from pain, and in our efforts to do this we are driven to many subterfuges, which fall into ruin at the earliest assault of evil. In most cases the gentle and well-meant, but ill-advised, endeavors to deceive are not appreciated by their object, and in the end the truth has to be told and it leaves a sting which it would not have had at first.

When our Heavenly Father set us into groups and families and households, and gave us the strong bond of blood relationship, the tender tie of kith and kin, it must have been because in this way we could reach our highest development and attain to our noblest possibilities. That each family may arrive at the fullest and most sacred ideal of Christian living there must needs be entire confidence in one another, and a continual and faithful striving to abide in the service and love of God.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

[See Conversation Corner.]

How pleasant is Saturday night
When I've tried all the week to be good,
Not spoken a word that was bad,
And obliged every one that I could.

Tomorrow the holy day comes,
Which our merciful Father has given,
That we may rest from our work,
And prepare for the joys of his heaven.
— Young Reader.

The true test of civilization is not the census, nor the size of cities, nor the crops, but the kind of man that the country turns out. —Emerson.

FOOD DURING SCHOOL AND COLLEGE LIFE.

III.

BY MARY E. GREEN, M. D.

The educational period is one of great activity both mentally and physically, and fortunate indeed is that child who has been properly cared for and is able to enter school with a strong constitution, as it is then well equipped for the work which is to engage the next ten or twenty years of its life. If as much effort were put forth to prepare a child physically for life as to prepare it mentally, humanity would be much better. There is too great haste to put the child in school and little if any attention is paid to its physical development. Consequently when college life is reached a system of training and sports is entered into which becomes injurious because the body has not been previously prepared. The muscular system may be developed, it is true, but the abnormally quickened circulation develops heart trouble, and many a life has been shortened by that which was intended to benefit. The time to begin for a strong physique is in childhood, and training should be conducted systematically throughout school life.

Many young men and women upon leaving school are unfitted both mentally and physically to take up any kind of work with vigor. They expect, however, to recruit in a short time the exhausted bodies and worn out nerves which have deteriorated during school life. This is due to a condition of the system in which waste and repair are not equally balanced. The body may be compared to a machine. If well built of good material it renders the best and most lasting service. If a child enters school with a weakened body and digestion he cannot do his work in the best manner. Edward Everett Hale says, "If the brain is to do its work, if it is to produce marvels in literature, the spirit and body must be kept under subjection, and there is no one thing which will so effectually tend to produce this state as right eating and drinking." As before stated, milk and wheat with other cereals are the best food for the child, and these should continue throughout school life.

Fortunate indeed is the child who does not have to carry luncheon to school. The story of the dinner pail is told in the plaintive words of many a mother whom I have heard say, "I have to bake so many pies and cakes because the children have to take their dinner to school." What then may the children have? Sandwiches made from the best bread and butter, but vary the filling from time to time. It may be made with egg, cheese, cold meat, chicken, sardines, peanuts, dates, figs and occasionally chopped pickle or olives, with a little parsley, nasturtium leaves or cress.

These sandwiches are both nutritious and appetizing. Apples, bananas, dates, figs and nuts may be added to the above. Instead of cake make a brown bread with one cup each of sour milk, corn meal, rye flour, half a cup of molasses, a teaspoonfull of soda, a little salt. Stir all together, add a small cup of raisins, steam two hours and bake one hour in a slow oven. Children like such lunches as these and will grow strong on this kind of a diet. One mother, in consulting me not long since, said, "My daughter never eats anything before going to school but a doughnut and a cup of coffee." Any one who begins the day upon such a diet needs a change of food instead of a doctor.

It is poor economy to begin the day's work with a stimulant. The children of well to do people suffer from improper feeding quite as often as those of the poor. In fact the poor child who goes home from school to a bowl of bean soup and a piece of corn bread is better nourished than the child who makes a meal on what he may choose. During college life students may be divided into two classes, one over-fed, the other under-fed. To the former class belong the victims of late suppers, chafing-dish parties and "spreads," of questionable sorts and hours. To the latter are those students of limited means, who are obliged to economize and often eat innutritious food from the nearest bake shop, to the utter ruin of their health. The brain needs wholesome, easily digested, nutritious food as much as the body. Good work cannot be done upon such stimulants as tea and coffee, or such food as pastry.

ABOUT PEOPLE.

The Norwegians impute Ibsen's pessimism to his Scotch Calvinistic blood.

President Patton of Princeton was a guest at a recent state dinner at the White House.

Francis Murphy says he has seen Robert Ingersoll cry, as together they have talked about Jesus Christ.

A grandson of John Brown, the abolitionist, was baptized in the Congregational church, Saratoga, Cal., recently.

General Booth and Mr. Gladstone met for the first time in December last. General Booth is now on the Continent.

Justices Brewer and Harlan of the Federal Supreme Court and ex-Secretary of State Foster teach Bible classes in Washington every Sunday.

Postmaster-General Wilson, soon to become president of Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., will give the Phi Beta Kappa oration at Harvard next June.

G. F. Watts, the English artist, says that "one creed is as good as another, and that nature, divinity and humanity are to me almost convertible terms." Isaac Watts knew better than this.

In 1863 a young country clergyman in Ireland wrote to his friends, "My chances of promotion of any degree, never very great, diminish yearly. I lose English friends by death and absence. I have no Irish friends. Ergo, I am fixed in Enniskillen for my natural life, and mean chiefly to grow cabbages, likewise mangels and turnips." A year later he was Dean of Cork, four years later he was Bishop of Peterborough, and in 1891 Lord Salisbury named him as Archbishop of York. He died a few months later. As Bishop Magee of Peterborough he was generally recognized as one of the ablest prelates in the Anglican Church, and the most eloquent orator in the House of Lords during this generation.

A RATIONAL FOURTH OF JULY.

Massachusetts Sons of the American Revolution are putting forth efforts to awaken the town authorities throughout the Commonwealth to a more dignified observance of the Fourth of July than has been the custom of late years. They suggest that during some time of the day there be some attempt to hold patriotic exercises recalling to the younger generation the deeds of the Revolutionary heroes. They call attention to the fact that the Legislature, in chapter 152 of the Acts of 1896, conferred authority upon all towns in this State to make an annual appropriation for this object; and they recommend that an article be inserted in the warrant for the annual town meeting to see if the town will grant a sum of money for this purpose, and choose a committee to expend the same.—Boston Transcript.

Closet and Altar

No man need be without comfort while the gates of prayer are open to him.

The slow, modest, moderate, compact, muscular growth of the healthy body is the type of the true Christian life, nourished by love and faith and truth, and increasing slowly and surely in every grace of the Spirit. Be this our growth—substance, not show; reality, not pretense; building up in holy faith, rather than puffing up by mere worldly knowledge.—H. L. Hastings.

O well for him who ever day and night
Should only seek to feed on God aright!
In him a well of joy forever springs,
And all day long his heart is glad and sings:
Who is like thee?

—Christian Gregor, 1778.

Since our spirits are the breath of God within us; since they can be only renewed by the Spirit of God; since we can only walk in the Spirit when we are in Christ, and so are a new creation; therefore we may say truly that the life of the Christian is a supernatural life. It could not be lived at all but by virtue of that supernatural change, that blessed re-creation, that new life which we draw from union with Christ, even as the vine branch draws only from the vine its purple fruitfulness.—F. W. Farrar.

There is an inward call of Christ to our souls, and blessed is he who heeds it. Christ often knocks at the door of our hearts with holy longings, devout aspirations, pious meditations, and blessed is he who throws wide open his heart's door to the Christ. As soon as thou dost experience in thy heart some longing after the grace of God, thou mayest certainly conclude that it is Christ knocking at the door of thy heart. Blessed indeed are all they who hear and follow him.—Gerhard.

O, for a heart of calm repose
Amid the world's loud roar,
A life that like a river flows
Along a peaceful shore.

Come, Holy Spirit, still my heart
With gentleness divine;
Indwelling peace thou canst impart,
O, make that blessing mine.

Above these scenes of storm and strife
There spreads a region fair;
Give me to live that higher life,
And breathe that heavenly air.

We lift up our hearts to thee, O God, in grateful remembrance of the gifts and blessings which have crowned our days. When our hearts have forgotten thanksgiving, thou hast not ceased from help. Although we have sinned, thou hast still maintained thy loving kindness. Our trials have been less than our desert, our joys have been witness ever of thy merciful compassion. We bless thee for the gift of life, the love of friends, the ties of kindred, the joys of home. We praise thee for opportunities of knowledge, for innocent enjoyment and helpful service. Thou hast comforted us in sorrow and upheld us in the time of doubt and fear. Food and raiment and shelter are from thee, and thou givest us power to overcome temptation. Love is thy gift, and faith and hope of better days to come; and thy presence is our continual delight. Blessed be thou, O God, with honor and thanksgiving, through Jesus Christ our Lord! Amen.

Tangles.

[For the leisure hour recreation of old and young. Any reader who can contribute odd and curious enigmas, etc., of a novel and interesting kind is invited to do so, addressing the Puzzle Editor of The Congregationalist.]

16. CHARADE.

Where rolls the Thames to seek the sea,
The mighty city London stands;
In wealth and in immensity,
In commerce and prosperity,
It's TOTAL in all lands.
Grand structures link where waves divide;
Her Norman Tower is London's pride;
Her parks and monuments are fine;
Magnificent her vast old piles;
And far and wide in endless miles
The network of her streets expands.
TWO Jews than she has Palestine;
More Scots has she than Aberdeen;
More Welshmen than in Cardiff seen;
And far more Catholics make their home
In thee, than can be found in Rome,
Great city none may ONE!
Society's extremes here meet;
Here guests by thousands come and go;
Earth's utmost bounds send willing feet
To swell the daily ebb and flow
Of this new Babylon.

E. E. O.

17. QUOTATION NUMERICAL.

Whole, of 59 letters, is a couplet from The Church Porch of Herbert. 14–19–28–7–3–31 names the author of

Yes, child of suffering, thou mayst well be sure
He who ordained the Sabbath loves the poor!

16–25–4–23–11–21, the author of

Woodman, spare that tree!
Touch not a single bough!
In youth it sheltered me,
And I'll protect it now.

58–25–28–41–29–12–31, the author of

How sleep the brave who sink to rest
By all their country's wishes bless'd!

24–8–58–32–36–41–20–9, the author of

To every man upon this earth
Death cometh soon or late.

41–49–26–43–10–22–28–41–19–17, the author of

There is no death! What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call Death.

2–52–36–43–44–50–33, the author of

Dear, beauteous death, the jewel of the just,
Shining nowhere but in the dark;
What mysteries do lie beyond thy dust,
Could man outlook that mark!

56–25–54–35–59–5–53–36–40, the author of

Comparisons are odious.

17–18–42–48–45–15–30–37, the author of

And step by step since time began,
I see the steady gain of man.

27–46–6–41–13–57–38–43, the author of

When I'm not thanked at all I'm thanked enough;
I've done my duty, and I've done no more.

1–39–34–46–51–49–47, the author of

'Tis not in mortals to command success;
But we'll do more, Sempronius—we'll deserve it.

16–55–28–35–25–33, the author of

To know
That which before us lies in daily life
Is the prime wisdom.

TENDILOW.

18. DECAPITATION.

Though man has made me just to bear
His burdens for him, oft a share
My brother lifts, to make it even;
A soulless drudge I'm counted here,
Yet once, 'tis said, a holy seer
Beheld me on my way to heaven.

Remove my head, my task is still
To wait upon my owner's will;
And still my brother toils with me.
I'm mentioned in the Bible first,
When God, in righteous anger, cursed
Eden's ashamed and sinful three.

Remove my head, I've yet a head
That serves me perfectly instead,
But not a foot nor arm, 'tis clear.
No more my days on earth are spent,
But in the sea I live, content,
Since Providence has placed me here!

MABEL P.

19. SHAKESPEAREAN ACROSTIC.

1. "I'll crave the day when I shall ask the bans."—Taming of the Shrew.
2. "Shall I not take mine ease in mine inn?" —King Henry.
3. "We are men, my liege."—Macbeth.
4. "Three words, dear Romeo, and good-night."—Romeo and Juliet.
5. "I pray you have in mind where we must meet."—Merchant of Venice.
6. "Lo, here I lie, never to rise again."—Hamlet.

Select one word from each quotation, to form a very familiar quotation from Macbeth.

F. A.

20. METAPHONES.

(Words alike in spelling but pronounced differently.)

I.

He sang the ONE on Sunday,
And ate some TWO on Monday.

II.

From vessel's ONE my friend and I
Observed a TWO upon the sky;
A courteous ONE she gave to me,
A silken TWO was hers to be.

W. T. S.

21. RIDDLE.

Emblem of purity,
Yet for a surety
I am not spotless though dainty am I;
White as the fleecy snow,
Brown as a nut I grow,
Changing my name as the seasons go by.

Long ago, royalty
Only laid claim to me,
Now I am used by the rich and the great;
Many aspire to me,
Look at me longingly,
Yet I am small and of lowly estate.

Beauty my heritage;
Too faint my courage is;
Pass I my lifetime alone and in fear.
Strangely fastidious;
Mankind insidious
Treacherously rob me of all I hold dear.

E. E. O.

ANSWERS.

11. Finch, larks, robins (Robbins), ruff (rough), stork (stalk), rail, raven, cardinal, crane, mocking, goose, loon, doves, nonpareil, crow.

12. 1. Incorporation. 2. Deliberation. 3. Operation. 4. Declaration. 5. Amelioration. 6. Adjuration. 7. Mensuration. 8. Disintegration. 9. Conflagration. 10. Restoration.

13. 1. Hear, ear. 2. Testate, estate. 3. Speculation, peculation. 4. Broadway, roadway.

14. $4.50.

15. The letter A.

◆

Take Winter as you find him, and he turns out to be a thoroughly honest fellow with no nonsense in him, and tolerating none in you, which is a great comfort in the long run.—Lowell.

ONE CAUSE OF ILL TEMPER.

The author of Diet in Sickness and Health, an English woman, affirms that an excessive use of meat is responsible for a good deal of ill temper. In support of this theory she says:

> If we compare domestic life and manners in England with those of other countries where meat does not form such an integral article of diet, a notable improvement will be remarked. In less meat-eating France urbanity is the rule of the home. In fish and rice eating Japan harsh words are unknown, and an exquisite politeness to one another prevails even among children who play together in the street. In Japan I never heard rude, angry words spoken by any but Englishmen. I am strongly of the opinion that the ill temper of the English is caused in a great measure by a too abundant meat dietary, combined with a sedentary life. The half oxidized products of albumin form urates and uric acid which, circulating in the blood, produce both mental and moral disturbances.

◆

Every sin has this horrible fact about it—its special curse is that it destroys the very faculties by which it can be known. Sin is the deterioration of our powers, it is the dislocation of our judgment, it is the corruption of our nature, it coarsens our sensitiveness, it perverts our conscience, it poisons our reason, it defiles our imagination—here are all the faculties by which we estimate what sin is. To know sin as it really is, to know its horror, requires a judgment pure and unsullied by sin. To see sin as it is, is to see it with the eyes of God, and only the pure can see what impurity is, only the righteous can know the horror of unrighteousness.—Canon Scott-Holland.

Cleveland's Baking Powder does the work just right every time.

She kneads it; you need it too—

"Duluth Imperial" Flour.

It answers every need and makes "better bread and more of it"—20 loaves more in every barrel—light, white and delicious.

If your grocer doesn't keep it, and won't supply you, don't get another flour—get another grocer; or send us a postal and we'll tell you where to get it.

DULUTH IMPERIAL MILL CO., Duluth, Minn.

The Conversation Corner.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: This Corner is exclusively for you; positively no admittance for old folks with their literary conundrums. We will begin at a Dakota missionary station.

FT. BERTHOLD, N. D.

Dear Mr. Martin: We had a nice Christmas. Santa Claus left one of his germem stocks full for me. I looked in my stocking and found a box of handkerchiefs, a brush and a comb and in the germem stocks was a train of cars. At 10 o'clock we went over to the Christmas tree at the chapel for the boys and girls and the people. They had exercises and then gave out the presents, which the kind friends in the East had sent for them. We feel sorry for the little children in Armenia and want to help them a little. I inclose $1.10 which the children of this Indian mission gave for them. Good-by. EVAN H.

I do not understand about Evan's "germem" stocks. Does he mean German? Or is it an Indian word? If it is any new variety of Christmas depository which Santa Claus favors, we Eastern children would like to have them. But those Sioux children do not receive only—they give, out of their poverty, to the suffering Christian children on the other side of the earth. I will tell you of some other gifts I have received for the Armenians and for Pomiuk.

An aged widow sends a single piece of scrip with this letter:

. . . I am very much interested in the fund for the Armenian children. I can only send you this scrip, a memento of our Civil War, hoping you may be able to utilize it for their benefit. I am sorry it is so little; may the dear Lord increase it a hundred-fold. And dear Gabriel-Pomiuk, I am glad he is so kindly cared for. I know how to pity him, being a cripple myself of eighty-two years, yet underneath are the everlasting arms.

Another friend sends more war scrip, so that if any of our collectors wish any of this let them send for it, indicating how much more they will give than the face of the pieces. I have 5, 10, 15, 25 and 50 cents. I have also several Confederate bills—one, two, five, ten and twenty dollars—which I will pass to any benevolent collectors, at considerably below their face value, on account of Gabriel or the Armenians! A lady, knowing the desire of young collectors for the early copper-nickel cents (with the eagle instead of the Indian's head), sends me a few of those, dated 1857 and 1858. My latest Scott's catalogue gives their value as five cents. Anybody want those? Another lady parts with a solid gold ring, with precious associations, the proceeds to go to the Armenian orphans. The goldsmiths will only give four dollars for it as old gold.

The most touching gift is that which comes to me with this letter:

Dear Mr. Martin: One of the little lambs in our primary class (four years old) was lately called from her earthly home to that of which she sang so sweetly just two weeks before—

I'll away, I'll away to the promised land.

She rode home from the Sunday school, singing all the time, "Jesus loves me," and in a few days was attacked with diphtheria. The last night of her life she told her mother that she loved Jesus and was going to him, and with her failing strength sang snatches of her favorite hymns. Her mother sent me "a dollar that had been sent to Ruth," adding, "I think she would like to have me give it to use for the Master—her dear Lord Jesus, as she used to sing."

I have given half of this to the Armenian Fund and half to the Pomiuk Fund. It is pleasant to feel that little Ruth, of whose winsomeness and gentle goodness I have heard more than is printed above, can through her only moneyed possession still be showing her love to the Lord Jesus by bringing sympathy and help to "the least of his disciples," both in distant Armenia and in the shore hospital of frozen Labrador. Is there any doubt that he will accept and bless the gift?

NORWICH TOWN, CT.

Dear Mr. Martin: I send —— for the Armenian orphans. We have in our school a little Armenian boy whose name is Aram. He and his sister come every day. They came from Van, with Dr. Kimball. Aram can do examples better and quicker than any other scholar. The drawing teacher says that he hands in the best work. JENNIE G.

Aram, Cornerers will remember, was the name of one of our "saddle-bags" twins, whom we had in an Armenian school two or three years ago, but he was from a different province. An Armenian boy who has come in while I have been writing this says that Aram is a favorite name in Armenia, that being the name of an early ruler of their nation, whom they seem to respect more than their present ruler, who robs and persecutes and murders them!

RIPON, WIS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I would like to be a Cornerer. I am nine years old. I can ride a bicycle. I am in the fourth grade. I wish you would tell some more about Gabriel. I am very much interested in him and the Armenians. EDNA M.

If it snows as hard in Wisconsin as it does today in Massachusetts I respectfully advise you to put your bicycle in the attic and substitute your sled. That's what the girls are doing this way.

CHERRYFIELD, ME.

Dear Mr. Martin: I watch the Corner letters every week, and am very much interested in them. I like the Pomiuk letters and I send —— for him. It is a part of the money which I earned for Christmas. I go to school and have a new teacher. I like him very much. [Then you will be sure to learn something this winter!—MR. M.] I am waiting for snow to come, so I can have some fun sliding down hill. ARTHUR H.

I "guess" you have got through waiting now, and that you are having as much fun in the snow as your brother animals in Vermont referred to in last week's Corner.

CLAREMONT, CAL.

Dear Mr. Martin: . . . I have been to General Putnam's house [See Corner, Nov. 26]. I have been in the attic and I saw the little chairs, dolls and other playthings. I went under the willow tree. Gen. Israel Putnam's sister was my great-great-great-grandmother. I am glad you went to see my grandfather. Good-by. MIRIAM C.

With this letter came a photograph of this girl and her brother: she is sitting on the arm of her father's chair and does not look anywhere near as great as that grandmother! Ralph is sitting beside his mother, holding his pussy-cat as tightly as he can.

FOREST GROVE, ORE.

Dear Mr. Martin: We received the souvenir of the Corner party and thank you very much for it. The money I send is for the Armenian Fund. I am taking drawing lessons and enjoy them very much. I can't think of anything more to say, so I will say Good-by. FRANCES C.

There could be no more appropriate ending to a letter than that. Do you draw your sled as well as lessons—or do you not have any snow in your mild and genial Oregon climate?

Then I have gift letters from Bessie H., of Globe Village, John L., of Saugus, Theodore B., "a little Hawkeye boy who is much interested in the little Eskimo," and others, but D. F. says we have got to stop somewhere.

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Those Old Folks' Questions. Crowded out of the children's columns, I will print a few of them for your Corner Scrap-Book.

HILLSBORO BRIDGE, N. H.

Dear Mr. Martin: I want to ask if some one will tell me where I can find a book that has the piece commencing,

How big was Alexander, Pa,
That people call him great?

I read it in school, perhaps fifty years ago, but have lost the book and forgotten the name. Also, a speller, I think it was the Noah Webster spelling-book. I knew every word in the book and many times in spelling schools have I stood the longest. It had a picture of the country maid and her milk pail, a boy up in an apple tree stealing apples, old dog Tray, and the unjust ["partial"] judge. O, if I could see those books how I should prize them! MRS. D.

"Why Alexander Was Called Great." This was the title of the piece. I have it in Northend's American Speaker, published in 1848, which comes very near being fifty years ago. It is also in Willson's Third Reader, of a somewhat later day. It is there attributed to Rev. E. Jones. Very likely it may be found in earlier readers also. It was a dialogue between a father and son. When the son found that Alexander was not "like some tall steeple high," but that "killing people made him great," he asked why was Abdel Young,

Who killed his neighbor, training day,
Put into jail and hung?
I never heard them call him great!

He was a very wise boy, for when the father referred to the Golden Rule, he replied:

But, Pa, did Alexander wish
That some strong man would come
And burn his house, and kill him too,
And do as he had done?

The verses would be good reading for those who are fearful that if the Arbitration Treaty should be passed we might lose an opportunity to have a war with our British cousins!

That Old Speller. Of course it was Noah Webster's! I suppose it has been studied by as many children as there are now inhabitants in the United States: certainly, over fifty millions have been sold. The copy I have was published in Brattleboro, Vt., in 1824. (But that is not the one I studied!) Yes, you remember the pictures right—how funny they look, especially the "old man pelting him heartily with stones: which soon made the young Chap hasten down from the tree and beg the old Man's pardon"!

Mr. Martin: As soon as you can make it convenient will you print the words, "How pleasant is Saturday night"? I wish them for my grandchildren; also, if you think best, "First, William the Norman," etc. I have taken The Congregationalist for years and always enjoy the children's page. Don't use my name, please.

Of course not, but we must use your very sensible remark about this page! No doubt the Home Editor will find it convenient to print the old verses from the "Young Reader," recently referred to in our "white old hen" broadside. The rhyming list of the Sovereigns of England has been published more than once in The Congregationalist, and in many other places. You will find it in the Tract Society's Songs for the Little Ones at Home, referred to last week. Here is another question of the same sort:

RAYNHAM, MASS.

My Dear Mr. Martin: Although not a Cornerer, I would like to ask if some one can supply the verses giving the names of England's rulers. It begins:

The Romans in England once did sway,
The Saxons after them led the way,
They tugged with the Danes till an overthrow
They both of them got by the Norman's bow.

They were learned years ago from a child's history. MRS. D.

Can some one? I cannot. L. H. M

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR MARCH 7. Acts 8: 26-40.

THE ETHIOPIAN CONVERT.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The last lesson closed with a statement of the preaching of the gospel throughout the villages of the province of Samaria. This lesson closes with the statement that the gospel was preached in all the towns of the western plain, from Gaza to Cæsarea. Within seven years from the crucifixion of the Lord the glad tidings had been proclaimed in many communities of Palestine. But now we come upon the first instance mentioned which led to its spread far beyond that country. We may learn the character of that great movement by studying:

1. The foreign inquirer. Through ages of disaster the Jews had been led to fulfill their mission to give the one divine religion to the world. They had been scattered throughout all nations. Many of them had gone to Africa. More than three centuries before this time there were so many of them in Alexandria that the emperor Ptolemy had caused their sacred writings to be translated into Greek, the language they had learned to use there. Some of them had penetrated far up the Nile. In the kingdom of Meroë, ruled by queens whose royal title was Candace, there were Africans who had learned from Jews of the one supreme God whose temple was at Jerusalem. One of these was the queen's treasurer. He made the long journey to the holy city to learn more of Jehovah and to worship him. He was on his way home again, with a copy of the roll of Isaiah, in Greek, which perhaps he had bought at Jerusalem. He had not learned all he sought about God. But he was a sincere inquirer and he was studying by the way.

The man who really wants light on divine things will turn to the Bible to find it. Unless he seeks truth there he does not really want it. It is a long step forward to get one to search the Scriptures. He need not look far, either, to find his interest aroused and deepened. The Ethiopian did not have the whole Bible. He carried with him only one of its books. That was before Christian teachers had come to insist that a man must carry the whole library with him in order to understand any part of it.

2. The teacher of the gospel. Philip was only a deacon. But he knew how to teach and was more successful than some of the apostles. He had a habit of obeying the Holy Spirit's suggestions. That is the first qualification of a Christian teacher. He knew what a divine call to preach was. It is simpler than many suppose. A spirit of unquestioning obedience to God, a heart full of love to men, an eye watchful for providential pointings, will find opportunities to preach. No one lives where souls are unsaved to whom God does not open ways to make known the gospel. Take the first step and God will point out the next: first the man in the chariot, then the man with the Bible in his hand, ready to ask a question. Already the Spirit's direction has been heard and obeyed: "Go near and join thyself to this chariot." Those who love souls as Christ did find opportunities to tell them of Christ's salvation.

Philip was already prepared with a usable knowledge of the Scriptures. He had felt the prophet's sigh over the dulled spiritual sense of the chosen nation and shared his faith in the remnant which remained true to God, that real servant of Jehovah who bore so long the heavy burden of the careless nation's guilt and shared the miseries the people brought on themselves. Philip saw, more clearly than the prophet himself could have seen or than the most loyal Jews had understood, how the Messiah was the fulfillment of the prophet's vision and how Jesus had by his life of self-sacrifice, in his crucifixion and resurrection, shown himself to be that Messiah. He could begin where the Ethiopian was reading and hold up Jesus to him as his Saviour. From the same book Jesus himself had once preached on the same theme to his own townsmen at Nazareth. The same Spirit which Jesus said was upon him, anointing him to preach glad tidings, was on Philip also. But Philip had found a better audience. This Ethiopian scholar felt that his teacher was in earnest and in earnest for him. The teacher's heart was kindled with the presence of the Lord.

This is living, potent teaching. This same Spirit still lives in the same words as they fall from the faithful teacher's lips, and gives them the same earnestness and affection that they had when uttered long ago. The central theme is Jesus Christ, the Saviour of sinners. It is effective, even with the indifferent and unbelieving. A man who not long ago was received into one of our churches, in giving his experience, said: "I was passing the church one Sunday morning to visit the grave of my little boy, whom we had lately buried. As we went by I said to my wife, 'Suppose we go in. The preacher will probably talk about Darwin or Huxley or some philosophical theme, but let us go in.' We went in and I heard a gospel sermon on Jesus Christ the manifestation of God, and on the cross, the everlasting illustration of divine love. I have never been able to escape that sermon."

3. The convert received. Philip quickly found the way to his pupil's conscience and heart. He led him on from willingness to learn to eagerness to be a recognized disciple of Jesus. Not always does the faithful teacher find such a reward. But no one labors thus in obedience to the Spirit in vain. Who that has tried to preach Jesus with a heart warm with love to men has been without the consciousness of having won some to receive Jesus as Saviour and Lord? And when has such a laborer for Christ ever experienced diviner happiness than in seeing the seeker after God find peace in believing on him? When we shall sit by the river of the water of life and look back on our earthly existence these moments will shine like stars on the background of darkness. The path of those who turn many to righteousness will be as the shining light in their memories.

The Ethiopian soon became eager to cast in his lot with believers. Let me be baptized into the name of Jesus, he said, and Philip, at the first water they came to, received him formally into fellowship with Christians. Thus the Christian teacher filled a life with joy. The Ethiopian went on his way rejoicing. He found that joy in the Bible he was studying when it was interpreted by God's messenger. The same testimony to the same redeeming love pours gladness into every soul that receives it. At the same time it kindles new joy in him who gives. Philip knows not the future. He hastens on to further work. The new convert, having lost his minister, returns again to his Bible, now a better guide to his enlightened eyes than even his teacher. Who knows how many learned of Jesus, in that distant African kingdom, through that interview? Whoever preaches Christ by life and word leaves happy hearts at peace with God wherever he goes. Can there be a higher reward than this? Is not heaven in him who knows that in every place he visits he awakens immortal souls to sing songs of praise to God?

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

Topic for Feb. 28–March 6. Prayer for the Incoming Administration. 1 Tim. 2: 1-4; 1 Pet. 2: 13-17; Rom. 13: 1-9; Ps. 67.

That it may be the servant of the whole people. That it may administer the laws in the fear of God. For wisdom, righteousness and peace.

(See prayer meeting editorial.)

Enameline
The Modern
STOVE POLISH.
DUSTLESS, ODORLESS,
BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.
Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

Pride in the Pantry
An array of bright tins is the ambition of many housekeepers. To such we offer this hint: After the tins are washed clean rub them with SILVER
ELECTRO-SILICON
POLISH
It's the finishing touch that gives the gloss and saves much of the hard rubbing to make them bright. It's the quick and labor saving way.
Grocers sell Electro-Silicon.
Box by mail, 15 cts. in stamps.
THE ELECTRO SILICON CO., New York, N. Y.

Styles correct,
Prices right!
Only four words but what a world of meaning!
Macullar Parker Company,
Clothiers and Outfitters for
Men, Youths and Boys.
400 Washington St., Boston.
166 Westminster Street,
Providence.

BRECK'S FLOWER FOOD
makes Health, Growth, Bloom and Color. A year's supply for 30 plants mailed for 40c. Concentrated, odorless, and safe. "Success with House Plants," 32 pages mailed free. Please mention this publication.
JOSEPH BRECK & SONS,
Everything for Farm, Garden and Lawn.
Boston, Mass.

Literature

A LACK OF ENTERPRISE.

The English correspondent of The Book Buyer states that some of the older English publishers recently have sustained heavy losses through lapses of copyrights. One instance mentioned is that of Messrs. Chapman & Hall, who long had the monopoly of publishing the works of Dickens and Carlyle. They have written off nearly $250,000 of their capital, which either has been lost or has become unavailable. It is stated that the great error into which they and other of the older publishing houses have fallen has been the reissuing editions from old plates. Their younger rivals, after general publication became possible, captured the market by resetting the selected volumes in modern and handsome style.

We have wondered, sometimes, as occasional American reprints have come to our table, if their publishers were not risking the same disaster. Unquestionably the hold which a popular author gains upon the public during the long period covered by the original copyright of his writings and its renewal does not yield to competition at once, and there is a certain value in the old and familiar forms of well-known books. Children, accustomed to the earlier editions in their parents' libraries, sometimes, when they establish homes for themselves, prefer to purchase editions familiar and dear to them rather than new ones, even if the latter be more attractive in some respects.

Nevertheless, the chief source of patronage for modern editions of old books probably is that portion of the public which has not been specially familiar with them in childhood, at least in the manner just described, and to this large number of readers the new issue, with its generally superior quality of paper, its clearer type, its better illustrations and its more tasteful binding, makes a convincing appeal. The popularity of the older one may not disappear in a day or a year, but little by little it will wane and the more attractive modern substitute will succeed to its popularity.

Competition among publishers is very great, yet most of those who start with sufficient capital and conduct business with proper enterprise ultimately succeed. The proportion of publishers who accumulate handsome properties to those who fail of success must be larger than in many other departments of business. But in publishing, as elsewhere, no greater mistake is possible than to depend too much upon the successes of the past. Great advances have taken place in recent years in the manner of making and issuing books, and, although sensationalism and recklessness always are as dangerous as they are lacking in good taste, there is perpetual necessity for genuine enterprise of the most spirited character.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF MODERN EUROPE.

This is the first volume of an elaborate work by Prof. C. M. Andrews. Beginning with the Congress of Vienna, the present volume discusses the subject as far as the years 1848 in France, 1849 in Italy and 1850 in Germany. The concluding volume will cover the period between those years and the present time. The method pursued is that of treating separate movements and subjects by themselves instead of pursuing the more common chronological manner. The latter method has the advantage of keeping the reader's eye upon different countries at the same time and of fixing more or less clearly in his mind the contemporaneousness of events, but is open to the objection of incompleteness, which is often productive of confusion. For this reason, principally, Professor Andrews has adopted the former, following out each movement or each subject under consideration, such as the Revolution in France or the Liberal Movement in Germany, by itself, so as to leave a clear and comprehensive impression concerning it before taking up any other. We incline to justify his decision. Certainly its merits are conspicuous. Another feature of his plan is the endeavor to depict the continuous development of the life and thought of Europe in a large, free way rather than the particular details. This involves the omission of much material which some readers may expect to find, but it accomplishes his purpose better than the opposite method.

The principal criticism which we are disposed to offer is that little notice is taken of England, except incidentally. The amount of space devoted to France—five chapters out of the ten, together with much additional mention in the other chapters—seems to be disproportionate, although we readily concede that French politics, and their influence upon those of other nations during the period discussed, was the most conspicuous fact of the situation. Nevertheless, we have received the impression that the work thus far is too largely a study of French history with incidental mention of Germany, Austria and Italy; and England, which, although less important, cannot safely be left out of the consideration, seems to have been treated far too much as if deserving merely of occasional allusion. But, admitting the author's right to choose his own plan for his own purpose, it will be conceded readily that he has done good work. A commendably candid spirit has ruled him and wide research, patient investigation, careful comparison of results and a lucid and effective presentation of them form a narrative which is interesting and also eminently trustworthy and instructive.

That it lacks something of the charm of histories covering a less broad field, and written more for the average reader than for the student and the man of some historical culture, is hardly a defect. And, so far as it be one, it is inevitable in the nature of the case. The book is enjoyably readable throughout. If the year of a given event were indicated more frequently, say at the top of the page, throughout the work, as is customary in some histories, the convenience of the reader would be greatly furthered. And if a table were supplied at the beginning or end, furnishing an outline of the course of thought of the chapters, that also would be most helpful. Perhaps this will be supplied in the concluding volume, and so as to cover the whole work. But these are small hindrances to the reader's enjoyment and profit. The author has caught very successfully the spirit of the French Revolution and has portrayed it with skill. His judgments of the characters and services of famous national leaders, such as Napoleon, La Fayette, Lamartine, Mazzini, Metternich and others, commends itself for its intelligence, impartiality and satisfactory completeness. His grasp of the larger schemes of politicians which directed and controlled national and international action and reaction—for example, the policy which Metternich for so many years enforced upon a large part of Europe with a success as conspicuous as it was generally mischievous—is firm and trustworthy.

We look forward to the succeeding volume with great interest, having been led up to the conclusion of these pages with a success which justifies the expectation of a similarly forcible and enlightened discussion of the equally important and interesting period covered by the last half-century. We recall at this moment no history of the same subject which brings out so clearly the alternations in European political history, the action and reaction, so to speak, of liberalism and conservatism striving for the mastery; the struggles of the absolutists, on the one hand, to suppress the growth of popular liberty and intelligence as applied to politics, and of the democratic spirit, on the other hand, to secure its legitimate rights and to embody them in lasting and practically serviceable forms. This vitally important part of the author's work has been accomplished with signal success, and therein he has rendered a permanent service. The book is adapted to be read rather than to be used as a text-book. That is, we should not recommend it so strongly for actual use in schools and colleges as for collateral reading in connection with courses of study upon European political history. And this, we think, is rather the author's intent. Nevertheless, in the higher institutions it might be used effectively for actual study, recitation and discussion. It is issued in a neat and substantial form. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50.]

RELIGIOUS.

The Search Light of St. Hippolytus [F. H. Revell Co. $1.00] is a volume by Rev. P. P. Flournoy, and Prof. W. W. Morse has supplied its introduction. It discusses the claims of the Romish Church in regard to the papal succession and infallibility, some of the doubts of modern rationalism as to the authority of the Scriptures and the genuineness of some portions of the Bible. St. Hippolytus holds an honored place in the list of Roman Catholic saints. His statue is in the Vatican at Rome, seated in a chair which, like the statue, is of marble. St. Hyppolytus has long been venerated by authority in the church. Mr. Flournoy's contention is, and he makes it very plain, that since the canonization of Hippolytus the discovery of this seated statue, on the back of whose chair are carved the titles of his writings, has furnished evidence from the words of the saint himself that is absolutely opposed to some of the most important claims of the church which unwittingly has canonized him. A study of the treatise Against All Heresies by Hippolytus, and other writings of his makes it plain not only that in his time, about the year 160, there not only was no pope and consequently no papal succession, but that some of the bishops who are now supposed to have been popes, notably Zephyrinus and Calixtus, were of utterly corrupt and indefensible character. In fact, Calixtus must have been an unconscionable rascal. From this source of evidence the author makes a strong and apparently unanswerable argument against the claim that the Roman Catholic Church made up the canon of the Scriptures and gave it authority. And he also discusses the evidence furnished by Tatian's Diatessaron and other early writings in their bearing upon the authenticity and trustworthiness of the New Testament, showing that they prove, sometimes even by their hostility to it, that the New Testament existed and was accepted by the Christian world as the inspired word of God. We cannot take space to go at length into the argument of the book, but we commend it to the students of the subject as a compact, graphic, interesting and reasonably conclusive discussion of the subject.

What All the World's a Seeking [George H. Ellis, $1.25], by R. W. Trine, is a pleasant and practical enforcement of the value of unselfishness in imitation of Christ. It contains nothing which has not been said a thousand times before; and often well said; nevertheless, it is fresh, interesting and impressive in its presentation of truth to a degree which justifies us in commending it. It is a wholesome and uplifting book which will do good to every reader.

Crudeness is conspicuous in the discussion or study embodied in Mr. H. J. Harald's book, The Knowledge of Life [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1 50]. He has not mastered the positions of enlightened Christianity, and he has no right to judge it without the knowledge of them. There is not much, if anything, in his book which has not been said often before and better than he has said it. Moreover, whatever one may think as to the subject of so called woman's rights, it is not so closely related to the main topic of his book as to warrant its discussion in these pages. He is an evolutionist, but not in the most intelligent sense. His conception of God is the spirit within every man that prompts him to all that is high or noble, warns against all that is low or degrading, and this God within one is the only God. There is a certain value, often great, in reading the works of sincere writers who differ radically from the reader's views of religion, or anything else, but unless one be in a far higher degree a master of knowledge and of its use in interpreting and impressing truths than the author of this book appears to be, the writings of other authors in general sympathy with him are much better worth public attention.

Four sermons by Rev. Dr. James Martineau are gathered into a neat little book entitled Faith the Beginning, Self Surrender the Fulfilment of the Spiritual Life [Macmillan Co. 50 cents]. They are practical and inspiring discourses, rich in spiritual earnestness and emphasizing vital Christian truth impressively. No one will easily guess from their suggestions that the author is not evangelical in his views, and Christians of all denominations will find profit in reading them. They are elevated in conception and press home vital obligations which never cease to make their demands upon the religious spirit.

From H. L. Hastings comes The Bible Triumphant. Twelve Dozen Skeptical Arguments Refuted [80 cents]. It is the work of Mrs. H. V. Reed and is a reply to a volume called 144 Self Contradictions of the Bible. Within the same covers is bound Infidel Testimony Concerning the Truth of the Bible, in which Mr. Hastings makes use of the parallel column to demonstrate the truth of Christianity, using Dr. Alexander Keith's Demonstration of the Truth of Christian Religion. Too much importance is attached by some to the precise reconciliation of all apparently contradictory details in the Bible, such as whether there were two blind men, or one, sitting by the wayside at Jericho who besought Jesus for healing. It is a matter of very small consequence whether there were one or two. But such books as this have a certain value in presenting reasons why the supposed self-contradictions may not be such. We are not sure that success is absolutely attained in all Mrs. Reed's efforts to reconcile apparent contradictions, but she at least succeeds in showing that mutual consistency often is not only possible but probable. Those who value such works as this, and there are not a few who do, will find this particular book worth examination.

A new edition of the Oxford Teachers' Bible [Henry Frowde $12 00] is sent us. This is a well-known and popular issue of the Bible, scholarly, convenient, complete and very handsome. All the customary collateral aids to study are included and we can say of this edition what we rarely are able to say of those small enough to be held in one hand, that, although the paper is thin, the type is large and clear. The edition is bound in limp leather covers and deserves to be commended.——Lenten Lays and Pœans of Praise [F. S. Blanchard & Co. 25 cents], by Rev. W. T. Sleeper, is a pretty little book of inspiring religious poems and is tastefully illustrated.

EDUCATIONAL.

The Story of Extinct Civilizations [D. Appleton & Co. 40 cents], by R. E. Anderson, is a new volume of the Library of Useful Stories, a very compact and tasteful series. It points out the value of the discovery of the famous Rosetta Stone and of recent Assyrian archæological explorations in enlarging our knowledge of pre-historic races, and goes on to describe the extinct Chaldeans and Babylonians, Egyptians, Hittites, Phœnicians and Hebrews, Arabs and Persians. The author believes in an antiquity of the human race greater than that accepted by some eminent scholars. but agreement upon this point is not likely to be attained at present. His pages are instructive and full of interest. They portray with considerable vividness the probable characteristics of the races considered.

Carlyle's Sartor Resartus [Ginn & Co. $1.40] is out again, this time in the Athenæum Press series. Prof. Archibald MacMechan has edited it. His special aims have been to render the book itself more intelligible to the reader, to indicate the relation between it and the author's actual life, and to explain the process of the growth of the production. It is an able piece of work, which students of Carlyle's writings will value as it deserves.——Mr. H. A. Guerber's pleasant volumes about the Greeks and the Romans have proved popular, and he now has written another, The Story of the Chosen People [American Book Co. 60 cents]. Old Testament material is used largely, of course, but the writer's point of view is not distinctively religious, although in no way antagonistic to religion. Beginning with the creation, it narrates the chief events in Jewish history down to the destruction of Jerusalem. It is necessarily sketchy, but it makes clear impressions, and its language is simple and well suited to young readers.

Prof. J. W. White's First Greek Book [Ginn & Co. $1 35] is shorter than his Beginner's Greek Book and can be completed in two terms, but it contains substantially the same material, the policy of abbreviation rather than omission having been adopted. It is at once scholarly and handsome. Viri Romæ [Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. 50 cents] is an old friend, and appears in a new dress in the Student's Series of Latin Classics, Mr. G. M. Whicher being responsible for it. It has its recognized place in the educational field, and this edition of it is admirably fitted to fill it.——From the American Book Co. also comes a serviceable little Handbook of Greek and Roman History [50 cents], by George Castegnier. It is a condensed dictionary of persons and places, sufficiently comprehensive for the use of ordinary pupils, and well gotten up. ——Meteorology must be a little aside, even yet, from the course of study in most high schools, but there is no knowing what the pupil of the future will be compelled to master. Prof. Frank Waldo's Elementary Meteorology [$1.50] is intended for high schools and colleges. It is an admirable book in its way and will introduce the pupil wisely and effectively to the process of mastering its subject, but we should think that the demand for it would be comparatively small at present.——Inorganic Chemical Preparations [Ginn & Co.], by Dr. F. H. Thorp, supplies specific instructions for a class of students which sometimes suffers for lack of them. It deals specially with the salts most used in the laboratory, or those of commercial importance. The raw materials, the use of which is required, are mainly inexpensive. The book puts special emphasis upon the importance of computation.

The colored and other pictures of national flags, together with fruits, flowers, etc., in Our Little Book for Little Folks [American Book Co. 30 cents] will attract the children, and they will be easily beguiled from lesson to lesson, until they will find that they have learned to read almost without knowing it. It is a capital book for beginners.——A good text-book for secondary schools, compiled by R L. D'Ooge, is Easy Latin for Sight Reading [Ginn & Co. 45 cents]. It contains selections from Ritchie's Fabulæ Faciles, Lhomond's Urbis Romæ Viri Inlustres and Gellius's Noctes Atticæ. It supplies models for written lessons, idioms, annotations, etc., is illustrated and printed handsomely.——The Students' Series of Latin Classics is enlarged by a new volume, New Latin Composition [Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. $1.00], by Prof. M. E. Daniell. It is based upon Cæsar and Cicero and is a revision of the author's Exercises in Latin Prose Compositions with important additions.——Greek and Roman Mythology [Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. $1.00], compiled by Professors K. P. Harrington and H. C. Tolman, is based upon Struding's Griechische und Römische Mytholgie which it undertakes to adapt to the needs of American students. The genesis and development of the myths are set forth clearly, and abundant references to useful illustrative literary passages are supplied.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Squares of Sevens [Harper & Bros. $1.50] is an odd publication. It sets forth an authoritative system of cartomancy, which E. I. Stevenson has edited with a preliminary notice, and alleges itself to be the production of an Englishman who wrote it something like 150 years ago. It describes a particular manner of arranging cards and the significance of the cards as thus arranged. The operation is not specially intricate but takes some time. As a good example of an old form of amusement, which many ignorant persons regarded as possessing real significance as bearing upon personal history, it possesses interest.—— There is a laughable dogmatism about such a book as The Complete Bachelor: Manners for Men [D. Appleton & Co. $1.25], which almost prejudices one against it, especially when it is published without the author's name. And one finds himself dissenting from some of its statements and refusing to surrender his own claim to possess good manners while he dissents. Some of the assertions are too positive and too inclusive, but the book contains certain things, nevertheless, which many readers will find helpful. It deals with dress, introductions and invitations, table manners, life at the country house, dances, sporting, traveling, weddings, funerals, etc., in a practical, direct and generally sensible fashion. Although many customs change greatly from year to year, such a book possesses enough pertinence to give it a certain value.—— Hunting [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50], by Archibald Rogers and several other sportsmen, is another issue in the Out of Door Library, following the volume on Angling which we recently noticed. It is spirited, instructive, entertaining and full of the very atmosphere of out-of-door life.

NOTES.

—— The Critic offers $15 worth of books to the person who will send in before March 30 the most successful list of the best twelve short stories of American authorship.

—— Dr. Nansen's work, Farthest North, is to be in two large volumes, with colored plates and other illustrations. The Harpers are to publish it. It covers his three years' Arctic experiences.

—— Mark Twain is writing a volume of essays for Messrs. Harper & Brothers' current series of Contemporary Essayists. Charles Dudley Warner and Col. T. W. Higginson also are contributing to the series.

—— Only 700 copies of Queen Victoria's new book are to be published in America. Of these 100 are to be on Japanese paper at $50 apiece, and the other 600 on fine paper at $15 each. The Century Co. will bring them out.

—— Prof. John Fiske has been lecturing on The Bacon-Shakespeare Folly, arguing that there is absolutely no reason why Shakespeare should not have written the plays attributed to him, and even if he did not write them there is no reason for supposing that Bacon did.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Boston.

GREEK ART ON GREEK SOIL. By James M. Hoppen. pp. 254. $2.00.

IMMORTALITY AND THE NEW THEODICY. By George A. Gordon. pp. 139. $1.00.

MACAULAY'S LIFE AND WRITINGS OF ADDISON. Edited by W. P. Trent. pp. 218. 25 cents.

MACAULAY'S JOHNSON AND GOLDSMITH. Edited by W. P. Trent. pp. 92. 25 cents.

MACAULAY'S ESSAY ON MILTON. Edited by W. P. Trent. pp. 87. 25 cents.

Ginn & Co. Boston.

THE NINTH BOOK OF VERGIL'S ÆNEID. Edited by Edward H. Cutler. pp. 178.

Lamson, Wolffe & Co. Boston.

THE FORGE IN THE FOREST. By Charles G. D. Roberts. pp. 311. $1.50.

Harper & Bros. New York.

BOUND IN SHALLOWS. By Eva W. Brodhead. pp. 271. $1 25.

IN THE OLD HERRICK HOUSE. By Ellen Douglas Deland. pp. 282 $1.50.

THE LAST RECRUIT OF CLARE'S. By S. R. Keightley. pp. 299. $1.50.

LITERARY LANDMARKS OF FLORENCE. By Laurence Hutton. pp. 81. $1.00.

BEAUTY AND HYGIENE. pp. 116. 75 cents.

THEORY OF PHYSICS. By Joseph S. Ames, Ph.D. pp. 513. $1 60.

Frederick Warne & Co. New York.

FOR SUCH IS LIFE. By Silas K. Hocking, F. R. H. S. pp. 439. $1.50.

THE DOG. By George Armatage, M. R. C. V. S. pp. 267. $1.00.

Maynard, Merrill & Co. New York.

MODERN BOOK-KEEPING. By J. L. Montgomery. pp. 240. 80 cents.

Christian Literature Co. New York.

A HISTORY OF METHODISM IN THE UNITED STATES. By James M. Buckley. Vol. I. pp. 472. $2.50.

C. W. Bardeen. Syracuse.

THE HAPPY METHOD IN NUMBERS. By Emily E. Benton. pp 96.

PAPER COVERS.

D. Appleton & Co. New York.

ARRESTED. By Esmé Stuart. pp. 320 50 cents.

Harper & Bros. New York.

SIX CUPS OF CHOCOLATE. By Edith V. B. Matthews. pp. 32. 25 cents.

A PREVIOUS ENGAGEMENT. By W. D. Howells. pp. 65. 50 cents.

MAGAZINES.

December. PROCEEDINGS OF THE SOCIETY FOR PSYCHICAL RESEARCH.

February. BIBLIA.—EXPOSITOR.—CHURCH REVIEW (Methodist).—BOOKMAN.—UNITARIAN.—QUIVER.—SANITARIAN.

March. FRANK LESLIE'S.

NEW BOOKS.

In the Crucible.

By GRACE DENIO LITCHFIELD, author of "The Knight of the Black Forest," "Only an Incident," etc. (No. 18 in "The Hudson Library.") 12mo, $1.25; paper, 50 cents.

"Miss Litchfield's stories have won for themselves an appreciative circle of readers, by reason as well of their interest as of their grace of style. The opening scenes of 'In the Crucible' are laid in Washington, and present an interesting picture of life in the Capital."

The Story of British Rule in India.

By R. W. FRAZER, LL. D. (No. 48 in "The Story of the Nations Series.") Fully illustrated. Large 12mo, $1 50; half leather, gilt top, $1.75.

"Such a universal history as the series will present us with on its completion will be a possession such as no country can boast of."—London Daily Chronicle.

"This admirable and scholarly series."—Nation.

History of Ancient Peoples.

By WILLIS BOUGHTON, A. M., Professor of English Literature, Ohio University. With 110 illustrations and 6 maps. 12mo, $2 00.

"Prof. Boughton's volume has been based upon the material presented in fuller detail in the ancient history group of The Story of the Nations Series. It has been prepared more particularly with reference to the requirements of higher class students of ancient history, but will be found also attractive reading for literary associations and for the general reader. The information presented in the Nations Series has been extended and revised from the reports of the latest ethnological and archæological investigations."

G. P. Putnam's Sons
New York and London.

THE GREAT
INAUGURATION NUMBER
OF THE CENTURY MAGAZINE
*****
MARCH
*****
RICHLY ILLUSTRATED.
New Portraits of President-Elect McKinley and President Cleveland
Taken specially for The Century.
Articles on
The President's Life in the White House,
The Nation's New Library,
Inauguration Scenes and Incidents, Etc., Etc.

SOUVENIR NUMBER.
All News-stands, 35 Cents.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

HARPER'S FOR MARCH

Captain Alfred T. Mahan's Paper
PREPAREDNESS FOR NAVAL WAR

shows the chances of conflict with European powers, and outlines a scheme for defence at sea.

THE AWAKENING OF A NATION
By Charles F. Lummis
Illustrated

THE LAST OF A GREAT BLACK NATION
By Poultney Bigelow
Illustrated

ASTRONOMICAL PROGRESS OF THE CENTURY
By Dr. Henry Smith Williams
Illustrated

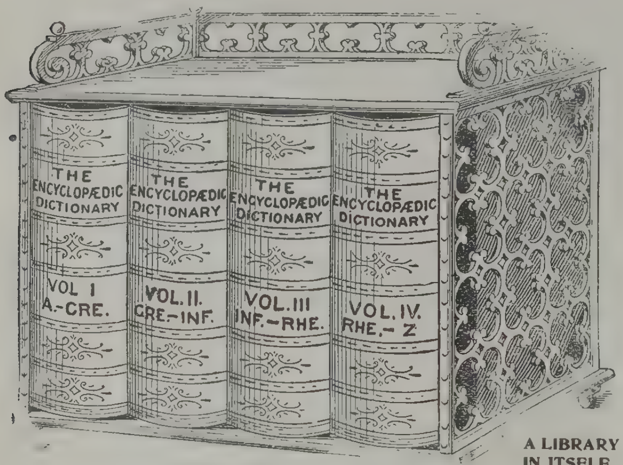
Another instalment of George du Maurier's "THE MARTIAN." Illustrated by the Author. Short Stories by Owen Wister, Charles Belmont Davis, and Hildegarde Hawthorne.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

FINAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

NOTICE TO READERS. To make sure of one of these special sets the $1 should accompany your letter. Remember, you have one whole week for careful examination, with privilege of returning if not entirely satisfactory and your money will be promptly refunded.

AT ONCE A DICTIONARY AND AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA.



THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY
VOL I A.-CRE.
THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY
VOL. II. CRE.-INF.
THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY
VOL. III INF.-RHE.
THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY
VOL. IV. RHE.-Z

JUST AS THEY LOOK.

A LIBRARY IN ITSELF.

Four massive volumes. Weight about 40 pounds.

50,000 Encyclopædic Topics. 250,000 words defined. About 5,000 Royal Quarto Pages. Cost $750,000 to produce.

Very few of these special sets now remain, and fair warning is given that these will soon be claimed. Every reader now knows that the work is not only an Encyclopædia, treating over 50,000 topics, but the most exhaustive Dictionary published, defining over 250,000 words, which is 25,000 more than any other. They also know that they are securing the work for less than one-third the regular price, and as a consequence orders are being received daily from all sections of the country.

In making an inventory at the close of our recent Introductory Distribution, we find in stock a few sets of The Encyclopædic Dictionary (in cloth and half-Russia bindings only) of which the sides of some of the volumes are slightly rubbed—not enough to impair their real value or appearance in your library, but sufficient to prevent their shipment as perfect stock at our regular prices of $42 to $70 a set. There being only a limited number of these sets we shall not go to the trouble of rebinding them, but have decided to let them go on easy payments of $1 down and $1 per month until paid for—less than one-third the regular price. By prompt action now, therefore, a number of ambitious and deserving readers of The Congregationalist who desire an up-to date reference library may now secure these special sets at about cost of making.

WHILE THEY LAST THEY ARE YOURS FOR A LIFETIME THIS EASY WAY: $1.00 DOWN SECURES IMMEDIATE POSSESSION of the entire set of four volumes. BALANCE PAYABLE - - - $1 MONTHLY.

Readers must not think that these sets are in any way incomplete or out-of-date. On the contrary, they are revised to June, 1896, and are from the regular stock, the prices of sets ranging from $42.00 to $70.00, according to binding.

WE GUARANTEE that these sets, except for slight rubs or abrasions on the sides of some of the volumes, are precisely the same as those sold at full prices; yet we cannot offer them as perfect stock, and our loss shall be your gain. This is positively the Greatest Bargain ever offered in a strictly high-class standard publication.

WHAT THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY IS.

It contains over 250,000 defined words—nearly twice as many as the largest "unabridged"—and is now accepted as an unquestioned authority wherever the English language is spoken.

It is one of the best of all encyclopædias, treating over 50,000 encyclopædic subjects—the Britannica has about 27,000. Just think of it! The whole range of human knowledge condensed for your instant use by such world famous scientists as Huxley, Proctor, and a hundred other educators of hardly less renown. It easily takes the place of any half-dozen other reference books that could be named.

It is an ornament to any library; beautifully printed, substantially bound, profusely illustrated, costing more than $750,000 to produce, the regular price being from $42 to $70 a set.

WHAT THE ABLEST CRITICS SAY.

"Not only are more words defined in this New Dictionary than in any other, but its definitions are more exhaustive."—Chicago Tribune.

"A standard reference book, treating every branch of knowledge and research in a masterly manner"—Philadelphia Press.

"It forms in itself a library for the busy man of affairs, the mechanic ambitious to advance himself in his line, or the student or apprentice just making a beginning."—Scientific American.

"At the very head of all contemporary publications of its kind and firmly established as one of the few great reference books of the world."—Christian Herald, N. Y.

REMEMBER These sets are as good for all practical purposes and look as well in your book-case as those for which we are getting regular prices We guarantee that the interiors and backs are not injured, and the bindings of our standard grade. The most serious injury to any set is no greater than might occur in a few days' use in your own home or office. As absolute proof of this statement, you may retain the set for careful examination for one whole week. If not entirely satisfactory you may return the volumes and money will be promptly and cheerfully refunded. THIS IS POSITIVELY THE CHANCE OF A LIFETIME.

HOW TO SECURE THIS GREAT BARGAIN. Bring or send $1.00 to the New England Newspaper Syndicate, 364 Washington Street, Boston, and entire set of four superb volumes, bound in cloth, will be forwarded. The balance is to be paid at rate of $1.00 monthly for 1 year. The first payment for either binding is only $1.00. In sending your first payment please designate the style of binding you desire, and indicate how you wish the volumes sent, as the charges for delivery must be paid by the purchaser. Remittances received after this special lot is exhausted will be immediately returned. The limited stock at our disposal cannot last long. To protect ourselves against bookdealers, etc., we must decline to send more than 2 sets to any one party, and in every case we must require the full name and address of each person receiving a set. We have only two styles of binding in this lot—cloth and half-Russia—about an equal quantity of each. Order at once, to make sure. The absolute confidence of the Syndicate that the work will be thoroughly appreciated, highly valued and cheerfully paid for is clearly shown by sending such a valuable set of books, the subscription price of which is from $42 to 70, on an advance payment of only $1. We refer to any newspaper in New York, Boston, Chicago or San Francisco. The Half-Russia Binding will be supplied for 25 cents additional per month.

NEW ENGLAND NEWSPAPER SYNDICATE, 364 Washington Street, Boston.

In and About Boston.

HALF A CENTURY OF Y. M. C. A. WORK.

A strong finish of forty-six years of growth and progress was signalized last Thursday evening by the Boston Young Men's Christian Association. A change of program from the usual annual gathering was carried out in the form of a great reception. The whole building was opened to the guests, who thronged the rooms on every floor by the thousands, many ladies being present. The president, Mr. Arthur S. Johnson, Mayor Quincy, Pres. O. N. Durrell of the State association, Mr. H. M. Moore, Supt. G. W. Mehaffey, Samuel Johnson, Esq., and the directors received, and were aided by a large reception committee of 100 members.

Floral decorations added great beauty to the interior, and the pleasure and interest of the visitors was further enhanced by gymnastic exhibitions, a concert and the serving of refreshments.

During the past year the building of the Y. M. C. A., on the corner of Boylston and Berkeley, has been especially improved, the most important changes being the reorganization of the educational work, larger efforts to extend the work in the six college branches of the city and vicinity, plans for more direct religious work and a more active physical department. In general, the whole system of educational, intellectual and spiritual equipment has been materially elevated.

The gratifying response from young men who have realized their need of such privileges as the association offers is emphasized by an increase in membership which adds $1,800 to the receipts of 1896, and the year closed with a record of 4,925 men having been associated with the organization. While expenses were extraordinarily large the current demands were all paid and a large part of the improvements were provided for.

THE MOODY MEETINGS DRAWING TO AN END.

This week Friday marks the termination of Mr. Moody's two months' evangelistic campaign, and it is expected that the interest which has marked them will be sustained to the very close. During the past week Mr. Moody has been working shoulder to shoulder with Francis Murphy, and thus Tremont Temple, Faneuil Hall and Park Street Church have been resounding with gospel temperance appeals. The big gathering in Tremont Temple last Monday morning was an evidence of the harmony which has marked the relations of the two evangelists during their entire stay in Boston. In fact, inasmuch as both have been boarding at the Hotel Bellevue they have been in daily consultation.

Mr. Moody's theme for several days last week was the Ten Commandments, and his enforcement of them, one and all, was searching and powerful.

THE MOODY MEETINGS FROM THE PRESS TABLE.

With the exception of one day I reported every service of the first six weeks of Mr. Moody's visit in Boston, and I never tired of turning around at the table to watch his thought mirrored in the faces of the men and women looking up at him. It has been said that the same people come to the meetings day after day. This may be true in some cases—in fact, one elderly woman with a dear, motherly face has sat in the same front seat at nearly every service—but it is not wholly true. Hardly ever will the same faces reappear for more than two consecutive services. Many people from out of town come to make a day of it. When this is the case they usually come in couples and hold to the same seats for both services.

Another assertion that those who attend are the well-to-do people, who are said to need preaching to least, one only has to sit at the press table to disprove. Many a pair of rubber boots have I seen stretched out towards my chair, many the coarse sweater, fitting tightly beneath a weatherbeaten face. In the front row near me, sat, one day, a man in frock and overalls, who, from the crock on his face, must have come directly from an engine-room or a coal wagon. When I first saw him the great company were standing to sing Coronation. He was singing away for dear life, and abstractedly pulling up his overalls suspenders which had fallen off his shoulders. Mr. Moody, that afternoon, was at his best, and as one pleading sentence followed another, nailed down by pathetic illustrations, I saw the fellow dig his knuckles into his eyes until his face was streaked with tear marks. All the same, I doubt if there was any one in the congregation that day who brought greater satisfaction to Mr. Moody, for he sat directly under the preacher's eye.

It is repeatedly asked, "In what does Mr. Moody's power lie?" As I have studied him from day to day trying to decide for myself this question I have singled out four principal elements which I would rank as follows. His evident sincerity. His absolute fearlessness. His eminently practical turn of mind. His unparalleled skill as a story-teller for the sake of illustration.

People ask, "Who go to the meetings?" and I answer, "Everybody." I noticed one day near the front row Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton. The next service there sat in the same seat a man whose wide-checked suit, horsy necktie and general make-up indicated the type commonly referred to as "sport." It was one of Mr. Moody's most earnest days. He seemed to wholly forget himself and Tremont Temple. I do not know what the ultimate effect on the man with the horseshoe scarf-pin will be, but as he straightened up when the service was over, and cast one last look up at Mr. Moody, where the ministers were crowded around him on the platform, he leaned over to me and said, "Say, he's a corker, ain't he?" M. B. T.

THE WORK IN NEWTON.

A quiet but earnest Christian work has been going on in Newton during the past two weeks, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, in which the pastors of the Baptist, Congregational and Methodist churches heartily joined. Dr. Edward Judson of New York was leader of the efforts. He is the son of the well-known pioneer missionary to Burmah and the efficient pastor of the Judson Memorial Church in New York city, which, with its wide-reaching and institutional ministries to the unchurched and the poor, is exerting a splendid Christian influence in the down-town portion of the city.

The personality of Dr. Judson is remarkably winsome, resembling in character and manner that of the late Dr. A. J. Gordon. His very face has the shine and good will of the gospel in it, while his quiet and refined methods of work, his manly and spiritual message, illustrated with apt poetic quotation and simple incidents of nature and life, give him rare power over men as a preacher. His methods are spiritual rather than spectacular. An unfolding of the truth, the reasonableness and privileges of the Christian life and a direct and frank appeal to his hearers to enter upon it now make up the message and method which have been used of God to greatly and quietly bless this community.

A volunteer chorus of young people, assisted by Mrs. Nellie B. Donovan, a gifted gospel singer, has furnished attractive leadership to the service of song, and for two weeks between four and five hundred have gathered each night in Association Hall or in the churches. Many of the young people have been led to begin a new life, and many others already church members have been revived in spiritual feeling and purpose. These services have been so helpful that they will be continued another week under the guidance of Dr. Judson's associate, Rev. L. M. Haynes, formerly of Troy, N. Y., who will conduct Bible readings each afternoon and preach each evening during the present week. W. H. D.

THE PLACING OF THE ARMENIAN REFUGEES.

The good work begun in November by the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. in the way of locating in comfortable homes the fifty-three refugees for whom it assumed responsibility is still going vigorously forward. It has involved much patience and tact on the part of those in charge, Mrs. Ruth B. Baker in particular, whom these exiled Armenians have with one accord denominated "our mother," has been most untiring in caring for them. Of the original fifty-three, thirty-eight were artisans, and nearly all were city men, consequently they were unsuited for farm work, and looked with horror upon the process of milking a cow. They are mainly young, unmarried men. Naturally the hard times have greatly increased the difficulty of securing them positions. All were anxious, not merely to earn their board, but enough more to allow them to send money to their destitute friends and relatives at home. Considering the terrible ordeal through which they have passed, it is not strange that they seemed at first subdued in spirit, and that even now letters come from them telling of bedewing their pillows with tears at night and of living over in their dreams the awful scenes which they have witnessed.

Most of these men belong to the old Armenian church. They are simple and childlike but that they are truly religious cannot be doubted. When a service was being held for them on one of the first Sundays of their stay, the pastor in charge asked for an Armenian Bible, and in a moment eighteen of them were able to produce copies which they would not leave behind even when fleeing for their lives. They are appreciative of all that is done for them, though it is hard for them to be content to earn only their keeping when their friends at home need relief so badly. Those who have been placed are scattered all over the State and the testimony from their hosts and employers is, on the whole, gratifying regarding their acceptability as members of American homes and their availability for work.

There are still a few for whom places are earnestly and urgently desired. The following list indicates what their abilities are. Are there not those among our readers who can suggest ways by which these needy children of persecution and sorrow may be provided for?

A young druggist, twenty-five, who speaks French fluently and English fairly well. He has a letter from Lady Henry Somerset testifying to his ability.

A machinist, twenty, well educated and trained in a good home. He speaks English well. He has worked for the Turkish Government for two or three years.

A tailor, twenty, who understands his business, and is in every sense a fine man.

A book-binder and gilder, whose wife is here, both cultivated people. He had a shop of his own with $2,400 worth of machinery when he turned the key for the last time as he was arrested and imprisoned.

A skillful barber, twenty-eight, a pleasant, reliable man. He is in desperate need of employment in order to send money to his family at home.

F. Hopkinson Smith's annual exhibit of pictures is visible now in the gallery of the well-known dealers near Park Street Church. Will his defense of the sultan and his ignorant, cruel charges against American Christian missionaries prevent many who respect his cleverness as an artist from seeing his pictures? Should the æsthetic delight triumph over moral indignation? These are interesting questions.

PHILLIPS BROOKS'S BROADENING INFLUENCE.

Trinity Church has just celebrated the completion of twenty years since its present noble edifice was reared. Dr. E. W. Donald's historical sermon contained this graceful tribute to his distinguished predecessor, Phillips Brooks, for whom Boston, irrespective of its denominational affiliations, still mourns:

> To thousands of people Phillips Brooks opened the doors of the Episcopal Church—to people who had long and honestly regarded her as too stiff, formal and ecclesiastic. Without arguments, he revealed the sacred mission of the church; he melted away the misrepresentations and misunderstandings of her true character; he showed how people in danger of lapsing into a condition of ecclesiastical homelessness, and perhaps of religious decay, might find a warm welcome and perhaps a theologically satisfactory resting place in Trinity; he made our church American, and stripped it of the last remaining semblance of an exotic. Fifty years hence this magnificent service of Phillips Brooks will be more widely and perhaps more chivalrously acknowledged than it is today.

UNION THEATER SERVICES.

A series of union religious services is now in progress in the city of Taunton, which is a distinct contribution to the solution of the problem of practical Christian unity. Eleven of the city pastors, representing the Congregational, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Unitarian and Universalist denominations, have joined hands in these services. The theater, seating 1,500 people, has been hired for the four Sunday evenings of February. Four of the eleven pastors were selected by ballot to be the successive preachers, each pastor voting for any four of the eleven that he desired. A chorus of 150 voices has been made up from representatives of the eleven churches, and leads the singing of the congregational hymns. The chorus have hymn-books, but the audience uses hymn sheets containing seventeen well-known hymns printed for these services. Four thousand invitation cards were distributed throughout the city by the people of the eleven churches. On these cards, among other announcements, are printed the names of the preachers, with the dates on which they will preach and the reassuring declaration that "no collection will be taken." The expense of the four services, amounting to about $130, was covered by private contributions secured by the pastors before the services began.

Before the opening service on Feb. 7 it was impossible to predict the attendance. The pastors, somewhat over-cautious, had informed the manager of the theater that probably the upper gallery would not be needed. But as the hour approached the streams of people from all directions showed that there had been an underestimate, and long before 8 o'clock, the time for beginning, the theater was crowded in every part, standing room and stage and all. It is estimated that about four hundred people were turned away. The service began with four hymns by chorus and audience. The Episcopal rector led in the Lord's Prayer. The Universalist pastor read a short selection of Scripture. One of the Methodist pastors offered a brief and earnest prayer. Then Rev. J. P. Forbes, the Unitarian minister, preached a short but powerful sermon on the subject, The Appeal of Christ and His Church to the World. In just one hour the service was over.

Would the people continue to come? It was a much discussed question during the week following. Apparently the first service only whetted the curiosity of many, for on the second Sunday evening the crowds were still larger, and the interest has in no whit abated.

Of course the principal object in view has been to reach non-church-goers. But a hardly less important object has been to impress upon the people of the city the fact that there is a common basis of truth underlying all denominational differences, and a spirit of Christian brotherhood among the pastors strong enough for real co-operative effort. All the Protestant denominations in the city are represented, and all the pastors in the city except two are co-operative. One of these, a Methodist, did not enter the plan for personal reasons, the other because he is an Episcopalian of High Church leanings.

It should be understood that these are not what are usually known as "revival" services. There are no after meetings. Nor is there any effort made to secure any visible expression from the audience of the desire to follow Christ. Whatever religious awakening may result will be indirect. Already the indirect results are apparent in the attitude of the community toward the churches.

The pastors have either given up their evening services for the month, or placed them at an earlier hour. And they feel abundantly satisfied with the experiment they have successfully tried to advance the interests of the kingdom of God. C.

As to revivals, "It is not the number of blossoms that declares the richness of harvest, but the number that set and mature. . . . The culture which is initiated by no conversion produces burnished hypocrisy. The conversion which is not followed by culture rarely survives." The Christian City, Methodism's wide-awake organ of metropolitan extension and evangelization, utters these sane remarks.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

The Congregational Home Missionary Society is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, No. 9 Congregational House, Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

Woman's Home Missionary Association, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00 Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer

American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

Woman's Board of Missions, Rooms 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

The American Missionary Association, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street.; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

The Congregational Church Building Society—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

Congregational Education Society.—(Including work of former New West Commission.) Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices, 10 Congregational House, Boston, 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

Cong. Sunday School & Publishing Society.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

Massachusetts Board of Ministerial Aid.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

Ministerial Relief.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev. N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

The Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

The Boston Seaman's Friend Society, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome. Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come.

Foreign Missionary Prayer Meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 o'clock A. M.

Boston Young Women's Christian Association, annual meeting, Berkeley Street Building, March 1, at 2 30 P. M.

Suffolk Branch, Woman's Board, annual meeting, First Ch., Waltham, March 2, 10 A. M. Basket lunch. Train leaves Union Station 9.10 A. M.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

The good financial outcome of an Interior church was attained in part, at least, by letting all the members of the church who were pledgers know through individual reports sent to them just how their own accounts with the church stood. Another suggestion from here, which would doubtless be appreciated elsewhere, is the acknowledgment of the members for the efficient leadership of the past year. Such a spirit of gratitude, in contrast with the disheartening criticism which often predominates, is an evidence of sympathy which must work good results throughout the succeeding year.

A Missouri church has a first-class record, both in attaching to itself the children and in missionary work. What church would not welcome also such an opportunity to extend its influence through the large number of teachers trained at its very doors?

A certain pastor prints a conspicuous note in the church calendar, urging adherents of both political parties to interest themselves in and attend the local caucuses. He thus extends his pastoral care to more than his own church membership.

If the arrangement by which a St. Louis church is made a distributing station of the Public Library for high grade books could be duplicated in other cities and towns, the usefulness of both institutions would be greatly augmented.

To church members of means, who purpose making their wills, we commend the thoughtful bequest to a California church. A permanent fund for the pastor's salary might oil the ecclesiastical machinery amazingly.

Oregon furnishes an illustration of what may be accomplished by the Holy Spirit through a devoted pastor and his wife, without recourse to special services or the help of an evangelist.

Among results of evangelistic meetings in Iowa we find a gratifying tendency of churches to outgrow their houses of worship. May this extension of the kingdom continue till it shall speedily fill the whole earth.

Not much more need be said to show interest in revival work than is said in a Maine item. When people generally give up their own pleasure for higher interests the quickening of their zeal is genuine.

Pastor and people should both be unwilling to pass such a beneficial annual event as has been observed in a New Hampshire town for two generations.

A Boston suburban neighborhood has made a good record for benevolences, judging by the report at its Congregational Club.

Pacific coast Congregationalists are only a step in advance of their Eastern brethren in removing to their new headquarters.

A new telephonic arrangement in a Connecticut church would seem to encourage staying at home on stormy Sundays.

It is with regret that owing to the holiday and the late arrival of news we are obliged to withhold several items of interest.

Of Special Note.

A unique use of our Handbook in a Massachusetts church.

How to increase the S. S. library in a practical way.

Sawing bees for the benefit of church woodsheds.

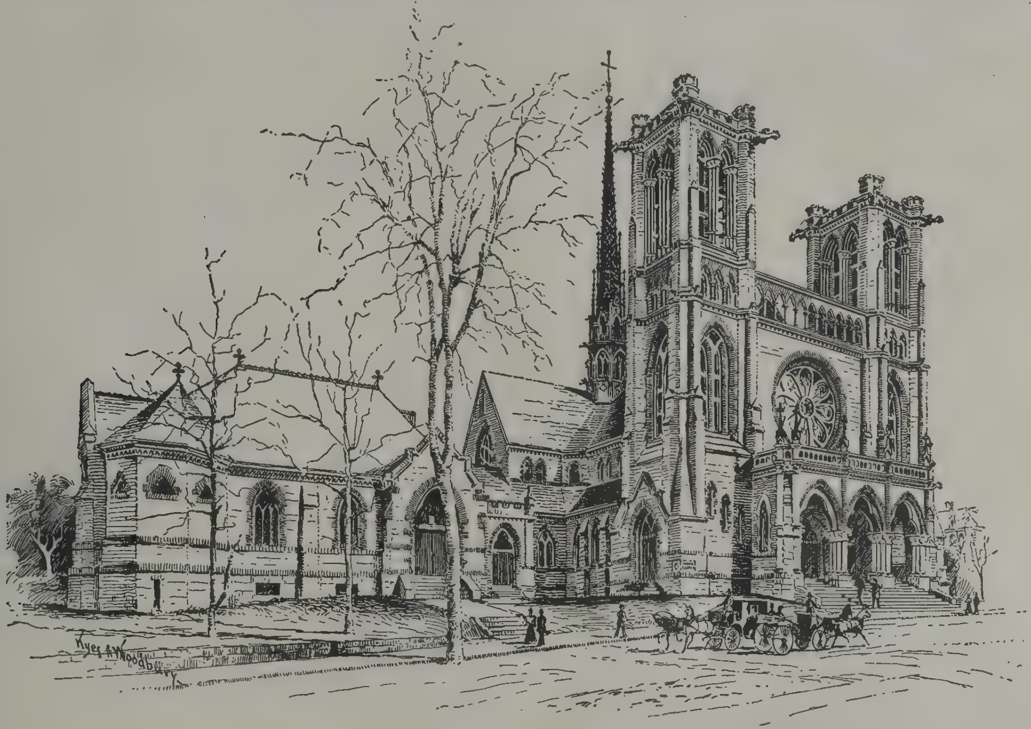
Accessions by families in North Dakota.

A needy field in British Columbia.

NEW BEGINNINGS IN WORCESTER, MASS.

Seldom does a church enter upon a new era o happily as did the Union Church, Worceser, last week. Formed by the consolidation f the old Union and Salem Street Churches, hich gave a membership of over 750, and ow strengthened by the installation of a pasor of sweet spirit and fine scholarship, and ne dedication of a magnificent edifice, it equipped for great power and usefulness.

The services began with an organ recital st week Tuesday evening, attended by a ongregation that filled the house to its utost capacity. On Thursday a council of irty-two churches met in the afternoon and stened to a clear, comprehensive and decidlly conservative statement of theological elief by the new pastor, Rev. John E. Tute, D.D. In the evening were the installing ervices, with sermon by Dr. C. M. Lamson, stalling prayer by Dr. Elijah Horr, charge the pastor by Dr. A. L. Conrad, charge to ne people by Dr. H. A. Stimson, and greetgs from Amherst College and Church by res. M. E. Gates, LL. D.



THE NEW UNION EDIFICE AND CHAPEL, WORCESTER.

Dr. Tuttle, who entered upon this pastorate st November, was born in Perry, Me., gradated from Amherst College in 1879, where he as a classmate of Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, and Yale Seminary in 1882. After a year of postaduate study at Yale in theology and New estament exegesis, he was ordained and inalled pastor of the Saugatuck Church, Westort, Ct., May 22, 1883. After a successful astorate of five years he was called to the entral Church, Jamaica Plain, to suceeed ev. G. M. Boynton. Dr. Tuttle was called, 1893, to the pastorate of the Amherst Colge Church and the chair of Biblical history nd interpretation, and in November, 1896, he ecame the pastor of Union Church, Worcesr. Amherst College conferred upon him ne degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1893. He lls many positions of honor, being a corpore member of the A. B. C. F. M., a trustee of artford Seminary and of the School for hristian Workers, Springfield. Mrs. Tuttle the daughter of Professor Stockbridge of mherst College and a graduate of Wellesley ollege, class of '80. Both Dr. and Mrs. Tute have been prominent in Christian Eneavor work, Mrs. Tuttle being for some time resident of the Massachusetts Junior Union.

The dedication of the memorial chapel took ace on the afternoon of Friday with sermon by Dr. H. A. Stimson. The dedication of the church edifice was held in the evening with sermon by Dr. Alexander McKenzie. The new building is of Gothic architecture of the same style as the Cathedral of Notre Dame at Paris. The plan is cruciform with two massive towers at the front and a tall slender spire rising from the intersection of the nave and transepts. The material is pink Milford granite with Longmeadow brownstone trimmings. The interior is in quartered oak in dark finish, and the walls are of a brown olive tint relieved with old gold decorations, which light up with great richness. The carpet, cushions and draperies are in purple.

There are three large rose windows of rich stained glass, one in front and in either transept, and beautiful stained windows beneath. The apse is occupied by the pulpit platform surrounded by the choir gallery raised high on rich Gothic arches. In the corners on either side of the choir is the magnificent organ built by George S. Hutchins of Boston. A large cable of electric wires connects the keyboard with the organ, so that the keyboard can be removed and used at any distance from the instrument. Four hundred and fifty incandescent lights in ground glass globes stud the open timbers and trusses overhead and shed a brilliant light. The extreme length of the edifice is ninety-three feet, and the greatest width at the transepts is eighty-nine feet, with a total seating capacity of 1,200.

At the left, and connected with the church, stands the memorial chapel, presented by Mrs. Moen and her children in memory of Philip L. Moen. The chapel is thirty-four feet by fifty-three, contains a sweet-toned pipe organ, seats 350 persons and is of the same material inside and outside as the meeting house. Back of the chapel and connected with it and with the church by a wide hall is the parish house, containing Sunday school rooms, class rooms, ladies' parlor, and in the basement beneath ample rooms for social purposes. The entire cost of the house of worship, including the lot, is $250,000. E. W. P.

A HEALTHFUL REVIVAL IN OREGON.

Huntington is a flourishing town and railroad center of eastern Oregon. Rev. David Leppert assumed the temporary pastorate five months ago, under discouraging circumstances, the church being nearly disorganized and reduced to 10 members. The congregation never exceeded 40 and oftener ranged from a dozen to 20. Mr. Leppert and his devoted wife went resolutely to work preaching and singing the gospel. During the week they visited from house to house. Mr. Leppert made frequent visits to the railroad yards, mingling with the employés and making personal appeals. As a result of their labors scores of people have been converted. The membership now exceeds 60. The edifice will hold 300 people, yet often is insufficient to accommodate the audiences. The Sunday school is flourishing. A strong Y. P. S. C. E. has recently been organized and has gathered in so many of the young leaders of society that balls and dancing parties, hitherto frequent, have been, in a measure, discontinued. The church is praying and looking forward to a still greater ingathering with the special meetings soon to begin. A free reading-room has also been established under the auspices of the church, the railway company granting the use of a comfortable room at the depot. This is well patronized, especially by the laboring men.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

Yale.

Special lectures last week were by Prof. D. G. Brinton of the University of Pennsylvania on Primitive Religious Expression in the Rite, by Mr. I. H. Bromley of New York on The Fall of the Second Empire, and a course of two lectures on Egypt by Prof. D. C. Eaton.——At the Semitic Club the Pirqe Aboth was read and discussed by Mr. W. Haskell, Ph. D.——The Leonard Bacon Club held an interesting debate on Resolved, That the recent action of the Manhattan Association of Congregational Ministers with relation to Dr. Lyman Abbott was timely and wise.——The Senior Class in sociology under Professor Blackman will visit New York, Feb. 25, 26, to study methods of social work. The class will be the guest of the Charities Association.——The Senior Class preacher last week was Mr. A. T. Harrington.

Pacific.

The new catalogue just issued shows a more careful classification of the varied work than has ever been given. The full "classical" course leads to the degree B. D. There are also four other courses including a lay training course and a class of special students.——The full number of students is 38.——Professor Lloyd read a paper at the Edwards Club, Feb. 6.——Dr. Mooar will deliver an address at the 25th anniversary of the San Francisco Presbyterian Seminary.——Professor Foster talked to the Bible class of university students at the Berkeley Church on a recent Sunday.——The students are generally attending the meetings of the evangelist, Mr. Munhall, in the city, and are some of them assisting in Christian work.——Conversions have recently occurred in several of the stations where students are laboring in the vicinity of Oakland.

CLUBS.

MASS.—At the meeting of the Newton Club, Feb. 15, the address was by Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D., who gave an elaborate historical sketch of Islam in Turkey. The outlook committee reported the total membership of the Newton churches as 2,419; the additions during the year on confession 59, by letter, 102; the net gain 78. The total benevolences amounted to $44,955. Three of the seven churches gave in benevolence more than they spent on home expenses.

At the meeting of the North Bristol Club, recently held in Taunton, Rev. E. M. Noyes of Newton gave an interesting address on The Problem of Congregationalism in Our Cities. The club has a membership of nearly 200 and is in a flourishing condition. Rev. T. C. Welles was elected president for the ensuing year.

Last Monday's meeting of the Boston Club, the first under President W. E. Barton's administration, took the form of a reception to Rev. Messrs. B. F. Hamilton, R. K. Harlow, A. McKenzie and A. H. Plumb, all of whom have served twenty-five years or more in their present pastorates. Their speeches abounded in reminiscences and the occasion was one of genuine good fellowship.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

DORCHESTER.—Neponset. A layman in the church has gathered into the Bible school a class of about 20 men, employés of a lumber company, most of whom have not attended Sunday school for several years. Last Sunday the pastor, Rev. E. C. Webster, exchanged with Rev. C. R. Tenney of the Grove Hall Universalist Church. The pastor is president of the Dorchester Ministers' Union.

Massachusetts.

CHELSEA.—Central. The Women Workers number in all nearly 600, and work in three departments—city, nation and world. Seven suppers and socials have been held in a year, with an average attendance of 240 at suppers and 275 at socials. The S. S. average attendance for January was 563. Special attention is paid to good attendance by individual scholars. The kindergarten class is outgrowing its quarters. The total receipts of the church last year were $13,727, exclusive of $940 for missions.——First. The annual gathering this year was made an evening reception of a social character held last week and enjoyed by a large proportion of the church and by former members and representatives of sister churches. Pleasing music and decorations and costumes suggestive of Washington's time were features of the occasion.

EVERETT.—First. Rev. E. T. Pitts, formerly pastor, preached in exchange Feb. 14. He was warmly greeted by congregations that filled the house morning and evening. All rejoiced at his evident complete restoration to vigorous health and usefulness. The S. S. average for the past quarter has been over 500. Rev. A. B. Patten is pastor.

WEST SOMERVILLE.—Day Street has planned to join in revival services with the Third Universalist Church during Holy Week. Three meetings will be held in each meeting house. Mr. Francis Murphy has promised to lead one of the meetings. The edifice has been entirely renewed and the congregations now average 400. An extra effort is to be made this year to increase the gifts of the church to missions. A vote of the church committee devotes all our mission giving this year to the six societies. The church raised $1,200 at the dedication. There are now nearly 300 communicants. Rev. Peter MacQueen is pastor.

MALDEN.—Maplewood. Last year was one of heavy losses, several pillars of the church having been taken away by death. On the other hand, 80 new members have been added during the last two years, the majority on confession. Evangelistic services, under the able leadership of Rev. E. E. Davidson, were held two weeks beginning Jan. 31. About 40 persons signified a desire to lead Christian lives, of whom it is evident a number have been converted. The church was never stronger spiritually and the special meetings go on under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. W. A. Evans A Sunday morning prayer meeting to invoke God's blessing on the work of the day has been sustained two years and is a great source of profit. The church has just become incorporated.

NEWTON.—Auburndale. Members were received at every communion last year, 35 in all, 12 on confession. Including 11 additions received this year, the present enrollment is 372. Benevolences last year amounted to $8,077 and home expenses to $6,518. Rev. C. M. Southgate is pastor.——Eliot, at its annual meeting, reported a corrected list of 595 members, a Sunday school enrollment of 411 and benevolences of $19,805, of which $5,798 went to foreign missions, $4,254 to home missions, $2,755 to Boston city missions and $1,330 to the American Missionary Association.

MEDWAY.—Village. The completion of 25 years' service as pastor by Rev. R. K. Harlow, Feb 13, was observed last week. He preached a commemorative sermon Feb. 14, and a public celebration was held the 17th, at which Rev. E O. Jameson, for 22 years pastor at East Medway and Millis, presided. Letters were read from Rev. William Carruthers, who was on the installing council, and William B. Wright, D. D., of Buffalo, who preached the sermon, also from other interested persons. Addresses were made by Rev. Jacob Ide, the oldest minister in the conference, and Rev. F. C. Putnam, the youngest, also by Rev. Messrs. Calvin Cutler, L. R. Eastman and F. E. Sturgess, D. D. A beautiful silver loving cup was presented to Mr. Harlow by his people. This church has not been without a pastor during its entire history of 58 years, as Mr. Harlow was settled as colleague of Rev. David Sanford, its first pastor.

WINCHESTER.—First shows in its annual statement a total membership of 566 and a S. S. roll of 440, with a home department of 226. The C. E. Society has a list of 106 members. Total expenses of the church and society were $13,105, including benevolences of $5,078. The calendar, which is added to the printed statement and which reviews the church year of 1896, is a helpful idea as an aid in planning for the future. Rev. D. A. Newton is pastor.

WORCESTER.—Pilgrim increased its benevolences during 1896 from $1,200 of the preceding year to $2,548. It also met all home expenses and paid over $1,900 on its mortgage indebtedness. After meetings have been held at the close of the Sunday evening service since the first of January, at which the attendance has frequently reached 100. About 25 persons have expressed a desire to become Christians. Among them are several from the non-church-going class. Rev. Alexander Lewis is pastor.——Piedmont's benevolences last year amounted to over $7,000.——Immanuel held a rally Feb. 17, with services and addresses by neighboring pastors in the afternoon, followed by supper, roll-call and consecration service in the evening. Nearly all of the 119 members responded.——Dr. Daniel Merriman read a scholarly paper before the Monday Ministers' Meeting on The Preacher's Theology.——The C. E. and Epworth League unions have presented resolutions to the chief of police, asking for better enforcement of Sunday laws. The chief of police responded by reading the law to the officers and instructing them to report violations. The result is that tobacconists, fruit dealers, druggists and newsdealers either close up or restrict their sales to legalized articles.

NORTH BROOKFIELD.—First. By the earnest efforts of the pastor, Rev. J. L. Sewell, an organization known as the First Club has been effected among the young men and those more advanced in years. They meet for discussions and assist in the Sunday evening services to some extent. At the recent parish meeting arrangements were made to collect the deficit of $200 and it was decided to have quartet singing the coming year.

SPENCER.—The pastor, Rev. S. W. Brown, has been obliged, on account of ill health, to take a vacation, and has sailed for Florida His necessary absence is regretted by all. The first of a series of monthly missionary evenings was successfully tried Feb. 12, according to a plan of the pastor, by which the entire field is covered during the year. Assignments of essays or addresses to different members of the church have been made out, together with a carefully prepared list of all the best helps bearing upon the topics.

ENFIELD.—Last week the C. E. Society, at a missionary meeting with the topic What Our Denomination is Doing, distributed The Congregationalist Handbook to various members to use the epitome there given on particular subjects as a reading, or as the basis of independent remarks. The meeting was one of the most instructive of the season. The pastor, Rev. G. H. Hubbard, is preaching a course of evening sermons on spiritual coins and counterfeits.

Maine.

SACO.—First has been blessed lately with unusual prosperity, spiritual and financial. The congregations have largely increased since Rev. P. H. Moore became pastor, nearly four years ago, and over 50 have been added to the church. The Sunday school has gained in members and interest, especially since the introduction of the Bible Study Union Lessons. Nearly $2,900 were raised in 1896 for home expenditures and $430 for benevolences. The community is enjoying the fruits of the pastor's foreign tour of last summer in a series of delightful lectures given Monday evenings in the church. Sunday evening lectures are also fully attended and by many who otherwise would not go to a church service.

WOODFORD.—At the recent roll-call 226 members responded out of the 315. The Ladies' Circle has raised $350 for the building fund, beside contributing barrels to missionaries at the South and at home and buying carpets for the chapel at a cost of $225. The additions last year were 23 and benevolences $1,400. The Sunday school numbers 381, and raised $373.

NORRIDGEWOCK.—Revival services, with the help of Evangelist Tucker, have awakened much attention, and other engagements have been freely given up to attend the meetings.

New Hampshire.

CAMPTON.—Almost every year since the parsonage was built, in 1820, the church has held a meeting called a "donation visit." The honored custom is still observed. Feb. 10, 100 persons or more met at the parsonage in this social gathering, with supper, speaking, prayer and singing, and left with Rev. Robert Ford and family about $60.

Connecticut.

NORTH GREENWICH.—The recent dedication of the new meeting house was a day to be remembered by this people. The former building was burned just before a service in the winter of 1895. Efforts were at once put forth and the destroyed building is now replaced by a house which cost, with the furnishings and bell, $6,550, nearly all of which is provided. The exercises included a reception, an address of welcome by Rev. W. P. Alcott, a former pastor, a sermon by Rev. Dr. H. A. Stimson, the prayer by Rev. R. T. Hall, and addresses by Rev. Messrs. R. T. Hall, W. P. Alcott and J. E. Zeiter. Rev. Levi Rogers is pastor.

MERIDEN.—First has held dedicatory meetings this month in Bethany chapel under the direction of Rev. Asher Anderson. It is possible that this chapel and its meetings may be the nucleus of a third Congregational church in due time. Special services held by the church for four weeks resulted in large numbers signifying their desire to lead Christian lives. Special men's meetings have been particularly productive of good.

BRISTOL.—Union revival services have been marked with an interest not seen for years. The first week there were about 300 conversions. The three weeks' labor resulted in over 500 expressing their intention to lead a Christian life. At one of the last meetings cards were signed signifying the choice of churches. The pastors are now busy calling and arranging for the reception of new members.

WILLIMANTIC.—First. The first mention made of the Ladies' Aid Society was in 1801 Later it earned its funds by knitting socks. It has had an active existence and provided many improvements for the church and chapel. Its latest move was to remodel the interior of the meeting house, redecorating it and the chapel and refurnishing both at a total cost of $2,192.

TOLLAND.—Resulting from the work of the agents of the Connecticut Bible Society, 35 persons have been enrolled as beginning the Christian life. More than one-third of the Protestant population are not represented in church or Sunday school. Eighty-eight Bibles were distributed and 57 persons were induced to join the home department of the Sunday school.

NEW FAIRFIELD.—The society held its first meeting in eight years Feb. 4 and a new set of officers were elected. The society has a house, parsonage and a good income, and it is proposed to put new life into the organization and call a pastor. Since 1889 a Baptist clergyman has supplied. The membership numbers 22, 10 of whom are non resident.

STONINGTON.—First. During 1896 there were added on confession 24 and by letter eight. The regular offerings for benevolent objects at the church service were a little larger than during the previous year, which were the largest in the history of the church. Rev. J. O. Barrows is pastor.

MIDDLETOWN.—First received 37 new members last year, making the present total 522. The benevolences amounted to $5,064. A legacy of $5,000 from the late Miss Susan Clarke was received. The average S. S. attendance was 63 per cent. of the membership.

GUILFORD'S present membership is 303. The Sunday school numbers 239. The benevolent offerings were $1,147. The gross membership in all departments has fallen off slightly, but the average attendance is increased.

NEW BRITAIN.—Prof. D. N. Camp on a recent Talk Night gave an interesting address on Why Young Men Do Not Attend the Church. He showed by statistics that only 33 per cent. of the church members in this State are men.

Norfolk.—The telephone connection with the meeting house has been perfected so that the sermon Sunday morning can be distinctly heard throughout the local circuit. The ladies have sent a barrel of clothing to Alabama valued at $100.

West Hartford.—First, organized 1713, has a free library and reading-room which occupy a portion of its building and contain 2,100 volumes and a good supply of current reading matter. Rev. T. M. Hodgdon is pastor.

Montville Center is having a quiet work of grace, Rev. G. H. Morss, pastor. Through the aid of the Holy Spirit Christians are being helped; S. S. teachers are deeply moved for the salvation of their classes

Rev. I. N. Earle is conducting a special series of meetings in Thompson.——The improvements completed at East Woodstock arrange that the choir now occupies a platform in the front of the church. ——Rev. F. P. Waters, pastor Third Church, Waterbury, is recovering from an attack of nervous prostration.——The recent concert and supper at Putnam netted $50 for the memorial window fund, and one was put in in memory of J. Astor Broad.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

Mt. Vernon—Vernon Heights, just organized in the new and growing district of this town, was recognized Feb. 16 with 20 members, of whom five are males. The Sunday school has 74 members and the Junior Y. P. S. C. E. 34. The church was gathered and organized through the acceptable labors of Rev. F. B. Kellogg. The afternoon session was followed by a bountiful collation and the hall overflowed at the public services in the evening, in which Rev. Messrs. W. H. Kephart, H. M. Brown and N. M. Pratt participated. Dr. A. J. F. Behrends preached the sermon, Dr. S. H. Virgin addressed the church and Rev. L. F. Buell gave the right hand of fellowship. The interest of the occasion was hightened by the presentation of a silver communion set by the First Church, Mt. Vernon, as an expression of loving fellowship. An eligible site for an edifice has been secured.

Rochester.—Plymouth. A large audience gathered the evening of Feb. 14 in commemoration of Frederick Douglass's life here. The meeting was addressed by Susan B. Anthony, Rev. Anna Shaw, Mrs. Mathews and Rev. W. F. Kettle, the pastor. Mr. Douglass worshiped here in the early years of the church. One hundred dollars were raised towards a Douglass monument.

Moravia.—At a church meeting held Feb. 10 it was voted not to accept the resignation of Rev. W. H. Hampton. The pastor has recently lost his wife. He will take a church near the coast for a year.

West Groton, Rev. J. Cunningham, pastor, is having an inspiring spiritual interest.

New Jersey.

East Orange.—Trinity is making extra efforts to take a share in the A. M. A. jubilee fund. The S. S. superintendent has urged all who can spare some good books in their homes for the library to offer them for the good they will do other readers.

Closter has recently held good week evening meetings with the Baptist church of Demarest.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

Columbus.—Eastwood has extended a call to Rev. Dr. J. C. Jackson, Jr., of this city. He has been 21 years a Methodist minister in central Ohio, filling some of the most responsible charges. He has had charge of Eastwood pulpit and pastoral work since the resignation of Rev. R. S. Lindsay. The call is enthusiastic and unanimous.

Kent has begun the fifth year under the pastorate of Rev. M. P. Jones. The annual reports showed bills paid in all departments. The specially careful work of the trustees was commended highly. Accessions during the year numbered 16.

Illinois.

Melvin is much encouraged under the labors of its young pastor, Rev. W. B. Humphrey. Eight persons have been received into membership, six on confession. Four others, who had dropped out of church work, have been reinstated. Recently Prof. O. C. Grauer of Chicago Seminary visited the parish and preached to the Norwegians both in English and in their own tongue. This "Norse Day" proved of great interest and profit. Many of the hearers had their hearts opened, and have been by that means led into closer fellowship with Christian people.

Michigan.

Saginaw has adopted the Bible in place of the ordinary S. S. lesson quarterlies. It has also introduced by vote of the church an annual membership fee for affiliation. The Ladies' Society has begun the year well with $120 taken at a recent supper.

Conklin, organized in 1896, completed and dedicated its new house of worship Feb. 16. This is the only church in the village, all denominations cordially uniting. John Stapleton is pastor.

Wayland dedicated a new house, Feb. 15, raising $400 that day to complete its cost, $2,200, of which the C. C. B. S. furnished $400. Rev. F. P. Sprague is pastor.

Grand Rapids Association has all of its 40 churches housed but one.

Wisconsin.

Rhinelander.—Union. The council which met to consider the action of Rev. J. H. Chandler in his resignation of the pastorate expressed sympathy with, and approval of, the mutual action of pastor and people. They recorded the noble record of the three years' work of this pastorate, which, from small beginnings, has enabled the church to reach a position of financial independence, lifting a burdensome debt and placing the church on a solid basis, the spiritual growth and the cordial relations existing between pastor and people.

Janesville, after nearly a year being pastorless, has called Rev. R. C. Denison of St. Louis, Mo. He is a graduate of Amherst, spent two years at Chicago Seminary and two at Andover. His first pastorate was at Little Rock, Ark., and he lately supplied Compton Hill Church, St. Louis.

West Rosendale.—Ex-Pres. E. H. Merrell, in addition to college duties, is pastor of this church. He has the church organized into working bands who do most of the pastoral visiting. Special meetings recently held resulted in several conversions.

Menomonie's parsonage has been remodeled at an expense of $1,400. An important feature was the addition of a large room for club meetings of the

Continued on page 283.

Purify

Your blood with Hood's Sarsaparilla at this season. These are words of wisdom. Your blood is now loaded with impurities which have accumulated during the winter months, owing to close confinement, diminished perspiration and other causes. These impurities may develop into serious troubles unless they are promptly expelled. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla now and ward off attacks of typhoid fever, pneumonia, bronchitis, and that tired, languid, debilitated condition which so often makes spring a dreaded season. The peculiar toning, purifying, vitalizing qualities of Hood's Sarsaparilla are soon felt throughout the system. This medicine creates an appetite, strengthens the stomach and rouses the liver and kidneys. It is what the millions take to purify and enrich their blood and give them strength. Be sure to get Hood's, because

Your

Blood

Hood's
Sarsaparilla

Is the Best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier
Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Vapo-Cresolene
Cures While You Sleep,
Whooping Cough,
Croup, Asthma,
Catarrh & Colds.

CRESOLENE when vaporized in the sick room will give immediate relief. Its curative powers are wonderful, at the same time preventing the spread of contagious diseases by acting as a powerful disinfectant. Harmless to the youngest child. Sold by druggists. Descriptive booklet with testimonials free.

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 69 Wall St.
Schieffelin & Co., New York, Sole Agents.

IN SMALL LETTERS.

You recall the story of the child, who, knowing how to spell the word "rat" but not the word "mouse," said that mouse was spelled just the same as rat, only in smaller letters.

This child's crib in white iron and brass is just the same as our architectural bedsteads, only it is spelled in smaller letters. The sizes of the parts are all in the same ratio, but the whole bedstead is on a reduced scale. It is a superb production in miniature. It is a vest pocket edition of a noted classic.

Being tubular, it is light, and there are no sharp corners or angles in any part. It is practically indestructible and cannot be bent, dented, or broken by the severest usage. It can be washed in every part. There are no cracks or crevices for dust.

We show a large assortment and our prices are the lowest in this city.

General Catalogue for 1897. Square octavo, 256 pp., 300 illustrations. Sent to any address on receipt of five 2-cent stamps for postage.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

$300.00 in CASH

A 25-cent Pattern

This New Shirt
Waist No. 6998.

FREE!
To Every One.

HOW many words do you think you can spell correctly with the letters in the word "PATTERNS" using each letter as desired, but not more times than it appears in "PATTERNS?" Verbs, pronouns, adjectives, nouns, adverbs, plurals, allowed. Words spelled alike, but having different meanings, count as one word. Use any standard dictionary. All legitimate English words count. Proper nouns, prefixes, suffixes, obsolete and foreign words do not count. Work it out as follows: Pat, Pen, Pens, Reap, Set, Ten, At, Net, etc.

Our Offer.—We will pay $100 for the largest list, $50 for the second largest, $25 for the third, $10 each for the next five, $5 each for the next ten, and $1 each for the next twenty-five. That is to say we will divide among forty-three contestants the aggregate sum of $300, according to merit. Don't you think you could be one of the forty-three? TRY IT.

Our Purpose.—The above rewards for mental effort are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to MODES, by May Manton, the most popular up-to-date Fashion Magazine in the world. Its 36 pages, replete with beautiful illustrations of the latest styles in ladies', misses' and children's garments, make it a real necessity in every household; the Designs and Fashion Hints, being by May Manton, render it invaluable as an absolutely reliable Fashion Guide.

Our Conditions.—You must send with your list of words 25 cents (stamps or silver) for a Three Months' Trial Subscription to MODES.

Our Extra Inducement.—Every person sending 25 cents and a list of 15 words or more, will, in addition to three months' subscription, receive by return mail a pattern of this stylish shirt waist No. 6998 (illustrated above), in any size from 32 to 44-in.

Our Aim.—The present monthly circulation of MODES exceeds 100,000. We aim to make it 200,000.

This contest will close April 15th next so the names of successful spellers may be published in June issue of MODES, mailed May 15th, but SEND IN YOUR LIST AT ONCE. For our responsibility we refer you to any Mercantile Agency. Address:

MODES FASHION MAGAZINE,
Dept. 568, 130 WHITE STREET NEW YORK.

Embroideries

We offer 10,000 yards of Embroideries which a leading importer has just sold to us at a great sacrifice. These Hamburgs are the best of the kind ever landed at the port of New York. They are in neat, fine patterns, and have fast, washable edges, which makes them superior to many goods sold in this market.

The Prices we make are as follows:

4c, 5c, 6c, 8c, 10c, 12½c

PER YARD.

Retail prices should be 7c. to 37c. a yard.

ORDER BY MAIL.

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,

Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

The Standard American Brand : : : : Established 1860

SPENCERIAN

DROP US A LINE
If you wish to select a STEEL
PEN suitable for your handwriting

Sample Card SIXTEEN PENS, different patterns, for every style of writing, including the VERTICAL SYSTEM, sent prepaid on receipt of TEN CENTS.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO.
450 Broome Street, New York, N. Y.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER,
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

8% Municipal Warrants Safe as bonds and pay much better. Write for details. ROBT. E. STRAHORN & Co., Equitable Building, Boston.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Once more the steel rail situation has been the predominating feature of the business world. We believe we state an as yet unrecognized truth, that the dissolution of the steel rail pool has been the most important event that has happened in American trade for several years. The break in the price of steel rails has resulted in orders for nearly 1,000,000 tons within practically a week. These enormous orders mean business for the steel companies, work for employés and traffic for the railroads, all of which are needed in the present condition of trade.

As to the general movement of merchandise, it continues rather slow, but there is a gradual growth of improved feeling in financial and commercial circles, which is bound to be reflected in time in an increasing demand for goods. There is plenty of room for improvement in prices for staples, but higher values will keep pace with the demand.

In wool the week has witnessed a fair business. Prices have ruled firm and it is probable that sales would have been considerably larger had holders been willing to sell at former values. Cotton goods are slow of improvement, but it is undeniable that the tone is slightly stronger.

In the money market rates remain at the former low basis. The accumulation of funds is enormous, owing to the lack of demand from mercantile and speculative circles. Note brokers complain not of the difficulty of selling commercial paper, but of the lack of such paper in the market.

In speculative circles there is much apathy and little interest. The large Wall Street interests are not in the market, at least they are not active, and the favorable aspects of the situation prevent the bears from venturing out into too deep water.

Marriages.

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

HARTWELL—WENTWORTH—In Boston, Feb. 17, by Rev. C. B. Turner, George D. Hartwell of Lincoln and Carrie I. Wentworth of Boston.

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

FIFIELD—In Altmar, N. Y., Feb. 8, at the residence of her son, Rev. C. W. Fifield, Mrs. S. A. O. Fifield, widow of the late Rev. Winthrop Fifield, aged 75 yrs. She has been an invalid for 14 years, and was at one time secretary of the New Hampshire Maternal Association.

MURDOCK—In Clifton Springs, N. Y., Feb. 16, Rev. John N. Murdock, D. D., LL. D., honorary secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, aged 76 yrs. From 1857 to 1863 he was pastor of the Bowdoin Square Baptist Church, Boston, and since then has been active in missionary work.

PERKINS—In W. Springfield, Feb. 18, Josiah, aged 77 yrs., son of the late Rev. Jonas Perkins, and father of Rev. Sidney K. Perkins.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER.
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.
On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

Sarsaparilla Sense.

Any sarsaparilla is sarsaparilla. True. So any tea is tea. So any flour is flour. But grades differ. You want the best. It's so with sarsaparilla. There are grades. You want the best. If you understood sarsaparilla as well as you do tea and flour it would be easy to determine. But you don't. How should you? When you are going to buy a commodity whose value you don't know, you pick out an old established house to trade with, and trust their experience and reputation. Do so when buying sarsaparilla.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been on the market 50 years. Your grandfather used Ayer's. It is a reputable medicine. There are many Sarsaparillas—but only one Ayer's. It cures.

Cheque Bank Cheques

Furnished in book form. The purchaser draws and signs them himself when he wants to remit. Payable in every country of the world. Certified by the Cheque Bank, London. Write for particulars to

Agency of the U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
Frederick W. Perry, Manager,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

Want an Investment for 1897?

I am furnishing shares of the Capital Stock of the Humboldt Orchard Company—owning an extensive prune orchard in Humboldt County, California, which will be in bearing next year—on the following basis:

One-half its par value in ten equal monthly installments, without interest, or six per cent. discount for spot cash. Other half payable out of first dividends declared.

Full information on application.

S. I. ALLARD, Secretary, Eureka, Cal.

WESTERN MORTGAGES

DEFAULTED AND OTHERWISE,
Bought for Cash.
CHAS. E. GIBSON, 45 Milk St. Boston, Mass

7 PER CENT. NET.

First Mortgage Loans on Improved Farms in the Wonderfully Fertile Red River Valley and in North Dakota and Minnesota. 20 years of experience in the business, and an actual residence of over 8 years in the Red River Valley and of over 22 in Minnesota and North Dakota. A personal knowledge of lands and values. Loans only made to industrious, thrifty farmers, on well improved farms. I give my personal supervision to the business. Loans made in your name and interest coupon-notes and mortgages and applications sent to you and held by you. Interest collected by me and forwarded to you by New York Check. Funds now earning you only 2, 3, or 4 per cent. in Savings Banks will here earn you 7 per cent.—about doubling your income. Remit funds for investment by New York or Boston draft, or by personal check payable to my order. Address community. Rev. and Mrs. J. W. White held a formal opening at its completion.

E. P. GATES.
2628 Portland Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Continued from page 281.

THE WEST.

Missouri.

ST. LOUIS.—The Congregational Messenger has made its appearance. It is intended, in a measure, at least, to take the place formerly held by Congregational Life, furnishing a medium of communication for the churches and affording limited space for announcements. Rev. R. M. Sargent, D. D., has been chosen editor.——Compton Hill, under the direction of the new pastor, Dr. D. W. Fisk, has opened a well equipped reading-room, and indications point to the adoption of some advanced methods of work.——Pilgrim. A mass meeting, under the auspices of the various young people's organizations in town, was held Feb. 11 in this edifice, in the interest of the city poor.——Fountain Park. An arrangement has been made with the Public Library to have several hundred books kept at the church to be used by members of the Sunday school and congregation. The books are returned to the library and exchanged at the end of each month.

KIDDER, a place of 400 inhabitants, has five churches, of which the Congregational was first organized. Rev. A. L. Gridley became pastor less than seven years ago. In that time there have been 65 removals and 60 accessions on confession. The resident membership is about 60. The church is especially active in missionary lines, the auxiliary of the W. B. M. I. giving over $4 per member, while all the benevolent societies are systematically remembered. The C. E. Society pays $125 annually for church expenses. Nearly all the children of families connected with the church are church members. The location of Kidder Institute here adds interest to the field. More than half the public school teachers of the county have been trained in this school. It is enjoying a successful year, in most respects the best of its history. About $1,000 have been paid toward the reduction of its debt.

CARTHAGE.—But little over a year ago the advisability of disorganizing was seriously considered. Then the congregations were a mere handful, debts were accumulating, every one was discouraged and the future looked dark indeed. A year of the inspiring service of Rev. A. J. Van Wagner has wrought a marked change. Thirty-two new members have been received, the attendance has increased until frequently the seating capacity of the house is taxed to its utmost, some who are now regular attendants a year ago did not know that there was a Congregational church in the city, and the entire membership is enthusiastic, hopeful and helpful. The 27th anniversary of organization and the first of Mr. Van Wagner's coming have just been celebrated.

KANSAS CITY.—First. A series of missionary rallies, conducted by Mrs. Michael Burnham, president, and Mrs. W. F. Brunner, secretary, of the Missouri W. B. M. I., held in Sedalia, St. Joseph and Kidder, closed with an enthusiastic meeting at Kansas City, in which both home and foreign societies participated.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. The annual report shows 50 accessions in 1896, a net gain of 25. There is new impulse in church work, both with pastor and people, since the opening of the year.——Central. Rev. John Brereton began his labors Jan. 1, and is winning favor with church and community.

BRECKINRIDGE, pastorless for three years, has an excellent Sunday school and prayer meeting, with preaching once a month.

Iowa.

HAMPTON dedicated its second house of worship Feb. 14, in the 40th year of its existence. The building is of granite brick. At the dedicatory services 800 people were seated in the auditorium and lecture room. On the same floor with these is a choir room. In the basement, nearly all above ground, are the S. S. room, three classrooms, a mothers' room, kitchen, etc. The cost of building and furnishings, including a fine pipe organ, was $17,000, all of which has been paid or secured by reliable pledges, with a good margin for interest and shrinkage. Of this amount $5,000 was pledged at the time of dedication. Rev. J. W. Ferner, pastor, the Moses of the enterprise, was assisted in the service by Rev. J. O. Stevenson, D.D., Rev. T. M. Price and Sec. T. O. Douglass. The advantage of building now was demonstrated, as this edifice, which cost $15,000 exclusive of organ, would cost $25,000 in prosperous times.

DUBUQUE.—First. Mr. Fred B. Smith, formerly State Y. M. C. A. secretary in Tennessee, and for several years engaged in that work in Dakota, Wis-

Continued on page 284.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC } BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT } New York.
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER }
MISSOURI
RED SEAL } St. Louis.
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

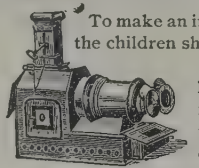
THERE is no getting away from the fact that Pure White Lead (see list of brands which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil make the best paint.

Properly applied, it will not chip, chalk or scale off, but will outwear any of the mixtures offered as substitutes. It is, therefore, by far the most economical.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

Show them pictures.



To make an interesting service for the children show them pictures.

We have an endless variety of slides illustrative of Bible tales, for use with our Magic Lanterns.

Special Lanterns and Slides for all purposes sold and loaned on easy terms. Send for free literature.

RILEY BROTHERS,
Bradford, Eng. 16 Beekman St., New York.
The largest Stereopticon outfitters in the world.
BRANCHES — BOSTON: 36 Bromfield St. CHICAGO: 196 La Salle St KANSAS CITY (Mo.): 515 East 14th St. MINNEAPOLIS: 23 Washington Ave. So. CHATTANOOGA: 708 Market.

Made in a Moment

A delicious drink instantly made from WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE. Perfect in flavor and quality. Put up in pound and half-pound tins.

Stephen F. Whitman & Son,
Sole Mfrs., Philadelphia.

GRANULA
Our Home Granula Co., DANSVILLE, N. Y.

Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of the Jackson Sanatorium, Trial box 25c. Book with recipes FREE.
The Perfect Health Food

GAZE'S TOURS
ESTABLISHED 1844.
Nile, Bermuda, Florida, West Indies, Holy Land, Egypt, Europe.

Programs ready, post free. Mention tour.
GAZE'S TOURIST GAZETTE FREE.
H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd., 113 B'way, N. Y.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise
to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.
ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,
BY THE
AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"
Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.
Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

ANNUAL EUROPEAN TOURS
Limited party, personally conducted by Prof. CAMILLE THURWANGER, now forming, 31 Pierce Bldg., Boston.

Hotels and Travel.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LIMITED
LEAVES CHICAGO 6.30 P.M. DAILY VIA THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE
C. & N. W. RY.
ARRIVES ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS, THE SUPERIORS AND DULUTH EARLY THE FOLLOWING MORNING
NEW COMPARTMENT SLEEPING CARS
NEW BUFFET SMOKING AND LIBRARY CARS
NEW STANDARD SLEEPING CARS
NEW DAY COACHES
NEW DINING CARS
ALL AGENTS SELL TICKETS VIA THE CHICAGO & NORTH-WESTERN RY.
PRINCIPAL AGENCIES—NEW YORK, 423 BROADWAY—BOSTON, 5 STATE ST—CHICAGO, 208 CLARK ST.

THE HYGEIA HOTEL,
Old Point Comfort, Va.,

Recently improved and beautified, is now the most complete, homelike and comfortable resort hotel between New York and Florida.

Spacious and delightfully situated rooms, elegant private suites. Finest plumbing and perfect drainage.

F. N. PIKE, Proprietor.
A. C PIKE, Manager.

WASHINGTON, PHILADELPHIA, MT. VERNON, GETTYSBURG.
APRIL 2-9,
All Expenses, $27.00.
Five days in Washington. Special attractions. Gettysburg $4.50 extra.
A. E. WINSHIP,
3 Somerset Street, Boston.

Tours to Europe & Palestine
Sailing June, July & Aug. Low prices; ranging from $250 to $650. Itineraries of Edwin Jones, 462 Putnam Av., Brooklyn, N. Y. Tour Round the World: $1,675.

EUROPE, HOLY LAND, ROUND THE WORLD.—Parties leave February 27 for Holy Land; May 8, June 5, 12, July 3, 7 for Europe. $260 and up. F. C. CLARK, 306 Washington St., Boston.

Continued from page 283.

consin and Iowa, has this year entered the evangelistic field. He began, Jan. 31, a two weeks' series of meetings here, assisting the pastor, Dr. F. E. Hopkins. About 120 conversions are reported, and the members have been revived. Mr. Smith sings the gospel effectively, in addition to preaching it.

LARCHWOOD.—The membership was increased nearly threefold Feb. 14 by the accession of 63 persons, 33 of whom were adults and 34 men and boys. There are other candidates for membership. Rev. D. E. Evans, the pastor, was assisted in the special meetings by neighboring ministers and for a few days by Evangelist Hartsough.

LAKE VIEW.—The meeting house, though only three years old, is too small. The S. S. gathering is crowded and people stand at the general services, some even being turned away. The church has decided to enlarge its accommodations at once.

ROCK RAPIDS.—Both church and community have received a wonderful spiritual uplift from a series of special meetings conducted by Evangelist Thompson, resulting in many conversions. Rev. W. B. Pinkerton is pastor.

EMMETSBURG, Rev. H. M. Case, pastor, dedicated, Feb. 14, a house of worship costing about $12,000. Pres. G. A. Gates preached the sermon.

AURELIA is much strengthened by the addition of 11 members on confession. This ingathering followed a series of union revival meetings. Rev. B. L. Webber, the pastor, is now holding special services at a country appointment.

Red Oak, Southside, a purely mission field, is being supplied by Edward H. Davis, a lay worker.

North Dakota.

HANKINSON.—At the close of the meetings conducted by Evangelist N. P. McQuarrie it was found that there had been 28 conversions. The members were greatly blessed, five households erected family altars and young people joined the C. E. Society as active members. Among those who expressed a desire to unite with the church is one whole family of six. Twenty-six Christians pledged themselves to read the Bible through the year and to pray for a revival in their own town and in every town in North Dakota.

South Dakota.

WILLOW LAKES has recently purchased a neat and commodious parsonage, worth about $600. This is one of the few churches in the State that has secured a parsonage without the aid of the C. C. B. S.

GETTYSBURG has received an uplift through special meetings conducted by Rev. W. E. Jenney, general missionary for the State. Several adults will be received to membership.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

MURPHY'S.—By the will of the late Mrs. Hoyt, a member prominent in the erection of the beautiful chapel, $10,000 were left in trust, the interest to be used in keeping the edifice in repair and in payment of the pastor's salary. Though the money is not yet available, the trustees are soon to ask the church to assume self-support.

OROVILLE.—Union services since the Week of Prayer have resulted in a gracious revival. Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Robinson have accepted a call to add Oroville to Wyandette and Palermo, their present field.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The Monday Club signalized its first session in the new Congregational headquarters by wiring Senator Perkins to "urge, by all means, ratification of the arbitration treaty."

SAN JOSE.—Rev. F. N. Greeley, on account of poor health, has been forced to give up preaching at West Side. Rev. L. L. Wirt is temporarily in charge.

Washington.

SPRINGDALE.—The good work did not end with the special meetings. Several persons have since decided for Christ and joined the church. Rev. H. M. Mobbs, who is pastor here and at Chewelah, has had a slight stroke of paralysis but will continue his work.

CHELAN.—Rev. E. J. Singer found a responsive people when he came to help the pastor, Rev. W. C. Wise, in special meetings. Some marked conversions resulted.

CANADA.

British Columbia.

The steady growth of population in the Kootenai country and the many mining towns on the boundary appeal strongly for more work on the part of the churches. Mining towns need the gospel and will sometimes aid generously in its support. But they seldom invite a preacher to come to them.

The Standard of Excellence

The average woman cannot discriminate justly between machines, so far as their mechanical construction is concerned, but she can always wisely judge their work.

ALL THE ESSENTIAL QUALITIES OF A FAMILY SEWING-MACHINE ARE MOST PERFECTLY COMBINED IN . . .

SIMPLICITY— so it can be easily adjust.d, and won't get out of order.

SPEED— so that it will do the most work with the least effort.

STABILITY— so that it will wear the longest with the least repairs.

STYLE— so that it will be an ornament to the home.

SINGER WORK IS ALWAYS GOOD WORK.

This is why Singer Machines maintain their supremacy all over the world, making the Singer trade-mark a reliable guarantee of perfection. . . . .

THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

OFFICES IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.

2,000 DIFFERENT

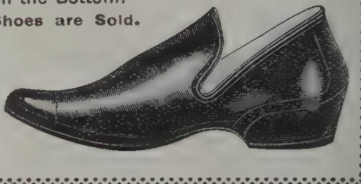
KINDS OF RUBBERS.

Doesn't seem possible, but it's so. Counting all the different styles, shapes and sizes, L. Candee & Co., New Haven, make 2,000 distinctly different rubbers—enough to fit every foot and every fancy. They are the oldest rubber makers in the world. They began 55 years ago, with a few dozen pairs a week. Now they make 25,000 pairs a day. If you want the best rubbers ask for

CANDEE RUBBERS.

The Name is on the Bottom.

Sold wherever Shoes are Sold.



WE HAVE NO AGENTS

but have sold direct to the consumer for 24 years, at wholesale prices, saving them the dealers' profits. Ship anywhere for examination before sale. Everything warranted. 100 styles of Carriages, 90 styles of Harness. Top Buggies as low as $35. Phaetons as low as $55. Spring Wagons, Road Wagons, etc. Send for large, free Catalogue.

No. 37½. Surrey Harness—Price $15.00. As good as sells for $22.00.

No. 606. Surrey—Price with curtains, lamps, sunshade, apron and fenders, $60. As good as sells for $90.

ELKHART CARRIAGE AND HARNESS MFG. CO., W. B. PRATT, Sec'y, ELKHART, IND.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. ☞ Send f
Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro,

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, FEB. 19

Mrs. A. A. Lincoln presided, and after reading Psalm 139 spoke of the privilege of acquainting ourselves with God. Mrs. Goodell said there may often be perplexity with regard to duty, but the path of prayer is always plain, and read a brief message from Miss Matthews of Monastir, who wrote of one of the girls who gave herself to Christ three years ago on the very day on which the school was especially the subject of prayer.

Mrs. C. H. Wheeler of Harpoot was again welcomed in the meeting after absence occasioned by la grippe. Speaking of the custom of frequently repeating the Lord's Prayer, she said she sometimes had wondered what would take its place in heaven. Leaving her work in Turkey, and uncertain as to the years which may remain to her, her constant petition at present is, "Lord, show me what I can do individually." She referred to the missionaries in Harpoot as happy people in the midst of their deprivations and even their apprehensions. Mrs. Rockwood recalled with pleasure an early acquaintance with Dr. and Mrs. Wheeler when he was a pastor in Maine.

Mrs. J. K. Browne read an interesting letter from Miss Carrie Bush, describing a tour which she had made in company with Dr. Gates and Mr. Browne to Palu, including a visit to Haboosi. Mrs. Strong read a letter from Miss Pohl of Smyrna, who had suddenly been summoned to Dresden by the death of her mother, and whose father, even in the midst of his grief, felt that he could not long keep his daughter away from the work to which she has devoted herself and in which she has become enthusiastic. She has since returned to Smyrna and resumed her duties there, greatly to the delight of her associates. Inanda Seminary and the missionaries on the calendar for the week were not forgotten.

1897-1847

Not Since
Adam Dug
in the gardens around Eden has there been seen the peer of our "JUBILEE" CATALOGUE for 1897.

To commemorate our fiftieth business year, we have prepared the most beautiful and valuable SEED and PLANT CATALOGUE the gardening world has ever seen. Every copy costs us 25 cts. to produce, but in honor of this our "JUBILEE" year, we will send it this season FREE to any one on receipt of 10c. (in stamps) to cover postage and mailing. This "JUBILEE" CATALOGUE of "EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN" is a magnificent book of 170 pages, on which are displayed over 500 beautiful illustrations of Seeds and Plants, the work of our own artists. Also six full-size colored plates which in artistic beauty have probably never been equaled, certainly never surpassed.

A "JUBILEE SURPRISE SOUVENIR" will also be sent without charge to all applicants for the Catalogue who will state where they saw this advertisement.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.,
35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST., NEW YORK.

'96 '95 '94 '93 '92 '91 '90 '89 '88 '87 '86 '85 '84 '83 '82 '81 '80 '79 '78 '77 '76 '75
'74 '73 '72 '71 '70
'69 '68 '67 '66 '65 '64 '63 '62 '61 '60 '59 '58 '57 '56 '55 '54 '53 '52 '51 '50 '49 '48

THIS JUBILEE BORDER IS COPYRIGHTED.

SEEDS Complete Catalogue of Best Seeds that Grow FREE to any address.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, March 7-13. Opportunities To Do Good—Seeing Them, Using Them. John 4: 5-15; 1 Cor. 9: 19-22.

Recent study of the gospels has brought me a fresh realization of the fact that Jesus' services to God and man were due largely to the fact of availing himself of incidental opportunities. Take the record of any day. Whatever plan he may have started out with in the morning hours it looks as if he was guided largely by events and incidents which he might not have foreseen. What to us would appear disappointments, interruptions or even obstacles he turned to good account. So when Peter says that Jesus "went about doing good" he must have had in mind those busy days when the Master was besought by this or that individual to come here or go there.

We talk a great deal about having a definite plan in life. It is well to work on a large pattern, but Jesus saved men not only by hanging on the cross for them, but by putting the resources of his rich personality at their disposal hour by hour. It would be a great mistake if we were so absorbed in some great and distant project of a benevolent order that we forgot all about the cups of cold water which we might offer in our daily routine. The London Punch once had a clever cartoon picturing a portly minister coming down the steps of Exeter Hall where he had been addressing a great missionary gathering on the salvation of the Dark Continent. As he descends a ragged little darkey seizes his coat tails and looks up wistfully into his face, saying, "Mister, ain't I black enough for you?" Not less thought for the far-off heathen, but more thought for our daily associates and casual companions.

After all, Christian service depends a great deal upon the way in which we use our eyes. If the rich could only see the poor, if the healthy would now and then walk through the wards of a hospital, there would be greater sympathy and helpfulness between class and class. Many persons pass through the slums of a great city, but there comes a day when a strong man, or some frail woman perhaps, walks through its alleys and courts, not hurriedly, as though the scenes should be quickly forgotten, but observantly. By and by a well-equipped mission or social settlement rises up in the midst of the misery and squalor. It is all due to the fact that some one had eyes to see. Put the Lord Jesus Christ or his servant Paul in the midst of some modern conditions and how quickly they would see abundant and fitting opportunities for doing good. God help us to look out upon men through the eyes of Christ.

Parallel verses: Gen. 47: 13-26; Neh. 2: 1-8; Gal. 5: 13; Eph. 6: 6; Phil. 4: 18; 2 Tim. 1: 16; Phil. 1-7.

FOR relieving throat diseases, coughs and hoarseness use "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold only in boxes. Avoid imitations.

EXPERIENCE proves the merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It cures all forms of blood diseases, tones the stomach, builds up the nerves.

"ALL TIRED OUT."

Revelation For Women Who Are Weak, Nervous, Discouraged.

Dr. Greene's Nervura Always Gives Health, Strength and Vigor.

If there is any person who deserves pity it is the woman who, with all her work to do, suffers from ill health, weakness and nervous prostration. She feels weak, tired and dragged out, her nerves are weak and unstrung, she suffers tortures with headaches, backache, does not eat or sleep well and wakes mornings as tired as when she goes to sleep. She feels like crying without cause and is blue, discouraged and altogether miserable. Such sufferers can be easily cured by using Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It is the greatest restorative and health-giver womankind has ever known. Especially should it be used now in the spring when a spring medicine is necessary for everybody.

Mrs. S. Taylor, residing at 251 West Seventh Street, New York city, writes: "I was sick for years with general debility, nervousness, sleeplessness and coldness of feet and limbs. I was unable to attend to my household duties, and, in fact, was good for nothing. I began to use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I commenced at once to get better and in a short time was entirely cured of every one of my troubles. My nervousness, sleeplessness, coldness and other trouble all left me and my health was perfect. Today I am a different woman, thanks to Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It is a wonderful medicine. I strongly advise every woman to use it." Dr. Greene's Cathartic Pills are the perfect pills for biliousness and constipation. Dr. Greene, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful physician in curing diseases, can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

1849 - VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE ~ 1897

Standard Seed and Plant Catalogue. Contains all that's New and Good. Always Reliable.

THE GUIDE and your Choice } One packet either Wonderful Branching Aster, New Japan Morning Glory, or Pansy Choice mixed, for 15 CTS. Two packets 25c., three packets 30c. Full retail price 45 cts.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine which tells how to grow Plants, Flowers and Vegetables, and is up to date on these subjects, for 3 months, the Guide and One packet of Seeds (named above) for 25 cents.

Every tenth person sending an Order as above will receive a coupon good for 50 cents' worth of Seed free

When ordering state where you saw this adv. and we will send a packet of Flower Seeds free

JAMES VICK'S SONS, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

VICK'S ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY MAGAZINE

YOUNG LADIES' MISSIONARY RALLY.

Phillips Church, South Boston, gave a cordial welcome to the young ladies of the Suffolk Branch of the Woman's Board as they gathered on Feb. 20 for their sixth annual meeting. Lessons to be learned from the failures and successes of the last year were given by Miss Weston in the opening devotional meeting. Of the twenty-one societies that responded to the roll-call Union Church, Boston, had the honor of sending the largest delegation. Franklin is the youngest member of the sisterhood.

Most ably did Mrs. Joseph Cook in her address, The Girls at Home; Their Work and Responsibility, press home upon her bright, attentive audience their opportunities and privileges. Would that all women, old and young, might join this woman's club of world wide importance, as she styles missionary work—"the greatest work of all centuries." The suggestive topic for discussion, Claims of Religious and Philanthropic Work as Compared with Secular and Social, was opened wisely by Miss Lamson and followed by earnest words from the girls.

After a pleasant social hour and supper served by the church ladies, Rev. C. A. Dinsmore opened the evening session. Miss Child brought with her to the platform attractive girls dressed in the costume of India, China and Japan. Vivid were the word pictures of woman's life in those countries. Miss Wheeler made the closing address. The efficient chairwoman of the day was Mrs. L. C. Purington of Dorchester.

◆

WEEKLY REGISTER.

Calls.

ANDERSON, Emil A., Scandinavian Ch., Winona, Minn., accepts call to Swedish Ch., Lake City.

ARCHIBALD, Andrew W., Hyde Park, Mass., to Porter Ch., Brockton.

DEKAY, Geo. H., to the pastorate at Buena Park, Cal., in connection with Norwalk.

FIELD, Jas. P., who has been supplying at Amity, Mo., to Chillicothe. Accepts.

GOODSELL, Dennis, Lodi, Cal., to Byron and Bethany. Accepts.

HOLTON, Chas. S., Eastport, Me., accepts call to First Ch., Newbury, Mass.

JACKSON, J. C., to Eastwood Ch., Columbus, O., where he has been supplying.

LATHAM, Ernest R., formerly of Fort Dodge, Io., to Glenwood, Minn. Accepts.

MATHER, J. Bruce, Clear Lake and Garner, Io., to Vine Ch., Minneapolis.

McLAREN, Jas. H., formerly of Prince Edward's Island, to First Ch., Racine, Wis.

ROBINSON, Wm. H. and Alice M., to add Oroville, Cal., to Palermo and Wyandotte, their present field. Accepts.

SELL, Henry T., Chicago, Ill., declines call to First Ch., Tabor, Io.

SHINGLER, John J., Perry Center, N. Y., to North Ch., Columbus, O. Accepts.

SHOCKLEY, Albert D., to remain a fourth year at Manville, Wyo.; also to Belle Fourche, S. D. Accepts the latter, to begin work Apr. 1.

TAYLOR, Mark B., Canton, Mass., to Park Ch., Brooklyn, N. Y. Accepts.

WELLMAN, Wheeler M., El Reno, Okl., to Darlington Accepts.

Ordinations and Installations.

BRETT, Geo. S., i. Waukesha, Wis., Feb. 18. Sermon, Rev. G. R. Leavitt, D. D.

OWEN, T. Newton, o. p. Clinton Ave. Ch., Albany, N. Y., Feb. 15. Sermon, Rev. S. H. Virgin, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. T. M. Owen, father of the candidate, J. B. Thrall, Ethan Curtis.

POST, Geo. H., o. p. Jellico, Tenn., Feb. 12. Sermon, Rev. C. W. Greene; other parts, Rev. Messrs. W. G. Olinger, C. M. Stevens, G. Ames.

TUTTLE, John E., i. Union Ch., Worcester, Mass. Sermon by C. M. Lamson, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. E. W. Phillips, J. E. Hurlbut, Drs. G. H. Gould Elijah Horr, A. Z. Conrad, Archibald McCullagh, H. A. Stimson, Pres. M. E. Gates.

Resignations.

BUTLER, Henry E., St. Johns, Mich.

EDMANDS, T. Merrill, First Ch., Brainerd, Minn.

FULLER, Almon T., New Smyrna, Fla.

HARPER, Rich. H., Darlington, Okl., to take effect Apr. 1.

LUCE, Albert A., Leroy, Mich., to take effect in April.

LUMPKIN, Wilson, Carney, Okl.

WALKER, John T., Douglas, Mich., to take effect April 30.

Dismissions.

NELSON, And. P., Swedish Ch., E. Orange, N. J., Feb. 12.

Churches Organized.

DODGEVILLE, Wis., Plymouth, rec. 15 Feb., 125 members. Rev. R. Titmarsh is pastor.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Vernon Heights, rec. 16 Feb., 20 members.

NAVARINO, Wis., 3 Feb.

MUSCONGUS ISLAND, Me., (Branch of Bethel Ch., Portland), — Feb., 12 members.

Miscellaneous.

DAVIES, Dan'l D., and wife were given a largely attended farewell reception by the church at Windham, O., who also presented them with a set of Haviland China, an oak table and some money.

FENNER, Jas. W. (Congregationalist), has just resigned his six years' pastorate of the Presbyterian ch. at Holley, N. Y., to take effect June 6.

FERNER, John W., was pleasantly surprised on his 50th birthday by a reception tendered by his people of Hampton, Io., with the gift of a handsome lounge and a set of dishes.

HARRIS, John L., of Everett, Mass., has been confined to his bed for the last six months, and we regret to say there is little prospect of his recovering his health. His eyesight has failed him.

HARRISON, Jas. K., H. M. supt. in California, has begun the issue of a four-page leaflet bearing upon his work.

JOHNSON, William, who has been doing effective work in Tabernacle Ch., St. Louis, but who has been laid aside for a time by sickness, is again in his pulpit.

SIMS, Thos., and wife, on the 10th anniversary of their marriage, received at the parsonage in S. Manchester, Ct., about 75 of their parishioners, who presented them with a purse of money.

STEVENS, Moody A., has closed his work at Mizpah Ch., Minneapolis.

◆

There is no culture so high, no taste so fastidious, no grace of learning so delicate, no refinement of art so exquisite that it cannot at this hour find full play for itself in the broadest fields of humanity, since it is all needed to soften the attritions of common life and guide to nobler aspirations the strong materialistic influences of our restless society. —C. D. Warner.

If You Need a Tonic
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It stimulates the stomach, nourishes the nerves, builds the brain tissue. A wonderful tonic. Makes a delightful beverage.

One loaf of bread may be light, sweet and digestible. You may use the same materials for another and have it heavy, sour and soggy. The knack is in putting the ingredients together just right. A substitute for Scott's Emulsion may have the same ingredients and yet not be a perfect substitute, for no one knows how to put the parts together as we do. The secret of "how" is our business—twenty-five years of experience has taught us the best way.

Two sizes, 50 cts. and $1.00.
SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, New York.

$3,400.00 CASH AND PRIZES GIVEN FREE EACH MONTH FOR Sunlight SOAP WRAPPERS

As follows:

4 First Prizes, each of $100 Cash - - - $ 400.00
20 Second " " " $100 PIERCE SPECIAL Bicycles* 2,000.00
40 Third " " " $ 25 Gold Watches - 1,000.00
Cash and Prizes given each month - - $3,400.00
12
Total given during 12 mos. 1897, $40,800.00

HOW TO OBTAIN THEM.

Competitors to save as many SUNLIGHT SOAP Wrappers as they can collect. Cut off the top portion of each wrapper, that portion containing the heading "SUNLIGHT SOAP." These (called "Coupons") are to be sent, postage fully paid, enclosed with a sheet of paper stating Competitor's full name and address and the number of Coupons sent in, to Lever Bros., Ltd., New York, marked on outside Wrapper (top left hand corner) with NUMBER of the DISTRICT Competitor lives in.

No. of District	NAME OF DISTRICT.
1	New York City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands, New Jersey.
2	New York State (outside of N.Y. City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands).
3	Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and District of Columbia.
4	The New England States

*The Bicycles are the celebrated Pierce Special, 1897 Pattern, m'f'd by Geo. N. Pierce & Co., of Buffalo, Boston and New York. Fitted with Hartford Tires, First Class Nickle Lamp, New Departure Bell, Standard Cyclometer, and Hunt Lace Saddle.

RULES.

1. Every month during 1897 in each of the 4 districts prizes will be awarded as follows:

The 1 Competitor who sends in the Largest Number of coupons from the district in which he or she resides will receive $100 Cash.

The 5 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Pierce Special bicycle, price $100.00.

The 10 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Gold Watch, price $25.

2. The Competitions will Close the Last Day of Each Month during 1897. Coupons received too late for one month's competition will be put into the next.

3. Competitors who obtain wrappers from unsold soap in dealer's stock will be disqualified. Employees of Lever Brothers, Ltd., and their families, are debarred from competing.

4. A printed list of Winners in Competitor's district will be forwarded to Competitors in about 21 days after each competition closes.

5. Lever Brothers, Ltd., will endeavor to award the prizes fairly to the best of their ability and judgment, but it is understood that all who compete agree to accept the award of Lever Brothers, Ltd., as final.

LEVER BROS., Ltd., New York.

BEAUTIFUL SKIN

Soft, White Hands, Shapely Nails, Luxuriant Hair with Clean, Wholesome Scalp, produced by CUTICURA SOAP, the most effective skin purifying and beautifying soap in the world, as well as purest and sweetest for toilet, bath and nursery. The only preventive of inflammation and clogging of the PORES

Cuticura

SOAP is sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.
"How to Purify and Beautify the Skin, Scalp, and Hair," free

BABY HUMORS Itching and Scaly, instantly relieved by CUTICURA REMEDIES.

Here's Hope! BRIGHT'S DISEASE AND DIABETES CAN BE CURED.

SEND for History of Cures and all details. We invite inquiry as to what we have done and are doing. We guarantee no misrepresentation. Investigation will compel belief.

CONSULTATION FREE.

The Tompkins-Corbin Co.
1300 Broadway, New York City.
ESTABLISHED 1890.

J. W. CORBIN, Gen'l Manager. | A. W. TOMPKINS, M.D. Consulting Physician.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST. BOSTON.

DR. GORDON ON PHILLIPS BROOKS.

Dr. George A. Gordon made his annual visit to Yale lately, delivering six addresses. His two regular lectures before the Divinity School on The Significance of the Ideal were full of suggestion and inspiration, as his addresses here always are. He preached in the college chapel on Sunday morning, addressed the students of the university at 6.40 and then lectured in Dr. Munger's Sunday evening course.

On Thursday evening he lectured under the auspices of the Leonard Bacon Club on Phillips Brooks. It seemed especially fitting that words should be spoken about one who in years past brought so much of inspiration to Yale, and who still lives there, by one who now from year to year adds so much to the life of the present generation of students.

Dr. Gordon said that it was one of the most delightful things he could do to talk about Phillips Brooks. Phillips Brooks fascinated the young men of his time. They would always hear him as long as he would talk. There was an exquisite charm, a restfulness, an uplift from his personality. The first time Dr. Gordon heard the great preacher he was tremendously disappointed. He didn't know where the preacher started, how he went, or where he landed. It was like the passing of a train going six miles in five minutes. All he could hear or see was the rush and the smoke. He wasn't able even to criticise. The second time he was again disappointed, but not so badly. This time Brooks was like a man out in a deep stream. His hearer was on the bank. The preacher could not get to him. He could not get to the preacher. He could not admire, and of course would not admit that it was because he could not understand. But the third time all went well. This time it was a written sermon on the Trinity. Brooks's best sermons were his written ones. God was the divine end, the divine means and the divine power. God the Father the divine end, God the Son the divine means, God the Holy Spirit the divine power.

It was true of Brooks that he rarely got hold of a hearer by his first sermon. His art was the only art that wins in the long run—sincerity. His was manhood burdened with the message of God. Dr. Gordon graphically described two of his sermons, one on John the Baptist and one old year sermon. Brooks has been accused of avoiding the severer and sterner side of life. This is not true. He was often most searching and appalling. The speaker only knew o one sermon in which he allowed his sense of humor to play a part. And yet his sense here was keen. He never took a walk without seeing a hundred absurdities.

In his analysis of the great preacher's mind Dr. Gordon said that beauty was the central idea of his teaching and his life. His central idea in theology was the Incarnation. His idea of this was that God took his best and finest and put it into a life of most beautiful character. The Incarnation to him was the most beautiful utterance of a most beautiful conception. This qualified his teaching and gave the distinctness of his character as a man. Brooks is the religious artist in speech and in prophetic ministry. Beauty is his note. We have more beautiful sermons from him than from any other preacher of the Christian Church.

It was so in his character. He was not a Paul, nor an Athanasius, nor a Luther. He won the world with the marvelous symmetry of his character. In pathos and in spirituality he has had no equal. Certainly no voice in our generation or century came up from the very heart of things as did his in such pity and pathos, shot through with a prevailing optimism and hope. He was self-oblivious, possessed by his message. His personality, as did his voice, swept through the church with irresistible power, full of gentleness, dignity, pathos and hope. He subdued men more by that note of pathos than by anything else in his preaching. He participated in the tragedy of the world and he had God in him.

As to the play of his life he told good stories. Dr. Gordon retold one or two of these. He was always reading Carlyle and always roundly condemning him. He knew no rival; no competition. His majestic personality had charm as well as power. He used it, not as Goethe did. He used it with fidelity. No man except Beecher received such homage, but he took it with absolute self-abasement.

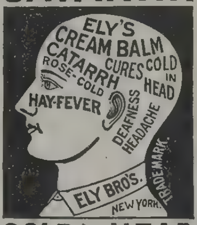
During Dr. Gordon's college life Brooks was to him a great voice of righteousness. He never dreamed that in him there was any of the play of our common humanity. But as he came to know him he found that this was not so. And he became because of this really greater, purer, truer, a more completed good, than in the earlier days of college idol worship one would have dreamed. C. S. M.

OUR ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND.

Amount received during the week ending Tuesday noon and acknowledged in detail by individual receipts	$189.71
Previously acknowledged	22,946.79
Total	$23,136.50

FURNITURE FOR CHILDREN.—We live in a time when the stores are full of articles for children. The children's trade of today is as diligently catered for as the trade of adults. In the line of furniture, for example, a visit to the warerooms of the Paine Furniture Company, 48 Canal Street, will disclose a complete line of furniture adapted for nurseries and children's bedrooms. Such furniture is very attractive in appearance and costs a ridiculously small sum.

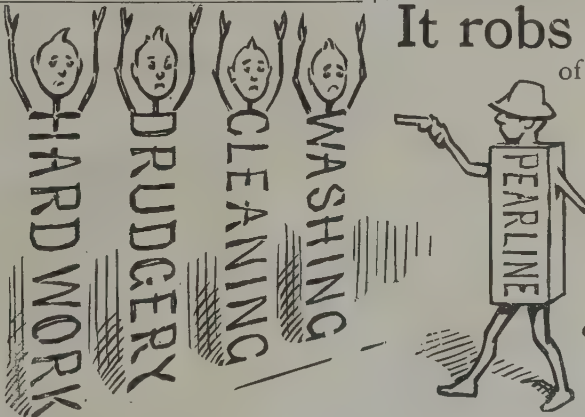
HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN



CATARRH
Ask your Druggist for a generous 10 CENT TRIAL SIZE.
ELY'S CREAM BALM contains no cocaine, mercury or any other injurious drug.
It opens and cleans the Nasal Passages, Allays Pain and Inflammation, Heals and Protects the Membrane.
COLD IN HEAD
Restores the senses of Taste and Smell. Is quickly absorbed. Gives relief at once. 50 cts at Druggists or by mail; Trial Size 10c., at Druggists or by mail.
ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren St., New York.

REDUCED FROM $25 TO $10

This Most Wonderful Treatment Now Within the Reach of All.
Circulars, Testimonials, etc., Free.
L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS.
General Agent for the New England States.



It robs them of their terrors — by taking away that clothes-destroying, back-breaking rub, rub, rub. What does the work of washing amount to, when all you have to do is to put the things in to soak and boil—and then just rinse them out? That's the Pearline way of washing—easy for women and easy for clothes. In all kinds of cleaning, too, you get rid of that tiresome rubbing. Any one can see what it saves. And remember, no matter how you use Pearline, it's absolutely and entirely harmless. 494
Millions NOW USE Pearline

"What epicurean rascal is this?" Merry Wives, Act 2. Scene 2.
$1000.00 in 147 Prizes
1 of $100; 2 of $50; 4 of $25; 140 of $5 each for recipes for using our Baked Pork and Beans alone or in combination. Competition closes May 31; awards made July 1st. A trade mark cut from label of can of must accompany every recipe. Our cook book, "Bean Cookery," free to all who answer this ad.
VAN CAMP'S BOSTON BAKED PORK AND BEANS
Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans is a delicious, satisfying dish for all occasions—a meal in itself. Equally good, hot or cold. In cans; three sizes; at leading grocers', or send 6c for sample can, or postal card for free booklet.
VAN CAMP PACKING CO., 324 Kentucky Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

When Hamlet exclaimed "Aye, there's the rub!" Could he have referred to . . . . SAPOLIO

T. & T. Clark's New Publications.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, SOLE AGENTS.

New detailed list with very much lowered prices sent free on application.

The Prophecies of Jesus Christ

Relating to His Death, Resurrection, and Second Coming, and their Fulfillment.

By Dr. P. P. SCHWARTZKOPFF, Prof. Göttingen University. 12mo, $1.75.

The Christian Doctrine of Immortality.

By Professor S. D. F. SALMOND, D. D. Second Edition. 8vo, net, $5.00.

"An able, truth-loving, and, from many points of view, comprehensive work."—W. E. Gladstone.

Introduction to Theology.

Its Principles, its Branches, its Results, and its Literature. By ALFRED CAVE, D.D New Edition, largely rewritten, and the bibliographical lists carefully revised to date. 8vo, $4.50.

"A careful, thorough, and able discussion of a vast and important subject."—Guardian.

Life after Death and the Future of the Kingdom of God.

By Bishop LARS NIELSEN DAHLE. Translated from the Norse, by the Rev. JOHN BEVERIDGE. 8vo, $3.00.

By one of the foremost thinkers of Norway, who bears a high reputation, but whose works have not hitherto been accessible in English translations.

Biblico-Theological Lexicon of New Testament Greek.

By Prof. HERMANN CREMER, D. D., Greifswald. Authorized Translation. Demy 4to. Fourth Edition, with Supplement. Net $8.00.

This Lexicon deals with words whose meaning in the classics is modified or changed in Scripture, words which have become the basis and watchwords of Christian theology, tracing their history in their transference from the Classics into the LXX, and from the LXX. into the New Testament, and the gradual deepening and elevation of their meaning till they reach the fullness of New Testament thought.

Handbooks for Bible Classes and Private Students.

Edited by Prof. MARCUS DODS, D.D., and ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D. 40 Volumes now ready. From net 45 cts. to net 75 cts. each.

"I name especially the admirable Handbooks for Bible Classes issued by T. & T. Clark of Edinburgh. They are very cheap, and among them are some books unsurpassed in their kind."—DR. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, in The British Weekly.

Bible Class Primers.

Edited by Prof. SALMOND, D D. 32 Vols. now ready. Paper, 20 cts. each.

"A most useful series. With such helps as these to be an inefficient teacher is to be blameworthy."—C. H. SPURGEON.

The Foreign Theological Library.

Containing Translations of the Works of the leading Continental Theologians. 138 Vols. $3.00 each. Detailed lists free.

A History of the Councils of the Church.

From the Original Documents. Translated from the German of C. J. HEFELE, D. D., Bishop of Rottenburg. Vol. I., to A. D. 325. Vol. II., A. D. 326 to 429. Vol. III., A. D. 431 to 451. Vol. IV., A. D. 451 to 680. Vol. V. (completing the Series), A. D 626 to Close of Second Council of Nicæa, 787. With Appendix and Indices. 8vo, $4.50 per volume.

"This history is too well known to scholars to need at the present date any recommendation; it is recognized as a standard work."—The Guardian.

BEYSCHLAG'S NEW TESTAMENT THEOLOGY.

New Testament Theology;

Or, Historical Account of the Teachings of Jesus and of Primitive Christianity according to the New Testament Sources. Authorized translation. Two vols., 8vo, net, $6.00.

"Dr. Beyschlag has furnished one of the best guides to an understanding of the New Testament. . . ."—Methodist Recorder.

The Teaching of Jesus.

By Professor H. H. WENDT, D. D. Authorized translation. Two vols., 8vo, net, $5 00.

"An admirable translation of the greatest systematic study of the teachings of Jesus thus far produced in Germany."—The Biblical World, Chicago.

Dr. R. F. Horton refers to Beyschlag's "New Testament Theology" and Wendt's "Teaching of Jesus" as "two invaluable books."

A Treatise on the Grammar of New Testament Greek.

Regarded as a Sure Basis for New Testament Exegesis. By Dr. G. B WINER. Edited by W. F. MOULTON, D. D With large Additions and full Indices. One large Vol, 8vo. Ninth English Edition. Net $5.00.

"We need not say it is the grammar of the New Testament. It is not only superior to all others, but so superior as to be by common consent the one work of reference on the subject. No other should be mentioned with it."—Literary Churchman.

The Critical Review.

Edited by Prof. S. D. F. SALMOND, D. D. Vol. IV. now ready. $2.00 net. Containing signed Reviews of all important Theological and Philosophical books published during the past year, and Notices and Record of Select Literature, by the Editor. Published Quarterly. Annual (prepaid) subscription, $1 50 net.

"The student of theology will find it a most trustworthy guide."—Spectator.

The Expository Times.

Edited by Rev JAMES HASTINGS, M. A. Vol. V. now ready, in handsome cloth binding. $2.50 net.

N. B.—A new volume commences with the issue for October. The Editor has arranged a brilliant programme, and important engagements have been made with scholars of repute. Annual (prepaid) subscriptions, $1.50 net.

⁂ These books for sale by all booksellers, or will be supplied by CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Ave., New York.

Ferris' Waist

FOR INFANTS.

A garment every thoughtful mother appreciates. Material soft as silk, with pearl buttons. Supports the body healthfully and comfortably, holds all garments securely.

Ferris' Good Sense Corset Waist is made also for Ladies and Misses with high and low bust, long and short waist, to suit all figures. Children's, 25c. to 50c. Misses', 50c. to $1.00. Ladies', $1.00 to $2.00. Always superior in quality and workmanship. For sale by all retailers.

...THE...

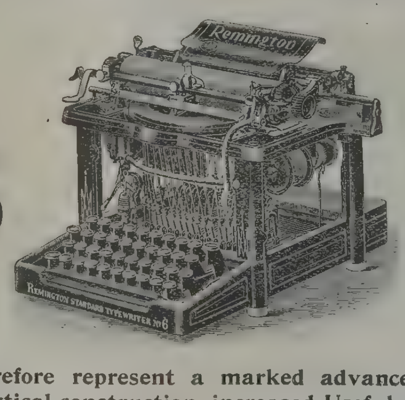
REMINGTON

Standard Typewriter

TAKES NO LIBERTIES WITH ITS REPUTATION.

The New Models

No. 6 No. 7



therefore represent a marked advance in practical construction, increased Usefulness, prolonged Durability, greater Economy.

SEND FOR NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE DESCRIBING THEIR MANY NOTABLE IMPROVEMENTS.

WYCKOFF, SEAMANS & BENEDICT,
327 Broadway, New York.

Volume LXXXII Number 9

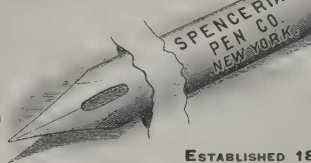
THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 4 March 1897

In connection with PARABLES IN PICTURES, Part II., in Home Department.

Go-ye-into-the-vineyard

SPENCERIAN PENS
WRITE WELL WEAR LONG
ONCE TRIED ALWAYS USED
Samples sent on receipt of return postage — 2 cents.



ESTABLISHED 1860

Educational.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-paged Agency Manual free. EVERETT O. FISK & Co.

CALIFORNIA, OAKLAND.
PACIFIC THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
With Faculty of eight, complete courses of study of highest grade, in a climate unequaled for health, invites correspondence as to facilities and advantages.

ANDOVER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
Andover, Massachusetts.

Besides the usual courses in Hebrew, Greek, Theology, History and Homiletics, there are elective courses in the History of Religions, the Philosophy of Religion, Social Ethics, History of Missions, and Semitic languages.

Honorary and Pastoral Scholarships and Foreign Fellowships are awarded.

Seminary year opens Sept 22, 1897. For catalogues and information apply to Prof. GEORGE HARRIS, Andover, Mass.

DIVINITY SCHOOL
HARVARD UNIVERSITY
An Undenominational School of Theology.

The School has twelve instructors connected with several different denominations.

Only college graduates eligible for the degree of B. D.

Elective courses cover seventy-nine hours a week.

Courses in Harvard College are open without charge.

Special opportunities are offered for post-graduate study.

Of the 58 graduates and Resident Graduates of the last three years, 4 are still in the School, 2 are Professors, 2 are preaching in Baptist Churches, 2 in churches of the Disciples of Christ, 5 in Methodist, 13 in Orthodox Congregational, 6 in Presbyterian, and 17 in Unitarian churches.

Tuition Fee, $150 per year.

For further information address ROBERT S. MORISON, Secretary of the Faculty, Cambridge, Mass.

HOME STUDY FOR BUSINESS We teach Book-keeping, Business Forms, Penmanship, Com'l Law, Letter Writing, Arithmetic, Shorthand, etc. thoroughly by MAIL at your own HOME. Success guaranteed every earnest student. We give a useful, Money Making Education which leads to a good paying position. A ten years' success. Highly endorsed. It will pay you. Try it. Catalog free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 47 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

Church Equipment.

THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY Co
CINCINNATI, OHIO.
SOLE MAKERS OF THE "BLYMYER" BELLS
FOR CHURCH SCHOOL. FIRE ALARM &c.
Catalogue with 2500 testimonials. Prices and terms FREE.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. ☞ Send Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

CHURCH REMODELING.
THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect,
10 Park Square, Boston.

Mr. Silloway's long practice in building or remodeling over 400 church edifices enables him to save and utilize all the valuable parts, and for a comparatively small outlay produce a building preferable to a new one of much greater cost. He proposes to continue the work of remodeling as a specialty, and tenders his services to committees who would practice economy, and where the means are limited.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

Calls.

CONLEY, Henry W., to remain another year at Robbinston and Red Beach, Me. Accepts.

EDMANDS, T. Merrill, First Ch., Brainerd, Minn., accepts call to Mankato, and has begun work.

FORD, Edward T., Brockton, Mass., to Harwichport. Accepts.

FULLER, Geo. P., to remain another year at Haddam Neck, Ct. Accepts.

HARRIS, Benj., Palmyra, O., declines call to Newton Falls.

HERBERT, Ebenezer, Rosemond, Ill., to Hammond, La. Accepts.

KNODELL, Jas. R., recently of San Bernardino, Cal., to supply Plymouth Ave. Ch., Oakland.

LADD, Wm. B., recently of Prophetstown, Ill., to Port Byron. Accepts.

LEE, Dorrall, lately at Fairhaven, Mass., to Wellfleet. Accepts.

LENNOX, Alex. M., West Ch., Guthrie, Okl., to Barrie, Ont. Accepts.

PROVOST, Joseph, French Ch., Springfield, Mass., to work among his countrymen of Torrington, Ct. Accepts, and has begun.

ROLLINS, John C., lately of Telluride, Col., to supply at San Bernardino, Cal. Accepts.

ROWE, Jas., Roswell, N. D., to new church at Braceville, Ill. Accepts.

SANBORN, D. L., Chicago Sem., to Kangley. Ill.

WATT, J. Craig, McGill College, Montreal, to Gardner and Rose Valley, N. D.

WATT, Thos. E., recalled to Alva and Bethel, Okl.

WIGGINS. Aaron W., First Ch., New Cambria, Mo., to Farmington, Io. Accepts.

WOOD, Fred. C., Mancelona, Mich., to Gaylord. Accepts.

Ordinations and Installations.

BAKER, T. Nelson, o. Dixwell Ave. Ch. (Colored), New Haven, Ct., Feb. 23. Sermon, Rev. W. J. Mutch, Ph. D.; other parts, Drs. Sam'l Harris and L. O. Brastow.

FREESE, Arthur S., o. Milford, Me., Feb. 24. Parts were taken by Rev. Messrs. S. L. Bowler, P. J. Robinson, Profs. L. L. Paine, D. D., C. A. Beckwith, D. D., G. W. Gilmore.

GREEN, John C., o. and i. Rockaway Beach, N. Y., Feb. 11. Sermon, Rev. S. H. Virgin, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. D. B. Pratt, Howard Billman, F. I. Wheat, Wm. James, T. S. Braithwaite.

HAGEMAN, Jas. C., o. Dundee, Mich. Parts were taken by Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, Rev. Messrs. M. H. Wallace, John Pogson, John Humphrey, Jas. Hyslop, W. H. Skentelbury.

SEWALL, Oliver D., i. asst. pastor Harvard Ch., Brookline, Mass., Mch, 1. Sermon, Pres. W. D. Hyde, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Drs. Reuen Thomas and E. L. Clark,

Resignations.

BRUNKER, Thos. A., Ridgway and Wakita, Okl.

CADY, Wm. J., Lake Geneva, Wis.

CURTIS, Chas. H., Hassalo St. Ch., Portland, Ore.

HEMENWAY, Frank W., Newton, Kan., to take effect Apr. 1.

JONES, Newton I., S Hadley, Mass., after a pastorate of eight years.

KELLOGG, H. Martin, Wolcott, Ct., to take effect in May.

Dismissions.

EDMANDS, T. Merrill, First Ch., Brainerd, Minn., Feb. 22.

TITUS, Herbert R., Vergennes, Vt., Feb. 23.

Churches Organized.

BRACEVILLE, Ill., rec. 3 Feb., 21 members.

BUNKER HILL, Wis., —.

EMANUEL (German), near Ritzville, Wn., 10 Feb., 19 members.

Miscellaneous.

BACHELDER, Francis P., Hockanum, Ct., was recently surprised by a large party of his Hillstown parishioners, who served supper and presented him with a purse of $25.

FORBUSH, Wm. B, has received from his people of Warren, Mass., a banquet lamp and a cherry rocking-chair with a purse of money.

HERRICK, Edward P., is temporarily supplying the Royal Ponciana Chapel and West Palm Beach Ch., Fla.

MUTCH, Wm. J., received on his recent birthday an unexpected visit from the congregation of Howard Ave. Ch., New Haven, and the gift of a purse of money.

SANDWELL, G. Henry, New Britain, Ct., prior to his late departure on a visit to England, received a $20 gold piece from each of ten friends. Rev. J. H. Dennison, a former pastor, will supply the pulpit during at least a part of Mr. Sandwell's absence.

TORREY, David C., and wife of Byfield, Mass., were surprised by their parishioners Feb. 18, the fifth anniversary of their marriage, and were presented with an oak sideboard, a library lamp, a study chair, books, etc In addition was an envelope containing $10 from an absent parishioner.

WHITE, Geo. H., of Grinnell, Io., has received an elegant fur overcoat by the will of the late Dr. E. K. Baxter of Boston, who was at one time a valued parishioner of Mr. White, at Sharon, Vt.

For Indigestion
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

DR. GREGORY DOYLE, Syracuse, N.Y., says: "I have frequently prescribed it in cases of indigestion and nervous prostration, and find the result so satisfactory that I shall continue it."

Palestine in Pictures.
396 Plates (8 in. x 10 in. each).
(25 Parts, Colored Map with each Part.)

This series of views by an American artist is the best ever published, and is indispensable to every Bible student. Two years ago we filled orders for 50,000. WE RECOMMEND THEM WITHOUT RESERVE.

Price, postpaid, $2.50.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset St., Boston, Mass.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E. W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

Hotels and Travel.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'S TOURS.
ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED.

Special Trip
. . . TO . . .
CALIFORNIA.

Leaving Boston Monday, March 15, and visiting Chicago, all the Leading Cities and Resorts of California, including Pasadena, Echo Mountain, Coronado Beach, San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Monterey, Santa Cruz, San Jose, Summit of Mount Hamilton, San Rafael, and the Sierra Nevada; and returning, Salt Lake City, Glenwood Springs, Manitou, and Denver. Sojourns at some of the Finest Hotels in America, including The Auditorium, Hotel Green in Pasadena, Alpine Tavern or Echo Mountain House, Hotel del Coronado, The Westminster or Hotel Van Nuys in Los Angeles, Palace Hotel in San Francisco, Hotel del Monte, Sea Beach Hotel in Santa Cruz, Hotel Vendome in San Jose, Hotel Rafael, The Knutsford in Salt Lake City, Cliff House or Barker's Hotel at Manitou Springs, and the Brown Palace Hotel in Denver. A Delightful Round of 40 Days under personal escort, and in leisurely journeys, and without waste of time.

PRICE $350,

Including first-class railway travel, a double berth in sleeping cars, all hotel accommodations, transfers, carriage rides and incidental meals during entire trip.

Independent Railroad Tickets via the Boston & Albany, Boston & Maine and Other Lines; also Steamship Tickets to all points.

☞ Send for descriptive circular of Special March Tour.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB,
296 Washington Street, opposite School St., Boston.

ESTABLISHED 1844.
GAZE TOURS
Nile, Bermuda,
Florida, West Indies,
Holy Land, Egypt, Europe.
Programs ready, post free. Mention tour.
GAZE'S TOURIST GAZETTE FREE.
H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd., 113 B'way, N. Y.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise
to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.
ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,
BY THE
AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"
Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.

Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

EUROPEAN TOURS.
15th Year. Terms reasonable. Parties limited. Conducted by
DR. & MRS. H. S. PAINE, Glens Falls, N. Y.

EUROPE, HOLY LAND, ROUND THE WORLD.—Parties leave February 27 for Holy Land; May 8, June 5, 12, July 3, 7 for Europe. $260 and up. F. C. CLARK, 306 Washington St., Boston.

ANNUAL EUROPEAN TOURS
Limited party, personally conducted by Prof. CAMILLE THURWANGER, now forming, 31 Pierce Bldg., Boston.

VACATION TRIP TO EUROPE.
ENGLAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, GERMANY, SWITZERLAND, and FRANCE. Carefully planned; fine accommodations; party limited; two conductors; sixteenth season. For programme, with full information, address Prof. H. B. RICHARDSON, Amherst, Mass.

BICYCLE PARTY IN EUROPE
England and France. 70 days. $390.
For particulars, address MISS L. M. DAME, The Brevoort, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The St. Denis,
BROADWAY AND ELEVENTH STREET,
Opposite Grace Church, NEW YORK.

EUROPEAN PLAN.

"There is an atmosphere of home comfort and hospitable treatment at the St. Denis which is rarely met with in a public house, and which insensibly draws you there as often as you turn your face toward New York."

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 293
The Outgoing Administration 294
Eight Weeks of Evangelism in Boston 294
Consulting the Oracles 295
What Shall I Do with My Christian Life? 296
Judicial Decisions of Church Councils 300
Current History 296
In Brief 297

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

Northwest 298

CONTRIBUTIONS:

Art for the People. O. M. E. Rowe 299
"Are You Prepared to Die?" Rev. S. V. Cole 300
The New Congregationalism of Scotland. Rev. J. Spencer Voorhees 301

THE HOME:

When—a poem. Emma C. Dowd 303
Paragraph 303
Parables in Pictures. II. Estelle M. Hurll 303
Diet for the Laboring Man. IV. Mary E. Green, M. D. 303
Mrs. Morley and Her Friend. Helen F. Lovett 304
The Old-Fashioned Bible—a selected poem 305
Our Last Club Meeting. Mrs. H. W. Boynton 305
Closet and Altar 305
Mothers in Council 306
The Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 307
Corner Scrap-Book 307
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for March 14 308
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for March 14-20 312
PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 309
LITERATURE 310
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 314
Weekly Register 290

MISCELLANEOUS:

On the Continent of Europe 301
In and About Chicago 302
Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 309
Colorado's Three Days' Jubilee 312
In and About Boston 313
Notices 314
Business Outlook 318
Our Armenian Orphans' Fund 322
Deaths 322
Joy in the Armenian Country 323

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

$1,000 IN GOLD

will be paid in prizes for the best answers to examination papers containing 150 questions about things we all want to know. No acquaintance with the classics or higher mathematics is required for this competition; a bright schoolboy or a clear-headed business man can do as well as a college professor. But these prizes can only be won by people who use 500,000 Definitions.

150,000 Encyclopedic Articles.
300,000 Quotations.
8,000 Engravings.

The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia

10 Superb Volumes.
The world's greatest Reference Work.
An International Authority.

The award committee will consist of college professors whose names will be announced later.

You can obtain immediate possession of this great work ☞ in cash, and (with diligence) win one of the prizes. (First Prize, $500)

For $5 only

If you want a descriptive pamphlet of the work, or details of the competition, address

THE CENTURY CO. (Dept. Am.) New York

Order Early

Many schools delay ordering Sunday School Supplies till the last week of the quarter. Why not order now instead of a month hence?

The circulation of the "Pilgrim Series" for the present quarter has passed all previous high-water marks, and the coming quarter will probably show a further increase. What is the reason for this steady growth during hard times? It is simply that these lesson helps meet the needs of our schools better than any others.

The Pilgrim Series

There are Others

Some, however, want others, wholly or in part, and we furnish whatever they want at publishers' lowest rates. It is not necessary to divide your orders. Send for anything and everything needed in church and Sunday school to

Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society, Congregational House, Boston. 175 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

$100 IN GOLD GIVEN AWAY

Are you a smart speller? We give $100 away in prizes to those able to make the largest list of words from the word RESPONSIBLE. You can make at least twenty, we believe, and if you can you will get a present any way, and if your list is the largest you will get $40.00 in cash. Here are the rules to follow: Use only words in the English language. Do not use any letters in a word more times than it appears in RESPONSIBLE. Words spelled alike can be used only once. Use any dictionary, and we allow to be counted proper nouns, pronouns, prefixes, suffixes, any legitimate word. This is the way: Responsible, response, rip, sop, see, sin, sip, soil, sob, sole, etc. Use these words. The publisher of THE AMERICAN WOMAN will give away, on April 10, the sum of $100, divided into 24 prizes for the largest lists of words as above. $40 to the person making the largest list; $10 for the second largest; $5 each for the next five largest lists; $3 each for the 4 next largest, and $1 for each of the next 13 largest lists. We want you to know our paper, and it is for this reason we offer these premiums. We make no extra charge for the privilege of entering this word-building contest, but it is necessary to send us 25 cents silver or stamps, for which we will send you our handsome illustrated 28 page magazine for six months, and the very day we receive your remittance we will mail you free, a beautiful picture, entitled "The Forest Sanctuary," 17x24 inches a charming present This offer is the greatest you have ever had made to you. Send your list at once. If you win one of the prizes your name will be published in our May issue. Address THE AMERICAN WOMAN, 119 and 121 Nassau St. New York City, N. Y.

Edersheim's Life of Christ.

Two large octavo vols., Longmans's Authorized Edition, mailed on receipt of $1.85. Reduced from $6.00.

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, BOSTON.

CHURCH ORGANS
Hook & Hastings Co.
Boston, Mass.

EASTER MUSIC

"The Prince of Life," prepared by J. R. Murray, is a beautiful service for Sunday Schools, containing Responsive Readings, interspersed with appropriate songs. Price, 5 cents per single copy

A SPECIAL CIRCULAR

Containing a list of our large and varied stock of music for Easter will be sent free on application.

The new music for 1897 is exceptionally fine, including in addition to the publication above named, splendid solos and duets, and fine anthems for the choir. Among the composers represented are G. W. Marston, E. Marzo, C. A. Havens, G. F. Root and others.

CANTATAS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Flower Praise (20c). Festival of the Flowers (30c). Under the Palms (30c).

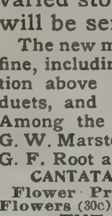
THE MUSICAL VISITOR

for March will contain a supplement of Easter Anthems. Price, 15 cents.

THE JOHN CHURCH COMPANY,
CINCINNATI. NEW YORK. CHICAGO.

Sacred Songs No. 1.

By Ira D. Sankey, Jas. McGranahan, Geo. C. Stebbins.



This exceptionally fine collection is used by Mr. MOODY and Mr. SANKEY in all their meetings. Mr. Moody says it is the best book he ever used.

SACRED SONGS NO. 1

has won its way to popular favor more rapidly than any song book ever issued.

Over 100,000 Copies Sold in Three Months!

$25 per 100, in boards; add 5 cts. each, if ordered by mail. Get a copy and try it. If your bookseller cannot furnish it, send to Publishers.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
Chicago House, 215 Wabash Ave. 76 E. 9th St., N. Y.

IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED by announcements in our ADVERTISING COLUMNS, please mention that the advertisement was seen in The Congregationalist.

LATEST ISSUES

CHARLES F. DEEMS—

Of the Church of the Strangers, New York. An Autobiography and a Memoir. With portraits, etc. 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

"You have succeeded in letting the man speak for himself, and all the interest that attaches to his labors and adventures as an ardent and faithful Gospeler reappears here in your pages."—Henry van Dyke, D. D.

"This is a work of great value for several widely different reasons. Its style has all the charm of friendly converse. The subject had traveled so widely, mingled with ecclesiastical and public affairs so actively, that the book may be considered a running commentary on the events of the last century."—Christian Advocate (New York).

INEBRIETY

Its Source, Prevention and Cure. By CHARLES FOLLEN PALMER. 12mo, gilt top, net 50c.

"A clear, compact, scientific treatise on the alcohol habit, couched in common sense terms, without the least touch of dogmatism, and inspired throughout with a healthy contempt of fanaticism."—Commercial Advertiser.

"This is a very comprehensive, 'meaty' little volume. . . . The intimate relation between mental states and physical appetites, inherited tendencies and acquired habits, is discussed fully, the typographical arrangement of the book making its study very convenient."—Voice.

"Thoughtful and practical."—Congregationalist.

THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS

A Commentary, Logical and Historical. By Rev. J. M. STIFLER, D. D., Professor of New Testament Exegesis in Crozier Theological Seminary. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

This commentary reaches the accepted results of all careful study, but by a way of its own. It is conservative, but neither timid nor arid. It treats each point in language that is simple, fresh and lucid.

CORN ON THE MOUNTAINS

Sermons by Rev. JOHN ROBERTSON. 12mo, cloth, $1 25.

"Gathered in this volume are fourteen sermons by the Scotch 'Baptist-Presbyterian,' as he calls himself, who, as preacher at Tremont Temple last summer, and subsequently as evangelistic preacher in other cities, became known to many of our people. The flavor is preserved even in the printed page."—Watchman.

IN THE TIGER JUNGLE

And Other Stories of Missionary Work among the Telugus. By Rev. J. CHAMBERLAIN, M. D., D. D., for 37 years a missionary in India. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The tales are told with genuine art; but vivid and moving as they are, the serious reader will doubtless give special heed to the insight which these stories give into missionary life in one of the most interesting and fruitful foreign fields."—Examiner.

"If this is the kind of missionary who mans the foreign stations they will never fail for lack of enterprise."—Independent.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

Fleming H. Revell Company

NEW YORK: 112 Fifth Avenue.
CHICAGO: 63 Washington St.
TORONTO: 140 and 142 Yonge St.

One of the most important religious books of the year.

The Bible as Literature

By Prof. RICHARD G. MOULTON, A. B. BRUCE, D D , HENRY VAN DYKE, D.D , J M. WHITON, Ph. D , Prof. JOHN F GENUNG, W E GRIFFIS, D. D , Prof. L. W. BATTEN, Ph D., Prof. ALBERT P. COOK, and others Introduction by LYMAN ABBOTT, D D. 12mo, cloth, $1 50.

SECOND EDITION | NOW READY.

"A book that we can heartily commend to all ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and literature classes."—Northern Christian Advocate.

"We have followed the volume with delight and surprise at the richness of its treatment."—Chicago Advance.

"There has been no former publication of this kind having anything like the scope, plan, and amplitude of both Biblical and literary scholarship."—Boston Advertiser.

"The contributors to this volume are among the most distinguished Biblical scholars in the world."—Epworth Herald.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, prepaid, on receipt of price.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO.,

46 East 14th St., New York.
100 Purchase St., Boston.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THAT THE ANNOUNCEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER'S LIBRARY.

Last month we were able to commend, without reservation, the general design, method and scope of Charles Dudley Warner's new "Library of the World's Best Literature."

We found that it made good its name; that it did, in fact, take the place of whole libraries of scattered volumes, and put the reader in possession of the best of all that has been written, in every age and country, since writing began.

In looking through the biographies of authors, which have been prepared by over three hundred American and European scholars and critics, one is delighted with many pleasant bits of information, in strong contrast to the dry biographical sketches of the encyclopædias. Aristotle, for instance, as the latter treat him, is dull enough, but in the "Library" Prof. Thomas W. Davidson re-creates him into a man—one who, if you cut him, would bleed, and one who led a life of real incidents it is a pleasure to read about. Your interest in Aristotle himself becomes warm, and then there is laid before you the best that survives to us of his writings, including his noble "Hymn to Virtue." Thus, in scarcely an hour's reading, and reading, too, of the most interesting kind, we make an acquaintance quite sufficient for all the needs of general culture with one of the master-spirits of the world.

But if Aristotle seems pretty far away, we come (quite at random) to Thomas Bailey Aldrich, of whom we all know something. A sketch of but three pages gives us a complete and vivid impression of the man, and fixes for us his place in literature. Some thirty pages more supply us with excellent specimens of his stories and thirteen of his choicest poems in full. We doubt if one could anywhere gain a juster notion of the man and his writings than is here presented.

The infinite variety of the "Library," its provision for every taste and mood, is seen in a rapid survey of the contents of any portion of the work. In the first volume, for instance, only a part of the letter "A" is covered, but see what a sweep and multifariousness that one volume presents! It opens with a delightful account of the historic lovers, Abélard and Héloïse, of the twelfth century, with typical letters of each, and the famous "Vesper Hymn" of Abélard. The very next subject, Edmond About, transports us to the latter half of the nineteenth century. Then follows a chapter on Accadian-Babylonian and Assyrian literature, the oldest in the world, with an account of the most recent discoveries at Babylon. The turn of a leaf brings us back from old half-buried Assyria to new America, presented in the person of one of its noblest and most gifted dames, Abigail Adams. Other Adamses follow, until finally we have Sarah Flower Adams, who wrote "Nearer, my God, to Thee." Then we come to Addison, from whose pen language flowed in its freest and most genial phrases. Æschines, the famous orator of the Greeks; Æschylus, the greatest of the Greek tragic poets; Agassiz, our greatest naturalist; Grace Aguilar; William Harrison Ainsworth; Mark Akenside; Louisa M. Alcott; Alfonso the Wise; Alfred the Great; James Lane Allen, the laureate of the "blue grass" region; and Hans Christian Andersen—all fully represented by their highest and best efforts in essay, oratory, song or story.

In short, all climes and all times have been levied on for the contents of these volumes. "A good book," said Milton, "is the precious life-blood of a master-spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life." We have here this vital fluid distilled down to its last potency, so that the full virtue of all good books beyond number have been concentrated into thirty volumes.

Although the first edition is the most desirable because printed from fresh, new plates, the publishers, instead of advancing the price, have actually reduced it over half, so as to quickly place a few sets in each community.

These introductory sets are distributed through the Harper's Weekly Club, which will close in March, but we have made a reservation of fifty of these sets for Congregationalist readers, as we did last month, and these sets can be had by making prompt application to the club at 91 Fifth Avenue, New York. Sample pages (and special prices) will be sent on request.

New Easter Services

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

THE JOYOUS EASTER-TIDE, with Music.
EASTER MESSAGES (Primary), with Music.
SOME WONDERFUL EASTER DAYS, with Music.

5 cts. each; $4.00 per hundred.

EASTER RECITATIONS. 16mo, paper, 15 cts., postpaid.
EASTER CONCERT BOOK. 16mo, boards, 50 cts., postpaid.

Complete Catalogue free.

HENRY D. NOYES & CO.,
13½ Bromfield St., Boston.

Fillmores' Easter Music for Choirs and Sunday-schools now ready. Send for descriptive list. FILLMORE BROS., 119 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, or 40 Bible House, New York.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

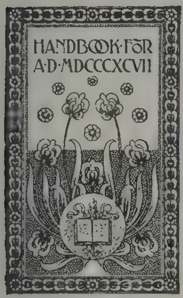
Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 4 March 1897 Number 9

HOME MISSIONARY FUND.

A Friend, Worcester, Mass.	$5.00
Miss S. A. Whitmarsh, Chelsea, Mass	2.00
Y. P. S. C. E., Foxcroft and Dover Cong. Ch...	2.00
S. M. Duncklee, Newton	2.00
Rev. N. W. Williams, Providence	2.00

A CONSCIENTIOUS AND GRATEFUL RECIPIENT.

Your recent appeals for the Home Missionary Fund prompt me to thank you most sincerely for keeping me on the "free list" all these years and to excuse you from further service of that kind, as I am no longer in charge of missionary work; am "without charge" and retired on account of health having failed. I appreciate the paper none the less on this account, but as the "fund" is maintained to aid "missionaries" in active service, I feel that I am not entitled to its benefits, so please feel perfectly free to omit my name from the list. I do not feel able to subscribe, but be assured I am a friend of The Congregationalist, and will ever hold it in grateful remembrance for what it has done for me.



THE HANDBOOK FOR 1897 CONTAINS CHURCH PRAYER MEETING TOPICS, WITH SUB-DIVISIONS, Y. P. S. C. E. PRAYER MEETING TOPICS, JUNIOR C. E. TOPICS, S. S. LESSONS, AND A GREAT VARIETY OF OTHER IMPORTANT MATTER. 100 COPIES, $1.25 POSTPAID.

✠ TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS. ✠

6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

MT. HOLYOKE is to be congratulated on the response to its appeal for a general observance of Mary Lyon Day. Reports which have already reached us indicate even more attention paid to it than we dared to anticipate. The Connecticut Valley bears off the honors. The celebrations at Springfield, Northampton and Buckland, the little town in which Mary Lyon was born, were particularly enthusiastic. Many sermons on Mary Lyon and the influences which she set in motion were preached, and collections were taken in quite a number of cases. The Second Church, Dorchester, gave $2,000 and two Worcester churches $500 and $600, respectively. At South Hadley the day was a joyous one. Dr. Arthur Little preached and the teachers and students devoted themselves to realizing the full meaning and inspiration of the occasion. From more distant parts of New England, and without it as well, we are hearing, as we go to press, similar good tidings. May the college reap a rich harvest from this day for which such careful preparations had been made.

If Bishop Potter of New York had been reported in the New York Journal as saying that the Congregationalists of this country were tending toward Unitarianism and Secularity, and then the public, after the Congregationalists had justly been aroused by such an unfounded aspersion, had discovered that the Journal's interviewer, as is his wont, had made the story out of whole cloth, we in this country could better understand the situation which our British brethren have faced during the past few weeks. The Bishop of London denies that he charged British Congregationalists with any Unitarian or secularizing tendency, and puts the responsibility of the misrepresentation upon the gentleman, Mr. Raymond Blathwayt, not unknown in this country, who interviewed him for Great Thoughts. Mr. Blathwayt admits that "the bishop and I were hopelessly in the wrong." Meantime, while they are straightening out the tangle of responsibility, representative leaders like Guinness Rogers and Dr. George S. Barrett are making it clear to the English public that there is not the slightest basis for either charge. Dr. Barrett challenges Mr. Blathwayt to name a single Congregational minister in Great Britain who is a Unitarian. He adds:

> I know our churches sufficiently to be able to say that whilst they hold in high respect the philosophical and ethical value of the teaching of such a man, for example, as Rev. Dr. Martineau, and honor the services rendered by the Unitarian body to the moral life of the nation, they would not allow any man to occupy the position of a Congregational minister who denied the incarnation and the divinity of our Lord. The second charge, that of "secularism," is less easily disposed of, because it is so difficult to determine where the spiritual function of the church ends and its secular work begins. I can only say that whilst I fully admit that it is possible to "secularize" the church of Christ—a danger to which all churches alike are exposed—there are indications which come from many and diverse quarters that our churches, whilst still believing the church of Christ has a mission from her Lord to relieve human suffering and to redress human wrongs, are becoming more and more conscious that the supreme mission of the church is not to deliver men from suffering, but by preaching the gospel of Christ to save them from sin.

That must have been a right enjoyable series of meetings at Colorado College in honor of the raising of the Pearsons fund. The report on page 312 shows the extent to which the college has intrenched itself in the affections of the entire State, irrespective of denominational lines. That so many notable educators could be brought together and such vital and important educational themes receive so thorough a handling is evidence of the progress which the higher Christian education has already made in that distant Western State. Such a program as that, carried out so enthusiastically last week, might well engage the attention of any group of educators East or West. It should be understood that this new endowment will not be fully available until next autumn, and consequently in order to meet current expenses for the present year additional funds will at once be needed. This necessitates the continued presence in the East of the indefatigable financial agent of the college, George N. Marden, who can be communicated with at 13 Tremont Place, Boston.

Last week we commented upon a decree of the United States Supreme Court which would tend to restrain some of the indecencies of "modern journalism." This week the President is to be credited with a like praiseworthy act. To a petition for the pardon of an Indiana publisher of obscene papers sentenced to imprisonment, Mr. Cleveland replies:

> Denied—this convict was one of the editors and proprietors and a distributor through the mails and otherwise of a disgustingly vile and obscene newspaper. His conviction and sentence was an event distinctly tending to the promotion of public morals and the protection of the sons and daughters of our land from filth and corruption at a time when indecent newspaper publications are so dangerous and common. Everybody in favor of cleanliness should encourage the punishment of such offenses and desire that it should be more frequently imposed. While I am much surprised by the number of respectable people who have joined in urging clemency in this case, my duty seems so clear that I am not in the least induced to interfere with the just and wholesome sentence of the Court.

There is a very effective way of boycotting such newspapers as pollute the atmosphere of too many of our cities, and the wonder is that the directors of public libraries in other cities have not long since decided to do as the directors of the Newark, N. J., public library have just done, namely, exclude the World and Journal (N. Y.) from the reading-room.

Not since the body now known as the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland was formed in 1847 has there been a more significant event in that country than the union of the Congregational and Evangelical Union churches, described elsewhere in this paper by a correspondent. The former denomination has existed in Scotland for about one hundred years and the latter for about fifty. But they have had so much in common that for a number of years leaders on both sides have been trying to find a common ground of agreement. That it has come now without any sacrifice of vital principles, but rather by broadening the limits of Christian toleration, is a matter of congratulation to all lovers of Christian unity. The Evangelical Union people have always been considered the champion of broad, though thoroughly evangelical, Christianity. They incurred some odium half a century ago, when they were known as Morisonians, by standing for a universal atonement. With such a spiritual ancestry the theological basis of the present union could hardly be expected to be a formal creed. The first article of agreement declares that the Bible alone shall be regarded as the standard of faith and life. The meeting described by our correspondent is but one of many that have been held to celebrate this event. May the union prove beneficial to the parties forming it, and may it speed forward the coming of the kingdom.

Our Lord advised his disciples not to undertake a work in his name without carefully considering whether they would be able to carry it through. If any one should make such an attempt unadvisedly, he said, he might find himself where the spectators would all laugh at him, saying, "This man began to build and was not able to finish."

Bishop Vincent furnishes a suggestive illustration of this in a letter to the Christian Advocate. He has found in Brazil the results of the "self supporting" mission work which Bishop Taylor began there sixteen years ago. It is a story of pitiful failure. He says:

> Between 1880 and 1893 twenty-five different persons came to Brazil under these auspices. Today four of them remain. One "became engrossed in business"; another was soon "engaged to be married to an explorer"; another became "discouraged by ill health and difficulties in the work"; another, "disliking the administration of the school, went to work on his own account." In one case the "furnishings of the school were sold to pay the accumulated debt." And "none of the teachers were connected with the schools long enough to become acquainted with the Portuguese language."

The four who remain, while admired for their courage and devotion, are pitied for their sufferings and for the apparent waste of their lives. There are a number of these missionary enterprises carried on by what is called faith, which not only come to nothing, but render the fields their promoters vainly undertake to occupy more difficult of access for those who may follow them. Reasonable forethought and the exercise of common sense would have prevented the undertaking of such work without wise choice of men and proper provision of means to carry it on. Is it less wrong or more noble to waste lives and money in the name of the Lord than in one's own name?

THE OUTGOING ADMINISTRATION.

No four years of American history since the Civil War have included so many events of dramatic popular interest, directly connected with the national Government, as the period which ends today with the withdrawal of Mr. Cleveland from the presidency. The mere mention of the most conspicuous of these events is sufficient to prove this statement. We have only to recall the attempt to restore the Hawaiian monarchy, the repeal of the silver purchase law, the enactment of the new tariff bill, the march of the "Commonwealers," the Chicago railway strike, the Republican political "tidal wave" of 1894, the failure to impose an income tax, the successive bond issues to maintain the Treasury gold reserve, the Venezuelan message, the issues of the presidential election, and the arbitration treaty. Most of these events have had sudden and powerful effects on business. The entire period has been a time of uncertainty. The business world, startled by repeated surprises, has not only had its confidence shaken by foreseen dangers, but has been filled with apprehension of unknown calamities.

The most prominent and commanding figure in this national history has been the President; and next to him Mr. Olney, serving first as Attorney General and later as Secretary of State. In some of these movements Mr. Cleveland has had popular sentiment strongly against him, notably in the Hawaiian matter. In others he has faced bitter opposition from the leaders of his party. He leaves his office at the end of his second term without party following, but with a high degree of popular esteem for his courage, steadfastness against opposition, and unwavering purpose to promote the public welfare. Mr. Cleveland has afforded a remarkable illustration of the fallibility of political prophets. Four years ago, in the Review of Reviews, Prof. Woodrow Wilson said, "Signs are not wanting that the Republican party is going to pieces; and signs are fairly abundant that the Democratic party is rapidly being made over by the stirring and disturbing energy of the extraordinary man who is now President." In this month's Atlantic, Professor Wilson says, "Mr. Cleveland never seemed so utterly without a party as in the extraordinary campaign which has made Mr. McKinley his successor."

The main things in domestic policy which have perplexed the Government during the last four years are still unsettled—the tariff and the currency. Till they are settled, permanent prosperity cannot be assured. A glance at their history during the four years will help us to understand the task which is now before the incoming administration. Mr. Cleveland, on entering office, encountered a strong free silver element in Congress, and he was uncompromisingly opposed to its policy, which found strongest support in his own party. Soon after his inauguration, he called an extra session of Congress, a step evidently made necessary by the danger of a panic. He told the national legislators that the repeal of the silver purchase law was their first duty. From that time the advocates of free coinage of silver became united, and the contest was joined between them and their opponents. Party lines were subordinated to this issue. The House supported the President. The Senate was nearly equally divided, and the struggle was prolonged. The President at last won the victory, but at great cost. He compelled the free silver men to choose the party which they would strive to use for their purposes, and it was the Democratic party. By his veto of the vicious Seignorage Bill in March, 1894, he defeated them again. But they were only held in check for the time.

The tariff question then came again to the front. One of the problems of Mr. Harrison's administration had been to dispose of the surplus revenue. But pension legislation and the extravagant appropriations of the "billion dollar Congress" had already amply provided for that. Yet the proposed new tariff looked in the same direction, by its measures for decreasing the revenue. To meet the new phase of the problem, the income tax was added to the bill, and the Democratic party divided again along new lines. The Senate set itself to ruin the bill. Mr. Cleveland, by a letter to Mr. Wilson, supported the House against the Senate, but the latter had such advantages in the way of obstructing legislation that the House at last yielded and accepted the mutilated bill as the only alternative. It pleased nobody. The President was profoundly dissatisfied with it, but, sharing the feeling of the House, allowed it to become a law without his signature.

Then the Supreme Court set aside the income tax and this completed the demoralization of the Democratic party. The revenue became insufficient to pay expenses, the debt increased, the Government, being obliged to redeem its notes in gold on demand, undertook to raise money by issuing bonds. But as the Senate refused to allow long term bonds payable in gold, the Government was forced to apply to the bankers for aid, and this increased the hostility of the silver men. They captured the Democratic party in its convention to nominate a president, forced the issue and were defeated at the polls.

This brief outline suggests especially two things in looking at the future: first, that the Senate has largely lost public confidence, both in its methods and in many of its members; and second, that business prosperity cannot be restored till the questions of the tariff and the currency are satisfactorily settled. Of these the last is by far the most difficult, and it is also the most imperative. The difficulty is enhanced by the fact that a disproportionate number of members of the Senate, as compared with the people whom that body is supposed to represent, are determined to subordinate everything else to their purpose to bring the country to a silver basis, and the minority of citizens who sympathize with them are very much in earnest about it. The task before the Administration is one which calls for great wisdom and patience, and for much forbearance on the part of the people.

We believe that the safest way to settle these two questions is to put each into the hands of a commission of experts to examine and report on it to Congress. But we do not expect that this will be done; and our hope is that the Senate will have such wise and patriotic leaders that it will be prevented by them from obstructing legislation.

While Mr. Cleveland has been baffled in plans providing for legislation looking to restoration of business stability, he has saved the country from serious perils. But we believe his administration will be most conspicuous in history for its wonderful advance in reforming the civil service and in promoting the principle of settling difficulties between nations by arbitration instead of by war. Mr. Cleveland has practically established the policy of appointing men to public service according to their fitness for the offices to which they are called. He has accomplished more in this direction than the most sanguine dared to hope when he entered on his second term. He has negotiated a permanent treaty of arbitration with Great Britain which is heartily approved by the people of both countries, and which is favorably looked on by other nations—an advance in civilization of unmeasured importance.

If the incoming administration can maintain and complete the results of civil service reform and of arbitration, and if it can establish a tariff and a currency system which shall gain the approval of the people and work for national prosperity, it will win for itself great renown. For this end all Christians should pray earnestly and labor unitedly.

EIGHT WEEKS OF EVANGELISM IN BOSTON.

It is not easy to estimate the results of Mr. Moody's meetings in Boston, which came to an end last Friday. That the city is better for his being here two months, that many Christians have been quickened, backsliders restored and outsiders brought into the kingdom can hardly be questioned. At the same time, bearing in mind the special object of the campaign—the awakening of the churches—which Mr. Moody avowed at the start and which has largely shaped his utterances through the entire eight weeks, we cannot, as yet, speak with unreserved enthusiasm. Undoubtedly he has reached a certain class within the churches, perhaps the class whose emotions least need to be aroused, but whether his influence has permeated the rank and file of church membership, and determined methods and policies of activity, we are not yet able to say. We wonder, for instance, how many of the pastors, deacons and other officers in our ninety-eight churches in metropolitan Boston have attended as many as six of the Tremont Temple gatherings. This series of meetings seems to have stimulated at least a few churches to special services like those of Mr. Scofield at Dr. Plumb's church, and those at the South End, and no doubt in not a few prayer meetings and Sunday schools the impulse which individuals have received at Tremont Temple has been transmitted to others.

Even if it shall prove that the ultimate fruits of Mr. Moody's meetings are not as great as they were twenty years ago, it does not follow that it is the fault either of Mr. Moody or of the churches. Since that time the demands for Christian service have multiplied, and many of the most loyal workers today have been so busy fulfilling their obligations to their local churches as to leave little time for attendance upon the great mass meetings which no doubt they would have enjoyed and profited by.

As respects the effect upon the outside public, here again we are limited in our ability to gauge results. If the attention paid to the meetings by the daily papers measures popular interest in them, there is a distinct loss when compared with the campaign of 1877. We doubt if there is a Boston paper which has given anything like the space which it then devoted to reports of the work. Indeed, we find it difficult to understand on what principle of journalism the leading afternoon paper of the city, which goes into as many cultivated Christian homes as any other Boston daily, has determined its policy in this respect. It certainly has been a disappointment to many of its readers to find, usually, less than half a column, and that apparently taken from the morning papers.

It is gratifying that the financial side of this evangelistic undertaking makes so good a showing, and that the collection taken last Friday afternoon more than met all outstanding obligations. The total expenses for hall and advertising have been $5,316.88. Credit for this most desirable exhibit belongs chiefly to Henry M. Moore, who has been practically the sole business manager of Mr. Moody's campaign and has served the cause most unsparingly.

Whether the results of this series of meetings be startlingly evident or quiet and pervasive, the Christians of this vicinity appreciate the fact that there has been among them a man of God, who lives solely to build up Christ's kingdom. It is worth much to any city to have a man of his spirit and character preaching the gospel in the heart of its business section day after day to throngs that overrun the accommodations of one of the largest auditoriums in the city. These meetings, so large and so popular, have been a constant witness to the thoughtless and worldly of the reality of the Christian religion, and those who have drifted in out of curiosity have witnessed wonderful scenes, particularly those which took place on Thursday and Friday of last week, the closing days. The ultimate effect can hardly be otherwise than good and far-reaching, and as Mr. Moody begins his work in Cincinnati it must be with the consciousness that his work in Boston has been faithfully and perseveringly performed and that God's blessing will surely rest upon it.

We would add, here, our hearty commendation of Mr. Murphy's meetings, which closed last Monday. It has been good to see him and Mr. Moody working together so heartily, with not the slightest trace of jealousy on the part of either. The great temperance apostle has certainly been wonderfully successful in reaching the outcast and degraded victims of strong drink. His Faneuil Hall noonday gatherings have been remarkably impressive and his work at Berkeley Temple and Park Street Church not less noteworthy. We can bid him, also, Godspeed, as he leaves the city this week to begin services in Lowell.

CONSULTING THE ORACLES.

The pedestrian is never more tempted to sigh for wings than on a sunny day of late winter as he plods wearily along by muddy road and sticky lane toward his familiar summer haunts. The way of the air is clean and beautiful, overarched by the azure sky in which white clouds are moving. The woods and hills are near to the eye, but difficult of access to slipping feet. The birds flit from hedge to tree with such enviable facility! Overhead it seems all poetry, while the melted surface of the earth is a sticky prose intolerable except as the price of a wanderer's delight attainable upon no better terms. It is the old story of conditioned gifts, wings of fancy and desire chained to feet that must labor in the miry ways of earth.

If it is spring we seek, one oracle at least has spoken. A solitary bluebird was exploring yesterday as if he were a messenger sent by his people in some southern wilderness to spy out the promised land. There is something pleasing to our vanity in this homesickness of the birds. Our fields and woods, our hollow apple trees and the knotholes in our fence posts must have a value which we little understand when these cerulean spirits, who are free of the whole, wide world, are so eager to return to them.

Since the bluebird has spoken, it is time that we consulted some of the other oracles of spring. The brook, which we saw last on a brilliant afternoon of iron frost when its music sounded under a roof of ice, like the subdued murmur of an assembly heard by one who passes by an open door, has shaken itself wholly free. It is fairly shouting its opinion that spring has really come. A merry song it would be, indeed, if we only had more confidence in the prophet's call. It is good to take optimistic views of life, but the brook is like some other noisy and shallow people; it mistakes its own immediate enthusiasm for the wisdom of the ages. It will sing a less exultant song when the evening frosts choke back its affluents and by morning will be far less confident of spring.

This spicebush, lonely in the thicket of witch hazel and hornbeam, has no doubt an opinion which is worth considering. With the pussy-willows and red maples it is among the first to hear the call of spring. It is not one of the foolish virgins. It slumbers and sleeps, but its veins are full of spicy oil. It needs but the first real summons and it will hang out tiny clustered lamps of fragrant bloom along its spotted boughs in the yet leafless wood. That summons it has evidently not yet heard, for its blossom buds are still fast closed, though ready. Nor is there a sign of life on the wet bank at its foot where the adders-tongue will soon be thrusting up its mottled leaves.

The witch-hazel, for its part, does not care to hurry on the spring. For the moment it is too idle to be oracular. It is utterly content with winter, as one who has worked till midnight is utterly content with sleep. Here and there along its boughs are the gaping mouths of the double mortars from which the ripened nutlets of the year were shot and the reflexed lips of its sepal cups still make the sign of the cross in faded gold. The witch-hazel's prophecy would be of weird beauty in the wane of autumn after the trees of the wood have hung out their crimson and yellow flags of surrender to the cold. It would be useless also to ask the opinion of the hornbeams. They are staid and respectable people, but too dense to have an opinion of their own, for all that they look so aged and so wise with their furrowed and wrinkled stems. They will let somebody else experiment, and when they are well assured that it is fashionable to be growing they will begin to grow.

In the wood the footing instantly improves. The snow is distributed in irregular patches which give a wonderfully brilliant undercolor to the picture without reducing the whole floor of the forest to a monotony of white. In these guarded paths we become reconciled to the ordinary method of human locomotion. A winged man would be quite too clumsy a wild fowl for these thickets. He would be driven to fold his wings in order to enjoy the beauty of detail in the scene around him—these clumps of fern, these airy clouds of young hemlocks cheerful in the slanting sunlight, these lichen-painted rocks and variously tinted boles of trees, this huge boulder against which a tall hemlock seems to lean, while all its crevices and hollows are heaped with cinnamon-red needles. It is a cheerful scene, because the wood's whole heart lies open to the sun.

While we are resting a moment on a convenient log, another authority appears—a red squirrel who has ventured out to consult his own private oracles upon the absorbing question of the progress of the year. The result does not seem to be encouraging, if we may judge by his listless movements. Apparently he is doubtful even of the propriety of his appearance in public with that rusty coat, which has the look of being much the worse for a sedentary life in cramped quarters. He does not even chatter, but sits with his back to the sun as if his great tail were a heater which he was warming at the fire to take back to bed with him. Such a bolster of fur must be a comfort indeed on a bitter January night.

Yet even here in the deep wood where the squirrel finds no promise of the spring the persistence of life is never for a moment in doubt. Here are those two patient expectants, the hepatica and pipsissewa, upon whose sturdy greenery the cold has no effect. From those downy hepatica nests will come the earliest blossoms of the undergrowth, while the pipsissewa is in no hurry even to scatter the seeds it carries on long stems above its varnished leaves. July is early enough for blossoming, in her opinion. There is something undignified in haste! With such different thoughts of necessity and opportunity, as if they had been merely men and women, do these close wood companions confront their fate.

It is a happy time for the stream in the wood glade. It is reduced in summer to the merest trickle of water among mossy stones, but now it is too busy for prophecy and too happy for forethought as it sings along its little valley. Like some timid and self-conscious mortals it does its best when there is no one by to see. Here it is hidden by an ice bridge anchored, to all appearance, on one side to a mossy stone and on the other to a clump of polypody fern, while yonder it cuts across the vista of a snowy hollow under level hemlock branches with a gleam of mellow brown.

More and more slanting are the rays of the declining sun. Far away through glistering boughs the valley lies at our feet, and beyond, over the western ridge, the true prophet of the immediate future rises up to meet us in the shape of a long bank of blue-black cloud. Spring is coming, but not tomorrow. Into that threatening darkness the sun goes down; but in the clear blue sky above it there hangs a single cloud so flushed with color and pervaded with soft light that in its rosy warmth the beauty of the sunlit day and expectation of the summer seem to meet in promise of a happier time to come.

WHAT SHALL I DO WITH MY CHRISTIAN LIFE?

Treat it as the most important fact connected with you. Some people are all the time trying to compromise between heaven and this life, between righteousness and worldliness. They mean to be good enough to go to heaven, but they do not propose to surrender a single satisfaction of this world which they possibly can escape surrendering. The question with them is not, How much I can do for Christ, but How much can I avoid doing for him? They may be Christians, perhaps, but their type of Christianity is more of a hindrance than a help. To such the fact that they are Christians is not the great, glorious feature of their experience, the thing of which to be proudest, the one element of life which willingly is conceded superiority and authority over all others. But this is the only proper view of Christianity. If it is not first in the heart, it is apt to be last, in reality if not in theory.

When one comes to think of it, religion is about the only important possession which we are sure of carrying over into the next world with us unchanged. Personal identity will remain in some form but the earthly body will have vanished, and all our material possessions will have been left behind. Whether glory and fame endure beyond the grave we do not know. We may possess tastes and powers similar to those of the present, but we cannot now tell. The only things which we know are that we still shall be ourselves and that the love of God and of goodness, if we have cherished it here, still will characterize us and will be a blessing to us.

Surely, inasmuch as every one of us is to pass sooner or later into that almost unknown region, it is worth while to cultivate the spirit which will render it, when we have reached it, homelike and happy. That we have been Christians here will be our best introduction into the home of Christ beyond. Let our Christian lives now be lived thus, in remembrance of their future importance and significance.

Fraud was the direct cause of nine per cent. of all the business failures in this country last year, and the indirect cause of many more. What works greater mischief in business than sin?

CURRENT HISTORY.

The Fifty-Fourth Congress Ends.

Whether or not all of the appropriation bills will be passed ere this Congress dies cannot be predicted as we go to press. So much time was spent in worse than useless debate on Cuban affairs last week that the senators felt justified in sitting Sunday. Their constituents will have a different opinion of this, however, and justly so. The attack upon the civil service law, made by Congressman Grosvenor, in which he described civil service reform as "a sinuous, infamous conspiracy against the Government," was not answered as it should have been, and it bodes trouble ahead for the next Administration, if such views are to be accepted by Congress, for Mr. McKinley, Mr. Gage and Mr. McKenna are all on record as hearty supporters of the present law. The House, with only four members dissenting, has adopted the Senate bill empowering the President to call an international monetary conference. Hon. Nelson Dingley of Maine contributed much to bring about this result by his argument that the Republican party was under obligations to do it, if it would live up to its pledge made in the last national platform, and hence many voted for it who neither wish to see, or expect to see, any practical outcome from such a conference if it be held.

The real attitude of the Republican party, by reason of this vote, becomes more of a matter of conjecture than ever. Six senators and four congressmen, Western Republicans, last week served notice on the party that they would proceed to organize the "silver Republicans" throughout the country, and would urge them to act always so as to foster the free coinage of silver. Mr. Bryan is moving about reiterating his views and sowing seed. The next municipal campaign in Chicago bids fair to be fought out on monetary standard issues rather than local, and on every hand there is abundant evidence that the issue will not be settled until it is faced and remedied by just legislation at Washington—legislation, too, that grapples with currency and banking reform and recognizes grave evils growing out of our present defective systems. The result of Senator Wolcott's trip abroad has yet to be revealed, but few look for any report of such change of attitude by European Powers as will indicate a restoration of silver to its old place. Even Japan, with all its silver and its intimate connections with silver using countries, has just announced that it will adopt the gold standard, and coin gold and silver after Oct. 1, 1897, at a ratio of 32 1-3 to 1.

The United States and Cuba.

Any one who will compare the procedure of the British and American legislatures during the past week, respecting the interference of legislators with the course of foreign policy, concerning which in both cases there is much popular feeling, must inevitably decide that we have much to learn in all that conduces to secure national self-respect and to maintain peace. Interpolations from Liberal leaders in the House of Lords and House of Commons brought forth in due time and with sufficient promptness considering the gravity of the situation, explicit statements from Lord Salisbury respecting the attitude of Great Britain, first toward the other Powers, and secondly toward Greece and the Cretan situation. With this statement before them the leaders of the opposition ceased debate for a time and calmly prepared to formulate a campaign of opposition with which they could face the country if need be, sure that their facts and premises were the same as Lord Salisbury's, however different their conclusions. But in our Senate how was it? Spurred on by dispatches from Cuba sent by correspondents not all of whom are veracious, unable to ascertain the truth or falsity of the report that Consul-General Lee had resigned because the State Department resorted to technical evasions and refused to be frank, the Senate, led by its Foreign Relations Committee, blundered into action last week which under other circumstances might have led to war, and in this case brought the Senate into additional disrepute and caused it to consume so much valuable time in useless debate that a Sunday session was deemed necessary. Nothing but the pardon of Sanguilly by the queen of Spain brought about the defeat of the resolution calling for such action by us as probably would have caused war. But the point to be noted is that the Spanish clemency was the result of prolonged negotiation by the State Department, and that Secretary Olney knew that the pardon was impending. Such information should have been at the disposal of the Foreign Relations Committee, confidentially if not otherwise. Had it been the resolution never would have been reported. Where the blame lies we do not pretend to say, but so long as those who manage our foreign affairs cannot personally declare their policies in public and defend their course, as the British officials do, then it is imperative that they should find capable exponents of their policy in the Senate, and that is what the outgoing Administration seemingly has never tried to do. If it had, its record in diplomacy would have been better.

As for the situation in Cuba, we have reason to believe that it is so intolerable that it cannot last longer, and that our citizens' property interests and personal rights there need more attention and protection; but President Cleveland's true policy just at this time, whatever it should have been earlier, necessarily was one so ordered as to hand over to President McKinley a nation in a state of peace, not war.

Greater New York.

The legislature of New York State now has before it the draft of the charter which, in practically its present form, will be the organic law of a city whose area, population, wealth, and importance, politically and morally, will surpass any on this continent. Gen. B. F. Tracy, one of the commissioners charged with the grave responsibility of shaping this organic law, in addressing the legislators who will consider it, said, last week, that the new city would have a greater population than the United States had when its Constitution was adopted, and that its tax levy would be more than double that of any State in the Union today. This reference to the Constitution of the United States prompts some reflections on the contrast between the method of its creation and ratification and the method which has prevailed in this most important act of its kind in our history.

The United States Constitution was a slow growth, the fruit of the thought of men who had studied long and deep, and though it came from men delegated by legislatures to represent the people of the several States, it only became effective when ratified by conventions directly representing the people. It was a compromise, and men who objected to many of its important details supported it as a whole.

This new constitution has been hastily drafted by men named by an executive. Some of them are as competent as any in the country to deal with such problems, but all of them have had to rely upon and sift the testimony of conflicting experts. Their work will be passed upon by representatives of the people, not the people themselves, and representatives, too, peculiarly subject to the will of one man, the unchallenged boss of a political party. The outcome of compromises between such spoilsmen as General Tracy and ex-Mayor Gilroy, and non-partisans like Seth Low and Mayor Strong, it will have the hearty support of the latter, even though it perpetuates such evils as a bicameral municipal legislature and a bi-partisan police board. Most significant, perhaps, of all its provisions, in view of present day unrest, is the one which clearly establishes the principle that the municipality shall never give over to private individuals or corporations, without ample remuneration and safeguards, franchises which derive their value from society.

With Tammany defeated but not cast down, and still greedy, and the Platt machine conspiring to capture the control of the great new organism for their separate or joint aggrandizement, it is refreshing to find the Citizens' Union already in the field serving notice on the politicians of both parties that a battle royal is to be fought next November. Its platform calls for a business, non-partisan administration of affairs, for limited franchises, stringent supervision of corporations, better rapid transit and school accommodations, and an eight-hour day. The significant thing about this movement is that it not only is heartily supported by all the reform organizations, but by the most eminent bankers, merchants and employers of labor, and the leaders of organized labor as well. Take it all in all, it is one of the most significant events of the new year.

Forest Preservation.

President Cleveland celebrated Washington's Birthday by an act of executive authority which will be one of the glories of his administration. Accepting as final the recommendations of a commission of six experts, of whom Professor Sargent of Harvard is perhaps the most eminent, made to the Secretary of the Interior, the President withdrew from settlement 21,379,840 acres of forest lands situated in South Dakota, Idaho, Montana, Washington, California and Utah, and proclaimed them as forest reservations, to be guarded against fire, lumbering and all other foes. President Harrison began this good work which means so much as a conserving force, husbanding as it will a form of national wealth which in so many of the older States has been recklessly destroyed, and preserving inviolate scenes of beauty and fountains of water of incalculable value to present and future generations. Supplementary legislation, of course, is needed to enable the Government to administer the trust it has assumed, and to regulate the mining operations, which need not necessarily cease where valuable mineral deposits have been worked or are known to exist. Already cries go up from some citizens of the communities nearest to the reservations, protesting against interference with their personal interests. But it is to be hoped that no such clamor will divert Congress from its plain duty in the matter.

Great Britain in South Africa.

The examination of Cecil Rhodes is fast resolving into a farce. Notwithstanding he has confessed responsibility for everything but the direct command to Jameson to enter in and relieve Johannesburgh, he has been treated with so much deference and good fellowship by his examiners, by Mr. Chamberlain and the Prince of Wales, that he has waxed impudent and jocular of late, and frankly and cynically advanced the plea that his end, the unification of South Africa, justified his method, invasion of the territory of a state with which Great Britain had not declared war. Nor has he produced anything more than some phrases of an after-dinner speech of President Kruger to justify his counter-claim that Germany's relations with the Transvaal justified British intervention. Mr. Rhodes probably has taken heart also at Mr. Chamberlain's change of tone and recent cynical comment in Parliament on the Transvaal's monetary claims against Great Britain. This and the Transvaal's recent determination to make its judiciary subservient to its legislature, thus taking away the last bulwark between the Boers and the British owners of property, are likely to cause friction and hostilities at any time now.

Greece, Crete, the Christian Powers and Turkey.

If one looks at the Cretan situation today from the standpoint of the idealist, the lover of liberty, the defender of the Christian faith, he feels much as William Watson does, who sings:

> Who are these would bind thy hands?
>   Knaves and dastards, none beside.
> All the just in all the lands
>   Hail thee blest and sanctified.
> Curst who would thy triumph mar,
> Be he kaiser, be he czar.

Or as Gladstone, who declares, "The Powers are now applying themselves to filling the measure of their dishonor"; or as ex-Premier Crispi of Italy, who believes that "if the Powers intervene it ought to be for the liberation of oppressed nations, and never to maintain a state of barbarism living on incendiarism and assassination"; or as Senator Hoar of Massachusetts, who does not hesitate to say that "the government of Christians by Turks is an offense to civilization. It is especially out of place in Europe. It is an anachronism as the nineteenth century is ending. The Powers of Europe ought to let Greece and the Greeks alone, and the waning, setting Turkish crescent will no longer shed its baneful light over the beautiful island of Crete."

But, unfortunately for the Cretans and Greece, the Powers are paying more heed to those who hold the bonds of Turkey and Greece and to those who hope to partition Turkish territory than they are to poets like William Watson who voice the popular wrath, or to statesmen out of power like Gladstone and Crispi.

Germany, Austria and Russia seem bent on preserving the integrity of the Turkish empire by ordering Greece out of Crete, giving autonomy to the latter to be sure, but making it subject to Turkey rather than Greece. Great Britain, Italy and France seem less inclined to this course and as yet have not given assent to a policy of coercion of Greece should it refuse to withdraw. Meanwhile Turkey, which is quick to detect signs of disruption among the Powers, is becoming more threatening in its attitude; blood is being shed in Crete; famine will result from the blockade of the allied fleet, if it is kept up much longer; and the public spirit of Greece is such that if King George assents to the pressure of the Powers the penalty will be his forced abdication.

Russia's tone now is severe, and with or without allies she apparently plans to coerce both Greece and Turkey. But measures which she will countenance neither Lord Salisbury nor M. Honataux can pledge Great Britain or France to support, owing to public opinion, which already is intensely aroused. The British fleet fired on the Cretan camp, and is now assisting in keeping up the blockade, but we do not believe Lord Salisbury dares to order it to fire on Grecian troops if they refuse to leave Crete, as we sincerely hope they will. If a great European war must come it might as well come now as later, and Greece should not be abased for daring to act where powers so much more puissant have been so craven.

NOTES.

Massachusetts's General Court has done well to defeat the Sanderson Bill, which proposed to amend the Australian ballot law in such a way as to facilitate partisan discipline and discourage independence in voting. Now if it will ignore its committee's adverse report on House Bill No. 169, and promptly pass that bill which proposes to separate the departments of the city of Boston which care for its children, insane, paupers and criminals, it will show that it cares more for the welfare of the unfortunate than it does for partisan ends in municipal politics, and it will also show its respect for the practically unanimous opinion of the men, women and organizations of the city of Boston most experienced in administering reformatory and charitable matters.

IN BRIEF.

Mr. Moody's work in Boston will be supplemented by addresses given every Monday noon in March at Tremont Temple by Rev. Dr. Alex. McKenzie of Cambridge.

Among the gifts flowing in to Mt. Holyoke College is one of $40,000 from Mr. Rockefeller, announced for the first time by President Mead last Monday morning.

The author of the significant and instructive article in the March Century on The Art of Giving strangely overlooks one of the men who has made it a fine art. There are many men mentioned in this article who are far less artistic in their philanthropy than Dr. D. K. Pearsons.

Why not lift our Armenian Orphans' Fund to the grand total of $25,000? It lacks only a few hundred dollars of that sum, the contributions chronicled this week bringing it to $23,346. Read the letters on page 323 and picture to yourself the benefits already flowing from this fund.

An acute critic of Mr. Balfour and the party he attempts to lead in the House of Commons recently wrote of the Conservatives: "They want steady leading, not spasmodic driving." So it is with all congregations, and too often they get from their pastors what, with all charity, can only be described as "spasmodic driving."

The 594 Congregational churches in Massachusetts made a total net gain of only six members last year, as may be seen by the statistics in another column as compared with those of last year. Is there not need enough for Christians to undertake personal work for saving the souls of their children, their neighbors and their fellow-citizens?

Rev. George Leon Walker, D.D., has resigned from the Board of Visitors of Andover Seminary and the two remaining members have chosen Rev. Henry A. Stimson, D.D., in place of Dr. Walker. The choice is an admirable one, and all the sons of Andover will rejoice in it. The board as now constituted is as follows: Rev. Arthur Little, D.D., Rev. Henry A. Stimson, D.D., and William G. Bassett, Esq.

In connection with the approach of Lent pastors and others desiring to utilize the season in special ways may find suggestions in articles which appeared in this paper last year. On March 5, 1896, we published an article by Rev. C. H. Patton on Lenten Readings, and on March 19 one by Rev. L. H. Thayer on The Observance of Passiontide in Congregational Churches. Mrs. Goodell in our issue of March 26 wrote concerning The Last Weeks in Jesus' Life.

The young men who exposed the fraud of the so-called spiritual manifestations in the Spiritual Temple, Boston, and were convicted in a lower court of disturbing a religious meeting, have been acquitted by the Superior Criminal Court to which they appealed. It would have been a mortifying perversion of justice if the decision had stood that the performance which they broke up several weeks ago was recognized in law as a religious meeting. The jury did not take long to decide the case after it was put into their hands.

At the time when Pennsylvania was permitting Senator Quay to decide who should succeed Mr. Cameron in the Senate, we noted only one Pennsylvania religious newspaper which dared to protest against such a travesty on democracy. That was the United Presbyterian of Pittsburg. It is gratifying now to find that the Pennsylvania Methodist, issued in Harrisburg, has formulated charges of venality against certain Pennsylvania State officials and proposes to stand its ground, as a suit for criminal libel has been brought against its editor.

In view of the critical condition of the American Bible Society it has been invited by the Massachusetts Bible Society to send a representative to Massachusetts to work in the interest of this cause. Rev. A. E. Colton, formerly of Patchogue, N. Y., has been appointed and is already in this vicinity interviewing pastors of all denominations. Only thirty-six Massachusetts churches gave anything last year to this important enterprise, and unless it is restored by our churches to its former position on the list of stated benevolences its broad, unsectarian missionary work will at once languish.

Deacon Dudley has been absent from Boston for a few days attending to important ecclesiastical and civic duties at his rural home. The parish got considerably excited over the location of some new horse sheds and he was summoned to pour oil upon the troubled waters. Moreover he couldn't miss the annual town meeting, which has been one of the joys of his life for twenty-seven consecutive years. He is back in Boston, however, and is continuing his investigation of Sunday services, his appetite for novelties not being quite satiated. We shall publish next week an account of another of his adventures.

We do not wonder that Mr. S. B. Capen has been mentioned by prominent men for Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and that the subject of his appointment is being discussed in the newspapers. He is well informed on the condition of the Indian tribes, and has for many years taken great interest in them. We do not believe a better appointment could be made. But the question whether the city of Boston could spare Mr. Capen is a serious one, and we suppose that the question whether he could leave his present business for four years is also a serious one to him. This is a case where the man does not want the office, and would have to consider how large a sacrifice he could afford to make for the public good by accepting it.

Criticism of the churches is not always confined to evangelists. Now and then a pastor diagnoses conditions in his parish and his comments thereon become decidedly interesting. We have recently received two letters from pastors pleasantly located and both thoroughly loyal to their respective flocks. Says pastor No. 1:

> A seal has been suggested for our church. Can you tell me of a good design? I am undecided between a balky horse lying down in the traces and a canal boat loaded down with people and drawn by one poor old mule, who has had nothing to eat for many days and is being belabored by a committee of the passengers with the suggestion that he cause the boat to go a little faster.

Says pastor No. 2:

> We are a community given over to the fleshpots of Egypt. It is a mooted question whether there are five righteous people here to serve as the yeast of salvation. McKinley does not seem to be able to produce a revival either of business or religion in this diocese.

Maybe these judgments are a trifle Blue Mondayish, for we happen to know that there is a great deal of good Christianity in the churches described, and no doubt their pastors would be the first to defend them against the attacks of outsiders.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE NORTHWEST.

County Option.

Among the unusually large number of practical and timely bills before the Minnesota legislature none is claiming so much attention as the County Option Bill. It is heartily supported by nearly all the temperance people and organizations among both Catholics and Protestants. It embodies the principles of the local option law and makes voting on license compulsory at the State election. Not only may counties vote for this measure, but in larger cities municipal subdivisions, such as wards, may vote upon the issue, and in both of the Twin Cities there are a number of wards that will vote dry at their first opportunity. The bill also provides that in no sense is it to interfere with patrol limits or any other local temperance measures already acquired. In nearly two-thirds of the counties in the State this measure would be adopted at once if submitted to the people. Some counties have elected their representatives chiefly in the hope of bringing about this reform. The liquor dealers have never been so scared, and they are working day and night to defeat the bill. Their leading organ in the Northwest says, if county option carries, nearly the whole State will vote dry, and their business is ruined. Pastors and leading business men from all parts of the State are writing to their acquaintances among the legislators, and in many cases calling upon them urging them to support the measure. Little doubt is entertained that the bill will pass the lower House with a good majority. But the Senate is as yet not so favorably disposed to the measure. Much encouragement comes from the enthusiastic way in which the Scandinavians throughout the State, and especially in the upper House, are taking hold of the measure.

Sunday Closing.

The present administration in Minneapolis, like the previous one, is notorious for its violation of the Sunday closing ordinance. The side doors to nearly all the saloons in the city are open all day on Sunday, except from ten to twelve. In quite a number of the saloons even women and minors are found intoxicated. Our laws are explicit and excellent on these points, and the open refusal to attempt to enforce them is arousing our citizens, and they are determined to do something. A rousing mass meeting was held on a recent Sunday afternoon, at which resolutions were adopted asking the mayor to reply in writing what he intends to do about enforcing the statutes on Sunday closing. This uprising on the part of the people is well organized and has the strength of the Municipal Reform League behind it.

The Populist Boomerang.

Labor Commissioner Powers, whose ability as an expert is generally acknowledged, is just now under the fire of investigation by a committee of the legislature. He has collected and tabulated facts about the staple farm products for the ten States in the upper Mississippi Valley, and the results are so startling to those who had relied on the conjectural assertions of the Populist orators that they proceed at once to move a committee of investigation. Mr. Powers establishes beyond question the fact that in these ten States the farmers are receiving larger average net profits for all their staple products than at any time previous to 1873, and that this has even been true of the past four years of business depression.

These truths, stated carefully and scientifically without any reference to political issues, have been fatal to some measures of legislation contemplated by several of our State senators, whose calamity howls do not care for the search light of the facts as presented by the commissioner. Unwittingly they are doing Minnesota a great service by calling attention to the work which Mr. Powers is doing.

Plymouth Church, St. Paul.

The matter of foremost concern to our Congregational forces in St. Paul is the action of Plymouth Church. For more than ten years it has been struggling with the problem of a down-town plant and an up-town membership. Readjustment is the result of the inevitable as cities are tending now, and not in any sense a lack of loyalty on the part of the church nor any dissatisfaction with the pastor, Rev. W. B. Millard. He has done efficient work, and the people are thoroughly one with him. He resigned solely to enable the church, if possible, to reach the right conclusion in regard to its future. The problem is full of perplexity, but if such readjustment can be made as will give us one central, influential church, our future as a denomination is assured in the city. If this can be brought to pass, then old Plymouth can afford to lose its life in some new Plymouth which shall be a mother to our churches in years to come.

Personal.

The churches of Minnesota extend a sincere welcome to Rev. Joseph H. Chandler, former staff correspondent of The Congregationalist from the Northwest. The church at Owatonna, whose pastorate he accepts, is one of our leading churches. His former service among us is remembered with pleasure. The right man is in the right place and we bespeak growth and enlarged power for both.

The Saturday afternoon teachers' meeting led by Dr. G. R. Merrill is growing in interest and attendance, and Bible teachers are getting an insight into the book of the Acts of the Apostles that is bearing fruit every Sunday throughout the city.

J. A. S.

ART FOR THE PEOPLE.

BY O. M. E. ROWE.

It is a social law that enlightenment begins at the top and penetrates downward. The need of a more beautiful environment is felt by an ever-increasing number of Americans. Foreign travel, international expositions, art galleries and the sun god's gift of photographic reproductions have stimulated the latent feeling for art, and the result is apparent in homes, schools, churches and streets. But the most hopeful sign is a growing sense of responsibility to bring the solace of the beautiful to starved souls and stunted lives. This appears in many directions and in different cities, but especially in Boston.

Last spring there were exhibited at the Mechanics Arts High School two contrasting rooms, furnished at the same cost. One illustrated the principles of hygiene, refinement and restfulness. It was a happy combination of simplicity, durability and adaptation to family life. A pleasant harmony of color in wall-paper, rugs, furniture and pictures gave an impression of gentle dignity. No woman could be a slouch in such an atmosphere. The companion room violated the principles of sanitation and beauty, yet it was a type of hundreds of American homes. With warring colors, meaningless ornamentation and upholstery enormities, its aggressive pretentiousness was unpleasant and discordant. Doubtless many sensitive people have been irritated by similar surroundings without ever suspecting the cause. This object lesson in house furnishing was supplemented by samples of wall-paper, with explanations of their good or bad qualities in color or design. A helpful exhibit of natural woods, showing their adaptation to household uses, and many practical illustrations of "the best way of doing things" added value to this unique demonstration of an idea.

Another effort to develop the art perception is significant. Plans are under way to copy the National Arts and Crafts Exhibition held annually in London and occasionally in Paris. This promotes the union of utility and beauty, too long divorced. Even the useful saucepan may be hideous or it may have a shapely beauty which ministers to the housewife's æsthetic sense. The intention of the exhibit is to elevate the industrial arts by raising popular intelligence. Behind production lies public demand. When ugly designs will not sell their manufacture ceases. Only American arts and crafts will be shown and prizes will stimulate artistic products. This exhibition will include the best examples of the things which touch the daily life of the average citizen and his wife, such as carpets, rugs, draperies, embroideries, wall-papers, glass, pottery, porcelain, lamps, gas and electric fixtures, articles in silver, iron and other metals, carvings in wood and stone, as well as book-making in all its varieties of type, illustration and binding.

The power to observe is no mean gift and well worth cultivating. To open the eyes of the young people is a potent way to develop a feeling for art. A printed circular with twenty questions relating to good and bad architectural features in Boston was scattered broadcast by a committee from the Twentieth Century Club. Three prizes of twenty five dollars each were offered for the most complete and most intelligent responses sent in by those under twenty years of age. A most encouraging interest was shown and sky-lines, spires, façades, gables and portals were closely scanned by hundreds of youthful eyes which before "had passed unheeding by." The circular directed them to a special room at the Public Library, where they could find spread out on tables, books with information germane to their quests.

It is pleasant to chronicle the cordial coöperation of the Public Library officials in stimulating a popular interest in art. They have supplemented the free art lectures at the Lowell Institute by displaying in a quiet room the Arundel prints, books of large engravings and photographs illustrating the subject of the previous evening, changing them as the course progressed.

Nothing has stirred so much civic pride as the Public Library. Even the humblest citizen feels an ennobling sense of ownership. The æsthetic value of the simple, massive architecture is further enhanced by the wall paintings. Detailed explanations, printed on large cards and conspicuously placed, help visitors to understand the decorative panels of Sargent, Abbey and Puvis de Chavannes.

The committee before referred to has secured several guides to escort parties through sections of the Museum of Fine Arts on the afternoons of the free days, Saturday and Sunday. To have the casts of Greek sculpture interpreted with intelligence and tact by one who loves them, vitalizes a meaningless array of plaster into the heroes and gods of antiquity. More and more the people seek the treasures of the museum, and its leaven is slowly working in the community.

By co-operating with the museum authorities the same committee may be able to issue inexpensive descriptive catalogues. These will probably be modeled on the charming illustrated brochures which the Pall Mall Gazette publishes in order to put the splendid collections of the National Gallery (London) in close touch with the people. American art museums can do a signal service by copying this idea so successfully worked out in London.

The Boston Art Club's annual exhibition of contemporary art is not without significance. Admission tickets are freely distributed by the large membership and the number of visitors reaches 25,000 in a single season. The galleries are crowded every fine evening, and on Saturdays the number of children is noticeable.

But what of the multitude whose steps never stray to any of these places? They live in the shadow of a sordid region where beauty in any guise seldom comes. But even they are not forgotten. The college settlement, known as the South End House, brings biennially the beneficence of a free art exhibition into the crowded tenement section near Dover Street. The third one opens in March. For this exhibition the best is none too good. From 100 to 150 valuable paintings are gladly loaned from rich drawing-rooms and private galleries. Pictures with a warm human interest make the strongest appeal. During the month large numbers drift in and stroll about with evident pleasure and a few return several times. A descriptive catalogue aids the uninitiated, and the visitor's vote for his favorite picture deepens the interest. Among the humors of the exhibition appears some unimpeachable criticism. An eminent painter saw two old salts absorbed in his marine and joined them only to hear himself stigmatized as a fool whose "two ships would go to eternal smash in a collision within five minutes." He argued with them only to retire discomfited over his powers of observation.

The South End House recently started a circulating art gallery of 100 simply framed photographs of famous pictures which time has tested. Each picture remains for a month in one household and then is replaced by another. They are intrusted to the members of a mothers' club, brought together by persistently pinning invitations on the little ones of the kindergarten belonging to the settlement. The circulating art gallery originated at Hull House, Chicago. It is vindicated by the fact that one poor mother tearfully begged not to have the picture (a madonna) exchanged, "because we all love it so."

Even sanitary necessities may serve the interests of art. In the new surgical wards of the Boston City Hospital, the two large ventilating shafts, demanded by modern science, extend from floor to ceiling in the central aisle. An open fire in each helps to purify the air and over the mantels have recently been placed four large photographs, two of Raphael's Madonnas and two cathedrals. The intelligence of the observer is aided by printed descriptions. These pictures and the greenery of palms are a grateful relief to those in the two long rows of cots.

Boston is alive to the educational value of attracting the young to the best things. The Public School Art League has done good service in adorning the walls with excellent pictures or plaster casts. The Girls' High School led the way by decorating its fine auditorium with reproductions of the Parthenon frieze and other Greek sculptures. Thousands of girls have already had their sense of beauty unconsciously stirred by daily companionship with these noble works. Many of the grammar schools have been enriched with pictures presented by the graduating classes. Occasionally, teachers, at their own expense, relieve the glaring walls with good pictures. A notable illustration of schoolroom decoration is found at the Agassiz School in Jamaica Plain.

In the foreign quarters of the North End stands the Eliot School for boys. The decoration of one of its rooms has received most careful treatment at the hands of the committee of the Twentieth Century Club. It is a model of what every schoolroom should be. The school board has shown a willingness, where the walls need freshening, to put on the delicate green tint suggested as the best background.

Mr. J. F. Hopkins, the new director of drawing in the public schools, is giving the teachers eight lectures designed to stir their interest in historic art. Surely the teacher who knows the art of a nation has the best interpreter of its history. With the help of stereopticon views Mr. Hopkins sets forth the general characteristics of the art of (1) Egypt, (2) Greece, (3) Rome, (4) Byzantine Mosaics, (5) Saracenic Days, (6) Cathedral Builders, (7) Italian Renaissance, and lastly he finds the (8) Art Lessons of Copley Square.

Permanent value is given to these lectures by the publication of a Syllabus. It is attractive in type and illustration and gives eight admirable lists of books bearing on each era taken up in the lectures. French and German books are also included where the plates are specially fine. To facilitate their use the Public Library number is affixed to each title. For some time the Public Library has generously issued special cards which allow teachers five books at a time for home use. Copying this liberality, the Art Museum has recently offered exceptional privileges by providing a ticket which will admit a teacher and four pupils at any time. This promises to be a happy means of putting the museum in touch with the children. "Whatever you want in a nation you must put into the public schools."

These germinal efforts indicate a tendency of the times to develop a popular love of art. Lives that might grow angular or coarse may gain a tender grace by being thus opened to the influence of beauty.

"ARE YOU PREPARED TO DIE?"

BY REV. S. V. COLE, TAUNTON.

A man on a lonely road, in the edge of the evening, saw a stranger following him, and for some reason fearing robbery took to his heels. The stranger pursued, and on grasping the man, who had stumbled and fallen, asked in a sepulchral tone if he was prepared to die. The frightened victim handed out his money, saying, "Take it, take it all, only don't kill me." The stranger was not a robber, but an evangelist, who felt that he must overtake the man in order to talk to him about his soul.

I cannot vouch for the truth of this story, but I can discern two truths which the story will do to illustrate. One is sufficiently obvious. Inopportune zeal, even in the holiest of causes, may sometimes defeat itself. The fishers of men have still much to learn of the fishers of fish as regards caution, timeliness and general tact. It is a fact of experience that in all endeavors to benefit men there is need not only of the harmlessness of doves but of the wisdom of serpents, else the motive will be misunderstood.

But the more serious truth which the story illustrates is the attitude which some of the churches themselves have come to assume in the communities in which they exist. They have been too much committed to the idea that their sole function is to prepare men to die. The way in which church people used to attempt to draw an unbelieving friend into religious conversation was to ask, very mournfully, "Do you feel that you are prepared to die?" If the unbelieving friend happened to be young and healthy the chances were that he did not feel as if he were prepared to die, or as if he wanted to be prepared. There is in most of us a rebounding sense which throws back whatever seems to make death more important than life.

If a church systematically discourages amusements, or exhibits jealousy of the influence of its young people, or makes an idol of its system of theology, it will inevitably find itself out of sympathy with actual life. Religion will seem to be an unpractical thing and the church a bureau of "otherworldliness" for issuing passports to those who are about to travel into the "far country." The person who suddenly becomes religious will incur the suspicion that he feels that he is not long for this world. Sickness and religion on the one hand, health and irreligion on the other—that is the natural result in men's minds of keeping the church from contact with life. The devil appreciates this.

When the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be;
When the devil got well, the devil a monk was he.

A church stands on the right basis when it is trying to prepare men to live. If the ultimate aim is to save the soul, it must remember that the only soul over which it ever had, or ever can have, any influence is the soul which is linked to a body. A church which has been doing business on the edge of the valley of the shadow of death must move back where it can touch the warm currents of real life or it will find its occupation gone. It must appeal less to an impaired digestion and more to a healthy aspiration after better things. Not the fear of death, but the love of life should be the motive. And the church must exhibit that life in its highest sense. "He that hath the Son hath the life."

No man is prepared to die who is not first prepared to live. And any man who is prepared to live is also prepared to die. Where, then, it may be asked, is the difference between the old way and the new? Why not keep on preparing men to die?

The truth itself does not change. It is both old and new. The difference lies in the way it is presented. As it makes a difference which end of a gun you press to your shoulder when the trigger is pulled, or which end of a wedge is inserted in a crevice, or which end of an ax you use in striking a blow, so it makes all the difference in the world which end of a truth you present first.

There are men who cannot understand the distinctions in the Trinity, but who are perfectly able to understand the difference between sharpness and fairness in trade, between coldness and sympathy in social intercourse, between cant and sincerity in religion, between a counterfeit and an honest man everywhere. Paul drew a distinction between comprehending and apprehending the truth. The latter is by far the more important. It is more important to get hold of a truth practically, than to be able to comprehend it philosophically. Christian truth has two ends, the far end and the nigh end. It is the business of the church to present it to men by the nigh end, or the end they can reach. The true question is, "Are you prepared to live?"

JUDICIAL DECISIONS OF CHURCH COUNCILS.

Many Presbyterians glory in their presbyteries and synods, and especially in their General Assembly, their court of final appeal. Some of their newspapers never tire of telling the people, and particularly their ministers, that when the General Assembly has declared a doctrine to be true the matter is settled, and that to raise a question about it is to be disloyal to the church. Congregationalists have councils whose aim is to represent the matured thought of the churches. They give forth their result as advice, which has weight according as it commends itself to the judgment of those to whom it is given, and it is usually, though not always at first, found to be acceptable and is accepted. Presbyterians have councils, which they call synods or the General Assembly, to declare what must be the belief of the churches, at least of the ministers, and when these bodies declare—as they have declared—that the original manuscripts of the Bible were without error and that the Westminster Confession without modification expresses the belief of the church, then their ministers have to accept these declarations as their own, however strenuously they may have objected before the votes were taken.

Still, Presbyterian ministers have their own opinions, and especially the teachers of ministers. Some of these have been disciplined and others have been threatened. But from time to time, as occasion offers, they express their minds. A pithy instance was the inauguration of Rev. E. W. Miller as professor of church history at Auburn Theological Seminary recently. The charge was given him by Rev. Dr. S. M. Hopkins, who has long occupied the same chair and is now professor emeritus. We do not think he does justice to church councils. We think the great councils have been more judicial, more truly representative of the thought of the church of their time, than Dr. Hopkins seems to think. But possibly his experience with recent Presbyterian General Assembly decisions has colored his view of ancient and more noted councils. He said to his successor in part as follows:

> You are not likely to impress the future ministry of the church whose guide you will be with any extravagant estimate of the value of church councils. They have their interest, as any combined human action on a considerable scale always has. They fill large chapters in the external history of the church. They are the index and expression of the current—though not always the main current—of theological opinion. They do not make doctrine. They only record it. When you see the storm signal streaming out from the flag staff of the weather bureau, you do not imagine that the flag has originated the gale. You know that the gale was blowing and the flag streams out to leeward. I remember that many years ago the London Punch uttered the following piece of profound wisdom: "The weather vane working freely will indicate the direction of the wind; but if the vane be rusted fast, the direction of the wind will not be changed thereby." Consider that; a piece of natural philosophy highly useful to politicians whether in church or state.
>
> Councils, in fact, and conventions are not much more than jumping jacks which kick and flourish their arms as the strings are pulled by adroit manipulators. If the sentiment of the church has set, or can be represented as having set, in the direction of Scriptural truth and order, the council may be expected to decree orthodox conclusions. If some transient gust has given a side whirl to public sentiment, we may have only a hasty dictum which will be blown away when the steady current of religious opinion resumes its sway.
>
> Church history, as well as political history, shows how easily a so-called deliberative assembly can be turned into a half-crazed mob; and surely nothing can illustrate more forcibly that divine wisdom which watches over the fortunes of the church than the way in which ignorant and fanatical synods, presided over by wicked bishops, have been compelled, without or against their wills, to bear witness to the truth. A mediæval council was often nothing better than—to use the vigorous English of the Westminster divines—a "synagogue of Satan" or, at best, an expression of "Catholicism" minus "Christianity." Of the whole number it may be said, I believe, with truth that the only two respectable ones were the Council of Trent and the Westminster Assembly, and each of them would have gladly exterminated the other. As for the Synod of Dort, it belongs to the same category with the Latrocinium Ephesinum and other disreputable assemblies, ancient and modern, which have immolated charity on the altar of dogma.

THE NEW CONGREGATIONALISM OF SCOTLAND.

BY REV. J. SPENCER VOORHEES.

In the development of Congregationalism this generation will hardly witness a more significant or important event than the union in Scotland of the Congregational and Evangelical Unions. This has long been anticipated by good men in both denominations, but has only within a few weeks become a reality. The union was officially consummated at a meeting of representatives of both bodies held in Glasgow Oct. 1, 1896, to take effect Jan. 1, 1897. The practical consummation is now a joyous fact. The new denomination takes the name of the Congregational Union of Scotland and stands clearly on the principles of historic Congregationalism.

Thus 1897 begins with about double the number of Congregational churches in Scotland and nearly double the membership reported in 1896. This means a more than twofold increase in strength and influence because of the superior standing given to its representative bodies, its agencies and institutions. The two Divinity Halls, both before too weak to attract, hold or equip the best men, now become one, combining the faculties and endowments, thus bringing it to the standard of the schools of the Presbyterian church.

To celebrate this happy union a "grand conversatione" was held Feb. 3 in Music Hall in Edinburgh, where over two thousand persons assembled for social intercourse and to listen to a carefully prepared program of music and oratory.

The united choirs of all the churches, trained by a skilled leader, voiced praises appropriate to the occasion in the music of Mendelssohn, Elvey and Handel, closing with the Hallelujah Chorus. Representative clergymen and prominent laymen spoke strong words of encouragement and Godspeed. The great Scotch audience for once awoke out of its characteristic irresponsiveness and broke out in frequent applause that made a lone American feel quite at home. Of the addresses of the evening none drew forth more frequent demonstrations of approval than that of Rev. A. R. Henderson, now pastor of the old Augustine Church in this city formerly ministered to by Dr. Alexander. He told of the harmonious understanding arrived at—that neither party renounces its past history, nor throws overboard its cherished principles. It means rather that each enriches its history and life by appropriating from the other. The Evangelical Union put on their roll of honor the Haldanes, Greville Ewing, Dr. Wardlaw and Dr. Alexander, and the Congregationalists add to their list of honored names those of Dr. Morrison, John Guthrie, Dr. Kirk and Fergus Ferguson.

They have agreed that Christian fellowship and union depend not on absolute similarity of belief, but on the mutual love of those truly united in Christ. This unity does not require any one to sink his theological differences, or to be silent in regard to anything which he believes to be the truth, but that in matters essential to salvation there is such harmony that they are bound to unite in the freedom and love of brothers in Christ.

Mr. Henderson in closing said:

> We have a mission in Scotland. We are native to the soil. We sprang out of the very bowels of the Established Church. Our fathers came forth because of loyalty to Christ, and that has been our guiding principle ever since. As the outcome of that principle we hold that every congregation of believers is under Christ a "sovereign society," responsible to Christ alone for the management of its own affairs. As the outcome of that principle we try to the utmost of our power to secure purity of fellowship, holding that men can never, in a true sense, belong to the church unless they have first given themselves to Christ. As the outcome of that principle we claim liberty to go directly to the Word of God for our creed, respectful of, but unfettered by, the judgment of previous students of divine truth.

Edinburgh, Feb. 4.

On the Continent of Europe.

Significant Events and Conditions.

Burning Questions in the German Churches.

One of these is the relation which the church, as such, shall take as to labor. In nearly every section of the empire the condition of those who live on what they earn from day to day is deplorable. Neither the higher officials of the church, with few exceptions, nor the emperor and his advisers, are in sympathy with those pastors who engage openly in the discussion of social questions. It has, however, been found impossible to prevent pastors from sympathizing with the poor in their own parishes, from studying their condition in the country as a whole, or from taking their part when oppressed or treated with injustice by their employers.

In some of the provinces, for example in Hesse, the authorities of the church have openly declared that it is useless to attempt to control the conduct of pastors by law. They say, and say rightly, that spiritual movements cannot be regulated in the same way as one can regulate civil movements, that it is better to warn pastors against unwise methods and the expression of opinions hastily formed, and to urge them in all these social matters to consult with the superintendents of the churches in the section of the country in which they are settled before committing themselves to any decisive course of political action. There is no doubt that the church as a whole is on the side of the poor, and that pastors almost universally are watching the interests of the poor with a determination so far as possible to protect them. What some of the more thoughtful fear is the formation of political parties and the weakening of the personal influence of the pastor in his parish through his advocacy of them. Of this there certainly is danger. There is the Christian Socialist party founded by Dr. Stoecker of Berlin, till recently one of the leading members of the Conservative party in the imperial parliament, and the so-called National Social party formed only a short time since at Erfurt by some of the most prominent and earnest men in the church, who claim the right to discuss social questions from the standpoint of the gospel and to form a political party which shall rest on Christian principles, and thus put themselves into a position where they can lead the labor movement and prevent it from falling into the hands of an unbelieving social democracy.

Such papers as the Hilf (Help) of Pastor Naumann are organs of political views repugnant to the more conservative portion of the German churches. Sometimes, also, the men prominent in the new movement for the betterment of the condition of the poor belong to the radical wing of the church, or, at least, are Ritschlians and therefore objects of suspicion in many conservative circles. For these and many other reasons the position which an earnest pastor shall take in reference to the labor question often becomes one of considerable embarrassment. Although technically free to do as he pleases, it is yet frequently difficult for a pastor to decide just what attitude to assume with reference to the disputes constantly arising between employers and employés. The three great questions which at present are discussed with more or less feeling in Germany are the labor question, the Jewish question, or the anti-Semitic movement, and the agrarian question. Each is a political as well as an ecclesiastical question, that is, has a political as well as an ecclesiastical side, and cannot be thoroughly discussed without creating more or less bitterness of feeling.

Public Opinion and Dueling.

One can but observe with satisfaction the unanimity with which representative gatherings of the German churches have this year put themselves on record as opposed to the duel as a means of settling difficulties or of avenging supposed acts of dishonor. It has been condemned with something of the same emphasis with which we are wont to condemn lynching. Even the emperor is reported to be in favor of the abolition of the duel between officers in the army and to have suggested the formation of a commission, to which disputes and fancied wrongs of officers may be referred for settlement. While we do not believe that dueling will cease at once, it is safe to assert that its popularity is over, and to predict that ere long it will be looked upon as a relic of barbarism. If the sentence is not as severe as it should have been, it is a good sign that the officer who recently killed a civilian for an imaginary insult has been condemned to an imprisonment of three years.

Growth of Protestantism in Southern Germany.

An evidence is seen in the recent completion of a church (St. Lucas) for the fourth parish in Munich. At the beginning of the century there was not a Protestant church in the city. The queen of Maximilian Joseph was a Protestant and by her husband was allowed a chaplain and religious services according to her own faith. To her private service Protestants residing in Munich were permitted to come. In 1801 the king ordered that his subjects be protected in the enjoyment of religious liberty. The first parish was not fully organized till 1806 and did not have a church building till 1833. In 1893 the corner stone of the fourth edifice was laid, and in November of last year the completed building was dedicated. It is one of great beauty. In the transition style it has some of the features of the late Roman and the Gothic. As the church has been built for the sake of the sermon, it is therefore chiefly praised for its excellent acoustic qualities. Of the 1,273 additions to the Lutheran Church in Saxony since the last report, 712 have come from the Roman Catholic Church, while less than 200 have left Protestantism for Romanism. Ten per cent. of the gains have come from Jewish churches, but only a small per cent. from the so-called sects, Methodists, Baptists and the like. In northern Germany, on the other hand, Roman Catholics have made slight gains over previous years.

An Admirable Prelate.

In the death of Cardinal Sanfelice of Naples Italy has lost a man of rare excellence and wide influence. He was a friend of the new Italy, of King Humbert as well as of the pope. He was at home in the palace and in the hovel, could take part in the government of states or of the church as occasion might demand, and, therefore, both by position and natural endowment was fitted for the rôle of mediator or reconciler which he often successfully filled.

Loss to Science.

Science is everywhere in mourning over the death of Emil du Bois-Reymond in Berlin, Dec. 26. Few men have done as much as he for scientific research, or to set a great department of research upon its feet. Born Nov. 7, 1818, in Berlin, the city in which he spent his life, he gave up the study of theology in 1837 to devote himself to anatomy and physiology under the tuition of the famous Professor Müller, whose successor he afterwards became. In 1841 he began what proved to be epoch-making experiments in the study of muscle and nerve electricity, discovering two years later that every living muscle possesses the power of an electric motor. He was almost equally famous as a teacher, an investigator, an author and an orator. Although regarded as outside the ranks of the Christian Church, he was not a materialist, for he believed in the distinction of matter and force. He taught his pupils that it was the mark of wisdom to stand modestly and inquiringly at boundaries beyond which knowledge cannot go.

In and About Chicago.

Washington's Birthday.

For many years the Union League Club has given the people of Chicago the privilege of meeting in the auditorium in the afternoon of Feb. 22 and listening to an address on some high theme worthy the occasion. Men of great fame have not declined the invitation to speak to their fellow-citizens from this platform. This year Hon. Frederic R. Coudert of New York was the orator of the day. He spoke on the advantages of arbitration over the sword as a means of settling disagreements between the nations. He said that in forty-seven instances already the United States and Great Britain have arranged their difficulties by arbitration, and he could therefore see nothing to prevent the application of its principles to nearly all the disputes which in the future may spring up between the peoples of these two countries. Some of his sentences are worth remembering. Of Washington it was affirmed that "he made stepping-stones of disaster and amazed the world by his fortitude." He declared that "a nation is never compromised by temperance or injured by forbearance." "The war of the future," he predicted, "shall be the bloodless war of right against wrong, of good against evil, of truth against falsehood." At the banquet, which is for the members of the club and a few guests, Mr. Coudert spoke again. Rev. C. E. Jefferson of Chelsea, who preached for Dr. Gunsaulus Sunday morning, also made a brief address on The Man Who Shall Rule in the Future, which those who heard it describe as masterly. Half a dozen other clubs celebrated the day with music and speech, and in nearly all the public schools patriotic addresses were given by old soldiers or other persons specially chosen for the purpose.

The Congregational Club.

The club celebrated the day at the Palmer House by one of its best meetings and by discussing the higher education of women and its effect on the national life. Mrs. E. S. Mead, president of Mt. Holyoke College, was the principal speaker and paid a beautiful and just tribute to Washington as well as to Mary Lyon, the founder of the higher education for women in this country. Mrs. Moses Smith followed her in a short and specially appropriate address. But the address which sparkled with a seriousness of wit, an originality of expression and a directness of speech remarkable even for him was by Dr. D. K. Pearsons, the princely founder and protector of colleges, one may justly say the patron of the higher Christian education. Not only was he full of praise for what Mt. Holyoke has done, for the skill it has shown in accomplishing so much with so little, always coming out at the end of the year with a balance on the right side, but was confident of its future, predicting for it a career of which the past is simply a beginning. He had something to say also concerning six colleges west of the Missouri, which through his gifts have, during the last three years, been set on their feet and some of them saved from destruction. These are Drury, Colorado Springs, Pomona, Pacific University, Whitman and Yankton. The Doctor said that he was compelled to speak in the first person, and that he thought he might as well flatter himself as to let others flatter him. He said his longest credit mark should be that he had never given to the rich, but only to the poor, and that he had given to Christian institutions and not to those which substituted the dance hall for the chapel and put Shakespeare in the place of the Bible. Nothing short of a verbatim report could do justice to the address, and even this without the personality of the speaker would lose half its charm. Long may he live to administer his fortune along the lines which he has already marked out and in ways which he has himself so thoroughly studied.

The Ministers.

The usual Monday morning meeting was fuller than ordinarily, both the theme and the speakers having a tendency to increase the attendance. The theme was Christianity and Evolution, the speakers Dr. E. P. Goodwin and Professor Mackenzie. The former said at the outset that he stood for investigation, that he wanted to know the truth, and would yield to no man in his respect for what science had done. He declared it to be his opinion that truth cannot contradict itself, and as he accepts the Bible as the Word of God he can but believe that where science is at variance with its statements when these are correctly interpreted science must be in error. He admits progress and does not object to the term evolution, if it do not exclude the supernatural or render impossible the presence in nature of a divine being from whose mind all that is and is to be has come. Professor Mackenzie spent most of his time in defining evolution, insisting that Dr. Lyman Abbott, in his articles in the Outlook, has hardly grasped the real points which are to be considered by one who would think the subject through. He called attention again to the little book by Tait and Stuart on the Unseen Universe, which he holds to be one of the best of the kind and to be a good illustration of the difference in their spirit between the physicists of the present day, who are uniformly reverent and usually theists, and the biologists, who are rash and superficial and unwilling to go outside of the material world for the explanation of anything which they meet in the field of their investigations.

The German Ministers.

A very unique way of observing Washington's Birthday was hit upon by Professors Curtiss and Scott of the seminary. They invited the German Congregational and Evangelical ministers of the city, several of the professors in the seminary and a few of the pastors of English-speaking churches, twenty-five in all, to a lunch in the literary room of the Y. M. C. A. where, after partaking of a fine repast, the afternoon was spent in listening to brief addresses on the character of the day we celebrated and concerning the work which the seminary has been so instrumental in carrying forward among our foreign population. Our German friends spoke in their native tongue and were deeply moved as they reviewed what had been done for them and as they portrayed the future religious life of their people. Dr. E. A. Adams gave a graphic description of what the Bohemian mission has wrought in twelve years—a church of 170 members, a large Sunday school, societies of various kinds seeking to reach and hold the young people, young men, formerly in Mrs. Adams's band of boys, now organizing such bands themselves and managing them in the spirit of Mrs. Adams—the whole work, which was at first regarded a mere experiment, resting on a firm foundation and giving promise of great results in the near future. The conference was very profitable as well as interesting, and will tend to bring our somewhat scattered Christian forces into closer and more sympathetic relations. Only ten of the twenty-five present were born in the United States, and only six or seven were born or trained as Congregationalists. The testimony on the part of Germans and Scandinavians to their belief in the principles of Congregationalism as being the principles of the New Testament and as adapted to the wants of the people to whom they minister was as gratifying as it was hearty. Tuesday evening one of those present at the lunch and one of the speakers was installed pastor of the St. James Church, which has grown out of the Sedgewick Street mission. This mission, long connected with the New England Church, has now become two bands—one English-speaking and the other for the present using the German language.

Sympathy with Greece.

In common with American citizens everywhere the feeling of indignation against the action of the Powers in the case of Crete has run very high in Chicago. But it has expressed itself most decidedly among the few thousand Greeks, mostly from Sparta, who have made their home in the city. They have their own religious service every Sunday morning, are industrious, frugal and almost uniformly successful in their efforts to obtain a respectable living. Few engage in what is called menial service. At present they largely control the fruit trade. Several have become wealthy and are always ready to advance the twenty-five or fifty dollars which a new comer requires with which to start in business. With this money a push cart is obtained and the needed amount of fruit. When the debt has been paid the cart is often sold to a later comer and its now prosperous owner opens a fruit stand or a small store for himself. Security for the money borrowed is furnished by a lien or a mortgage on the homestead in Greece. To this the parents of the young man readily consent in order that he may have a start in the new world. It is said that a failure to pay is so rare as to be considered hardly a possibility. The Greeks observe their feast days as in the old country and keep April 6, the day of their independence, with as sacred a devotion as Americans the Fourth of July. In summer they have their picnics, where they revive in their sports the memories of the Olympian games. They are charitable toward each other, caring for their own poor and unfortunate and extending to all new comers a warm welcome.

They do not live together in colonies but settle in different sections of the city. But they are one in their religion and in their love of country, although they make themselves acquainted as soon as possible with the institutions of the United States, take the oath of allegiance and almost to a man support the Republican party. The news of the action of the Greeks stirred patriotic fires which had slumbered and brought together assemblies in which something of the fervor of ancient oratory was exhibited and which led to the formation of a regiment which is ready to return to Greece at call.

Political Changes.

These are not always wisely made, nor are they all in the interests of public welfare. Two, however, which have been, or soon will be, made are of the highest importance, not only to the people of Illinois, but to the whole country. Rumor has it on good authority that Dr. F. H. Wines, the best equipped man for the position in America, is to be put back into his old place as secretary of the board of charities. Mr. Altgeld disregarded public opinion when he removed Mr. Wines from an office to which he had given dignity and reputation. Governor Tanner is simply acting in accordance with the desires of the best people of the State in asking him to return to Springfield. The governor is acting with similar good sense in reappointing Major R. J. McLaughry as warden of the State prison at Joliet. He had charge of this prison for many years and proved himself a master of the science of penology. At present superintendent of the reformatory at Pontiac, with a salary higher than he will receive at Joliet, it is yet understood that he has consented to return to Joliet.

FRANKLIN.

The Home

WHEN.

BY EMMA C. DOWD.

When every line by mortals penned
Shall only good and pleasure lend;
When every word that e'er is said
To gentle courtesy is wed;
When every hand is skilled in work,
And none is idle or a shirk;
When every mind is filled with thought,
And all with beauteous wisdom fraught;
When never human heart shall beat
Except with impulse pure and sweet;
When truth shall govern every life,
And peace shall overmaster strife;
When every deed in all the earth
Shall be of kindness and of worth;
When every soul is brave and white,
With aspirations high as light;
When love shall rule from sea to sea,
And dwell with all humanity;
Then in such joy the world shall bask,
"Is life worth living?" none will ask.

◆

The wife of an eminent congressman, commenting in a private letter on the success of the Mothers' Congress, recently held in Washington, said, "It made one feel that, after all, the greatest desire of the American woman's heart is for the best motherhood." In current literature, too, the incidental allusions to the influence of mothers can hardly fail to pass unnoticed. In Prof. Woodrow Wilson's fine analysis of President Cleveland, in the March Atlantic, emphasis is laid upon the wholesome, kindly and Christian training which prevailed in the President's boyhood home. He never got those first lessons, conned in plain village manses, out of his blood. F. B. Meyer, also, in The Bells of Is, paints a lovely picture of Sunday afternoons, when parents and children gathered around the piano to sing hymns. In regard to his father and mother he adds: "It was not what they said, for they spoke very little directly to us; but what they were, and what they expected us to be, that seemed insensibly to form and mold our characters." Testimonies of this sort, together with the glorification of home ties and joys in a book like Margaret Ogilvy, are hopeful signs.

PARABLES IN PICTURES.

II. THE LABORERS IN THE VINEYARD.

BY ESTELLE M. HURLL.

As the parable of the Laborers in the Vineyard is generally considered one of the most difficult of interpretation, it is not strange that it is not so deeply impressed upon the mind as many others. And as art is always a reflection of popular taste, we do not expect to find many representations of the scene. It is therefore a real surprise to find that there are several notable pictures of the subject. Andrea del Sarto treated it in two scenes, Domenico Feti in one, twice painted, and Rembrandt in one of his finest Bible paintings. It is also pleasant to come upon it among the set of Liberale da Verona's miniatures in the Siena Cathedral library. From the photograph of Rembrandt's composition* we may compare his work with that of the miniaturist.

Both painters show us the moment when the laborers come for their pay at the end of the day, and each renders the scene according to the customs of his own country. Rembrandt introduces us into a great baronial hall, lighted at one end by a window before which stands a table where the reckoning is made. Liberale, on the other hand, groups his figures out of doors, under a fair, blue Italian sky. Rembrandt follows the narrative more accurately in representing both the lord of the vineyard and his steward. In Liberale's limited space he can give us only the one figure which for dignity of bearing and attire might be supposed to be the lord himself. Rembrandt's picture is one of the treasures of the Hermitage Gallery at St. Petersburg and must be seen in the original to be appreciated. No black and white reproduction can suggest the golden colors of the great Dutch master. Liberale's miniature is reproduced for our illustration, each carefully finished figure clearly defined.

A workman is receiving into his outstretched hand the penny from his employer. He seems to have asked a question in regard to it, for he is looking directly into the master's face. The latter, by a gesture, is evidently replying gently. Two other laborers in the background discuss the situation, and one in the rear awaits his turn. The jealousy and rancor which we always associate with the story are very mildly interpreted by the painter. One cannot but think that his was a gentle soul whose own doubts and questionings would be entirely set at rest by the satisfying word of the master, "Whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive."

---

*See the collection of Braun photographs at the library of the Boston Athenæum.

DIET FOR THE LABORING MAN.

IV.

BY MARY E. GREEN, M. D.

Who is the laboring man? Is he one who performs the hardest kind of manual work, who does light work, or who does mental, instead of physical, work? Each in his turn may labor eight or ten hours out of every twenty four, yet in the requirements of food there will be a wide difference, as the waste of tissues at hard work is far greater than with the person who does comparatively little.

The same intelligent feeding that is used regarding animals, if applied to humanity, would insure people against physical ailments, reduce the number of doctors and destroy the ever-increasing trade in patent medicines. Instead of studying how to live, it sometimes seems that the majority of people are preparing for death by the reckless manner of living, in defiance of all hygienic laws, yet expecting that some remedy will adjust things in this intricate machine, the human body, so that life will continue to fourscore or more years. It has been stated that the farmer changes the rations of his horses or cattle if they are indisposed, but trusts to some nostrum to remedy the difficulty in himself, which may have been caused from overeating or a one sided diet. Knowledge of food, what to select, how to market, cook and eat, is especially needed by the laboring class.

If these things were known and practiced the question of poverty and intemperance would be largely solved. Count Rumford, a hundred years ago, demonstrated that a poorly-fed people were a class addicted to beggary, idleness and crime.

No person is capable of the best work unless properly fed. The supply to the system must be equal to the demand, both as to quality and quantity of food. Waste and repair of the tissues must be evenly balanced; this means health. The tissue building foods, or proteins, are most abundant in cereals, such as wheat, rye, barley, corn and oats; in the pulse family, such as lentils, beans and peas; in eggs, meat, cheese, macaroni and good bread. Any one or more of these should enter into the dietary of the laboring man daily. The carbohydrates, or starchy foods and fats, serve to maintain the heat of the body and give energy. The mineral matters or salts are necessary to the bony structure. Water is the solvent of the food, and the medium by which the food is carried to the tissues and the waste material is carried out of the body. Water renders the blood fluid and the tissues elastic. It adds beauty and roundness to the figure, and is a most important constituent of the food principles; hence the necessity of its abundance and purity.

I desire to impress my readers with the importance of cereals as food. Yet wheat, which is so valuable and inexpensive, when ground and refined into flour, and further made into bread at the bake-shops, is often so innutritious that it is a pity to call it food, for by our modern methods of refining it has lost much of that which was most valuable. Bread, as to its nutritive material and weight, should be regulated by law and bear some relation to the market value of wheat. Corn is a most valuable food and, whether used as samp, hominy, "hulled corn," hasty pudding, or made into the various breads to which it is so well adapted, should have a place in the dietary of every household. Its cheapness is another consideration for the laboring class, yet, in many of my visits among the poor, the only acquaintance with corn seemed to be in the cheap jams made from glucose, a product of corn, or that other product obtained by distillation.

Some years ago, while I was visiting physician to a large tenement house district in New York city, I was greatly impressed with the poor dietary of the people. It consisted chiefly of bread and tea, bread and beer, poor meat and stale vegetables and cheap groceries from the corner shops. Poor food and badly cooked was the rule. It seemed to me then that the only way to remedy such conditions would be to have inspectors appointed to see that wholesome food was sold at honest prices, and that the people should be taught how to market and cook food and not to waste it.

There is no one thing which would prove so beneficial to the laboring class as practical and scientific instruction in household economics given in our public schools. Of what use is mathematics to children who grow up only to enter factories and sweat shops, or perform other routine work? But to know the fundamental principles of health, how to care for the body, how to select and cook food, in other words, how to live, are all important to every human being.

What shall the breakfast consist of for the laboring man? Let there be either cracked wheat, hominy or oatmeal and potatoes combined with meat or fish and made into a hash, or, by adding bread, a scalloped dish may be prepared. Eggs may be cooked in various ways and with good bread and butter and fruit make a wholesome and satisfying meal. Beware of the breakfast of coffee and cakes, for as soon as the stimulating effect of the coffee has passed off there comes a craving for something which only intoxicants will satisfy in too many cases. The lunch should be equally nutritious, consisting of hot soup of some sort which ought to take the place of coffee, and cold meat or beans with corn or rye bread. Dates and peanuts may serve as desert. For dinner a cheap cut of meat with vegetables has marvelous possibilities for delicious and appetizing dishes, while rice, hominy and macaroni may be used in various ways with or without cheese. I wish to make a plea for the peanut as an article of food. When cooked for half an hour, with or without condiments, if used with apples or celery, an appetizing salad may be made. If used with bread crumbs, made into a loaf and baked, the peanut is as nutritious as the roast of meat and costs only a fraction as much. It is said that the strength and endurance of the German soldier is due to his ration of peanuts and meal, which are made into a sort of sausage.

A little thought and study is all that is necessary to arrange a perfect and inexpensive dietary. If women would think more and use cook-books less mankind would be far better and more economically fed. No person in this country has done half as much to teach people how to live as Edward Atkinson. If they would accept and practice what he so ably demonstrates there would not be this annual wave of distress as regards food. Relief which comes from the wealthy does not remedy conditions except for the time.

MRS. MORLEY AND HER FRIEND.

BY HELEN F. LOVETT.

You may have heard of "Mrs. Morley and Mrs. Freeman" and supposed they were characters in a book, and meant to look them up some time among "noted names of fiction." But though the names were fictitious the owners were real. These were the names by which Queen Anne and the first Duchess of Marlborough called each other during the years of their celebrated friendship. Queen Anne, the last of the Stuart line, was the younger daughter of James II., who was deposed and exiled. His eldest daughter, Mary, and her husband, William of Orange, were called to the English throne, and after their deaths Anne succeeded. Her reign was a brilliant time in English history, though she herself was not much more than a figurehead.

But long before she was queen, before she was even princess, only Lady Anne, her father being Duke of York, a beautiful young girl named Sarah Jennings came to live in the household as one of the ladies of the duchess. She was some years older than Lady Anne, but they speedily became great friends. Lady Mary was nearer Sarah's age, but these two were never fond of each other, and in after years were open enemies. Mary was not so brilliant as Sarah, but she had considerable beauty and cleverness of her own, while affectionate, dull little Anne was never a rival.

It is likely that Sarah did most of the talking when they were together. Anne would answer questions, but never made an original remark in her life and could talk of nothing more interesting than the weather. Instead of taking the trouble to form opinions of her own she generally adopted Sarah's. She never studied her lessons, and even when she was queen she couldn't spell half the words right when she wrote a letter.

Probably they called each other Anne and Sarah in those early days, and after Sarah married John Churchill. But when Anne was about eighteen she was married to Prince George of Denmark and became a princess, besides the likelihood of her being an English princess by her father becoming king, and a stricter etiquette was insisted on. This distressed Anne. She said she didn't like to be called "your highness," "your grace" or "princess" every minute by her friend. Sarah, who was very high-spirited, didn't like it either. She would have preferred to be of the higher rank herself (though she had become Baroness Churchill by that time).

In this emergency Anne had a bright idea, of which, no doubt, she was innocently proud as she did not have them often. She suggested that they should have some names just between themselves and should correspond under them when they were separated without any formality, as if they were of equal and rather low rank. She invented or selected the names Morley and Freeman, and Sarah, given her choice, took the latter, so Anne was "Mrs. Morley."

The names were afterwards extended to their husbands. Prince George was "Mr. Morley," and Churchill, afterwards the great Duke of Marlborough, was called "Mr. Freeman." He used the names himself in his correspondence, and among them they invented nicknames for other people. Sarah called William of Orange, Mary's husband, "Caliban." Whether Prince George ever joined in this game I don't know. He seems to have been a perfectly uninteresting person and even stupider than his wife.

The next dozen years saw great changes in England. Charles II. died and James became king. In a few years he was deposed and William and Mary were reigning. All this time "Mrs. Morley" and "Mrs. Freeman" had remained great friends. Churchill, who had been made Earl of Marlborough by William (Queen Anne afterwards created him Duke), was a famous general and one of the foremost men in England. His wife was one of the most celebrated women. Beautiful, witty and high-spirited, she would have made a more brilliant queen than Anne.

Both the Marlboroughs were Anne's advisers, and when she came to the throne the success of her reign was largely due to them. It was said that Marlborough ruled England and his wife ruled the queen. But there was one thing that she could not, or would not, rule, and that was her temper. Stories of the duchess's temper may have been exaggerated, but it was certainly very bad. If she had controlled herself more it would have been better for her and her husband, and for the queen, too, who needed a friend as much as ever toward the end of her life, when she had had a great deal of trouble and lost all her many children and knew she would be succeeded by strangers.

The duchess was domineering and grew more so as she grew older. If she were contradicted or opposed in the smallest thing she would fly into a rage and scold in a vulgar manner, and quite undignified for a duchess. Anne, who really had no mind of her own to speak of, had always been accustomed to defer to "Mrs. Freeman's" opinions and do as she suggested. In one of her letters she begs pardon quite humbly for presuming to differ from her about something. But the mentor really got unbearable sometimes. She wanted to dictate to the queen in everything, from the appointment of a minister to the smallest details of her domestic life. When "Mrs. Morley" rebelled, quarrels ensued.

The duchess accused the queen of having new and unworthy favorites who had supplanted herself. If this was true it must have been very trying to a high-spirited person, but it would have been more dignified to bear it in silence, as Marlborough himself advised his wife. Very likely Anne could be disagreeable in a quarrel. She had the Stuart obstinacy without the Stuart wit, and she had no gift of repartee or words at command. She couldn't think of a thing to say in reply to "Mrs. Freeman's" complaints and sarcasms and ridicule, but only kept repeating, "I'm sure it's quite natural," or, "I won't talk about it," which angered the duchess all the more.

The latter complained bitterly of the queen's ingratitude to herself and Marlborough, but there had been favors on both sides. Anne had made Marlborough a duke and her friend a duchess; and when on her accession she settled a handsome allowance on her it was done with a delicacy that would hardly have been expected from "Mrs. Morley."

"Mrs. Freeman" said also that the queen's new favorites flattered her and that "she loved fawning and adoration and hated plain dealing," but this could hardly be so. The duchess boasted that she herself never flattered anybody, but told them the truth, was afraid of no one (Anne was not much to be afraid of) and always spoke her mind, which she certainly did, yet she had retained Anne's friendship a great many years. At last the quarrel became final and they parted, the brilliant duchess and the dull queen, to meet no more in their lives.

I think that "Mrs. Morley" suffered the most from the estrangement. The duchess suffered from wounded vanity, but the queen certainly loved her friend dearly. Her letters were very affectionate, and, if nothing else, Anne was not clever enough to be a hypocrite. They read as if she were the subject and "Mrs. Freeman" the sovereign.

And so it seems as they stand side by side in history. You feel that though Anne was queen by law Sarah was queen by nature, and reigned over hearts and intellects. There was nothing queenly and not much to admire in Anne. The fame of her reign was due to others. One feels a contempt for her narrowness and ignorance and sluggishness of character, which she made no struggle against. Her conduct was often blameworthy.

But that such a person should have chosen a friend so much more gifted, and without one trace of envy felt only affectionate admiration for her, is far from ignoble. We must admire "Mrs. Freeman," but we may feel sorry for "your poor unfortunate 'Morley,'" as she often signed herself, even though she was a queen.

The special work will be given to our hand when we are fit for it. Meantime, every hour that we live in that faith is a preparation for the time when our trained energies will be let loose for it with all the joy with which a full sailed ship at last leaves the harbor with a favoring wind.—Stopford A. Brooke.

THE OLD-FASHIONED BIBLE.

(See Corner Scrap-Book, page 307.)

How painfully pleasing the fond recollection
Of youthful emotion and innocent joy,
When blest with parental advice and affection,
Surrounded with mercies and peace from on high!
I still view the chair of my sire and my mother,
The seats of their offspring as ranged on each hand,
And that richest book which excels every other,
That family Bible which lay on the stand.
The old-fashioned Bible, the dear, blessed Bible,
The family Bible that lay on the stand.

That Bible, the volume of God's inspiration,
At morn and at evening could yield us delight;
The prayer of our sire was a sweet invocation
For mercy by day and safety through night.
Our hymns of thanksgiving with harmony swelling
All warm from the heart of a family band,
Half raised us from earth to that rapturous dwelling,
Described in the Bible that lay on the stand.
The old-fashioned Bible, the dear, blessed Bible,
The family Bible that lay on the stand.

Ye scenes of tranquillity! long have we parted!
My hopes almost gone and my parents no more!
In sorrow and sadness I live broken hearted,
And wander unknown on a far distant shore.
Yet how can I doubt a dear Saviour's protection,
Forgetful of gifts from his bountiful hand?
O, let me with patience receive his correction,
And think of the Bible that lay on the stand.
The old-fashioned Bible, the dear, blessed Bible,
The family Bible that lay on the stand.

OUR LAST CLUB MEETING.

BY MRS. H. W. BOYNTON.

It was the afternoon on which the literary department entertained the whole club, which is divided into six departments, each of which, in turn, has charge of a public meeting. The members had been hard at work studying Chaucer, and we wondered how they could bring to the rest of us a sample of their work. They did not try in the ordinary way, as you will see.

The program opened with an excellent reading of the description of the poor parson, from the Prologue of the Canterbury Tales. This was followed by a brief appearance, in costume, of the host's wife, who introduced, in Chaucer's own words, the characters who were to follow. Then appeared a beautiful nun, the Prioress, who stood quietly before us with a little book in her hand, and in the words which introduce the Prioress' Tale asked help in the story which she was to tell. The impersonator of this part entered so perfectly into the spirit of it that as she begged in a soft, pleading voice, in the quaint words of the old poet:

O mooder mayde, O mayde mooder fre
. . . .
Help me to tell it in thy reverence.

one felt really in the presence of the tender-hearted prioress, telling her pathetic tale to the old pilgrims. After the invocation she read the little story itself from her book, and read it so well that the quaintness of the wording was perfectly understood. As she told of the little boy who learned with such eagerness the song to the Virgin Mary, she herself sang the few words which occur so frequently:

O Alma redemptoris.

When the dramatic interest reached its hight, at the moment the child is seized and killed by the Jews because he sang to the Virgin, her intense, yet quiet, nun-like indignation was fine and her rendering of

O, cursed-folk! O Herodes al newe
What may your evyl entent you avail!

showed the deep hatred of all things Jewish in Christian England of that day. The tender womanliness of the character was evident in the closing verses, as she read of the child's beautiful vision and burial.

The Nun's Priest next appeared, clad in somebody's long, gray bath-gown with the hood well shading the face. It might have been Chaucer himself as to the peaked hood. We were all as interested as if we had never heard it before, this half serious, half mocking tale of the "poure wydewe's" domestic life, the list of her simple possessions, the menu of her dinners and the fact that

Replecioun ne made hise never sik
Attempre diete was al his phisik
And exercise, and herte's suffisaunce.

The jolly priest went on describing in detail the appearance of the hero of his tale, and as the last lines were read,

Lyk asure were hise legges and his toon
Hise nayle's whiter than the lylye flour,
And lyk the burnéd gold was his colour, across the stage stalked the biggest cock man ever beheld! Yellowy-green canton flannel cut in double capes with fringes made remarkably natural wings, while a real chicken yellow hood, with bright red flappers below, over a mask of gray which was nearly all beak, of course, made an astonishingly lifelike rooster. And, O yes, he was splendidly chicken-breasted, owing no doubt to well-adjusted pillows under his yellow waistcoat. This grandiose creature stalked about until the laughter had begun to subside. The lower part of him was hidden by a gray wall effect across the front of the stage. Occasionally he gave a flap of his wings and now and then an abstracted sort of crow. Finally he apparently settled himself on the wall, as two feet clung to its top.

Then the priest went on to tell of the "sevene hennes he hadde in his governaunce, wonder lyk to hym as of colours," of which the fairest was named Pertétote. As he closed the description of the last fair dame and of Chanticleer's love for her, in came, in most absurdly hen like, dawdling fashion, the whole seven. At last, after much soft clacking and flapping and hunching up and settling down, they all fell asleep on the perch. There never was a drowsier sight! Then, as the story goes, Chanticleer dreamed. At least he groaned and woke and groaned again, until Pertétote woke too and listened to the recital of his dream. As his fair spouse waxed more and more indignant that the brave Chanticleer should fear a beast seen in a dream—a dream which came without doubt from "repleciouns"—he, too, grew more bold. To excuse his former cowardice he quoted at length from various sources proofs that dreams have come true. (Here the book was resorted to, and imagine the effect of spectacles on this great creature's nose!) When he had again won Pertétote's esteem by reason and by well-worded flattery, he and his "hennes" all flopped off the perch and sat quietly down behind the wall with only bobbing heads visible.

Then the priest resumed the tale without interruption until mention was made of the "colfox, ful of sly iniquitee," when there crept in to the little embankment by the stage door what appeared to be a moving yellow fur sleigh robe. As the story went on an absurdly funny fox mask peered out over the bushes and a voice with sly, deceitful tones came from within begging Chanticleer to exhibit his wonderful singing. As you know, Sir Chanticleer was won by the flattery and fell a victim.

I don't know that we learned much about Chaucer that afternoon, and yet, perhaps, we got nearer the genial spirit of the old poet than we could have done by listening to a formal lecture. Certainly we enjoyed ourselves.

Closet and Altar

If we leave our doors wide open to God he enters in and makes a heaven of our souls.

Live for the other life. Endure as seeing him who is invisible. Work by faith; work by hope; work by love; work by courage; work by trust; work by the sweet side of your mind and so be like Christ until you dwell with him.—H. W. Beecher.

Still Jesus joins himself to us; still he walks with us; still he instructs us, speaking to us by his word, his providences, his Spirit; still he seeks to enter into our sorrows and trials, and to console and cheer us. But we know him not. Our eyes are holden by unbelief. We do not press him to abide with us. Hence he is grieved, and we are left alone in the night.—Richard Fuller.

The infinite always is silent,
  It is only the finite speaks,
Our words are the idle wave-caps
  On a deep that never breaks.

We question with wand of science,
  Explain, decide and discuss,
But only in meditation
  The Mystery speaks to us.
—Boyle O'Reilly.

Whatever thou wouldst have ask God for it. Whatever thou hast already ascribe it to God. He is not worthy of new blessings who is not grateful for those already given. The streams of heavenly blessing cease to flow down to us when there are no returning streams of gratitude and praise to God. Lovingly lift up thy heart to God and cling to him.—Gerhard.

The true sign of forgiveness is not some mysterious signal waved from the sky; not some obscure emotion hunted out in your heart; not some stray text culled out of your Bible; certainly not some word of mortal priest telling you that your satisfaction is complete. The soul full of responsive love to Christ and ready, longing, hungry to serve him is its own sign of forgiveness. Must there not be sorrow for sin? Must there not be resolution of amendment? Surely there must, but it is not sorrow for sin for the sake of the sorrowfulness that Jesus ever wants. He wants sorrow for sin only that it may bring escape from sin. . . . I think that with all we know of the divine heart of Jesus he would far rather see a soul trust him too much, if that is possible. than trust him too little, which we know is possible enough.—Phillips Brooks.

Our Father, help us to realize thy presence as we wait before thee. Give unto us thy Spirit to witness with our spirits that we are the children of God; that we are the heirs of God and joint heirs with the Lord Jesus Christ. Take away from us all pride and envy, all hatred and contempt for others, that we may receive thy Holy Spirit into our hearts. May we find him leading our thoughts, controlling our feelings and fashioning our lives after the glorious manhood of our Lord and Saviour. May he lead us to the attainment of love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, faith, meekness and temperance. Forgive all that thou hast seen in our hearts and lives contrary to thy will. We ask these blessings in the name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

Mothers in Council.

THE MOTHER'S LIBRARY.

That this is a reading age there can be no question. A glance at the book catalogues and notices is sufficient to prove that. Much of this reading is done by women, for the time is past when with a Bible, a cook-book and mild novel of the Wide, Wide World type the average woman was content. Now she reads politics, theology and sociology, as well as fiction and verse. Is her reading always so directed as to minister to her particular needs? No young man or woman starts out to practice any profession without the aid of books. He or she aims to read, and to possess if possible, the best books that treat the science or profession in question.

Many a poor student has denied himself food and clothing that he might buy books. Motherhood is the noblest of professions, but how many mothers seek to qualify themselves for it by any kind of study or mental discipline? It is commonly taken for granted that instinct is all that a woman needs in order to bring up her children. If that fails her she is advised to ask guidance of God, and this she conscientiously does, forgetting that our Heavenly Father couples seeking with asking and to a certain extent throws back upon us the responsibility of answering our own prayers. He never enlightens a mind that does not try to enlighten itself, and never gives us that for which we are too lazy to work.

A young mother, claiming much culture and living in a house full of books, complained that she was sorely puzzled by her little daughter, and could neither understand the child nor control her. Being asked if she had read any books on child training or child nature, she replied, in a wondering tone, "Why, no," as if that was the last thing to be thought of. Now no child can be brought up by a book, and no two children can be treated exactly alike—there can never be any hard and fast lines in child training—but the mother who will read and study the best books written upon the subject will find not only a new interest in her children, but a fund of suggestions that will constantly spring to mind and help her to meet many a difficult problem.

Although the list might be indefinitely extended, a few books only are mentioned in this short article, but they are all helpful. There are few books more valuable to those who are engaged in the great work of training little children than Dr. Bushnell's Christian Nurture. Its clear common sense and profound spiritual grasp entitle it to the first place in the library of every parent. Beside it should be placed Herbert Spencer's Principles of Education and Froebel's Education of Man. These three books are classics, and a thorough mastery of them will give to any mother a great advantage in dealing with her children.

A small book that has been helpful to at least one mother, and which bears a certain spiritual kinship to the more profound work of Dr. Bushnell, is Mrs. Malleson's Hints on the Early Training of Children. It is published in this country by D. C. Heath & Co. How John and I Brought Up the Child, by Elizabeth Grinnell, is bright and suggestive. Patterson DuBois has given us a most touching study of the child heart in Beckonings from Little Hands. The more scientific books by Preyer on The Development of the Intellect, Studies of Childhood by Professor Sully, The Three First Years of Childhood by Perez, and the recently published work of Compayre entitled The Moral and Intellectual Development of the Child deserve careful study.

The Child (Das Kind), by the Baroness Marenholtz-Bulow, translated by M. Kriege, is valuable, and so is Miss Harrison's Study of Child Nature. Nursery Ethics, by Florence Winterburn, and Children's Rights, by Kate Douglass Wiggin, are interesting and helpful, and there are many other books which are the outcome of the kindergarten movement which will furnish interest and aid to the mother.

For periodicals the Child Study Monthly, the Kindergarten Magazine and Babyhood are useful, each in its own field, and we may suggest that the valuable and important publication, edited by Pres. Stanley Hall of Worcester and called The Pedagogical Seminary, contains matter of great worth to mothers as well as to teachers.

If mothers who have wide purses will buy these and like books, will read them and lend them to their friends, and if mothers with limited means will make the effort to obtain them from public libraries, or through Motherhood Clubs, they will be found to pay far higher interest than money invested in the latest fashion journal or the last new novel.

ANNA M. PERRY.

ONLY THREE CENTS.

When Herbert was ten years old he had an allowance of twenty cents per week, out of which he was supposed to pay his car fares, his contributions to charitable objects and various other little items. On the calendar printed by his church there was a list of the benevolent organizations of its particular denomination, and his mother told him that she wished he would select whichever one he preferred to give his money to and pledge whatever sum he chose to give each Sunday. He decided that he could afford to give three cents. Then he read the list slowly and carefully. A disappointed look came over his face. He read the list again. The disappointment grew deeper. He turned and said ruefully to his mother, "The thing I want to give to isn't here."

"Why, what do you want to give to?"

"I want to give to the Indians at Hampton.'

"What do you know of the Indians at Hampton?"

"O, I know about them, and I like them, and I want to give my money to them. Of course, it isn't much, but perhaps I can give them more some day. At any rate, I want to give my three cents a Sunday to them."

On the card it said that if the donor wished his money given to any cause outside those mentioned there of course he was at liberty to do so. The puzzled mother pointed out this provision to her eccentric little boy and his face lightened at once.

"Then I can really send my money to the Indians at Hampton?"

"Yes. It may be some bother to the treasurer, for there is probably nobody else in the church who cares to subscribe regularly for the Indians. But if you care so much about it I am sure he will not mind the trouble."

So Herbert gave his three cents every Sunday to the Hampton Indians, and his delight in giving to them suffered no diminution for three years. Then, when the time came around for making the annual pledge, his father said, "Really, Herbert, I am glad that you think so much of the Indians, but since that cause is not specified on the card, and since it must be a nuisance to the treasurer to forward your little $1.56 every year to Hampton, hadn't you better think about giving it to one of the regular causes?"

Herbert's eyes filled.

"You don't know how much I think about the Indians at Hampton, papa," he said, warmly. "I think about them a great deal. If ever I get to be a rich man I mean to do a lot for them. Now I am only a little boy, and I can give them only three cents a Sunday. But I do all I can, and it makes me happy to think that I am helping, even if it is only a little. I would much rather keep on giving my money just the way I do. I guess it doesn't bother the treasurer so very much."

That was the last interference which Herbert met with. His father felt ashamed to think that he had for a moment discouraged so genuine and unselfish a desire. Later he felt even more ashamed, for one day, when Herbert had been giving his three cents to the Indians every Sunday for four years, the church treasurer handed the little boy's father a letter.

"That belongs somewhere in your family, I believe," he said.

It was addressed "To the One in the —— Church who has for four years given three cents each Sunday to the Indians at Hampton." It said something like this:

> Dear Unknown Friend: We here at Hampton want to thank you for your persistent interest in us. Your gift to us has been warmly appreciated. We are sure that it comes from a warm heart which loves the poor Indians. May God bless you for the help and encouragement which the thought of your constant interest has given us! We send you some papers telling more of our work than you perhaps know. Can you not come and see us? We can assure you of a loving welcome whenever you can come.

Herbert's joy at receiving this entirely unexpected tribute to his perseverance may be imagined. He is not yet a man, but when he is the Indians may well hope for aid and sympathy from him as much more substantial than his little three cents each Sunday as a man is stronger and more efficient than a boy.

KATE UPSON CLARK.

The caution of the Aberdeenian in giving an answer to a direct question was well illustrated the other day, when I asked a friend, whose family were not noted for very active habits, "Was not your father's death very sudden?"

Slowly drawing one hand from his pocket and pulling down his beard, the interrogated one cautiously replied: "Ay, it was unco' sudden for him. I ne'er kent o' ma father bein' in a hurry before."

For potpies, biscuit, dumplings, puddings,
muffins, waffles, use

Cleveland's
Baking Powder

Pale and Thin people get vigorous and increase in weight from Somatose

SOMATOSE

A Perfect Food, Tonic and Restorative.

It is a powder made from the most nourishing elements of meat, prepared for the nutriment and stimulus of weak systems. May be taken dry, or in milk, water, etc.

At druggists, in 2-oz., ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.

Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate – each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

The Conversation Corner.

THE large insurance calendar—with the "Bulfinch State House" at the top—which the faithful duck on my mantel holds in his bill, tells me that this paper will be published March 4, Inauguration Day. As we Cornerers are nothing if not patriotic, we will start off with this:

GILEAD, CT.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am not a Cornerer [Yes, you are, for I have mailed you a certificate of membership.—Mr. M.] but I read the letters in the Corner, and am very much interested in them. I have just been looking at a picture of the White House, and I think it a disgrace for such a great nation as ours to have such a poor looking house for Mr. McKinley to live in. I think they ought to tear it down and build another on the same site, or perhaps it would be better to build in another place, and save this house because of the great men who have lived there. If the Cornerers could vote they would vote for a splendid house for our presidents. AGNES C.

It will not be so very long before many of our members will be able to vote—I am not so sure about Agnes!—but I am not quite prepared to advise them, when they are members of Congress (as no doubt some of them will be), to vote for a new "Executive Mansion"—just yet. Why? Because our Government is deep in debt, and it would not be right for it to incur any unnecessary expenditure, any more than it would be for a man whose expenses every year were greater than his income to run into additional debt in order to build himself a nicer house. That would not be wise policy for him—it certainly would not be honest. By the way, has Agnes ever heard of any family who declined to live in the house referred to, with free rent for four years?

Speaking of Government house-building, the papers are all printing the proposition that "Uncle Sam" should erect residences for his ambassadors in foreign capitals—something worthy of their position and their dignity. I advise you to vote against that too, for same reason as above stated. What we want in foreign capitals is not splendid mansions, but splendid men, with wisdom and backbone enough to protect our interests, and especially our missionaries from being massacred and robbed. Watch to see whom President McKinley sends to the Sublime Porte! (Have Cornerers got their "slates" made up for the new Cabinet? Today is your last opportunity!)

WORCESTER, MASS.

Mr. Martin; Dear Sir: To read the Conversation Corner, and to have a question to put or to answer, seem to make one a Cornerer. On that presumption I enter the circle with a question. I have seen in print the statement that of the last issue of one-dollar bills, containing the word "tranquillity," spelled with one l, each is worth more than its face value, because they were to be withdrawn from circulation on account of the error in spelling. Is it true, and if so, where can they be disposed of? If there is any advantage to be gained in this way, a local charity would be richer. As I am writing you let me add that the appearance of "the white old hen with yellow legs" has given much satisfaction in this household. My grandmother used to repeat it to her children, and only a short time ago my mother, when visiting her brother, quoted to him the first verse, but could remember no more. M. L. S.

When I opened that letter I was sitting (on the train) with a bank president, and he knew nothing of any such premium. Soon after I received copies of the note referred to, but let them all go without asking any advance. Later I was informed that there was no premium and, on what seemed to be good authority, that the "tranquility" was spelled in the manuscript of the Constitution with one l, the extract from that document on the note being thus literally correct. For this I cannot vouch, but I will allow $1.02 for all such bills sent me for the next sixty days, on account of the Armenian or Corner Cot funds, the premium to be returned to the sender in the form of a small portrait of Washington. This "silver certificate"—for such it really is—is quite a study for Corner patriots. Besides the quotation from the Constitution and the picture of the national capital—showing the White House—there are the names of twenty-three Americans, famous either as statesmen, warriors or writers. It would be a pleasant exercise to run over the list and, giving their full names, tell something about each one. On the back are two familiar portraits, and between them what I thought to be a monogram—"C N E." I had been wondering to whom it referred, when I discovered that the first letter was probably not C—and that suddenly solved the puzzle! See (with a magnifying glass) how much you can get out of that "dollar bill" in a half hour!

A California lady sends a question which will be in order at this point:

. . . Is there a history of the United States which is as interesting for the children as is Dickens's Child's History of England? MRS. C.

I doubt whether there is any book that answers to Dickens. Montgomerey's Leading Facts of American History and his Beginner's American History (Ginn & Co.), as also Higginson's Young Folks' History of the United States (Lee & Shepard), are all well known. I asked a superintendent of schools, and he seemed to think highly of Scudder's History and of his Short History for Beginners (Sheldon & Co.), but added that the most picturesque book was that of Edward Eggleston (the novelist), "A History of the United States and Its People." This too has its juvenile edition—"First Book in American History, with reference to the Lives and Deeds of great Americans" (American Book Co.). The latest book—and some think the best—is that noticed, Jan. 28, in the Literary Department of The Congregationalist—Mowry's History (Silver, Burdett & Co.). I have been much interested in looking over this book. Its pictures—especially the colored flags—are a great help, and it has the Mayflower Compact and Lincoln's Gettysburg address, besides other great documents of the nation. If the C. children don't like it—there is no use of looking any further for them!

TWO RIVERS, WIS.

There is a difference between a dry bone and dry-bone. [Corner Scrap-book, Feb. 11.] The latter, otherwise called smithsonite, is an ore—the carbonate of zinc. From this substance, and not from any animal remains, did the "Dry Bone" post office of our Wisconsin lead region receive its name. In the Corner for Jan. 21, it is said that the Prince of Wales "will be King Albert." But I have seen it stated that in the event of his coming to the throne he is to assume the title of Edward VII. This is said to be the Queen's wish, in order that there may be only one Albert in the British royal family, and that her husband. J. N. D.

That is a very interesting correction. A friend in Halifax writes that he purposes to visit England in June, "to see the Sovereign Lady at Windsor recrowned on her diamond jubilee," and I have requested him to ask V. R.—or some other reliable party—if it is true. But, strictly, has the sovereign (in England) a right to dictate the title of his (her) successor? If not, who has?

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

"The Old-Fashioned Bible." The query in the Corner of Jan 21 about an old hymn with that title has called out a large and interesting correspondence. The different statements as to its authorship give us a nice question in literary criticism. I can give only the substance of what I have learned. I have received several copies of the hymn, one of which has been sent to the lady of ninety years who asked the question and who "heard it sung more than sixty-five years ago in Vermont." It is published in full in the Home Department of this week.

The Adams Theory. This is one of special interest and is reported by a lady of reliability and culture in the "Old Colony," who refers to the genealogy of the Adams family (of Kingston). The story is this. Richard Adams came from England, apparently fleeing from persecution in the reign of James II. It is recorded that he was so determined to preserve his Bible that he had it screwed through the covers to the stand in his house and the stand fastened to the floor, in order to prevent the royal officers from carrying it away. He purchased tracts of land between Salem and Dover, and sent for his son Francis to join him. Francis came about 1692, when about fifteen years old, but learned on his arrival that his father had been killed by the Indians. He served an apprenticeship in Watertown, and afterwards settled in Kingston. He married Mary Buck of Scituate and was the ancestor of a numerous race.

The family tradition is that he was at one time (apparently in the earlier part of his life) so oppressed with loneliness and homesickness that he could not sleep, and that he then composed the poem. A Maine physician (Brown University, 1821) recorded before his death that his grandmother used to recite the lines to him between 1814 and 1817, calling them her "grandfather's verses."

Relation to "The Old Oaken Bucket." One would naturally say at once that the lines were written in imitation of Woodworth's poem. But the latter was composed—as the Corner article described, Aug. 29, 1895—in 1817. With this agrees the statement that the lines have been found in print no earlier than 1818. Is it possible that they were composed soon after "The Old Oaken Bucket," but when seen by the Adams descendants were confounded with similar verses which tradition had handed down as their ancestor's? Could Woodworth's poem have been in imitation of the Bible hymn which he had heard in his youthful home near Kingston?

Another Claimant. At this point I received a letter from another lady asserting that the verses were written by Jesse Kimball, a graduate of Dartmouth College in 1819 and published in the Woodstock (Vt.) Spirit of the Age in 1846. He is said to have composed these lines while studying law in Washington and sent them to his Pembroke (N. H.) home. A careful examination shows that in place of these lines in the third verse—

My hopes almost gone and my parents no more,
In sorrow and sadness I live broken-hearted,
And wander unknown on a far distant shore—

his poem has the following—

Far distant from parents, connexions and friends,
In sorrow and sadness I roam sunken-hearted,
And sigh for the joy their society lends—

thus taking pains to change the words which, though true of Francis Adams, did not fit his case. Kimball died in Ohio in 1835. A Mr. Kimball (relative?) edited the Woodstock periodical in 1846. Would it not have been natural for him to print these lines which were supposed by friends to have been written by the deceased student, but which he only copied as expressing his feelings? This is not all, but perhaps later information may throw more light.

L. H. M

The Sunday School

Lesson for March 14. Acts 9: 1-30.

SAUL THE PERSECUTOR CONVERTED.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The greatest character in Christian history after Jesus Christ was Saul of Tarsus. In some respects we may better understand Christ by studying Saul's life than by studying the life of Christ himself. This lesson brings before us his conversion. The account is given three times in Acts, once by Luke and twice by Saul [chap. 22: 1-16; 26: 9-20]. We here see:

1. Saul the persecutor. His father was a strict Jew of the sect of the Pharisees, a merchant of means and influence who had probably removed from Jerusalem to Tarsus and had in some way, perhaps by distinguished service to the government, acquired the rights of a Roman citizen. Tarsus, on the navigable river Cydnus, was a city of much commercial importance, and one of the three great university towns of that age. It is in Asia Minor, some twenty miles or more from the Mediterranean Sea, with the snowy Taurus Mountains in sight. Saul's parents destined him to be a rabbi, and sent him up to Jerusalem, probably about the time that Jesus, who was nearly of the same age, went to that city from Nazareth. There Saul studied for several years under the famous Gamaliel. Then he probably returned to Tarsus.

But when Stephen was stoned to death Saul first appears in New Testament history. He took care of the garments of Stephen's persecutors while they were stoning him. Not long after Saul was chosen a member of the Sanhedrim, and became the leader of the movement to persecute Christians. He hated them more bitterly than others did, because he was peculiarly pious. He lived a blameless life, so far as he knew. He knew the Scriptures thoroughly and obeyed them to the letter. The most zealous persecutors are those most conscientiously devoted to their religion. Saul took a savage delight in tormenting Christians. He dragged them, both men and women, to prison. He forced the weaker ones to curse the name of Jesus. Others who refused to do that died under torture. He pursued the frightened Christians to foreign cities whither they had fled, and at last, provided with authority from the high priest, he set out with an armed escort to arrest Christians in Damascus. The student may verify the above statements and add to them by finding passages referring to Saul's life in the Acts and Epistles.

2. Saul's vision of the Lord. The journey from Jerusalem to Damascus is not far from 200 miles. Passing through Samaria, Galilee and the Upper Jordan Valley, Paul climbed over the shoulder of Mt. Hermon and saw before him the great Cœle-Syrian plain. A little less than two years ago my tent was pitched for a noonday rest in that plain, beside the crystal waters of the river Pharpar. In the distance, almost under the shadow of a desert mountain, a green oasis was spread out, in the midst of which rose white towers and minarets. Into that glorious city flows the Abana, rushing down from the hills, and there it disappears, transforming the desert into a splendid garden, making the oldest city in the world forever young.

Not far from our camping place occurred that scene which is to be ranked with the transfiguration and the resurrection of Jesus. The faith which Saul preached was based on an objective revelation as truly as was that which Peter and John and the other apostles preached. Saul saw the Lord.

First, Saul was made conscious of a supernatural presence; second, that he was fighting against that presence—"Why persecutest thou me?"; third, that suggestions of his own conscience which he had resisted were on the side of that presence—"It is hard for thee to kick against the goad"; and fourth, that that presence was Jesus, whom Saul had despised and hated—"I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest." At once and utterly Saul surrendered himself to him who thus appeared to him. "I was not disobedient," he said, "unto the heavenly vision." At once he called Jesus his Lord, and asked him, "What shall I do?"

3. Ananias's vision of the Lord. The little company of disciples in Damascus had heard of the coming of the dreaded persecutor. What could they do to escape him? While they were trembling and perplexed, their leader had a vision not less remarkable than that of Saul. Jesus appeared to him and told him to go to a certain house in Straight Street, where he would find Saul, blind, but a penitent fellow-disciple. Ananias knew of him and knew of his mission. He shrank from throwing himself into the hands of that cruel Jew. But he, too, was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. He went promptly on his errand, and his first greeting to him who had been the greatest enemy of the disciples of Jesus was "Brother Saul."

4. Saul preaching Christ. The interview between these two men is summed up in a sentence, but no doubt it took many hours. The dazed rabbi, whose whole life was passing through a revolution which almost threw his reason from her throne, felt the scales fall from his spiritual as well as his physical eyes. He received the gift of the Holy Spirit, was baptized into the name he had hated, and joined himself with the company he had come to persecute.

In a few days he appeared in the synagogues, proving to the astonished Jews that the Jesus whom he had been persecuting was indeed the Messiah foretold in their Scriptures, and telling how he had been converted to be his disciple. Not long after he disappeared and went into Arabia, where he spent upwards of three years in meditation and study. When he returned to Damascus the Jews were so incensed at him for his desertion of their cause to join the followers of the new Way that they formed a plot to kill him. But with the aid of his brethren he escaped and came back to Jerusalem, where he became acquainted with Barnabas, Peter and James. There again the Jews made a plan to kill him. But the disciples again helped him to get away, and some of them went with him down to Cæsarea, whence they sent him back to his own home. We shall not hear of him again for several years, till Barnabas goes down to Tarsus to bring him up to Antioch as a helper in the revival there.

This lesson is one of the most important in all Christian history. For all the theology of Paul is simply the unfolding of his experience in this conversion; and the teaching of the Christian Church has been shaped by the impressions which came on him in those three days, the most wonderful in the world's history, after the three days which included the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus. The righteousness which he had devoted his life to gain through the law he now came to regard as of no account. He had surrendered himself to Christ. In him he found righteousness, peace with God, joy and spiritual strength. He made Christ's experiences his own by prayer, study, love and labor, till he could say, "I live, and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me." His new life began in the highway near Damascus. From that point, with the revelation of that hour, he went forth to bring Christ to the world and the world to Christ.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING.

Topic, March 7-13. What Shall I Do with My Christian Life? 1 Cor. 3: 18-23; Col. 3: 1-17; Matt. 20: 20-28.

Deepen it. Broaden it. Lift it up. Use it for help to others.

(See prayer meeting editorial.)

It's as Good as New is what hundreds of people have said who have sent Old Dresses to us to be Dyed or Cleansed . . . . . .

Dresses can be Made Over

now that sleeves and skirts are smaller, old materials can now be Dyed or Cleansed and made into a fashionable dress at a small cost. Look at your old dresses that have been packed away for a few years. It will pay you!

LACE CURTAINS and BLANKETS
Cleansed for 75 Cents per pair.

MEN'S SUITS
Thoroughly Cleansed, or Dyed and Pressed, $2.00 per Suit.

Our Work is the Best Obtainable.

Lewando's

Fancy Dyers, French Cleansers,
W. L. Crosby, Manager.
17 Temple Place or 284 Boylston St., Boston, and 479 Fifth Avenue, New York.
Bundles by mail or express.
Established 1829. Largest in America.
Book of Useful Information for Stamp.

Steaming Hot and made to suit, there is no remedy for weakness and temporary down-heartedness, so quick and sure as a cup of BEEF TEA prepared from

Liebig
COMPANY'S Extract of Beef

Good for well people and sick ones. A familiar friend where good cooking is done.

Look for this signature in blue, on every jar J v Liebig

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

OUR OWN WORK.

Future Christianity in Turkey. An article in the March Missionary Herald entitled, Some Results of Relief Work in Turkey, points out the exceeding importance of strengthening and maintaining our missionary efforts among the Armenians. In closing the writer says: "One aspect of this great charity must not be overlooked. Its moral and spiritual fruits must be made permanent as the beginning of a new era of growth for the Armenian Church. To this end missionary operations must at once be placed upon a higher plane of efficiency. The object of missions in Turkey is not to build up a Congregational, nor a Presbyterian, nor even a Protestant, denomination. So far as Armenians are concerned it is to induce the people who have the gospel to live by it. It is to foster in this church a sense of its responsibility for witnessing for Christ toward the people among whom it has its home. . . . Ultimately that church is destined to be the successful exponent before the eyes of the Moslems, who had thought to destroy it, of the saving love and purifying doctrine of Jesus. What remains for our missionaries to do in Turkey is to keep before the people the simple gospel in its beauty and preciousness until they shall permanently and irresistibly decide that the church shall have a preaching ministry to feed their souls." The Protestant ordination of an Armenian evangelist to succeed the martyred pastor at Oorfa is a step in this direction already. Neighboring native pastors attended the ordination services and the attitude of the Gregorian officials was cordial. At the after service thirty-nine persons were received to church membership.

A Case for Immediate Help. There is a two-years' old church in a suburb two miles from the center of Salem, Ore., in the midst of a large laboring population without church privileges. It began with a Sunday school of sixty. A hall was rented and furnished, and in due time the church was organized with thirty members, but the rent and lights cost so much that a place for a church edifice was staked out one Saturday afternoon, and the people worshiped in the new building three weeks from the next Sunday. Some of the men and women worked till they were ill. One man, seventy years old, labored so hard in laying the floor that at night he staggered and fell. The people have sacrificed in giving even more than they have toiled with their hands. Expecting aid from the Church Building Society, they secured material and have put off the bills for four months. One of their number writes: "We have again and again affirmed our faith in our Congregational brotherhood, that, though the times are hard, we are sure we will not be forgotten or forsaken. But what shall we tell them now? If we could have the $400 we need, words would fail to express our gratitude." At the rate in which the Building Society has been able to assist the churches for the last nine months, this application would not be voted for eight months more unless some one sends the C. C. B. S. the $400 for it.

THE WORLD AROUND.

Christians Assembled in Mexico. Rev. J. D. Eaton sends us a report of the General Assembly of Christian Workers in Mexico. This second gathering of the kind, just nine years later than the first, was held in the City of Mexico during the last five days of January. It was a truly representative body composed of foreign missionaries, native pastors, evangelists and teachers connected with twelve missionary societies of the United States. Delegates came from El Paso, Yucatan, Tampico and points on the west coast. The leading topics of discussion were: The Evangelistic Value of Day Schools, Self-Support, Denominational Comity, Medical Missions and Woman's Work. No legislation was attempted by the body, and but two formal recommendations were made by it, viz., that the mission boards at home come to a friendly understanding as to the division of territory here, for the purpose of securing a more speedy proclamation of the gospel in all parts of the land; and that the modern version of the Spanish Scriptures, recently published by the American Bible Society, be revised by a committee consisting of competent persons named for the purpose by all the mission boards working in the country. The assembly listened to several visitors from the United States, among them Bishop Fitzgerald, Dr. S. L. Baldwin, W. Henry Grant, Miss Burdett, speaking for Baptist women's work, and Mrs. Stoddard of the W. C. T. U. Each day began with a sunrise prayer meeting under the gifted leading of the Presbyterian pastor-evangelist, Arcadio Morales, and the spirit of devotion manifested itself all through the sessions.

A Voyage with Li Hung Chang. Rev. L. H. Root, a missionary of the American Episcopal Church, bound for Wuchang, China, crossed the Pacific in the steamer with the Chinese viceroy and his suite and has contributed an interesting letter to the St. Andrew's Cross describing his impressions. Mr. Root made friends with the secretary of the embassy, who declared he was a skeptic, but would like to know more about Christianity. Oddly enough he was reading Emerson as a commentary on the ancient Chinese philosophy. About midway of the voyage the outgoing missionary was granted an audience with the great statesman, who laughed at the idea of this young American going to teach the Chinese about religion and launched forth into a panegyric of Confucianism. Li asked several theological questions which shows he has thought about Christian doctrines, but listened with a superior, incredulous air to the replies. More satisfactory was the conversation in regard to such practical subjects as the medical and philanthropic work of the missionaries, which the viceroy always indorses so heartily. He took the opportunity, however, to protest against girls' schools for the Chinese. When asked how missionaries could dislodge the prejudice against them he replied at first by abolishing them, but later modified this and advised having none but women as teachers in order to conform to the demands of Chinese etiquette. Mr. Root reports that only once did Li refer to topics not directly religious, and that was when he touched upon politics. He said missionaries must remember that China is an absolute monarchy, and they must not preach republican doctrines like those practiced in the United States, for such preaching would cause rebellion against the government. "In answer to this," writes Mr. Root, "I simply disclaimed for the missionaries all political interference or agitation, though I did long to ask what he thought of the democratic teachings of Mencius."

FRESH FACTS.

It is good to know that at least one missionary organization can report an encouraging financial situation. The aggregate receipts of the Church Missionary Society are about $100,000 in excess of last year.

An English magazine reports that the Society of Friends is about to open a small mission on the Island of Pemba, British East Africa, where no Christian work has ever been undertaken and where slavery still exists.

The latest issue of the British and Foreign Bible Society is the Luganda version of the whole Bible. The shape of the book is singular and so is the explanation thereof. It is about three inches broad and three inches thick in order to make it fit into biscuit tins together with other devotional volumes. The tins protect the books from white ants and other insect plagues.

A new church building in memory of the wife of Rev. O. C. Olds has recently been dedicated in Parral, Mexico. The church at Parral raised between $600 and $700 for this purpose and contributed much of the work on the building, while Mrs. Olds's personal friends in America and Mexico made it possible to dedicate the edifice free of debt. At the first communion in the new church nearly 100 members partook of the Lord's Supper, thirty-five of them having been received during the year 1896.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, FEB. 26.

Mrs. A. C. Thompson presided, and made varied application of the next Sunday school lesson, Acts 8, to the foreign mission work of the present day. The sending of Peter and John to strengthen those who had received the word of God in Samaria was an example of sending the best into the regions beyond.

The missionaries and work of the Zulu Mission received especial attention, the calendar having suggested them for the last two weeks, and extracts from several letters were read.

Miss Hance, who left her home in Binghamton, N. Y., for Zululand twenty-six years ago last July, and who during these years had made only one visit home, is still at her station, Esidumbini, where in physical weakness she does valuable work. Miss Mellen, associated with Miss Hance, tells of a man who when a boy worked for Mr. Tyler, afterwards went back into heathenism where he remained for years, and who has now, through the influence of one of his wives, become a Christian, given up his wicked practices and has himself started a preaching service five miles from his home. Miss Stillson at Umzumbe writes of their great loss in the death of Rev. H. M. Bridgman, their "beloved and fatherly missionary." Since Mrs. Bridgman is away for the present, Miss Laura Smith has come to their assistance. The number in the school varies from fifty to fifty-five, and Miss Stillson says, "We are constantly tried by the fluctuating attendance, the difficulty of getting the boys and girls to remain long enough to become established in habits and principles. So far we have been able to keep track of the girls converted last year, and the greater number are holding fast their faith."

Miss Martha Pixley of Amanzimtote (Adams) writes the last day of the year from a little cottage on the beach where she and her mother and sister are spending their "summer vacation." The school for boys, in which she teaches, has had a successful year with fifty-five boarders, "many of whom have shown an earnest spirit and are following the Lord Jesus." She finds it hard to part with Miss Smith who has gone to Umzumbe, but greatly appreciates the assistance which Mrs. Bridgman is rendering.

Miss Price characterizes the year at Inanda Seminary as one of which they must say, "Goodness and mercy have followed us," a rich spiritual blessing crowning the last week of the term, a blessing shared by Mapumulo and Umvoti. Mr. Weavers, an evangelist, was most helpful in his ministrations. Confessions of sin were many and frequent, and a new life seemed opening to many souls.

The new building, given through the generosity of the Misses Stokes of New York, was nearly completed, promising accommodations for 150 instead of 110. Miss Price was spending her vacation at Esidumbini, while Miss Phelps was "up country," and Mrs. Edwards and Miss Lindley were at Inanda with the twenty-five girls who remained, carrying on the laundry and garden work.

Miss Susie E. Tyler, born in Zululand, and for some years engaged in mission work there was present, and supplemented the letters with interesting facts concerning the personality of the missionaries and incidents in her own experience.

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS.

ANNALS OF KING'S CHAPEL.

On Forefathers' Day, 1881, appeared the first volume of this sumptuous and delightful work, the author of which was the late Rev. Henry. W. Foote, pastor of the church. His lamented death in 1889 prevented his conclusion of what was to him in the highest sense a labor of love, and his material was placed in the hands of Mr. Henry H. Edes, who has completed this, the second volume, with equal loyalty to the demands of the theme and with scholarly ability. The narrative is resumed with the thirteenth chapter, beginning with the year 1747, and the work brings down the story of the church to the present. At that time Rev. Dr. Henry Caner was its pastor and the first chapter deals with its history during his pastorate, and also, so far as is desirable, with the characteristics of the city at that period. The building of the new house, the present edifice, was an important feature of the church's history during his connection with it, and it is worth noting that the difficulties in raising money for such a purpose which some churches now experience are by no means modern. Episcopalianism in Boston at that time, though there were two or three churches, was comparatively feeble, in spite of the fact that many wealthy and socially prominent people were Episcopalians. Contributions were solicited, and to some extent obtained, in England, the West Indies and Canada, and even then a considerable debt remained upon the building.

In these republican days it is intensely interesting to read of the ecclesiastical and religious colonial life as revealed in these pages. Quite distinct from that of the majority of the people, who were loyal Congregationalists, it nevertheless was positive and influential. The colonial governor commonly attended the chapel and sat in his official pew, and to this day there may be seen upon the organ a crown and two bishop's miters, emblems removed for many years after the Revolution but subsequently replaced, indicative of the early relation of the church to the Crown and the Establishment of England. When the Revolution broke out, naturally such a church, more than almost any other, experienced a weakening and divisive influence. Dr. Caner and a considerable part of his congregation were obliged, or felt it best, to fly from the country. Some of them afterward returned, but most apparently died elsewhere. Then there was an interregnum of several years and it is noticeable that during this period, as once or twice since then in the history of the church, the break in the regular ministrations of its pastorate had little or no effect upon its harmony and prosperity.

Not long after the Revolution came the Unitarian controversy and the development of this is sketched carefully, but skillfully, in these pages. The reader will notice with especial interest the claim here made that the King's Chapel never left the Episcopal Church and to this day, if we rightly understand the author, it stands ready to resume original relations therewith, provided a bishop can be found who will ordain its pastor, at the same time conceding its right to make the changes in the Prayer-Book which it has seen fit to make. This, however, hardly is likely to occur. For many years the church has been practically identified with the Unitarians, and not without good reason, but it has always maintained a certain independence and has installed its own pastors without the aid of council and has refused until recently, if indeed it do not still refuse, to take part in Unitarian councils, on the ground that it prefers to maintain a position securing it from any possible attempt to exercise authority over it on the part of other churches. The changes in its prayer-book chiefly have been in the way of omission of allusions to the Trinity, but its claim is emphasized repeatedly that no such change has been made which is not entirely permissible under the rules of the Episcopal Church, and which any Episcopal church might not make, should it feel so disposed, without being open fairly to the charge of heresy. This claim is not conceded, however, by the regular Episcopal churches and they have more than once protested against it, but, if their ecclesiastical statutes be rightly quoted here, and we presume they are, it is hard to see why the claim is not valid. Moreover, the reader will be struck by the frequently conspicuous and tender expressions of loyalty to Jesus Christ as the Redeemer of man in the utterances of the successive pastors of the church, expressions which never appear to have raised objections on the part of their parishioners.

The administration of the Price Fund, a legacy left by William Price in 1770 under conditions which involved Trinity Church also, as well as Mr. Price's heirs, and which have led to two lawsuits, is outlined in full and reminds one afresh of the desirability of making one's own bequests in person instead of leaving them to become the subject of possible contention after one's decease. Pastors subsequent to Dr. Caner have been Rev. Dr. James Freeman, Rev. Samuel Carey, Rev. Dr. F. W. B. Greenwood, Rev. Dr. Ephraim Peabody and Rev. Henry W. Foote, and the present pastor is Rev. Howard N. Brown. The characteristics of the services of each of these, except the present incumbent, are sketched with a free and sympathetic hand and portraits of most of them are supplied. Probably no other church in Boston has contained among its members or in its congregation more representatives of notable families than this church, and many of them are the subjects of short biographical sketches. The volume is illustrated freely and well. It is rich in historical information of a national character as well as in that pertaining directly to the career of the church. Full lists of proprietors during the period covered by the book are included, together with a great deal of miscellaneous and valuable matter of a collateral character. Mr. Edes is to be congratulated on his pre-eminent success in a work not only difficult in itself, but doubly difficult because of the circumstances in which he was forced to take it up, and with its preceding volume it will always remain an important addition to the library of works about the early history of this city which posterity will prize. [Little, Brown & Co. $5.00.]

RELIGIOUS.

The late Rev. Angelo Canoll was one of the most distinguished preachers among American Methodists, and much above the average if preachers in all denominations be introduced into the comparison. A volume of his sermons, edited by Rev. Homer Eaton, D. D., has been published under the title The Celestial Summons [Eaton & Mains. $1.25]. They are inspiring discourses, rhetorical and often rising to real eloquence, and likewise noteworthy for unhackneyed and vigorous thought. It is well that they have been thus preserved. The wide circle of the author's friends and former hearers in the Methodist body, in which he held a number of important pastorates, and many Christians of other names will derive pleasure and profit from reading his pages.

A new edition of Notes Critical and Explanatory on the Greek Text of Paul's Epistles [Silver, Burdett & Co. $2.00], by the late Prof. J. R. Boise, has been edited by Rev. N. E. Wood, D. D. The work appeared originally sixteen years ago and has been republished five or six times. Its author was a distinguished student and instructor and his work holds an established place in the regard of the foremost scholars. A characteristic of this volume is the application to the original text of the New Testament of the same methods of exact scholarship which the author had used to such advantage in interpreting classical Greek. Nevertheless the book is intended quite as much for ordinary students as for those who have attained advanced knowledge. In this edition Dr. Wood has preserved the notes untouched and his work is largely in the line of condensation, rearrangement into the order of the English Bible rather than that of chronology, and addition in the form of introductory tables and notes.

The Epistles of Paul the Apostle [W. B. Ketcham. $1.50], by G. G. Findlay, contains a sketch of their origin and contents. It is useful but not substantially novel, excepting that it undertakes to do in smaller compass an excellent work which others have done more elaborately. Its purpose is to arrange the epistles in their historical unity and to interpret their teaching in plain language and a scholarly spirit, and the author has succeeded well in the attainment of this excellent purpose. The book is a good one and should find favor.

Rev. H. L. Hastings's little book, Remarks on the Mistakes of Moses [$1.00], has sold to the number of more than 200,000 copies already. It contains three separate numbers of the Anti-Infidel Library bound together, but independent of one another. The book appeared four years ago, and its wide popularity indicates that it possesses merit. Examination of it confirms this impression, although we do not agree with some of the author's positions. It is an example of the most conservative teaching, and it will have more influence with the comparatively uneducated than with those who have some knowledge of Biblical scholarship and its results. It is illustrated freely, but not always in good taste.

Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons send us a handsome copy of their Bold Type Series of the Bible [$5.00]. We see nothing unusually bold about the type, but it certainly is clear and admirable so far as the body of the book is concerned. The same is true of the Concordance portion, but in the Illustrated Bible Treasury, which is an important feature of the book, we find the type very small. There are limp covers and the volume is convenient and handsome, with many illustrations in the latter part. It is in every way a desirable book.

STORIES.

Mrs. Flora A. Steel already has established a conceded reputation as an expert portrayer of social life in India. Her new story, On the Face of the Waters [Macmillan Co. $1.50], is a tale of the famous mutiny. In spite of some overwrought passages, which occasionally lack clearness, and in spite of a certain sluggishness of movement, the story is interesting and even thrilling. It describes the life of the English rulers, especially at regimental headquarters, and it pictures with singular vividness the peculiarities of the native character and life. Based avowedly upon fact, the method of fiction has been used successfully to put fact into a permanent and impressive form. The reader probably will gain from the book a truer conception of the causes, development and actual progress of the mutiny and of some of its consequences than from any merely historical account. We suspect that the low moral tone among the English is represented as too general to be accepted without some qualification. It is hardly likely that the English officials and their families were as indifferent to moral obligations as many of those here described, yet undoubtedly the picture is true in these respects of too many. The most effective part of the work seems to us that which deals with the natives. Their superstitions and religious prejudices, their hesitancy between loyalty and rebellion, the voluptuousness and intrigues of the native palace life and their blood thirstiness are brought out with extreme distinctness. The main center of the story is Delhi, and only those events which occurred there come prominently into the tale so that many of the worst horrors, which occurred at Lucknow and elsewhere, are only alluded to, but as a historical picture its fidelity is probably substantially unimpeachable, and as a powerful and enjoyable novel the book will take high rank.

A Bride from the Bush [Charles Scribner's Sons. 75 cents] is by E. W. Hornung. It describes the experiences of a young bride, an Australian by birth and training, whose home had been in the bush on a ranch rather than in the towns, after being transferred for a time to the society of her husband's family in England. In spite of many beautiful and lovable characteristics, she was a source of constant humiliation to them, by reason of her unconventional peculiarities, and the story of their experiences and the outcome is told with considerable power and a good degree of literary skill. The book is decidedly interesting. Although the reader sympathizes throughout with the heroine, he cannot wonder greatly at the commotion which she causes in the tranquil pool of English society.

The Fault of One [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00], by Effie A. Rowlands, is another story of the consequences of a matrimonial connection between representatives of different and widely contrasted social classes. This, too, is English in its characters and scene and, although not conspicuously well conceived or written, it is a readable and fairly interesting book. Indeed there is much of true nobility in it which will appeal to every one. Without intending to teach a moral lesson it practically conveys one impressively.

Lo to kah [Continental Publishing Co $1.00], by V. Z Reed, contains half a dozen stories relating to Indian life in the Far West and Southwest. The title of the book is drawn from the name of a venerable Indian warrior, who narrates most of its contents. The supernatural element is introduced freely and with some skill and the stories have a freshness and interest which cause them to surpass most others of their class. There are illustrations.

Two or three stories of a religious tendency also are received. One is The Sign of the Cross [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1 50], by Wilson Barrett, the eminent actor. It is identical in substance with the play which bears the same title and which has had such extraordinary success. It describes the persecutions of the early church under Nero, the laxity and vice of the Roman civilization of his time, the stanch fidelity of the Christians to their convictions, and the influence of their unshaken loyalty to truth upon one of the leading Roman citizens and officials who, through love for the heroine, a Christian maiden, becomes himself a Christian and goes fearlessly with her to martyrdom. It is a graphic and picturesque book of large interest, making powerful and lasting impressions.

The First Temptation [Eaton & Mains. 50 cents], by Mary L. Stark, is a book for boys, inculcating honesty and practical Christianity in a wholesome, pleasant manner but without any special features.——Eric's Good News [F. H. Revell Co. 30 cents], by the author of "Probable Sons," etc., describes with commendable earnestness and a good sense of the demands of young readers the influence in winning others to Christ of a little boy who, being a confirmed invalid, was cut off from the enjoyments of most children. The frankly religious tone of the book may cause some readers to shrink from it a little, but will help its influence with many others.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. John Bigelow has struck out of the range of ordinary topics in his little book, The Mystery of Sleep [Harper & Bros. $1.50], and his essay is of more than common interest. He suggests that probably there is more reason for the fact that we spend more than a third of our hours in sleep than the mere reinvigoration of the body, and that we may be developed spiritually during our sleeping hours as distinctly and exclusively as we are developed physically and intellectually during our waking hours. That the soul has experiences while the body is asleep, whereby it receives large benefit, is not an absolutely new theory, but it has never been presented in the way in which Mr. Bigelow discusses it, so far as we are aware. There is much to be said in favor of it and his book is of interest, and attention to his suggestions undoubtedly would prove substantially advantageous to every one. That the mystery attending our sleep ever will be wholly solved during this life hardly is to be expected, but that solid and lasting benefit in addition to that which we now experience may be gained from sleep seems to be probable, and in this book the subject is discussed in a reverent, cautious and thoughtful manner which we like.

We are accustomed to think of Richard Wagner as a composer of music rather than of books, and to entitle his little sketch, A Pilgrimage to Beethoven [Open Court Pub. Co. 50 cents], which O. W. Meyer has translated, a novel is rather stretching the facts. It is not a novel in any true sense, but a short and graphic account of a trip made by the author in early manhood from his home in central Germany to Vienna for the purpose of making the acquaintance of Beethoven. The undertaking, although many hindrances had to be overcome, was successful and agreeable, and his account of it is vivacious, but in no way striking as a literary production. It is exceedingly short and describes a mere episode in the author's career.——Ancient India, Its Language and Religions [25 cents], by Prof. H. Oldenberg, also comes from the Open Court Publishing Co. Its contents already have been published in Germany. It contains three papers, The Study of Sanscrit, the Religion of the Veda and Buddhism. They are instructive and, to the student of language and religion, interesting.——A new book of quotations is out, a dictionary of Living Thoughts from Leading Thinkers [W. B. Ketcham. $2 00], by S. P. Linn. The compiler has covered a wide range of authorship, including many writers hitherto not as extensively known to fame as they deserve to be, and the result of his researches is a truly valuable collection of excerpts. They vary from half a line to two or three pages in length. They are for the most part distinctively moral or even religious, and all of them are pungent and impressive. We notice only a few the omission of which would have been wise. The book is well indexed.

The Way We Did at Cooking School [J. B. Alden. $1.00] is by Virginia Reed. It is in the form of letters by the author to a cousin and covers a considerable range of operations in cooking, but the conversational form which is adopted tempts the author to disregard condensation, a temptation into which she has fallen repeatedly.——The Boston Cooking School Cook Book [Little, Brown & Co. $2.00], by Fannie M. Farmer, the principal of the school, is a superior work. It is well arranged, very comprehensive, uses language simple yet sufficiently particular, is illustrated advantageously and is the fruit of expert knowledge. It is also neatly printed and well indexed. It is a thoroughly practical and serviceable book, which housekeepers will rank with those which they are accustomed to consider most trustworthy.

NOTES.

—— The authorities of Magdalen College, Oxford, have declined the memorial tablet offered them for erection in the college chapel.

—— Americans were the first to recognize the genius of the French sculptor of animals, Barye, and to draw the attention of Frenchmen to it, and Baltimore is especially rich in his works.

—— More than 500,000 copies of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's novels have been sold in this country alone, and this statement does not include one of his minor books or some years' sales of others.

—— A copy of Mrs. Browning's The Battle of Marathon recently changed hands in London for $400, and an edition of her Sonnets from the Portuguese, which was printed privately in Reading, Eng., in 1847, has just been discovered.

—— It is said that the late Mrs. Hungerford, "The Duchess," wrote her first book, Phyllis, because of her distressing poverty. More than 250,000 copies of it have been sold, and her many other books have been very popular although very light in quality.

—— The Cincinnati Enquirer proposes, as affording relief to the eyes in reading, that reading matter be set so as to be read in alternate lines from right to left. We print sake the for manner that in sentence this of illustration, but we hardly expect to .favor general find proposition t e see

—— A monument, designed by Alexander Doyle, is to be erected in Frederick, Md., in honor of Francis Scott Key, author of The Star Spangled Banner. His body and that of his wife are to lie beneath it. The pedestal will support a bronze figure of Key, nine feet high, and itself will be appropriately decorated and inscribed.

—— An odd book, and one of considerable value to antiquaries and some others, is about to be published by Henry Grant of London. It is an annotated record of auction sales, which have been held in London, of pictures, prints, autographs, manuscripts, coins and other objects of artistic and antiquarian interest. It will include the prices obtained and the names of the purchasers.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

Ginn & Co. Boston.

Glaciers of North America. By Israel C. Russell. pp. 210. $1.90.

Little, Brown & Co. Boston.

The Law of Married Women in Massachusetts. By George A. O. Ernst. pp. 285. $2.00.

American Tract Society. Boston.

The Trial and Death of Jesus Christ. By James Stalker, D.D. pp. 321. $2.00.

Copeland & Day. Boston.

A Writer of Fiction. By Clive Holland. pp. 130. $1.00.

Stone & Kimball. New York.

A Woman's Courier. By William J. Yeoman. pp. 340. $1 25.

John Gabriel Bookman. By Henrik Ibsen, translated by William Archer. pp. 198. $1.50.

Grip. By John Strange Winter. pp. 245. $1.25.

Miss Armstrong's and Other Circumstances. By John Davidson. pp. 259. $1.25.

With the Band. By Robert W. Chambers. pp. 134 $1 25.

G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.

Books and Their Makers During the Middle Ages. By George H. Putnam. Vol. II. pp. 538. $2.50.

The Majestic Family Cook Book. By Adolphe Gallier. pp. 419 $2 50.

American Orations. Edited by Alexander Johnston, re-edited by J. A. Woodburn. pp. 416. $1.25.

Macmillan Co. New York.

Isaiah. The Modern Reader's Bible. Edited by R. G. Moulton, Ph. D. pp. 260. 50 cents.

J. B. Lippincott Co. Philadelphia.

The Coming of Chloe. By Mrs. Hungerford. pp 290. $1 25.

A Romance of Old New York. By Edgar Fawcett. pp. 204. $1.00

PAPER COVERS.

John Wilson & Son. Cambridge.

An Address on the Life and Character of the Late Henry E. Parker, D.D. By S. C. Bartlett, D. D., LL. D.

MAGAZINES.

January. The Critical Review.—Writer.

February. Nineteenth Century.—Our Day.—Fortnightly.—Music.

March. Cassell's.

COLORADO'S THREE DAYS' JUBILEE.

The raising of the Pearsons fund of Colorado College was enthusiastically and fittingly celebrated at Colorado Springs, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 21-23. Ministers and educators from all parts of the State united with the townspeople in doing honor to Dr. Pearsons, President Slocum and all those who so generously aided in the great work and to the college, which has received such an impetus by their exertions and self-sacrifice.

An invitation had been sent to the ministers of all denominations in the State, asking them to use the occasion as an opportunity of presenting to their congregations the subject of higher Christian education. A large number responded, thus giving a new impulse to the higher life of the State. In some pulpits, in accordance with Dr. Pearsons's suggestion, Mary Lyon's life furnished the text for presenting the vital theme.

The series of distinctly college gatherings was opened by the vesper service on Sunday afternoon, at which Rev. J. B. McCuish, Ph. D., of Denver preached the sermon. It was an earnest appeal to seek greatness by service of God and his Son. The exercises of the afternoon were a fitting preparation for the largest gathering of the week, the union service of praise and thanksgiving in the Coliseum, in which almost all the churches united and almost 3,000 people participated. Chancellor William F. McDowell of Denver University gave the address, which was one of remarkable penetration and intensity. His theme was Freedom and Power in and through the Christian College. These two addresses at the outset raised the thought and feeling of all to a very high plane.

On Monday afternoon was held the first of the educational conferences. It was presided over by President Slocum, and these topics connected with the general theme of Higher Education in Colorado were treated in three papers: How to Interest Colorado Young People in Higher Education, by Principal William H. Smiley of the East Denver High School, the largest high school in the State; the College and the Professional and Technical Schools, by J. T. Eskridge, M. D., of Denver; the Balance in the College Schedule between Scientific and Classical Studies, by Prof G. A. H. Fraser of Colorado College. In the discussions which followed leading educators in the State participated.

In the evening the citizens of Colorado Springs crowded the Opera House, hundreds of people not being able to get inside the doors to express their deep satisfaction at the accomplishment of the great work. This meeting was presided over by Judge Campbell of the Supreme Court of Colorado. Governor Adams made a telling speech of congratulation. Letters and telegrams of congratulation were read from all parts of the country. The letter which excited the most interest was a characteristic one from Dr. Pearsons expressing his own enthusiasm over the result. "I like your way of doing business," was the sentence which gave the gist of his satisfaction. An ovation was given to President Slocum and one only second to his greeted President Gates of Iowa College. When the latter, the guest of the evening, rose to speak the Colorado College students, who occupied half of the lower part of the house, greeted him with his own college yell. With mingled humor and seriousness he discussed the subject of Christian Colleges and American Democracy. The power of the address may be imagined by the fact that the great audience remained, almost to a man, through the whole of it, although the speaker did not begin until quarter of ten o'clock and occupied an hour. The perils in the path of the American republic were eloquently put forth, and the part the Christian college is to play in meeting the country's needs was clearly defined.

Late as had been the hour of closing the Monday evening meeting a large audience met in the college chapel on Tuesday morning to share in the conference on Higher Christian Education. In this gathering was discussed with directness and definiteness the central theme of the whole celebration. The papers were all earnest and practical and of an exceptional merit. Chancellor McDowell presided, and by his opening word struck the keynote of the conference—the Christian life the light of men. Rev. S. P. Wilder, late of Janesville, Wis., and now of Pueblo, for many years a trustee of Beloit, gave a discriminating paper upon The Ideal Christian College. Prof. F. F. Abbott of Chicago University with great felicity unfolded the thought of Religion in Higher Education, and Rev. Philip Washburn discussed in a remarkably vital way Higher Christian Education in its Relation to Social Problems. The man trained to look upon life with intellectual insight guided by the spirit of justice and love is the one who is to bring about the true solution of these perplexing questions. This meeting was felt by most of those present to be the climax of the celebration.

In the afternoon of Tuesday the students and alumni had a characteristic gathering in the chapel. Reminiscences and appreciative judgments of the present life of the college were interspersed with college songs and college and class yells. While lacking in some of the seriousness of the other meetings, it was full of such enthusiasm as only students can throw into what fully expresses them.

The exercises closed with a reception given by the trustees and faculty to the city and the guests of the college. The Coburn Library was thronged, and on every side were heard words of hearty congratulation and satisfaction at the growth and promise of the college.

It is impossible to convey to any one who was not present at these exercises the impression they produced. Persons who came expecting to find them perfunctory and mechanically laudatory went away deeply stirred and enriched. Nothing is more remarkable in the history of Colorado College during the last few years than the way in which it has won the enthusiastic loyalty of those who have come into contact with it. Rich and poor, educated and uneducated, gathered in all these exercises and felt the college to be their common possession and inspiration. The strength of a college is in its friends, and no college has won more in the same length of time than Colorado College. E. S. P.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, March 14-20. How the Christian Endeavor Pledge Strengthens the Christian Life. 2 Kings 23: 1-3, 21-25.

By giving definiteness to our Christian purposes. Christianity, just because it is an intangible affair, is liable to become vague. Multitudes of persons sympathize with it and perhaps are in God's sight included within the pale of believers, and yet they have no clear-cut aims as respects Christian discipleship and service. We ought always to discriminate between the least that God requires and the most that he desires. The Endeavor pledge comes to remove the mist that may gather about Christian ideals, to show us the exact nature of our undertaking. Surely it is good for us each morning to say over to ourselves, "I will endeavor to do what Christ wishes me to do." That is the real business of the Christian life. And just as the business man at the beginning of his working day plans his labors, so the Christian ought to go to his Master for orders and then strive to carry them out. The pledge goes on to promise daily prayer and reading of the Bible. This part of it points to the source of strength, and unless we avail ourselves of it no vital Christianity is possible. The remainder of the pledge, which has to do with participation in prayer meeting, is simply promising a form of service which is almost sure not only to strengthen the one who renders it but to others who witness it. The Endeavor pledge is sometimes thought of as designed merely to foster speaking in meeting. But this is only an incidental part of it consequent upon the larger and more vital thing.

By allying ourselves with a great host. Encouragement comes by the touch of the shoulder. We do things better when we realize that others are striving to do the same thing. It is not the great enthusiastic conventions only which have developed the Christian Endeavor cause, but rather the knowledge that all over the land and the world thousands of young people were, in their daily lives, striving to do the things which Jesus commanded. Many a boy or girl in an obscure town with few helpers at hand has, through the Endeavor movement, felt himself supported by the great band of earnest souls who have entered into the same covenant. No Christian is so strong that he can afford to dispense with the aid that comes from associating himself with others treading the same pathway.

Perhaps the most conclusive proof that the Endeavor pledge does strengthen the individual life is the fact that for sixteen years hundreds and thousands have put it to a practical test. Unquestionably it has been, under the providence of God, the making of strong and useful Christian lives. Those who have entered into it thoughtfully, treated it fairly and carried it out patiently have reaped a rich reward and have been, thereby, better fitted to do Christ's work.

In and About Boston.

Noontide Worship in King's Chapel.

Once during the week, for half an hour, the doors of the venerable King's Chapel swing open and "the weary, worn and sad" enter to find rest for their souls.

'Tis Wednesday noon. You enter the doors of the building whose exterior is so dark and so forbidding, but whose interior is so light and so satisfying. You sink into the cushions of a high-backed box pew, gaze curiously on the mortuary tablets, and indulge in mournful reverie as you speculate where Charles Sumner and where Oliver Wendell Holmes used to sit. The organist plays a comforting, reverent tune. The scholarly pastor of the church, Rev. Howard N. Brown, escorts to the old fashioned pulpit the preacher of the day, gowned in black. In due time a Psalm is read, a hymn sung, an extempore prayer offered, a helpful little homily uttered, the benediction pronounced, and at 12 30 you walk out on the pavement of Tremont Street, refreshed, strengthened, a better man.

Especially so if the man in the pulpit utilizes his opportunity as Rev. Dr. William E. Barton of Shawmut Church did last Wednesday. Not a superfluous word. Clean-cut as a cameo. Fresh, spiced with humor, broad in its sympathy, intensely practical and helpful to the workmen and workwomen who heard it. Even as he prayed for soldiers, policemen, firemen, railroad men and men in humbler, but responsible, walks of life, so, in his talk, he glorified the faithfulness of Tertius, Paul's amanuensis, in writing the epistle to the Romans, and the like faithfulness and consequent immortality of influence of all who, like Tertius, do "the thing nexte at hand."

Nothing could have been cleverer than the way he piqued the curiosity of all but the most learned by his preliminary reticence concerning the epistle from which the text was taken; and if there chanced to be a railway employé present his heart must have thrilled with delight as he heard his own fidelity to duty and his importance to society set forth so feelingly by a Christian minister.

An Experiment in Sunday School Normal Work.

Few of the Sunday schools in our cities and suburbs sustain regularly a teachers' meeting, still fewer a normal class. It is a pleasure to report a successful attempt in this important work. At a recent convention of the Norumbega district, which includes six cities and towns from Newton to Waverley, not a school of any denomination reported either form of work, and this in strong and progressive churches. The difficulty of finding an available evening is but one hindrance, and the standard of ability required to sustain such a work is high in a region of advanced educational methods.

The church in Auburndale has recently reorganized its work into four departments, and one of the first achievements of the committee on religious instruction, under the chairmanship of Dr. F. N. Peloubet, was in meeting the deficiency noted above by a course of five normal addresses by prominent educators and experts in teaching, who are also actively interested in Sunday school work. They were to present principles and methods helpful to the home as well as to the school, and illustrate by applying them to the lesson of the following Sunday. The speakers were a supervisor of the Boston public schools, a pedagogical instructor in Clark University, an agent of the State Board of Education, a head master of a city high school and an instructor in the Boston Normal School. The small fee of $10 given each was no indication of the value of their work. To meet expenses subscriptions of fifty cents for the course were asked, but no tickets were taken at the door, and a general invitation was given from pulpits and superintendents' desks. Two other churches in the vicinity joined heartily. The result was an absolute success. An enthusiastic audience of 150 assembled, made up of teachers, parents and young people. While nothing was too technical for the untrained, everything was scholarly, inspiring and practically helpful. Modern pedagogical science was brought to the aid of Christian instruction, infused with a genuine Christian spirit. We commend the method to others. C. M. S.

Dr. Grenfell's Visit.

Eight or ten churches in this vicinity have had the pleasure of seeing and hearing Dr. Wilfred Grenfell of the Labrador mission during his short stay. Quite a number in his audiences knew him by reputation, the Conversation Corner of this paper having introduced him to their attention at least two years ago, and they, as well as more distant readers of this paper, will recall the strange and providential manner in which Mr. Martin's World's Fair friend, little Pomiuk, was rescued by Dr. Grenfell far up on the Labrador coast when at the point of death. By a letter which the lad was cherishing the good missionary learned of Mr. Martin and The Congregationalist, and ever since that time his heroic and self-sacrificing work for the Labrador and Newfoundland fishermen has been increasingly familiar and dear to many.

DR. WILFRED GRENFELL.

If Dr. Grenfell made a few friends during his visit here last year, it is safe to say that he has multiplied them tenfold during his present stay. He has been heard at several churches in Andover, at the Leyden in Brookline, Pilgrim, Shepard Memorial and the Harvard Y. M. C. A. in Cambridge, at the Highland in Roxbury and at Brighton. Large congregations have been the rule wherever he has spoken, good-sized collections have been taken and the good seed sown will be bearing fruit for many years to come in a closer affiliation of American Christians with this special form of missionary effort.

The charm of Dr. Grenfell's lectures consists, first of all, in the fact that he presents a series of magnificent stereopticon views, fully illustrating the wild and desolate region which his vessel visits and the peculiar phases of his work, which is that of a medical missionary and gospel preacher. By means of the views, thrown so vividly on the screen, his auditors were able to see the sick and injured seamen in the hospitals on shore attended by cheerful-faced nurses. Then, too, groups of men gathered on deck for services, or on the land, were exhibited, and thus for the time being the on-lookers were transported to the country of snow and seal fisheries and to the billowy Atlantic which washes its shores.

Another great charm of these lectures lies in the modest and winsome personality of Dr. Grenfell himself. He comes of an excellent English family, his father being a cousin of Charles Kingsley, and he is a well-bred English gentleman, bearing the marks of the culture of Oxford. He is thoroughly alive to the best modern methods of conducting missionary work, and has, this last year, organized and developed a co-operative store in order to save the Labrador people from the exorbitant impositions of the traders. Entirely unaware of the co-operative movement which has taken such deep root in England and is now being pushed forward on this side of the water, Dr. Grenfell has all the while been working on similar principles, and was rejoiced last week to be brought into contact with Rev. Robert E. Ely and others at the Prospect Union in Cambridge who are taking steps in this direction.

It was a pleasant coincidence that Mr. Moody should be holding meetings here at the time of Dr. Grenfell's visit. In 1883 the doctor was converted when Mr. Moody was preaching in East London, and although the two had not met from that time until last week the influence of the great evangelist's single sermon largely determined Dr. Grenfell's entrance upon this mission to deep sea fishermen. He was particularly interested, too, in Mr. Murphy's Faneuil Hall meetings, and was pressed into service on the platform by Mr. Murphy, speaking with a directness and power that appealed to the roughest man present.

Dr. Grenfell spent Thursday afternoon and evening at Harvard University. As he watched the 'varsity crew rowing in the tank he instantly recognized and commented on "the Oxford stroke" recently adopted by Harvard. He also watched the practice of the baseball candidates and had a pleasant chat with the captain of the 'varsity nine. In the evening he addressed the Harvard Christian Association, speaking as a college man to college men and telling of the time when he first gave himself to Christ and of his life as a Christian athlete. His address was the most interesting and helpful which the association has enjoyed for a long time. Afterwards he attended a Bible class led by the captain of the cricket team.

Dr. Grenfell went to Mt. Holyoke College to lecture on Tuesday, and thence to New York, whence he sails at once to England. It is in that country that the bulk of the money for his work is secured, but he is naturally desirous of building up a constituency in America as well. Montreal and other parts of Canada have responded liberally, and it is to be hoped that there may be not a few among us who will be glad to make occasional investments in this missionary enterprise, which is certainly one of the most worthy and inspiring in its results of any now going forward. Last year alone Dr. Grenfell and his associates treated nearly 2,000 people. The personal approach thus obtained paves the way for the gospel message, to utter which is Dr. Grenfell's greatest joy.

Union Aid for Distress.

Co-operation between the churches and Associated Charities was the object of a meeting in Huntington Hall last week Thursday. The idea has long been in mind. A certain relationship and mutual touch already exist between the two great forces, but further amalgamation of plans and methods is considered a desirable goal.

Several hundred persons showed their special concern with the subject of relief by attending the meeting, and their thought was directed by the chairman, Robert Treat Paine, Esq., to the topic, The Unsolved Problems of Charity. After his introductory remarks Mr. Paine called upon a number of representatives of different denominations in the city to assist in clearing the way for larger work. The speakers were: Rev. Leighton Parks, Miss Mabel Bertrand, Rev. William Byrne, Rev. E. D. Burr, Mr. J. R. Coolidge, Jr., Rev. Walter Calley and Rev. G. L. Perin. All evinced their approval of closer connections with the Associated Charities, and suggested as particular points of union effort: securing through the association employment for people dependent upon the churches, the registry by the churches with the association of the families dependent upon the former, and more even division of labor for relief by calls, provision and the like.

Young Patriots Inspired.

Nearly 100 young Congregationalists from the churches of Greater Boston sat down to the monthly dinner of the Young Men's Congregational Club, Feb. 24, and later enjoyed four very inspiring yet sobering talks by Rev. Dr. George A. Gordon of the Old South Church, Professors Albert B. Hart and J. Henry Thayer of Harvard University, and Hon. Winslow Warren, collector of the port of Boston. Resolutions indorsing the arbitration treaty were passed, and Collector Warren in responding to the toast, The Nation, dwelt earnestly upon the duty which we owe to the world of promptly indorsing such an epoch-making compact. Dr. Gordon roused enthusiasm by his survey of the place which a high conception of the state has had in history, how it has influenced men to write great literature, how interwoven the interests of the church and the state are, and how tremendous are the responsibilities of young Americans because they inherit such memories, such opportunities, such security of life and property.

Professor Hart, in a masterly analysis of the characters and labors of Washington and Lincoln, proved his thesis that they were indispensable to their generation. Professor Thayer emphasized the necessity of keeping dominant the old, lofty American ideals of personal character, and honesty and scrupulousness in business as well as in politics, and adorned his plea with delightful reminiscences of Charles Sumner and Wendell Phillips. At the close the members solemnly repeated a pledge vowing hostility to all manner of evil assailing the republic. It was a rare evening of inspiration and edification. Fifteen new members were admitted and twenty-five proposed.

Odd Volumes.

Book lovers last week were drawn as if by a magnet to the Boston Art Club Building where the Club of Odd Volumes held its annual exhibition. This was so varied and interesting that it was hard to tell which department deserved most attention. Students of colonial history delighted in the old books bearing Boston or Cambridge imprints between the years 1649 and 1700; in Eliot's Indian Bible, of which three copies were shown, as well as the deed by which the Indians conveyed land to Eliot, with his signature and the characters "marked" by the Indians; and in the first election sermon printed in America. There were specimens of beautiful bindings which set one wondering if the contents could be worth such a lovely casing, and in this department was a collection of the bindings of the sovereigns of Great Britain from early in the sixteenth century.

After looking at the Washington portraits one suspected him of belonging to the "many faced people" of whom Eastern story-tellers make mention, for some of the portraits bore hardly any resemblance to others. It is worth noting, however, that the 260 different prints shown were the property of one member of the club who has been thirty years collecting them. But one lingered longest over the book-plates, noting familiar ones, studying those less well known, musing over a motto here and enjoying the fitness of a design there, till recalled to the fact that his time was more than spent and he turned away, resolving to become himself a collector of odd volumes and kindred treasures, "some day."

An Assistant for Dr. Thomas.

Harvard Church, Brookline, long ago reached a sufficient degree of prosperity to warrant an increase of pastoral service, and during recent years Dr. Reuen Thomas has had as ministerial helpers Rev. M. M. Cutter and Jeremiah Taylor, D. D. The former's special work was in connection with Bethany Chapel, the mission of the church, where a great many children have been gathered into the Sunday school. Dr. Taylor, while devoting his mornings to the American Tract Society, of which he is secretary, has given his afternoons to calling in the parish, which is an extensive one, covering practically the whole town. His benign and gracious presence has made its due impression upon old and young and he has endeared himself to all, while his help in the prayer meeting and in other departments of activity has been prized.

It has now been deemed best to secure the services of a young man, who can give all his time to the demands of the parish, which are continually increasing, and particularly to stimulate and direct the Christian undertakings of the young people.

REV. O. D SEWALL.

Rev. O. D Sewall, upon whom the choice of the church has fallen, graduated from Bowdoin in 1887 and from Andover in 1892. While in the seminary he and several of his classmates formed the determination to give themselves for the first few years of their ministry, at least, to the more uninviting fields that might offer, and formed themselves at graduation into an Andover Band, who went to Maine and did splendid service in fields sufficiently contiguous to permit frequent consultation and conference. Mr. Sewall was stationed at Strong. In 1895 he accepted a call to Durham, N. H., which pastorate he has just resigned. He has many personal and professional qualifications for his new field.

It was not deemed necessary to summon a council to pass judgment upon Mr. Sewall, whose record was already known to the church which he is to serve. The assumption of these new duties, however, was signalized in a pleasant manner last Monday evening in the presence of a good-sized congregation. Personal invitations had been sent to ministers and laymen of sister churches. Dr. Thomas extended the right hand of fellowship, Drs. Clark and Herrick conducted the devotional services, and President Hyde of Bowdoin preached a powerful sermon on the complementary truths of the freedom of individual development and the obligations of sympathy and burden-bearing, applying these truths to the home, school, state and church.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come.

Boston Ministers' Meeting, Pilgrim Hall, March 8, 10 A. M. Speaker, Rev. Daniel Evans. Subject, The Changes in Theology which Necessitate a Broader and Deeper Work of the Church.

Foreign Missionary Prayer Meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 A. M.

American McAll Association, Boston Auxiliary, thirteenth annual meeting, chapel of the First Baptist Church, Commonwealth Avenue, Wednesday, March 10, 3 P. M. Address by Dr. G. C. Lorimer.

Evangelistic Association of New England, conference in Roger Williams's Church, Providence, March 8-14. Speakers, Rev. Messrs. Smith Baker, D. D., W. N. Brodbeck, Alexander Blackburn and J. A. McElwain.

Benevolent Societies.

The Congregational Home Missionary Society is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

Woman's Home Missionary Association, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

Woman's Board of Missions, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

The American Missionary Association, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

The Congregational Church Building Society—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

Congregational Education Society (including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

Cong. Sunday School & Publishing Society.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

Massachusetts Board of Ministerial Aid.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

Ministerial Relief.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

The Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

The Boston Seaman's Friend Society, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St, Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS.

Not all problems which the minister has to meet in these days are of a distinctly spiritual nature, especially in the missionary field. A recent graduate of a New England seminary is engaged during his spare hours in painting the meeting house. At last reports his perplexity was how to get at the steeple. He finds nothing in his notes on practical theology to help him out.

We clip this from a New Jersey church calendar:

> The pastor now prints nearly all his sermons with the typewriter, and is glad to loan his manuscript at any time to any one desiring it. Thus to keep in circulation a good sermon is to double its influence.

Though Congregationalism and patriotism have always gone hand in hand, the numerous celebrations of Lincoln Sunday and Washington's Birthday by churches and Congregational Clubs indicate that the terms are rapidly becoming synonymous.

A church in New York State has developed its musical talent largely, but no more so than many another might do with a little special attention. In all their efforts this people seem to exemplify the instruction: "To every man his work."

An Illinois church, though without a leader, occupies an indispensable place as a refuge to new believers. The good work has begun well and may it be for life with those who are started aright.

The gradual evolution of an English church from a Welsh one in Iowa, keeping even pace with the development of the people, suggests the true way to hold foreigners to Christ and the church.

We have always supposed money to be the bone and sinew of missions, but our Nebraska correspondent seems to consider it the flesh and blood as well.

A Chicago holiday occasion not only brought forth the superior talent of a church, but gave evidence of the large appreciation of it.

A revival that arouses the Sunday school is rich in possibilities of long and fruitful Christian lives. See news from Iowa.

Of Special Note.

How well it paid an Empire State church to ask for financial aid from an absent member.

Increase of membership on confession in Boston churches the last six years.

A fresh illustration of "bread upon the waters" in Nebraska.

The extraordinary record of a Massachusetts S. S. class.

Generosity of a great Illinois railroad to a little church.

A union home missionary rally in Nebraska.

MASSACHUSETTS CONGREGATIONALISM.

The figures which have been entered for the forthcoming Year-Book, showing the status of the Massachusetts churches at the close of last year, are as follows:

Churches	594
Added	7
Members	110,185
Additions	6,413
Additions on confession	3,378
Removals	5,312
Removals by death	1,827
Sunday school members	121,191
Benevolent contributions	$658,378
Decrease in benevolences	$37,886
Home expenditures	$1,584,771
Increase in expenses	$43,996

MICHIGAN DEDICATIONS.

Shiloh provided a great day for the village when the new meeting house was dedicated. This is the first church edifice in the place and is the outgrowth of an effort of a few women made four years ago. The sermon was preached by Rev. B. V. Child of Belding, and Rev. Mr. Stewart, a neighboring Methodist pastor, aided in the evening service. The pledges taken during the day amounted to $475. Conklin also rejoices in a beautiful new edifice, which stands as the first in the village. It is the result of a spontaneous movement on the part of the people. Rev. William Ewing, State S. S. superintendent, visited the place a year ago and organized a school. Rev. Drs. D. F. Bradley and W. H. Warren and Messrs. F. G. Blanchard and William Ewing took part in the afternoon services. The building cost $2,000, of which $1,100 remained to be raised. Over $800 were pledged in all. Rev. Archibald Hadden preached the sermon in the evening. The C. C. B. S. has voted $300. The church starts free of debt. Rev. John Stapleton is pastor.

MEN'S WORK FOR FIVE YEARS.

The Sunday Evening Club of the First Church, Appleton, Wis., Rev. John Faville, pastor, held its fifth anniversary Feb. 21. The club started with 20 members and has enrolled 673, of whom 115 united the last year. Its receipts from all sources last year were $2,332, a larger sum than ever before. The club has accomplished much more than to enrich the evening service and make it attractive. It has helped the finances of the church, since there are now 124 members who are regular contributors to the current expenses of the church who were not five years ago. It has become largely interested in the business affairs of the church, and through its committees assists in the morning service, while members have become regular attendants at that service. It has increased the attendance at the evening service from an average of less than 150 to over 650. During last year through its instrumentality a chorus of over 100 male voices has been established, and now furnishes the music at both morning and evening service, which without doubt is the most potent force for permanent good yet put forth. From its membership have come additions to the church, which is a strong commendatory feature of good work. The illustrated souvenir program for this anniversary service gives a succinct summary of the work of the club as well as of the church.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

Bangor.

The evangelist, H. L. Gale, gave an interesting and practical talk to the students, Tuesday, Feb. 23. ——The Seniors under Professor Paine have entered upon the study of the Reformation. Professor Fisher's Church History is used as a text-book. ——Professor and Mrs. Beckwith entertained the students at their home last Friday evening.

Andover.

The students celebrated the 400th anniversary of the birth of Melanchthon by special exercises including papers on his life and selections from his hymns.——Dr. J. H. Dennison of Williamstown addressed the seminary recently on The Relation of Philosophy and Science to Miracles.——The class in New Testament theology has begun the study of Revelation.——The Senior Class has elected a supply committee.——The class in theology under Prof. George Harris has just finished the study of the doctrine of the person of Christ.

Hartford.

Rev. Dr. Hodges, dean of the Cambridge Divinity School, addressed the students in chapel lately.——Services were held in honor of Melanchthon's birth, President Hartranft delivering the address.——Mr. E. B. Perry gave a pianoforte recital in Hosmer Hall last Friday afternoon.——Rev. Edward Judson, D. D., last Thursday afternoon, explained to the students the work of the Judson Memorial Church in New York city.——The first conference of the year between the students and the faculty was held last Wednesday evening. The subject of discussion was the Missionary Spirit.——The Annual Register of the seminary has just been published and may be obtained by applying to Professor Mitchell.

Yale.

Lectures were given last week on Missions by Rev. F. E. Haskins of the Presbyterian Board; on Lines of Development in Primitive Religions by Prof. D. G. Brinton of the University of Pennsylvania; on The Love and Study of Nature by Pres. G. S. Hall of Clark University, and on Waterloo by Prof. A. M. Wheeler.——The Senior address before the school was by Mr. C. P. Pierce on The Temptations and Dangers of a Minister's Life.——The lecture in the Leonard Bacon Club course was by Dr. Alexander McKenzie on The Minister Limited. The club had a debating contest Feb. 24, in which H. F. Rall and C. S. Macfarland were selected to represent the school in the university contest March 1.——Papers were read on Wednesday before the Senior Class on The Christian Teaching of Children by Messrs. Stimson and Wright.——The Senior Class in Sociology, accompanied by Professors Blackman, Stevens and Brastow, has just spent two days in New York visiting social settlements and various methods of relief work.

Oberlin.

Dr. Nehemiah Boynton has just delivered a series of lectures upon Preaching. They were heartily appreciated. He also gave the "Thursday Lecture" before the whole college on Browning.——Rev. William Knight recently addressed the students on the modern treatment of delinquents.——Prof. G. F. Wright is preaching a series of sermons Sunday evenings on The Evidences of Christianity.——Prof. E. I. Bosworth conducted Bible work at the Y. M. C. A. Convention at Springfield.

Chicago.

Mr. L. B. Sperry of Oberlin greatly instructed the students lately by three lectures on the Science and Art of Living.——The faculty will make a radical change in the graduating exercises this year, making them less academic and more of the nature of a consecration service. The graduates who are required to present theses involving protracted study and investigation hail the change with delight.——The faculty granted a petition of the students for Washington's Birthday as a holiday.——Professor Paeth of the German department will leave early in April for a summer at Greifswald and for a visitation of the Separatist (Congregational) churches in Pomerania.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS.

N. Y.—The Susquehanna Association held its semi-annual meeting at Owego Feb. 23, 24. The sermon was by Rev. A. S. Wood. The central theme was The Church, and the following aspects were considered: More Hearty Giving to Benevolent Societies, Danger of Over Organization, Popular Amusements, How to Reach Non-Church-Goers, Temptations of the Ministry, Pastoral Visitation, Hindrances to Young Men, Supremacy of Faith and Influence of Our Polity in Spirit of Our Churches. Secretaries Curtis and Duncan and W. L. DeGroff of the S. S. Union spoke on their respective causes.

Md.—Washington Conference of churches met with Second Church, Baltimore, Feb. 16. One new church has been admitted, the University Park of Washington, which expects to introduce institutional methods among the colored people. Reports from churches were encouraging, Frostburg reporting additions of 45 for the year. Conference adjourned in the afternoon to attend the funeral of Mrs. M. R. Hawley of Baltimore. Invitations to the conference were sent to the Christian and Disciple churches in the vicinity. Two ministers of the Methodist Protestant Church were also invited. Among the topics were: Our Six Societies, and Go and Give.

CLUBS.

Mass.—The Fall River Club held its fifth annual meeting Feb. 17. James F. Jackson, Esq., was chosen president. Ladies' night was observed. The Sabbath Question was discussed. Dr. W. W. Adams led the discussion.

The Connecticut Valley Club meeting in Springfield, Feb. 23, considered Mary Lyon and the Higher Education of Woman. Prof. H. E. Hooker of Mt. Holyoke, Prof. H. M. Tyler of Smith, Professor Stratton of Wellesley and Pres. C. D. Hartranft of Hartford Seminary were the chief speakers. J. E. Stevens, Esq., is the new president.

N. H.—The Central Club held a largely attended meeting at the Franklin Street Church, Feb. 17. The social festivities were especially enjoyable. An excellent dinner was served by the ladies of the church, to which ample justice was done. The address, by Rev. A. E. Dunning, D. D., on Bible Study in the Church, was practical and profitable and was heard with great interest. Good music was furnished by a ladies' quartet.

The annual meeting of the Pascataqua Club was held at the Agricultural College, Durham, Feb. 22, with a large attendance, 160 sitting down to dinner, provided by the Durham Grange. Albert Demerritt, Esq., gave an interesting sketch of the settlement and early history of the locality, and following him Prof. G. P. Moore, D. D., gave an instructive address on Recent Discoveries in Egypt and Rev. Cyrus Richardson, D. D., on British and American Culture. Rev. George Lewis, D. D., was elected president. Resolutions favoring the abolition of Fast Day in New Hampshire and ratification of the Arbitration Treaty with England were passed. Several new members elected made the total nearly 200.

Washington's Birthday was celebrated by the Ashuelot Club in Keene, Feb. 22. Pres. M. H. Buckham of Vermont University addressed the club on The Fathers and Their Children.

N. Y.—The Brooklyn Club observed a Washington's Birthday night at its February meeting. Elaborate decorations were an especial attraction. Gen. Wager Swayne, a veteran, and Rev. W. G. Puddefoot were the speakers.

O.—The Cleveland Club had a hearty welcome for Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, D. D., who was its guest and speaker at the February meeting. His theme was The Ministry of Today, and his earnest and strong setting forth of the need of intellectual, social and spiritual power was received with enthusiastic approval by laymen and ministers. Booker T. Washington and Rev. G. W. Moore were also guests, the former speaking briefly and eloquently upon the theme of the evening. Dr. Boynton and Mr. Washington both went the following day to Oberlin to lecture.

Mich.—The Eastern Club held a banquet at Detroit, Feb. 25. Addresses were given by prominent pastors of Detroit of different denominations on their respective topics: Why I am a Baptist, Congregationalist, Episcopalian, Methodist, Presbyterian, etc.

Minn.—The midwinter meeting of the Minnesota Club was held, Feb. 22, at Plymouth Church, St. Paul. The program, artistically executed in red, white and blue, comprised an evening of patriotism. Dr. E. P. Ingersoll spoke on The Washington Spirit, Prof. Maria L. Sanford gave an address on Washington not Merely a Steel Engraving. Rev. Messrs. W. H. Medlar, J. E. Smith, O. W. Waldron and G. R. Merrill, D. D., responded to toasts. Choice music was furnished by the quartet of Plymouth Church, Minneapolis. The attendance was large and the lessons from the meeting most instructive.

The tenth meeting of the Southern Minnesota Club was held at Northfield, Feb. 22, and celebrated Washington's Birthday. Hon. O. W. Shaw presented a paper on Washington as a Man, and Prof. J. J. Dow another on Washington as a Military Leader. Several new members were received and the outlook for the club is promising.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

[For other Boston news see page 313.]

Berkeley Temple. Last Sunday Mr. Francis Murphy closed his series of meetings with an afternoon and an evening service. Large audiences greeted him and he spoke with force. A number of converts responded to invitations to testify and as usual many signatures to the pledge were secured. At the close Mr. Murphy stated that he would be glad to come again. The first of April he begins a several weeks' series of meetings in Cambridgeport.

Mt. Vernon will hold Lenten services in the chapel every Friday night and on Sunday evenings. Topics for Sunday during March and April are: The Meaning of Lent, Be Clothed with Humility, Go Up Higher, Self Lost and Found, The Education of Responsibility, The Prospect of the Cross, The Retrospect of the Cross.

Old South. A course of Sunday evening lectures during Lent will be given by the pastor, Rev. Dr. G. A. Gordon, on Messages from the Cross. Sub-topics are: The Cry of Humanity, The Filial Spirit, The Divine Pity, The Great Assurance, The Moment of Despair, The Supreme Trust, The Eternal Victory.

DORCHESTER.—Pilgrim. Last Sunday evening a Mary Lyon anniversary service was held with a large attendance. Mrs. M. H. Hunt and others, alumnæ of Mt. Holyoke, spoke. An offering for the college was taken at the close.

An interesting set of figures, compiled by Rev. D. W. Waldron in connection with his city missionary work, shows that the additions on confession to Boston Congregational churches for 1891–96 aggregate 2,573, of whom 378 came from missionary families.

How closely connected are the young people's societies and the Sunday schools was suggested at the Superintendents' Union last Monday night, when the services of the general secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Mr. J. W. Baer, were solicited to lead the thought of the union as to How Spiritual Life in the Sunday School Can Be Quickened and Deepened. The first condition noted by the speaker as a primary necessity was the indwelling of the Spirit in the teachers to be sought through thorough cleansing of their hearts. Consecration was the second step which followed naturally. With these two conditions of preparation effected the spiritual life would be stimulated and imparted to others. At the close of Mr. Baer's remarks Dr. Thomas Sims of Toronto spoke briefly.

Massachusetts.

BROOKLINE.—Leyden. A delightful proof of the interest in this young church which its neighbors feel was given last Friday evening when a delegation of 11 from Rev. E. M. Noyes's church at Newton Center presented themselves at the prayer meeting. A season of Christian fellowship was enjoyed and the ties of brotherhood were greatly cemented.

HYDE PARK.—Rev. A. W. Archibald, D. D., has been unanimously requested to withdraw his resignation. Last Sunday at the close of the morning service one of the deacons presented resolutions with that end in view, the whole congregation rising to vote for them. The final decision has not yet been given by the pastor.

LOWELL.—First Trinitarian. The pastor's Bible class held its 11th annual banquet on Thursday evening last, when interesting and congratulatory addresses were given by neighboring pastors and by the local representatives in the legislature. The class numbers 223 and has an average attendance considerably above 100. It especially desires to know of any other Sunday school class of equal membership and attendance.——Mr. Francis Murphy begins a gospel temperance campaign in this city March 14. Rev. G. H. Johnson is chairman of the committee of arrangements.

HOLBROOK.—The will of the late Sarah Holbrook of this place contains these bequests: To the A. B. C. F. M., the C. H. M. S., the C. C. B. S. and the A. M. A. $10,000 each; to the Woman's Board, the Education Society, the W. H. M. A. $5,000 each; to the Ministerial Aid $2,000, to the Boston Seamen's Friend Society $1,000 and to Wellesley College for a scholarship $3,000.

BARRE.—All departments are prospering with an unusual degree of interest during the fall and winter. The present membership is 164, including nine additions in 1896, and six in January. The benevolences last year amounted to $1,029. Rev. J. F. Gaylord is the pastor.

PITTSFIELD.—The late Miss Sarah Martin left to the C. H. M. S. $5,000, to the A. B. C. F. M. $2,000, to Hampton Institute $2,000 besides other bequests.

Maine.

AUBURN.—A delightful occasion was the recent meeting of the Maine Ministers' Association at High Street Church. About 150 clergymen from all parts of the State were present, the traveling expenses being assessed pro rata upon all. The afternoon was spent in a review and discussion of nine books bearing on the new theology. A banquet was served by the ladies of Elm Street Church, at which President Hyde presided, and short speeches were made by many present. In the evening Dr. G. W. Field gave a masterly address on The Desirableness and Reasonableness of the New Method of Interpreting the Old Testament

MADISON.—The golden wedding of Rev. and Mrs. T. G. Mitchell was observed last month by a large gathering of relatives and friends. All the living children were present. Mr. Mitchell is the only Congregational minister in Maine today who was here in 1851, the year he came to Madison. He preached here 34 years, being at that time the only minister above Skowhegan. Numerous and valuable gifts, several original poems and many letters were received.

GARLAND held a recent entertainment and church social in the Town Hall, a large number being present and a good sum of money being voluntarily contributed toward the current expenses of the church. The Sunday evening services are well attended and considerable interest is manifested. Under the auspices of the C. E. Society preaching services are held at West Garland Sunday afternoons.

MUSCONGUS ISLAND.—A church of 12 members was formed here, which is the outgrowth of the work of Captain Allen, the coast missionary. Rev. Francis Southworth spent a week assisting, and the church is to be a branch of the Bethel, Portland, of which he is pastor. The membership will soon be increased.

EAST MACHIAS.—Every Thursday evening the vestry is converted into a reading-room for the boys and young men, and special efforts are much appreciated. A Shakespere Club has also been formed for study.

BANGOR.—The Gale meetings held in City Hall are thronged at every service and many have signed cards, while a good number have made a decision for Christ.

The statistics for 1896 show 245 churches, three new ones having been added and none dropped; 195 ministers, 43 not in the pastorate; church membership 21,647, a net gain of 104; additions 1,132, 760 on confession; removals 909; benevolences $76,452, an increase of $5,058. Home expenditures show an increase of $19,000, covered by the large amount expended by the St. Lawrence Church, Portland, in connection with the new building.——The Little Deer Isle new meeting house was first used for worship Feb. 4, but will not be dedicated till June.

New Hampshire.

LITTLETON.—A series of union services continuing five weeks under the lead of the pastors has resulted in the awakened interest of many, and nearly all heads of families, with a large proportion of men. The men's gathering Sunday afternoons has been a marked feature, and the harmony of coöperation has been conspicuous. By the exertions of the Ladies' Aid Society $675 have been secured and applied towards the extinguishment of the parsonage debt.

LISBON.—Neighborhood prayer meetings at three different localities in the village are sustained by the Young Men's League on Friday evening in addition to their meeting Thursday evening. Rev. Ralph Gillam, with his singer, spent a recent Saturday and Sunday here, holding interesting and profitable services resulting in a manifestation on the part of a few of a desire to begin a new life.

EAST BARRINGTON.—Misses Moody and Williams, Christian workers, are conducting a series of revival meetings at Green Hill. A movement is started to secure funds for a chapel. The pastor, Rev. Daniel McIntyre, holds a well-attended preaching service Sunday afternoons in Grange Hall. Attendance at church and Sunday school has been large.

BARTLETT.—Rev. J. R. Horne, Jr., has made a new departure. He is accustomed to visit a single house previously designated, having asked the occupant to invite his neighbors to be present and thus meet the pastor. On such occasions after a familiar talk on some religious truth a season of prayer is held. Experiment shows good results.

TAMWORTH.—Deacon Faxon has recently died at the ripe age of 87, followed a few hours later by his wife, aged 89, after a married life of 64 years. The time of his election as deacon is not remembered. He also served as superintendent of the Sunday school nearly 25 years.

FRANKLIN.—The annual report of work for the past year has been encouraging. Union meetings with the Christian Church have awakened much interest. The choir has been furnished by the ladies with new oak chairs.

HANCOCK.—The first roll-call of the church was held this year and was well attended. The total membership is 113. Benevolent contributions the past year were $100, and the parsonage buildings have been painted MERRIMACK receives a legacy of $500 from the estate of the late Jane Kittredge, the income of which is to go for the support of preaching.

Vermont.

MONTGOMERY CENTER.—Miss M. A. Brokaw and Miss M. L. Barbour have worked here, assisting the pastor with encouraging results since the Week of Prayer. The former has now gone to Weathersfield to remain until the coming of the summer supply, and Miss Barbour, after aiding the pastor of East Fairfield in special services for a week, goes to Weston.

WATERFORD.—Mrs. C. R. Landon, who has been working here since the organization of the church last fall, is seriously ill, and the pulpit has been supplied by neighboring pastors.

ST. JOHNSBURY.—South. A chorus of young people has been trained for the Sunday evening service.——North. Gen. O. O. Howard recently spoke at a union service.

The Ladies' Society in Brandon cleared $60 recently by an entertainment in the Town Hall.

Rhode Island.

WESTERLY feels the financial stress in the loss of some investments and the lack of employment for many of its supporters. Large congregations are the rule and the interest does not flag. A flourishing lyceum league of young men is a feature. A union of the churches for revival services is in prospect. Rev. E. L. Warren is pastor.

PROVIDENCE.—Pilgrim. Fifty fragment jugs have yielded as savings for missions $90 for the Ladies' Home and Foreign Missionary Societies.——Elmwood Temple. The pastor, Rev. E. T. Root, is preaching a series of evening sermons on The Modern Theophany.

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—United. Dr. Newman Smyth addressed a large good citizenship meeting on the evening of Washington's Birthday. A recent Sunday morning offering for the C. H. M. S. amounted to $475. The Men's Club service was addressed Feb. 21 by Mr. S. S. Greene of Worcester on What May a Public Library Do for a City? and on Feb. 28 by Dr. Alexander McKenzie in behalf of the work for the seamen.——Dixwell Avenue. The recent dissensions in this colored church are being rapidly removed under the faithful ministry of Rev. T. N.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Baker of Yale Divinity School. He was ordained Feb. 23. He is a graduate of Mt. Hermon School, Boston University and Yale Divinity School. His first schooling was at Hampton under General Armstrong.——Redeemer. An enjoyable reception to the pastor, Rev. W. L. Phillips, and his assistant, Rev. Mr. Peabody, was held under the auspices of the young people's societies, over 1,000 persons calling to extend their congratulations on the progress of the church work.——Ferry Street, which has had rather a trying existence of late, has been reorganized under the direction of Mr. William Dixon, who has been licensed by the local association to preach and engaged by the church as pastor for six months.

TORRINGTON.—The French Protestants, numbering 60 families, all but four of whom are French Swiss, have been holding meetings Sunday afternoons in the Third Church, and have called Rev. Joseph Provost of the French Church, Springfield, Mass., to become their pastor. He has begun work. The C. H. M. S. of Connecticut appropriates $500 towards his support and $100 more a year for outside missionary work among his people throughout the State. He will be permitted to solicit $200 in contributions; the new church will provide $400 a year and the Congregational church gives $100 in order to complete his salary. Mr. Provost is highly educated and a hard worker. During his stay at Springfield a new meeting house was built.

HARTFORD.—A meeting of the delegates appointed by the churches of the city to consider the feasibility of forming a Hartford Congregational Union was held last week in Memorial Hall. After discussing the recently adopted preamble and resolutions of the City Missionary Society, it was deemed unwise to proceed further with the formation of the proposed union. A resolution recommending the city society to the sympathy and support of the local Congregational churches was adopted.

WEST WOODSTOCK.—Second. The Sunday school and C. E. Societies have undergone a remarkable increase since Jan. 1. The attendance at public worship has averaged larger than for many winters past. An increase in membership is due to the activity of the Christian Workers who visited here some time ago, and the spiritual life of the church has not been so high for a decade and a half.

COLUMBIA.—Rev. J. P. Harvey presented a handsome clock purchased by about 70 persons residing in the center of the town to Deacon E. P. Lyman recently, for his efficient service in breaking out paths in snowstorms, so the people could get to church. A band was also in attendance and assisted in surprising the deacon and making this novel occasion noteworthy.

CANAAN.—Rev. C. W. Hanna has conducted a series of evangelistic services in the Waungam School district with great success, 18 converts being reported. A small Sunday school has been organized that is faithfully attended by all its members. As a result of the labors 18 persons will join the church in South Canaan, and five will join at Falls Village.

NEW LONDON.—First. The men gave a supper last week Thursday evening, the proceeds going towards equipping the meeting house with electric lights. Everything was cooked in chafing dishes, and some of the men proved themselves experts.

Pomfret has been holding special evening services under the direction of Rev. W. B. Greene, assisted by neighboring pastors.——The Martha Washington reception and loan exhibition in First Church, East Hartford, was instructive from a historical point of view and netted $107.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

BROOKLYN.—The annual meeting of the Brooklyn auxiliaries of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions met, Feb. 24, in the Lee Avenue Church. The attendance was large, and the programs for morning and afternoon most interesting. Mrs. J. B. Clark, wife of the pastor, delivered the address of welcome. The two-minute reports from the 20 auxiliaries were inspiring in their account of work, and the addresses of missionaries from the field stirred the hearts of the hearers to greater devotion. The noon intermission was made a social affair. Visitors from a distance brought their own luncheon, and hot tea and coffee were served by the ladies of the church. Rev. J. B. Clark, the pastor, who is still in California, has now entirely recovered from his accident, and will be in his pulpit again the first Sunday in April.

WATERTOWN, Rev. S. G. Heckman, pastor, is making rapid advances, it having reached the second place in membership in its association. It is thoroughly organized for efficient work. The King's Daughters make garments for the needy ones in the South, a home department is vigorously pushed by the senior deacon, the musical members of the congregation are formed into a class and employ a trained teacher. This has greatly elevated the service of song in all departments. A young men's orchestra has been formed for the Sunday school. The church is illustrating, in an unusual degree, the principle to every man his work, and the center of all is an earnest spiritual life.

NEWBURG is drawing to the end of the first year of Rev. E. F. Neilson's pastorate, and it has been one of unusual success. A gain of 53 members, an estimated gain of 65 in morning and 125 in the evening Sunday services and 70 in prayer meeting attendance constitutes an encouraging record. A floating indebtedness of $500 has been reduced to less than $100. A general demand for Bible study on the part of the people has been met by the organization of a class for men by the pastor, for young ladies by the pastor's wife, for women by a lady of the congregation, and for Endeavorers by one of the deacons.

NEW YORK.—The yearly statistics of forty-three churches of the Manhattan-Brooklyn Conference have been recorded by Rev. E. H. Byington as follows: membership, 16,895; additions, 1,323; on confession, 596; S. S. enrollment, 24,014; average attendance, 14,933; C. E. members, 2,740; total benevolences, $152,685; expenses, $325,217.

CAMDEN, Rev. Edward Evans, pastor, is united and enthusiastic. An effort to raise a $500 debt has been specially successful; an absent member appealed to sent his check for $200. The pastor is giving a series of addresses Sunday evenings on familiar proverbs.

CLAYTON, Rev. William Excell, pastor, is encouraged by the results of a month's special meetings, nearly 20 persons, some of them heads of families, having declared for Christ.

PERRY CENTER is regretful at the loss of the pastor, Rev. J. J. Shingler, who goes to Columbus, O. The church has been specially prosperous under his ministry.

New Jersey.

NEWARK.—First. Prayer meetings have improved greatly of late. Congregations have increased somewhat and have changed markedly. The pews have rented unusually well. A paid quartet is a new feature this year. The Ladies' Missionary Society has been reorganized, and now instead of a handful numbers from 75 to 100. It meets fortnightly.

EAST ORANGE.—Swedish. After a successful pastorate of four years, during which a new house of worship has been built and many received into the church, the pastor, Rev. A. P. Nelson, has gone to the Swedish church of Lowell, Mass. The church is at present straightened in resources but is otherwise doing well.

CHATHAM.—The Ladies' Society has just been favored with a lecture on Constantinople by Rev. C. A. S. Dwight, for seven years a missionary there. A union meeting in the interests of the Armenian orphans has been arranged, to be addressed by Dr. W. A. Farnsworth, late of Cæsarea.

ASBURY PARK.—This church, not yet a year old, has received from six to 11 members at every communion service. Its membership is now 171.

THE SOUTH.

Maryland.

BALTIMORE.—First suffers severe loss in the death of Mrs. M. R. Hawley, who was prominent in all benevolent work, vice-president of the Y. W. C. A. of the city and a liberal giver to home missions. She built the church at Monterey, Pa., helped support it, and completed arrangements with the H. M. S. whereby the society agrees to continue supporting the church for 10 years. Among her public bequests are: $6,000 to the Y. W. C. A., $2,000 to the Y. M. C. A., $3,000 each to the Philadelphia

Continued on page 319.

March

April, May are the months in which to purify the blood, for at no other season is the body so susceptible to benefit from medicine. The peculiar purifying and reviving qualities of Hood's Sarsaparilla are just what is needed to expel disease and fortify the system against the debilitating effects of mild weather. The blood at this season is loaded with impurities which are promptly and thoroughly removed by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and strength, health, vigor and vitality succeed to weakness, debility, and that tired feeling. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures, when in the power of medicine, scrofula, salt rheum, sores, boils, pimples, all humors, dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, indigestion, general debility, catarrh, rheumatism, kidney and liver complaints, and all diseases arising from or promoted by impure blood.

April

May

HOOD'S

Sarsaparilla

Is the One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1.

Hood's Pills the best family cathartic and liver stimulant. 25 cents.

A STEADY DROP.

In 1892, $35; in 1893, $28; in 1894, $24.

TODAY $20.

This is the history of the price movement all along the line since 1888. Furniture has gone so low in price that where we sold one piece in 1888 we are selling four pieces today.

Look at the value, for example, in this Sideboard at $20, not forgetting that it is fine cabinet work throughout and very different from the cheap bargain furniture sold wholly on its price.

This board stands 76 inches in hight and is of solid White Oak. It has all the outfit of the most expensive patterns. There is a broad top shelf and side shelves for a pitcher, with glasses, a coffee urn, a chocolate mug or a caraffe. The mirror is beveled French plate. There is a lined partitioned silver drawer. The closet has shelves and every drawer is dust proof. Separate locks; polished brass mountings; extra stout castors; hand-carved panels and gallery. And the price is only $20

General Catalogue for 1897. Square octavo, 256 pp., 300 illustrations. Sent to any address on receipt of five 2-cent stamps for postage.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,

48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

While merchandise moves slowly, it cannot be denied that the tone of business has perceptibly improved during the past week. This is to be seen in several different directions. Prices of many staples are stronger and show advancing tendencies; the iron and steel trades are becoming healthier, and the woolen industry is quite active, manufacturers buying heavily of raw wool in anticipation of a duty being placed on the latter. Even the cotton goods market presents a little more encouraging aspect.

Owing to the enormous orders for steel rails placed on the break in the schedule price about a month ago, the mills have work which will keep them busy for months to come. It is estimated that the orders for steel rails and the work of laying them will mean the putting into circulation of $35,000,000. The demand for Bessemer pig iron is brisk, in excess of the production, in fact.

A notable feature of the general situation has been the decline in the price of wheat. The last year's crop was evidently larger than is allowed in the Government report. Furthermore, there is no longer a powerful bull pool in wheat in Chicago, as there was some months ago. That pool long ago converted paper profits into cash. It looks as though dollar wheat was more remote than some of the enthusiasts thought when prices were advancing so rapidly.

Leather and shoes are in more inquiry and prices are firmer. Of course, as the building season approaches, there will be a sharper movement in lumber and in building materials generally. One of the most encouraging factors of the whole situation is the steady improvement in railroad earnings. This is substantial proof that the movement of merchandise is growing larger. In the stock market there is also a better feeling and speculation is daily growing broader.

A THOROUGHLY ATTRACTIVE CALIFORNIA TOUR.—There are many persons who would like to see California in the early spring, and at the same time who wish to escape the trying climate of the East at that season of the year, who have not the time to spare for a protracted trip. It is just this class who will be especially interested in Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb's latest announcement of a forty-days' tour to the Pacific Coast wholly under personal escort. The party will leave Boston March 15, and visit all the important resorts in California, from San Diego and Coronado Beach to Monterey and San Francisco. Everything will be carried out in the best manner, and the sight-seeing facilities will be unequaled. Nevertheless, no time will be wasted, so that the business man can accomplish the whole delightful journey, as already said, in forty days. It is an exceptional opportunity to see the marvels of the continent. A circular giving the full itinerary will gladly be sent by mail. Address Raymond & Whitcomb, 296 Washington Street, opposite School Street, Boston.

Styles correct,
Prices right!
Only four words but what a world of meaning!

Macullar Parker Company,
Clothiers and Outfitters for
Men, Youths and Boys.

400 Washington St., Boston.
166 Westminster Street,
Providence.

51st
Annual Statement
of the
CONNECTICUT MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.,
Of Hartford, Conn.

NET ASSETS, January 1, 1896,		$60,764,020.64
RECEIVED IN 1896.
For Premiums, . . .	$4,743,236.75
For Interest and Rents,	3,139,405.22
Profit and Loss, ...	50,140.75
		$7.932,782.72
		$68,696,803.36

DISBURSED IN 1896.

For claims by death and matured endowments, . .	$4,508,018.25
Surplus returned to policy-holders,	1,274,658.62
Lapsed and Surrendered Policies,	759,247 93
TOTAL TO POLICY-HOLDERS,	$6,541,924.80
Commissions to Agents, Salaries, Medical Examiners' fees, Printing, Advertising, Legal, Real Estate, and all other Expenses, ...	836,715.97
TAXES, ...	336,490.98
		$7,715,131.75
BALANCE NET ASSETS, Dec. 31, 1896,		$60,981,671.61

SCHEDULE OF ASSETS.

Loans upon Real Estate, first lien, . .		$35,722,498 00
Loans upon Stocks and Bonds, . . .		12,300.00
Premium Notes on Policies in force, .		1,065,427 28
Cost of Real Estate owned by the Comp'y,		8,788,184.43
Cost of United States and other Bonds,		13,606,034.97
Cost of Bank and Railroad Stocks, . .		389,954.00
Cash in Banks, ...		1,392,194.53
Bills receivable, ...		4,141.86
Agents' Ledger Balances, ...		936 54
		$60,981,671.61
ADD
Interest due and accrued,	$1,078,701.64
Rents due and accrued,	39,763 69
Market value of stocks and bonds over cost,	499,278.03
Net deferred premiums,	274,266.70
Net uncollected premiums,	78,667.21
		$1,970,677.27
GROSS ASSETS, December 31, 1896,		$62,952,348.88
LIABILITIES:
Amount required to reinsure all outstanding Policies, net, Company's standard, ...	$54,659,748 00
All other liabilities, . .	1,139,303.84
		$55,799,051 84
SURPLUS, ...		$7,153,297.04

Ratio of expenses of management to receipts in 1896, ...	10.55 per cent.
Policies in force Dec. 31, 1896, 66,441 Insuring, ...	$157,422,626.00

JACOB L. GREENE, President.
JOHN M. TAYLOR, Vice-Prest.
EDWARD M. BUNCE, Secretary.
DANIEL H. WELLS, Actuary.

GEORGE E. WILLIAMS, General Agent,
53 Devonshire Street,
BOSTON, MASS.

Financial.

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York.
Mutual Life Building,
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.
CAPITAL, - - - - - $2,000,000
SURPLUS, - - - - - $2,000.000
ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.
INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS
subject to check or on certificate.
WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY; Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.
DIRECTORS.
Samuel D. Babcock,
George F. Baker,
George S. Bowdoin,
August Belmont,
Frederic Cromwell,
Walter R Gillette,
Robert Goelet,
G. G. Haven,
Oliver Harriman,
R. Somers Hayes,
Charles R. Henderson,
Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
Augustus D. Juilliard,
James N. Jarvie,
Richard A. McCurdy,
Alexander E. Orr,
Walter G. Oakman,
Henry H. Rogers,
H. McK. Twombly,
Frederick W. Vanderbilt,
William C. Whitney.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE: NO. 119 BROADWAY.

Eighty-Seventh Semi-Annual Statement, Jan., 1897.

SUMMARY OF ASSETS.

Cash in Banks	$306,032.86
Real Estate	1,748,857.41
United States Stocks	1,497,762.50
State Bonds	25,000.00
City Bonds	821,974.81
Rail Road Bonds	1,624,495.00
Water Bonds	83,500.00
Gas Stocks and Bonds	115,925.00
Rail Road Stocks	2,476,595.00
Bank Stocks	311,500.00
Trust Co. Stocks	85,150.00
Bonds and Mortgages, being 1st lien on Real Estate	423,786.71
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	183,100.00
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	602,866.76
Interest due and accrued on 1st January, 1897,	55,678.34
	$10,362,224.39

LIABILITIES.

Cash Capital	$3,000,000.00
Reserve Premium Fund	4,280,827.00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims,	735,128.68
Net Surplus	2,346,268.71
	$10,362,224.39

D. A. HEALD, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, E. G. SNOW, } Vice-Presidents.
W. L. BIGELOW, T. B. GREENE, } Secretaries.
H. J. FERRIS, A. M. BURTIS, Ass't Secretaries.
NEW YORK, January 12, 1897.

Constantly increasing sales of
CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES
show that they are becoming more popular amongst Travelers and Remitters. Send for circular, which tells why they are better than Letters of Credit, to Agency of the U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
Frederick W. Perry, Manager,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

8% Municipal Warrants Safe as bonds and pay much better. Write for details. ROBT. E. STRAHORN & Co., Equitable Building, Boston.

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES. North Adams Training School for Nurses. An opportunity for excellent training is offered by the North Adams Training School for Nurses. Apply to Mrs. John Bracewell, North Adams, Mass.

Religious Notices.

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON.

Continued from page 317.

branch of the Woman's Board and the W. H. M. U. of New Jersey and to the trustees of First Church, $7,000 for the support of Hawley Memorial Chapel, $2,000 for the use of Second Church and $5,000 for the use of First Church. The A. B. C. F. M. also receives $25,000, and after other gifts the residue will be divided equally between the C. H. M. S., the A. M. A., the C. C. B. S. and Colorado College.

Tennessee.

DEER LODGE.—Special services have been blessed with the hopeful conversion of nine persons, and others made their first public confession. The pastor, Rev. George Lusty, had the great joy of receiving 12 persons into the church on confession. The church has now a membership of 59 and is one of the most active churches in the mountains of Tennessee.

Florida.

NEW SMYRNA.—Owing to a needed change of climate for his wife, Rev. A. T. Fuller has resigned, to take effect April 1. He has justly won the esteem of the community. The C. E. Society and Sunday school are flourishing.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

CLEVELAND.—Euclid Avenue voted recently to accept the resignation of Rev. H. M. Ladd, D. D., to take effect at his request March 1. The church also voted that full salary and use of parsonage should continue till May 1, and made also a gift of $500.——Rev. G. W. Moore and the jubilee quartet of singers have been at the Pilgrim, First, Euclid Avenue and other churches. Sec. W. F. McMillen and Mrs. Bryner are also visiting the churches in this vicinity. Mrs. Bryner's rare ability as a teacher and her earnestness and spiritual power as a speaker have made a deep impression. The Sunday School Society renders a valuable service to the schools and churches by sending her to awaken an interest in the work of the home missionary societies.——Olivet is supplied for the present by Mr. F. Williams, a member of Union Church, formerly a Methodist local preacher.——The visit of Rev. G. W. Moore and the singers not only brought money to the treasury of the A. M. A., but excited a distinctly spiritual and evangelistic influence in the churches which were fortunate enough to hear them. Over 2,000 persons heard them at Pilgrim Church on a Sunday evening, and in the evangelistic after meeting all the singers told briefly the story of their own conversion.

MANSFIELD.—Mayflower has just passed through a refreshing season. Beginning with the Week of Prayer meetings were held for five weeks, and in February as a result 21 persons were received into membership. Of this number 10 were men and 10 were wives. The meetings were conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. H. Edmonds, with two weeks of assistance by Rev. Albert Bowers of Ruggles. In the past year, notwithstanding the hard times, this church raised more money for home expenses and benevolence than in any previous year.

ELYRIA.—Rev. W. E. Cadmus, formerly of Hingham, Mass., began work the middle of last month. The church is the strongest in this growing city of 10,000 inhabitants and is one of the strong churches in the State outside the large cities. It is unanimous and enthusiastic in support of Mr. Cadmus. Its previous pastor, Rev. E. E. Williams, was greatly beloved as pastor for 24 years.

AURORA has just closed two weeks of meetings, L. S. Chafer and wife assisting the pastor, Rev. F. O. Eggleston, in singing, visitation and conference. Bible readings and prayer service were also held each afternoon. The efforts proved a blessing to the whole community. The end is not yet, for a new spirit of prayer is present.

WAKEMAN is united under the energetic ministry of Rev. Jesse Hill. At present he is delivering a series of sermons to young men. The congregations are large, the prayer meeting room is always filled and the church was never in a better spiritual, financial and social condition.

Illinois.

[For other Chicago news see page 302.]

MOUND CITY.—Remarkable gospel meetings are in progress, the Congregational and Methodist forces uniting in a special effort led by Ben Deering. The entire community is stirred. In this town of about 3,000 population saloons are abundant, but are losing many of their old patrons and the churches are receiving additions. The Congregational church has, at present, no pastor. A neighboring minister, Rev. R. W. Purdue, aided the church, Feb. 21, in receiving into its fellowship 50 persons on confession.

CHICAGO.—Pilgrim. Feb. 22 a Washington banquet was held, at which over 500 sat at the tables. The pastor, Dr. G. R Wallace, presided, and responses to toasts were given by one judge, four professors, two lawyers, one military officer, one author and one editor, all but one of the speakers being members of the church. The evening congregations in this church have become so large that it is with great difficulty the people are seated at many of the services.

ALBION.—First. State Evangelist C. F. Van Auken aided Rev. E. E. Shoemaker, the pastor, for two weeks in special meetings. A good work closed

Continued on page 320.

Advance Styles in SPRING
MILLINERY

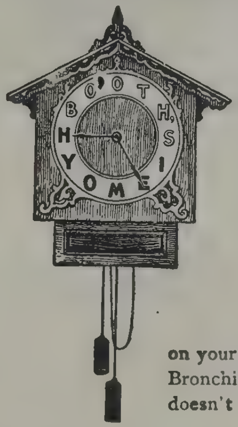
Our head Milliner has just returned from Paris, and we are now prepared to show you advance styles in Spring Millinery. Here are some charming Trimmed Hats for early Spring wear. Come, if only to look.

Ladies' and Misses' Straw Hats.

All the newest styles in untrimmed Straw Hats for Ladies and Misses are being gathered here as fast as they're put forth by the makers.

The best in Millinery at moderate cost.

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.



B O O T H S
H Y O M E I

At twenty-five minutes after nine in the morning, begin with Booth's Hyomei, the Australian "Dry Air" treatment. Use the inhaler every hour until bed time, then put a few drops of

"Hyomei"

on your pillow. If one day's treatment doesn't relieve your Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh or Cold, and if continued use doesn't cure, read the guarantee below. Booth's Hyomei
"CURES BY INHALATION."

PENNSYLVANIA COMPANY—WESTERN DIVISION,
Office of the Superintendent,
C. D. LAW, Supt. FORT WAYNE, IND., Nov. 3, 1896.

DEAR SIR:—In March last I was suffering from a severe catarrhal cold. My right ear was almost totally deaf, and the ringing in it was exceedingly annoying. I purchased an outfit and commenced its use, continuing through the day as I would have opportunity. About 5 p. m. the congestion in the eustachian tube disappeared, my hearing was fully restored, and I have since had no recurrence. Since then I have, on several occasions, checked and cured bronchial colds, and I have no hesitancy in recommending it. Very truly yours, C. D. LAW.

Guarantee. I will refund the money to all persons purchasing Booth's Pocket Inhaler Outfit anywhere in the United States, during 1897, who will say that HYOMEI has done them no good, on condition that they apply direct to the head office, 23 East 20th Street, New York City. (Signed) R. T. Booth

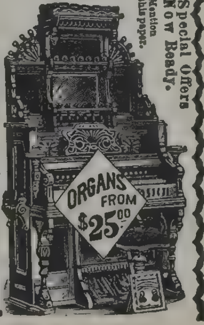
Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs which cause disease in the respiratory organs. The air, charged with Hyomei, is inhaled at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air-cells, is exhaled slowly through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief. It is highly recommended by physicians, clergymen, and thousands who have been helped and cured.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit Complete, by Mail, $1; (for foreign countries add $1.00 postage): outfit consists of pocket inhaler, a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper and directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send your address; my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei cures. Are you open to conviction? Extra bottles of Hyomei Inhalant by mail, or at druggists, 50 cents. Hyomei Balm for all skin diseases, by mail, 25 cents. Your druggist has Hyomei or can get it for you if you insist. Don't accept a substitute. In stock at the leading wholesale drug houses of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and all leading business centers

London Office:
11 Farringdon Ave. E. C.

R. T. BOOTH CO., 23 East 20th St., New York.

E. E. B. GIBSON, Gen. Agt., 131 Tremont St. (Room 52), Boston.



SAVE MONEY. FREE! FREE! Send for our new 1897 Catalogue, illustrated in colors, containing full descriptions of all our Pianos and Organs. REMEMBER we are the only firm of actual manufacturers selling exclusively to the general public direct, at factory cost—the only firm where you get the Real Exact Value for your money. There are no Agents', Dealers' or Middlemen's profits added. ☞ CASH or on EASY PAYMENTS, ☜ to suit your circumstances. Pianos and Organs shipped on thirty days' trial in your own home under our special warrant for twenty-five years. No money required in advance. Safe delivery to purchaser guaranteed.

FACTORY TO FAMILY DIRECT NO OTHER WAY

REFERENCES:—Our bank, your bank, any bank, the editor of this paper, or any of the multitude of patrons who have purchased millions of dollars worth of instruments from us during the past 35 years. Our new book "The Heart of the People," containing a thousand recent references, sent free. Don't fail to write at once to

TERMS: No Satisfaction, No Pay.

NOTE.—As an advertisement we will sell to the first purchaser in a place one of our fine PIANOS, specially fitted and finished for only $160, or one of our latest PARLOR ORGANS for $25. ALL EXTRAS for each instrument FREE.

ESTABLISHED 35 YEARS.

CORNISH & CO., Piano and Organ Makers. Washington, N. J.

Special Offers Now Ready. Mention this paper.

Continued from page 319.

Feb. 14, when 13 adults united with the church. It is expected that as many more will be received. At the closing service Sunday evening the room was crowded and half as many stood outside.

BEECHWOOD, Rev. C. D. Borton, pastor, has received the gift of a lot from the Illinois Central Railroad Co., on which to erect a house of worship. This will cheer the little band and with the help of the Building Society it will now be able to have a meeting house of its own.

CLIFTON AND ASHKUM.—Rev. Howell Davies has supplied these churches with much acceptance for a few weeks. In the latter place he held meetings daily, and as a result 10 persons united with the church.

Indiana.

TERRE HAUTE.—Second. A recent day of unusual interest was when 23 persons united with the church as the first fruits of the season of special religious interest which began with the Week of Prayer. The church occupies a field in the eastern section of the city, a mile distant from First Church. It originated in a Sunday school jointly conducted under the care of the C. H. M. S. and the First Church. Its convenient and tasteful edifice is now thronged with worshipers and the outlook is hopeful. Dr. W. F. Harding is pastor.——First, Rev. C. H. Percival, pastor, has its work well in hand. The pastor and his wife have been received with enthusiasm, and large numbers attend their weekly "at home" receptions. The evening congregations have largely increased and special interest is manifested in the S. S. and C. E. work. Several of the best workers are engaged in the Light House Mission in the river district.

INDIANAPOLIS.—Plymouth observed Feb. 21 as an anniversary of Washington. Lessons in civics were given by the pastor, Rev. F. E. Dewhurst, morning and evening and there was an elaborate stereopticon service under the McCulloch Club. In the afternoon the pastor addressed the Progress Working Men's Club of the city on Washington. The recent efforts of this church and of the ably officered McCulloch Club to excite popular interest and strike telling blows for municipal righteousness have been timely, discreet, educational in type, eminently successful.

Michigan.

DETROIT.—Old First has suffered a severe loss in the death of Dr. W. R. Scurr, a much esteemed member. He had the largest practice of any physician in Detroit among the poor, to whom he was a sincere friend and helper. He was an ordained pastor of one or two Michigan churches before he studied medicine. He died of acute tuberculosis, contracted while attending a colored patient, and was 40 years of age. The worthy janitor also expired suddenly while attending to his duties last week.

SAINT JOHNS.—Dr. H. E. Butler, pastor here for three years, has resigned. This period has been fruitful, 110 new members having been added, a net gain of 72. Over 70 members of the Sunday school have signed cards this winter expressing their desire to become Christians. The C. E. membership has increased from 64 to 85 the past year.

STANTON.—Last month an interesting service was held, celebrating the ten years' continuous pastorate of Rev. W. C. Burns. Many pastors and friends spoke or sent congratulatory messages; and the pastor spoke a few appropriate words.

GRAND RAPIDS.—Barker Memorial. As the result of services held by Evangelist Joel Martin 12 new members have been received, 10 on confession. Mr. Martin is now holding meetings in the Second Church.

FENWICK.—Union meetings of the Methodist and Congregational churches, led by the two pastors, have had full houses and deep interest.

Statistics of Michigan churches for 1896 show: members, 31,622, a gain of 1,022; additions, 3,446; Sunday school enrollment, 39,478, a gain of 590; benevolences, $61,727, a decrease of $8,017. There are 347 churches, a gain of four. These churches have received over 50 members each: Port Huron, First, 105; Detroit, First, 99; Calumet, 94; Port Huron, Ross, 85; Hancock, 68; Grand Rapids, First, 65; Detroit, Brewster, 62; Constantine, 64; Greenville, 58, Saginaw, 56; Benton Harbor 55; Wolverine 55.

Wisconsin.

NECEDAH is greatly blessed in the service of Rev. Jesse Sarles, who came here last summer, expecting to return to complete his course at Yale Divinity School. But he was prevailed upon to remain for a year. He married and took possession of a furnished house for the season. Sec. H. W. Carter

Continued on page 321.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN	Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS	Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK	Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR	Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC	New York.
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN	Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER	St. Louis.
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY	Cleveland.
SALEM	Salem, Mass.
CORNELL	Buffalo.
KENTUCKY	Louisville.

DON'T be penny wise and pound foolish by buying the "just-as-good mixtures," "so called White Lead," or other substitutes for Pure White Lead.

In painting, the cost of labor so far exceeds the cost of material that the best only should be used. The best is Pure White Lead (see list of brands which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

What Doctors Say About Wearing Rubbers

A famous New York doctor, Dr. W. C. Phillips, was lecturing on health. It was a bad night, and he began "How many of you wore rubbers to-night? Hands up. Not half of you. I thought so. Every one of you should have rubbers on a night like this. To go without them, is to invite colds, bronchial trouble, catarrh, or pneumonia."

And every doctor says the same—"wear rubbers."

"CANDEE" RUBBERS

are made by the oldest rubber makers in the world. Every style — Boots, Shoes, Arctics, Gaiters, but only one quality—unvaryingly the first.

If you want the best of rubbers.
Get the rubbers stamped "Candee"
Any shoe store.

A Little Light
Shed about Beautiful FLOWERS FROM SEEDS BY THE Pioneer SEEDSWOMAN of America.
My 1897 Catalogue, the handsomest published, tells the secret
FREE to every reader of this Paper.
MISS C. H. LIPPINCOTT
319 SIXTH STREET, S.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Leading dealers everywhere sell FERRY'S SEEDS

Don't risk the loss of time, labor and ground by planting seeds of unknown quality. The market is full of cheap, unreliable seeds. FERRY'S SEEDS are always the best; do not accept any substitute. Seed Annual Free.

D. M. FERRY & CO.,
Detroit, Mich.

SEEDS New Complete Catalogue of BEST SEEDS that Grow mailed FREE to any address.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO.
Philadelphia.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER,
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

IT WILL SERVE THE INTERESTS OF ALL CONCERNED IF, IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED BY ANNOUNCEMENTS IN OUR ADVERTISING COLUMNS, MENTION IS MADE OF THE FACT THAT THE ADVERTISEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

Continued from page 320.

met with a generous response to his home missionary plea Feb. 21. The pastor is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons on Ian Maclaren's Creed.

DODGEVILLE.—Plymouth, Rev. R. Titmarsh, pastor, which has severed its connection with the old Primitive Methodist Church, was recognized, Feb. 15, as a Congregational church. It has about 125 members and bears the above new name. The sermon was by Rev. T. J. Brown.

BARABOO.—The past three weeks the churches of this place have joined in special meetings held by the Y. M. C. A. and led by Mr. Lindfield. A spirit of earnest work has prevailed and many, especially young people, have enlisted for Christ.

THE WEST.

Missouri.

ST. LOUIS.—First held a patriotic service on the eve of Washington's Birthday, the illuminated program bearing a portrait of the "father of his country" and his coat of arms. An interesting feature was the address by Rabbi Leon Harrison.

Iowa.

HITEMAN —Since the coming of Rev. Owen Thomas, less than two years ago, the church has developed from a handful of Welsh people who gathered on Sunday mornings into a strong organization with Sunday school and C. E., holding five services per Sunday, one in Welsh, the others in English. The accessions during the past year number 58, of which 32 followed special evangelistic services. Improvements have also been made on the edifice.

SARGEANT'S BLUFF is taking on new life and courage. Feb. 21, as a result of special meetings in which Rev. W. A. Pottle of Onawa assisted the pastor, Rev. J. M. Turner, 15 members were received, with promise of more to follow. The spiritual awakening in the Sunday school contributed largely to the success of the meetings.

POSTVILLE.—Rev. S. W. Pollard reports "a glorious revival with about 150 converts." The Congregational and M. E. churches united in meetings conducted by Evangelist Cordner. The prayer meetings have outgrown the lecture-room, and the auditorium is too small both for preaching services and the Sunday school.

GREEN ISLAND.—From a Sunday school planted about a year ago in a country neighborhood 14 members have been received. Rev. S. A. Wheelwright is pastor here and also at Preston. During the two years of his service at the latter point the membership has doubled.

DUBUQUE.—Summit. At the West Hill Chapel Rev. G. M. Orvis recently held a series of gospel meetings resulting in 30 accessions to the home church. Steps are being taken to organize a church at West Hill.

SLATER —This little church is greatly strengthened by the addition of 10 members, the first fruits of revival meetings conducted by Rev. B. C. Tillett, with the assistance of Rev. Joseph Steele, a neighboring pastor.

Minnesota.

ST. PAUL.—Atlantic, under its new pastor, Rev. W. W. Lewis, is struggling to pay its floating indebtedness. Were the H. M. S. not crippled the church would receive aid. Congregations have increased and the outlook is hopeful.——Milton Street has been greatly strengthened by the coming of a pastor. Twenty-two persons have recently united. The church holds the only service in a large section of the city, but the people are poor.——Pacific. Congregations have increased, with large additions to the membership, and prospects for growth are bright under the new pastor, Rev. J. A. Jenkins.——Plymouth is still considering the problem of its location. Many of the members earnestly desire to keep an independent organization.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Forest Heights. Revival meetings have been held by the new pastor with a number of conversions, and 24 persons united at the last communion. The coming of new families adds strength.——Mizpah. On account of financial conditions the church has lost its pastor, but the H. M. S. sends an evangelist and it is expected to supply the field in connection with another.——Vine has been pastorless for a few months, but has been supplied by different city ministers. A pastor has been called and the church is enthusiastic at the prospect of his coming.

FAIR OAKS, developed from a C. E. Society, is commonly without a preacher, except as supplied by the neighboring pastors. It is a church in the woods. Rev. T. H. Lewis of New Brighton has assisted in revival meetings, with good results. The Endeavorers sustain services when there is no preaching.

SWANVILLE.—Little interest has been manifested for several years in the organization, and the hold of the minister upon the community has been slight. The pastor, Rev. W. F. Frost, has been holding revival meetings, with conversions, and prospects are bright for spiritual work.

FAIRMONT is united and prosperous under Rev. J. P. Dickerman, raises more money than ever before, has outgrown its meeting house and has raised a subscription for a new one, which it expects to build in the spring.

WORTHINGTON.—A series of union meetings has been held, Major Hilton assisting. A number of persons have asked for prayers and many have confessed faith in Christ.

HUTCHINSON.—Revival meetings have been held for three weeks, Rev. William Hardcastle assisting, with much interest and several conversions and accessions.

Nebraska.

SARGENT.—Home missionary rally day was observed Feb. 24, the neighboring churches of Arcadia, Wescott and Taylor joining, and their pastors making addresses. The program was finely worked up, the various claims of the society upon the gratitude and loyalty of the people being strongly presented. After a generous offering, in which all the churches shared, a bountiful collation was served by the ladies of the home church. The evening meeting was made introductory to a series of union evangelistic meetings. Rev. W. C. Phipps, the pastor, whose health was so poor in the autumn that grave fears were entertained that he would be compelled to leave the work, is now much stronger.

INDIANOLA, among the first in the Western part of the State to assume self support, now weakened by removals and by loss of members, has been obliged to return to the H. M S. list, but is pushing its work with vigor. The Sunday school is prosperous, a large number of adults being in the Bible class. Rev. A S. Houston is pastor.

ARCADIA has just paid $125, pledged at the time of dedication, with $40 to the C. C. B. S.; and has also raised the cost of insurance. The monthly pledges are so promptly met that the pastor, Rev. J. F. Smith, never has to wait for his salary. The Sunday school recently presented him with a fine cathedral clock.

HAVELOCK.—The special services here, under the lead of Rev. G. J. Buck, continued longer than was expected, closing Feb. 14. The pastor, Rev. Samuel Wood, joins the Methodist pastor in union services.

FAIRMONT.—Rev. G. D. Tangemann finds interest

Continued on page 322.

Lamps

With the new cathedral bent glass shades

In Amber, Pink, Opal and Ruby
Colors, giving a rich blended light.

New designs of Fine Lamps, mounted with American founts and burners and decorated China bodies, designed for us in Japan, Germany and Staffordshire, unique shapes and decorations, costing from $50.0 to $75.00 each.

Wedgwood's New Jasper Ware, with Flaxman's raised cameo designs, adapted to whist prizes, together with many novelties for same departments.

Camphor-wood Chests (with brass corners), just landed from Hong Kong, for storing Furs and Woolens.

Boston Souvenir Plates, with historical local views of old and new Boston, engraved by Wedgwood and printed in the old Wedgwood blue.

Rich Cut Glass. Superb designs of table services, also of single pieces adapted to wedding or complimentary gifts.

Dinner Sets. Never was this department more abundant in desirable shapes and decorations. Carrying many of them as we do in Stock Patterns, they can be readily matched for years to come, an advantage appreciated by experienced housekeepers.

Jones, McDuffee & Stratton Co.,
Crockery, China, Glass and Lamps
(Seven Floors),
Wholesale and Retail,
120 FRANKLIN STREET.

The Inauguration

Buchanan
Lincoln
Johnson
Grant
Hayes
Garfield
Arthur
Cleveland
Harrison
Cleveland

McKINLEY

WITH THE INCOMING ADMINISTRATION, ELEVEN PRESIDENTIAL TERMS WILL HAVE WITNESSED THE WORLD-WIDE SUPREMACY OF

Sozodont

THE LEADING DENTIFRICE OF AMERICA AND THE ONLY ONE OF INTERNATIONAL REPUTATION.—A sample by mail for three cents. Address, P. O. Box 247, New York City.

HALL & RUCKEL
New York Proprietors London

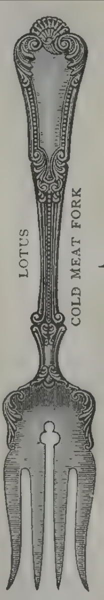
March 4



For Wear
buy spoons, forks, etc.
stamped:

"1847"
Rogers Bros.

These goods have stood the test for 50 years, which proves conclusively that they are the best. The prefix 1847 guarantees the genuine Rogers quality.

Meriden Britannia Co.
MERIDEN, Conn.,
208 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Manufacturers of
"Silver Plate that Wears."
SOLD BY LEADING DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THAT THE ANNOUNCEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

Continued from page 321.

increasing under his leadership. Special efforts are made to induce every member to share in some definite work.

Rev. John Sattler, general missionary among the Germans in Nebraska and the Dakotas, has been spending some time in special evangelistic work among the German churches of this State. Three weeks at McCook resulted in several conversions and 10 accessions. At Culbertson the church was refreshed and strengthened and two members were added. He closed a two weeks' meeting at Sutton Feb. 14 with several hopeful conversions, and began at once meetings with Rev. William Suess at Olive Branch. The severe cut in all departments of home missions makes Mr. Sattler's continuance in the work uncertain.

The board of directors of the Nebraska H. M. S. at its meeting Feb. 16 wrestled with the problem of trying to do $25,000 worth of work with the meager sum of $14,013. The superintendent made a voluntary reduction of 10 per cent. on his salary and planned expenses also on a reduced scale, but the reductions all around seemed like taking a pound of flesh from every home missionary pastor in the State and some work will have to be given up entirely.

North Dakota.

Latest reports state that no appointment has yet been made for filling the H. M. S. superintendency, left vacant by Pres. H. C. Simmons. There is a decided conviction among the committee that some method should be employed for carrying on the work temporarily without employing a full superintendent until the society can furnish more money for the work. No definite plan has yet been adopted.

Special evangelistic services are in progress at Crary, Abercrombie and Cooperstown, marked by excellent attendance, increasing interest and deep feeling.——Union evangelistic meetings at Valley City are being conducted by Rev. W. H. Gimblett and the M. E. pastor.——A series of union services have also been held with the Congregational and Methodist churches at Lakota.

Montana.

LIVINGSTON has not yet succeeded in securing a pastor to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Rev. W. A. Walker on account of ill health last November. The pulpit is being supplied by neighboring ministers and encouraging interest is shown in the Sunday school, C. E. Society and weekly prayer meeting.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Bethlehem. Rev. W. H. Tubb is being assisted in special services by Rev. Messrs. J. B. Orr and A. S. Parsons. Thirty-four cards have already been signed.—Mariners'. Chaplain Rowell reports seven conversions on board the Northern Way before she put to sea.——The Monday Club has appointed Rev. Messrs. Adams, Cruzan and Hatch a committee to secure, if possible, the meeting of the American Board here in 1898

BERKELEY.—First. The average attendance at the students' Bible class is 70. Lectures of a high order are given by representative men. Judge Haven of Oakland spoke recently upon The Bible and Human Law.——Sacramento. During Dr. H. N. Hoyt's pastorate of a little more than two years 117 members have been added, no communion having passed without accessions.

Washington.

The meetings at Green Lake conducted by Mrs. Lydia M. Bailey have continued to increase in interest and power.

OUR ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND.

Amount received during the week ending Tuesday noon and acknowledged in detail by individual receipts	$209.50
Previously acknowledged	23,136.50
Total	$23,346.00

Deaths.

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

JAQUITH—In Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 9, of apoplexy, Abby G., widow of Rev. Andrew Jaquith, for several years pastor of the Congregational church of Langdon, N. H., aged 81 yrs.

METCALF—In Framingham, at the residence of her son, G. P. Metcalf, Sarah B., widow of Hon. Luther Metcalf of Medway, Mass., aged 93 yrs., 3 mos.

SHORT—In Salem, Mass., Feb. 19, Harriet, daughter of the late Charles and Rebecca (George) Short, aged 70 yrs., 1 mo., 15 dys. She had been a member of the Tabernacle Church, Salem, since 1858. Well done.

SCURR—In Detroit, of tuberculosis, Rev. William R. Scurr, M. D., for several years a successful pastor, but more recently a practicing physician, aged 40 yrs.

WILLIAMS—In Kaigan, China, about Jan. 22, Mrs. Isabella B. R. Williams, a missionary of the American Board at that place since 1867, aged 57 yrs.

HANDSOME lamps, with the new cathedral bent glass shades, are among the novelties in the lamp department of Jones, McDuffee & Stratton, who have originated novelties in fine lamps. Their seven floors of china and glass attract the admirers of the beautiful in this important department of home furnishings.

KEEP IT HANDY.—Coughs, colds and bronchial troubles come on unawares and when least expected. A dose or two of Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam will check a cold and prevent its development. It is as good as life insurance. Sold by all druggists.

A RAPID DECLINE.—It is a fact that furniture has steadily declined in price during the last five years. A good illustration of this fact is shown in another column, in the announcement of the Paine Furniture Company. They are actually selling a sideboard at the low cost of $20 for which for a like value $24 was charged last year, $28 the year previously and $35 in 1892. This is a good example of the whole price movement in furniture in the last thirty six months. It is no wonder that new furniture is appearing in so many Boston houses.

TRUTH IN A NUTSHELL.—Impure blood is the natural result of close confinement in house, schoolroom or shop.

Blood is purified by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all the disagreeable results of impure blood disappear with the use of this medicine.

If you wish to feel well keep your blood pure with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

HOOD'S PILLS are the best family cathartic and liver medicine. Gentle, reliable, sure.

BABY HUMORS

Instant relief for skin-tortured babies and rest for tired mothers in a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, and a single application of CUTICURA (ointment), the great skin cure. The only speedy and economical treatment for itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, and pimply humors of the skin, scalp, and blood, with loss of hair.

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. ☞ "How to Cure Baby Humors," mailed free.

SCALP HUMORS Itching and Scaly, with Loss of Hair, Cured by CUTICURA.

For Catarrh Hay-Fever and Cold in Head
ELY'S CREAM BALM CURES COLD IN HEAD
CATARRH
ROSE-COLD
HAY-FEVER
DEAFNESS HEADACHE
ELY BRO'S NEW YORK
TRADE MARK

ELY'S CREAM BALM is a positive cure. Apply into the nostrils. It is quickly absorbed. 50 cents at Druggists or by mail; samples 10c. by mail. ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren St., New York City

You may get over that slight cold all right, but it has left its mark on the membranes lining your throat. You are liable to take another cold and the second one will hang on longer than the first. Scott's Emulsion is not an ordinary cough specific, but it is "the ounce of prevention." It builds up the system, checks inflammation and heals inflamed membranes. "Slight" colds never bring serious results when it is promptly taken.

Book on the subject free.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, New York.

Grand National Prize of 16,600 francs at Paris

Quina-Laroche

Possesses in the highest degree the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark. Endorsed by the medical faculty as the best remedy for Fever and Ague, Malaria, Poorness of the Blood, General Debility and Wasting Diseases; Increases the Appetite, Strengthens the Nerves and builds up the entire system.

Paris: 22 Rue Drouot
New York: E. FOUGERA & CO.
26-30 N. William St.

Here's Hope! BRIGHT'S DISEASE AND DIABETES CAN BE CURED.

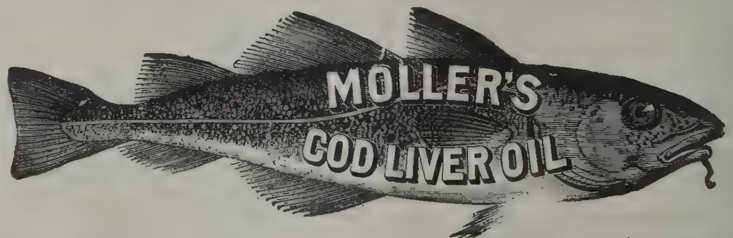
SEND for History of Cures and all details. We invite inquiry as to what we have done and are doing. We guarantee no misrepresentation. Investigation will compel belief.

CONSULTATION FREE.

The Tompkins-Corbin Co.
1300 Broadway, New York City.
ESTABLISHED 1890.

J. W. CORBIN, Gen'l Manager. | A. W. TOMPKINS, M.D. Consulting Physician.

DROPSY TREATED FREE Positively CURED with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. From first dose symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed. BOOK of testimonials of miraculous cures sent FREE. 10 Days Treatment Free by mail.
Drs. Green & Sons, Specialists, ATLANTA, GA.



The best Cod Liver Oil that fifty years of continued scientific research has produced is Moller's. It is not sold in bulk, but passes in a sealed and dated oval bottle direct from the manufacturer to the consumer; adulteration is impossible. It is free from disagreeable taste and odor. Free pamphlets of Schieffelin & Co., N. Y.

JOY IN THE ARMENIAN COUNTRY.

Under the heading Van, Jan. 22, comes this letter telling of the gladness brought to many stricken hearts by relief sent from America.

I was greatly delighted to receive, by last week's post, a letter from Constantinople announcing that $3,000 from the fund The Congregationalist raised for orphans in this land had been voted for Van. You can hardly imagine how every announcement of this kind brings joy to my heart. The number of orphans on our premises at present is 140 and we are constantly adding to the number. Of these, forty-eight boys and twenty-nine girls have lost both parents, while the fathers of thirty-two boys and twenty-six girls were killed in June. Of the whole number seventy-four are from Van itself and sixty-two from outside. Besides this number we already have a few small children, too young to take into school, provided for in private families, generally selecting widows who have homes and will be helped by the small allowance we give for the children to care for themselves as well. In all probability this form of need will become more and more apparent as we come more in contact with the villages, from which we have been almost cut off since the massacre in June. It is evident that this work needs to be continued for several years, in order to reach the ends for which it is inaugurated—to save these children and send them forth as useful members of society. It becomes a question how much of the funds that come to hand we ought to use the present year, and how much we ought to keep for future years. If we could have a reasonable hope that the coming years would bring the continuation of contributions that will enable us to keep the institution open, we would be delighted to take in at once all that funds received will support for the present year.

It is evident that children now of school age ought to be kept in the orphanage from two to six years according to their age, and I can but hope that there are many, unable perhaps to give large sums, who will feel inclined to send money to keep one child or more in the orphanage for a few years. Many may like to have particular individuals assigned them whose names and circumstances they shall know, and of whose welfare they shall be informed from time to time. At present prices it will cost just about $25 to feed and clothe a child for a year. I should be glad to have any who would like to take children write me, stating whether they prefer boys or girls and for how many years they are willing to undertake their support, and I shall be happy to write them of the person selected, entering them on our books as their beneficiaries, promising periodical information as to their welfare.

On Tuesday evening, Jan. 12—New Year's eve according to the Armenian calendar—we provided an inexpensive entertainment for the orphans. Some of them gave us an exhibition of their simple village amusements, joining hands and moving slowly around in a circle to weird, plaintive music in the sad minor key which ages of oppression have made the natural expression of even their most joyous feelings. Then some of the boys entertained us by conversing in the patois of their native villages. Then the simple refreshments of nuts, raisins, dates, etc., were distributed, affording perhaps as much pleasure as the elaborate presents on the Christmas tree do to the satiated sons and daughters of luxury in civilized lands. A few remarks from one of the teachers as to the source from which our blessings come and the spirit in which they should be received, and a prayer for God's blessing on these dear boys and the friends whose gifts had made the gathering possible, and the youngsters, whose eyelids were already drooping, were sent to couches which, if not of down, were many degrees better than they knew a few weeks ago. It was delightful to see so many able to enjoy themselves on the eve of the new year, though the sad events of the year past send a pathetic strain of sorrow through all their joy. It was a frequent request that the generous donors in Europe and America should be informed of their grateful appreciation of the efforts made to save a ruined people.

Entreating heaven's richest blessings upon all the donors of these funds,

Yours most gratefully, G. C. Raynolds.

Dr. Cyrus Hamlin sends us this letter from his daughter, Mrs. Clara H. Lee, in Marash: "I wrote you that we had $2,000 from The Congregationalist's Orphanage Fund. Isn't that splendid? I am trying hard to secure a certain very nice house that will hold fifty or sixty orphans. The rent is £20 a year. A Turkish official occupies two rooms, and I fear I shall have to wait three months for him to get out. But the house is worth waiting for, as there is hardly another like it in Marash. If I decide to do so I shall place the orphans temporarily in Christian families."

From another worker at Marash, Miss Meda Hess, come these words: "Thanks to The Congregationalist's fund, we can take eighty more orphans. When I look up at the snow covered mountains and think of the poor little creatures buried in straw to keep from freezing, I can hardly wait for them to be chosen and sent down here. I am to have the privilege of clothing them. They must ultimately have two suits each. I inclose a sample of the cloth for their garments. . . . The weaving of this cloth is the one industry of Marash at present."

For bronchial and asthmatic complaints "Brown's Bronchial Troches" have remarkable curative properties. Sold only in boxes.

BEST INVESTMENT ON EARTH!!

They earn more money, in proportion to cost, than any other product of human ingenuity.

The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

Quick as a Flash!

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

HOW TO USE IT. } Take three dessert spoonfuls to a cup of boiling water or milk. Stir briskly a moment, and your Chocolate is ready to serve. Put up in 1 lb. and ½ lb. tins.

Stephen F. Whitman & Son, Sole Mfrs., Philadelphia.

GRANULA "THE PERFECT HEALTH FOOD" Specially suitable for invalids and children. Sample Book of Recipes FREE.

packages 25 cents.

GRANULA CO., DANSVILLE, N. Y.

"HOW OLD, WORN I LOOK."

Few Women Know This Way to Preserve their Beauty.

Dr Greene's Nervura the Greatest Health Giver and Beautifier of Women.

The looking-glass tells many a woman of her fading beauty, the lines in her face, the pimples or sallow complexion and care-worn expression which always accompany ill health, weakness and nervous prostration. The simple but sure way of preserving beauty, is to get health and vigor by taking Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It will give you perfect health, make your skin pure, clean and fair, your features full and plump, give you a brilliant complexion, with rosy, red lips, and put the glow of health and color into your cheeks. Those who use Dr. Greene's Nervura become enthusiastic in writing its praises to their suffering sisters, because health and beauty mean everything to a woman.

Mrs. Mary Francis Lytle, of 2 Hunter Alley, Rochester, N. Y., writes:—"I was very pale and delicate—had no color. I took Dr. Greene's Nervura and now I am well and strong, my face is plump and cheeks red, and my complexion pure."

Mrs. William Bartels, 239 East 87th St., New York City, writes:—"Dr. Greene's Nervura made a wonderful improvement in my face. My friends hardly knew me. I gained in flesh and am like a different person."

Get Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy at once and see how wonderfully it will change your look and feelings. Everybody needs a spring medicine at this season, and now is the best and easiest time to get well. Dr. Greene's Cathartic Pills are the perfect pills for biliousness and constipation. Dr. Greene, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the noted specialist in curing diseases, can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

~~TRADE MARK REGISTERED.~~

~~DIABETES FLOUR~~

~~The result of years of endeavor to produce a palatable Bread Flour which can be safely offered to the Diabetic. The testimony to its value both from this country and abroad is remarkable and convincing~~

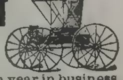
~~Unrivalled in America or Europe.~~

~~PAMPHLET AND SAMPLE FREE.~~

~~Write to Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U S A.~~

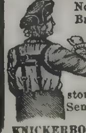
One-Half Off



the price on Buggies, Carriages and Harness. Highest quality. Fully guaranteed. Freight paid. Illus. Buyers' Guide mailed free. 8th year in business.

MIAMI MFG. CO., 104 West 4th Street. CINCINNATI, OHIO.

KNICKERBOCKER.



No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address

KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.

Life is a constant battle against dirt:
resist it with

SAPOLIO.

{cleans, scours, polishes.}

Whether you write, send, or ask for it, insist on getting —— SAPOLIO. The dealer who changes your order insults you.

The stores which keep the best that's made
Secure the highest class of trade;
The shoppers who are shrewd and wise
Select such stores to patronize;
And stores and shoppers all attest
Pure Ivory Soap is far the best.

Copyright 1896, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

Good Health—Good Form

This is the fortune of the woman who wears the Ferris Waist —a garment that gives healthful, graceful support to the body in perfect accord with the laws of nature. Yielding to every motion, faultless in outline, it meets the requirement for the neglige dress or the tailor-made gown.

FERRIS' Good Sense Corset Waist

is made also for Ladies and Misses, with high and low bust, long and short waist, to suit all figures. Children's 25 cts. to 50 cts. Misses' 50 cts. to $1.00. Ladies' $1.00 to $2.00. Always superior in quality and workmanship.

: : : FOR SALE BY ALL RETAILERS : : :

Established 1780.

Baker's Chocolate,

celebrated for more than a century as a delicious, nutritious, and flesh-forming beverage, has our well-known on the front of every package, and our trade-mark, "La Belle Chocolatiere," on the back.

YELLOW LABEL

NONE OTHER GENUINE.

Made only by

WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd.,

Dorchester, Mass.

Volume LXXXII Number 10

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 11 March 1897

TEMPERED

WHEN stern occasion calls for war,
And the trumpets shrill and peal,
Forges and armories ring all day
With the fierce clash of steel.
The blades are heated in the flame,
And cooled in icy flood,
And beaten hard, and beaten well,
To make them firm and pliable,
Their edge and temper good;
Then tough and sharp with discipline,
They win the fight for fighting men.

When God's occasions call for men,
His chosen souls he takes,
In life's hot fire he tempers them,
With tears he cools and slakes;
With many a heavy, grievous stroke
He beats them to an edge,
And tests and tries, again, again,
Till the hard will is fused, and pain
Becomes high privilege;
Then strong, and quickened through and through,
They ready are his work to do.

Like an on-rushing, furious host
The tide of need and sin,
Unless the blades shall tempered be,
They have no chance to win;
God trusts to no untested sword
When he goes forth to war;
Only the souls that, beaten long
On pain's great anvil, have grown strong,
His chosen weapons are.
Ah souls, on pain's great anvil laid,
Remember this, nor be afraid!

Written for The Congregationalist by
SUSAN COOLIDGE

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, MARCH 5

The leader, Mrs. E. W. Greene of Newtonville, read from Acts 8 the story of Philip and the eunuch, and drew from it a lesson upon opportunities. In this connection Mrs. Capron spoke of the constant need of asking "that the Holy Spirit may have more of me and of my time," and of the ease with which the Spirit works "when he finds a tool ready for his use." Mrs. Judson Smith and Miss Child added thoughts upon woman's present opportunity to engage in work which sometimes seems almost too large to undertake, and Mrs. Smith alluded to the recent annual meeting of Suffolk Branch at Waltham.

It was a great pleasure to welcome Miss Annie Howe of Kobe, Japan, whose name at once suggests the Glory Kindergarten, which she has so successfully established and superintended. Miss Howe spoke of the larger part of the foreign missionary work as being done here at home, that it has seemed to her tremendous in its opportunities as she has gone about among the churches.

Miss Gilson of Mount Selinda, Gazaland, already having been mentioned, Mrs. Thompson referred to her long, hard journey in reaching her mission station, to the care by which she is encompassed, and to the faith which she needs in meeting the duties of her position.

Miss Stanwood read a letter from Miss Gilson, in which she writes of her own perfect health, of the wonderful climate even during the hottest days of the year, of the progress of the school building, of the prospect that her work for the first few years will be chiefly with the boys, with a possible experiment in coeducation, and adds, "I wish my friends to know that I am not disappointed in the work here; its importance cannot be overestimated; there is much to encourage one in the very beginning."

Mrs. Ireland's home for kraal girls at Amanzimtote was reported, with its thirty-five pupils, many having been sent away disappointed because there was no room for them.

Miss Mellen writes of the Bible woman Hannah, at Esidumbini, as comforted in her untiring endeavors by several kraal women declaring their desire to be Christians, and Miss Price, visiting this station, tells of going with Miss Mellen and Hannah to a kraal meeting, where she was much impressed with the heathen women and children, looking so different from the girls at Inanda, yet listening attentively to the old, old story and interested in a large picture of the Child Jesus in his mother's arms. She says, "O, the darkness of heathenism! How dense it seems, and how almost hopeless! Yet there are miracles of grace wrought. We know and see them, and so we take heart and go on."

W. B. M. I. was represented by Miss Blatchford of Chicago, who cordially responded to the welcome given her, while Mrs. Bingham of Santa Barbara, Cal., brought friendly words from W. B. M. P.

Mrs. Noyes, Mrs. Pratt, Miss Gilman and Miss E M. Stone also contributed to the interest of the hour.

Religious Notices

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St.; New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT. Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer

BIOGRAPHICAL

MRS HENRY WARD BEECHER

Mrs. Beecher died at the home of Rev. Samuel Scoville, Stamford, Ct., March 8, where she has resided since last November. She was born—Eunice White Bullard—in West Sutton, Mass., Aug. 26, 1812; was a younger sister of Rev. Asa Bullard of Sunday school fame; met Mr. Beecher when he was at Amherst College with her brother; went with her husband to Indianapolis, where he had his first pastorate, and ever after was his helpmate and loving spouse. Since her husband's death she has lived quietly most of the time in Brooklyn, near old friends. Her relations with Plymouth Church and its pastor have been most cordial. As a contributor to the press she has helped many of her sisters with homely counsels concerning domestic economy, and also has added interesting reminiscences of events and persons to the store of material which is accumulating respecting the stirring period of our history in which her husband was so prominent.

A GOOD STORY.—One of the best stories in the language is that which the Paine Furniture Company told recently in one of their announcements about a Quaker and his coachman. We are reminded of this old anecdote upon seeing the half-century bookcase, in another column of this issue, which the Paine Furniture Company warrants for fifty years of faithful service. It is such cabinet-work as this which our readers should secure.

Spring Millinery

Trimmed Hats Dainty, stylish and becoming —these three words describe the charming examples of Spring Headwear that we display for the first time this week in our parlor on the second floor. Advance Styles—come if only to look.

Untrimmed Straw Hats Each day some new shape is added to our collection of Ladies' and Misses' Untrimmed Straw Hats on the street floor. Newest Styles always shown here first.

Flowers, Straw Braids Every kind of Artificial Flower that you are likely to want will be found in this surpassing assortment. Straw Braids, too, in endless variety—color combinations not to be had elsewhere

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

Singers
LEAD THE WORLD OVER
13,000,000 MADE AND SOLD

HIGHEST AWARDS at the WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION

For Excellence of Design,
Excellence of Construction,
Regularity of Motion,
Ease of Motion,
Great Speed,
Adjustability,
Durability,
Ease of Learning,
Convenience of Arrangement.

IF YOU BUY A SINGER You will receive careful instruction from a competent teacher at your home. You can obtain necessary accessories direct from the Company's offices. You will get prompt attention in any part of the world, as our offices are everywhere; and we give careful attention to all customers, no matter where their machine may have been purchased. You will be dealing with the leading sewing-machine manufacturers in the world, having an unequaled experience and an unrivaled reputation to maintain—the strongest guarantees of excellence and fair dealing.

SINGER SEWING MACHINES ARE SOLD ONLY BY
The Singer Manufacturing Co.
OFFICES EVERYWHERE.

This book should be in the hands of all who wish to be successful in planting. It is a safe guide to right seeds and right methods. It makes you acquainted with the purity and reliability of which are known to all successful planters. Gregory's Seed catalogue is sent free of charge to anyone anywhere.

Gregory's Seeds

J. J. H. GREGORY & SON,
Marblehead, Mass.

SEEDS Complete Catalogue of Best Seeds that Grow FREE to any address.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia.

Helps You Will Need When You Build

If you are Planning to Build our Books of Designs and Plans will help you. They are filled with up-to-date Designs and home building ideas.

Our Little 1897 Book "Artistic Home Designs" shows many BEAUTIFUL HOMES, also designs for laying out, beautifying grounds, etc Sent for 10 cents, if you name price of house you will build.

GEO. F. BARBER & CO., 47 Gay St., Knoxville, Tenn.

IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED by announcements in our ADVERTISING COLUMNS, please mention that the advertisement was seen in The Congregationalist.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON.

10, 20 and 40 cent packages.

DUNHAM'S COCOANUT

Copyrighted by DUNHAM MFG. Co., 1897. St. Louis and New York.

Write for illustrated list of Premiums given for Trade-marks

Address Premium Dep't, Dunham Manufacturing Co., 5, 7 & 9 James Slip, New York, N. Y.

The Stereopticon in the Church.

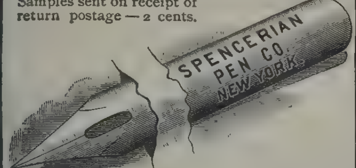
The "Great Teacher" taught by pictures. The eye-gate is the readiest way to the mind. The Stereopticon will bring people into the church.

Special Lanterns and Slides for all purposes sold and loaned on easy terms. Send for free literature.

RILEY BROTHERS,
Bradford, Eng. 16 Beekman St., New York.
The largest Stereopticon outfitters in the world.
BRANCHES—BOSTON: 36 Bromfield St. CHICAGO: 196 La Salle St. KANSAS CITY (Mo.) · 515 East 14th St. MINNEAPOLIS: [illegible] Washington Ave. So. CHATTANOOGA: 708 Market.

SPENCERIAN PENS
WRITE WELL WEAR LONG
ONCE TRIED ALWAYS USED

Samples sent on receipt of return postage — 2 cents.



SPENCERIAN PEN CO. NEW YORK

ESTABLISHED 1860

CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES

PEOPLE AT HOME having to send money abroad to pay bills, etc., can buy Books of CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES, which they draw themselves for any amount, to any order, and which are payable everywhere.

Special circular about this at
Agency of the U.S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
Frederick W. Perry, Manager,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

WESTERN MORTGAGES
DEFAULTED AND OTHERWISE.
Bought for Cash.
CHAS. E. GIBSON, 45 Milk St. Boston, Mass.

8% Municipal Warrants Safe as bonds and pay much better. Write for details. ROBT. E. STRAHORN & Co., Equitable Building, Boston.

IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED by announcements in our ADVERTISING COLUMNS, please mention that the advertisement was seen in The Congregationalist.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 329
Welcome to the New Administration 330
Laborers and Ministers 330
The Finances of Our Benevolent Societies 331
Rejoicing in the Lord 331
Current History 331
In Brief 334

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

New York 335
CURRENT THOUGHT 361

CONTRIBUTIONS:

Tempered—cover poem. Susan Coolidge 325
Deacon Dudley's Sundays in Boston. V. Alden Endecott 335
Is It Only an Eddy, or Is It More? Rev. A. J. F. Behrends, D. D. 336
Where Lies the Remedy? Rev. Henry A. Stimson D. D. 337
A New Method of Preparation for the Pastorate. Charles S. Macfarland 338
Inauguration Scenes at the Capital. Lillian Camp Whittlesey 350

THE HOME:

Fellowship in Service—selected poem 340
Family Worship and Grace at Meals. Rev. F. W. Baldwin, D. D. 340
Lenten Days. Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster 340
A Street Car Incident. Lilla Thomas Elder 341
A Friend in Court. Mary Esther Allbright 341
Closet and Altar 343
Tangles 343
The Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 344
Corner Scrap-Book 344
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for March 21 345
Notes 355
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for March 21-27 350
Notes 356
LITERATURE 346

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:

Our Opportunity in Wyoming 352
Mr. Moody in Cincinnati 352
Weekly Register 358
Accessions to the Churches 360

MISCELLANEOUS:

Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 326
Biographical 326
In and About Chicago 339
Evolution and the Old Gospel—a selection 345
An Actor in a Congregational Pulpit—a selection 348
Gleanings 349
In and About Boston 351
Notices 352
Finances of Our National Societies 356
American Missionary Association's Jubilee Fund 357
Deaths 357
Business Outlook 359
Education 359
Our Armenian Orphans' Fund 360
The Conferences at Tuskegee 362

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER.

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849.

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11¼ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston.

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd.

Hotels and Travel.

GAZE'S TOURS ESTABLISHED 1844.
Nile, Bermuda, Florida, West Indies, Holy Land, Egypt, Europe.
Programs ready, post free. Mention tour.
GAZE'S TOURIST GAZETTE FREE.
H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd., 113 B'way, N. Y.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise
to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.
ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,
BY THE
AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"
Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.
Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

COOK'S TOURS TO EUROPE
Arrangements suited to all. New routes, best accommodations.
High-class Select Parties, leaving March 27, May 8, May 29, June 9, 26. Also
GRAND SUMMER CRUISE OF S.S. OHIO
70 days for $475 up, leaving June 26.
Special Programme of Lower Priced
VACATION TOURS TO EUROPE.
THOS. COOK & SON,
261 and 1225 Broadway, New York.
332 Washington St., Boston.

ANNUAL EUROPEAN TOURS
Limited party, personally conducted by Prof. CAMILLE THURWANGER, now forming, 31 Pierce Bldg., Boston.

PASSACONAWAY INN,
YORK CLIFFS, MAINE. Opens June 1st.
ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

A lady, having facilities therefor, would receive into her family for a pleasant home, and teaching, one or two children. Parents making plans for the summer, or for another year, are invited to correspond with Miss G., care Congregationalist.

Wanted, position to teach sewing in Institution, or as seamstress in private family. References furnished. Address W., Box 275, So. Framingham, Mass.

Housekeeper. A refined Christian lady who thoroughly understands every department of household duty desires position as managing or working housekeeper. Best of references. Address X. Y. Z., Congregationalist office.

Church Equipment.

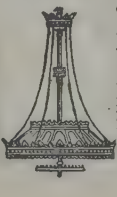
Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS In the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E.W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio.
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Established 1857.



The Great CHURCH LIGHT
FRINK'S PATENT REFLECTORS for electric, gas or oil, give the most powerful, softest, cheapest and best light known for churches, halls and public buildings. Send size of room. Book of light and estimate free.
Don't be deceived by cheap imitations.
I. P. FRINK,
551 Pearl Street, New York.

EPD&Co.

An Edition of Ten Thousand Copies in Paper Covers at 25 Cents. NOW READY.

HIRAM GOLF'S RELIGION;

Or, "The Shoemaker by the Grace of God."

By GEORGE H. HEPWORTH.

20th thousand. 16mo, 134 pages, cloth, 75 cents.

"A book that gives the reader something to think about. The sterling, homely common sense of the book is commanding wide attention."—The Evangelist.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR

HERALD SERMONS.

SECOND SERIES.

45 short sermons reprinted from the New York Herald. 12mo, $1.00

HERALD SERMONS.

FIRST SERIES.

45 short sermons reprinted from the New York Herald. 3d thousand. 12mo, cloth, with portrait, $1 00

"The sermons are very short, very interesting, very practical and very helpful."—Literary World.

"The sermons are admirable in thought and treatment."—N. Y. Tribune.

THE FARMER AND THE LORD.

3d thousand. 16mo, 242 pages, cloth, 75 cents.

"As a graphic story of homely New England life it is well worth a perusal."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Deserves many readers and the widest publicity."—N. Y. Times.

"Each character is drawn with the pencil of an artist, and the simple story is so true to human nature that it wins its way to every heart."—N. Y. Observer.

THEY MET IN HEAVEN.

5th thousand. 16mo, 216 pages, cloth, 75 cents.

"This is a tender and helpful study in religious experience. . . . To many Dr. Hepworth's effort may be a hand stretched out from heaven. To all it will be a book of pure, gentle and persuasive Christian inspiration."—Independent.

THE LIFE BEYOND.

This Mortal must put on Immortality.

2d thousand. 16mo, 116 pages, cloth, 75 cents.

BROWN STUDIES;

Or, Camp Fires and Morals.

16mo. 332 pages. Illustrated, gilt top, $1.25.

"In the form of a story, the author takes the reader to the Adirondacks, where the chief character, with his guides and a dog, spends a winter discoursing of life, its demands, duties and customs."—N. Y. Times.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
31 West Twenty-third Street, New York.

Why not Buy ALL Your Books AT THE Congregational Bookstores?

Remember

We are not confined to religious publications. We have enlarged and broadened our stock, and have the latest, freshest works in almost every department of literature.

We are large cash buyers from all leading publishers, and our prices are always as low as others, sometimes lower, though we do not believe in selling goods without some profit.

Our service is prompt and intelligent, and we seek to accommodate and please our customers.

Our terms are easy, and particularly liberal with large and constant book-buyers.

Our earnings help Sunday School Mission work. Other booksellers' earnings do not. Does not this entitle us to all the business of book-buying Congregationalists?

The Congregational Bookstores:

Congregational House, BOSTON. 175 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

Orders also received at our New York, Minneapolis and San Francisco Offices.

J. H. TEWKSBURY, Business Agent.

CHURCH ORGANS

Hook & Hastings Co.
Boston, Mass.

$500 IN GOLD FREE

Sixty-one Prizes, aggregating $500. A Genuine Bona-Fide Offer. We give nothing but cash for prizes. No trash. Here is our proposition: Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in INSTRUCTION? You can make twenty or more words, we feel sure, and if you do you will receive a good reward. Do not use any letter more times than it appears in the word. Use no language except English. Use any dictionary. Plurals, pronouns, nouns, verbs, adverbs, prefixes, suffixes, adjectives, proper nouns, allowed. Anything that is a legitimate word will be allowed. Work it out in this manner. INSTRUCTION: In, Tin, Ton, Sin, Son, Sir, Scion, Run, Us, etc. The publisher of WOMAN'S WORLD AND JENNESS MILLER MONTHLY will pay $100 in gold to the person able to make the largest list of words from the letters in the word INSTRUCTION; $50 for the second largest; $25 for each of the next three largest lists; $20 to each of the next three; $15 to each of the next three; $10 to each of the next nine; and $2 to each of the next forty largest lists—sixty-one prizes in all for the sixty-one largest lists. Don't you think you could be one of these sixty-one? You will enjoy the making of your list. Why not try for the first prize? The above rewards are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to our handsome woman's magazine, thirty-two to thirty-six pages, each page containing four long columns, finely illustrated, and all original matter, long and short stories by the best authors; price $1 per year. It is necessary for you, to enter the contest, to send 25 cents (money order, silver or stamps) for a three-months' trial subscription with your list of words, and every person sending the 25 cents and a list of twenty words or more is guaranteed an extra present by return mail (in addition to the magazine) of a 100-page book, "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," by the famous Ian Maclaren. This book has attracted more attention in the United States than any book of recent years. We give a complete unabridged edition, handy size, finely printed in handsome type. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or money refunded. Lists should be sent at once, and not later than April 20. The names and addresses of successful contestants will be printed in May issue, published April 25. Our publication has been established ten years. We refer you to any mercantile agency for our standing. Make your list now. Address JAMES H. PLUMMER, Publisher, 225, 226, 227 Temple Court Building, New York City.

Sacred Songs No. 1.

By Ira D. Sankey, Jas. McGranahan, Geo. C. Stebbins.

This exceptionally fine collection is used by Mr. MOODY and Mr. SANKEY in all their meetings. Mr. Moody says it is the best book he ever used.

SACRED SONGS NO. 1

has won its way to popular favor more rapidly than any song book ever issued.

Over 100,000 Copies Sold in Three Months!

$25 per 100, in boards; add 5 cts. each, if ordered by mail. Get a copy and try it. If your bookseller cannot furnish it, send to Publishers.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
Chicago House, 215 Wabash Ave. 76 E. 9th St., N. Y.

New Easter Services

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

THE JOYOUS EASTER-TIDE, with Music.
EASTER MESSAGES (Primary), with Music.
SOME WONDERFUL EASTER DAYS, with Music.

5 cts. each; $4.00 per hundred.

EASTER RECITATIONS. 16mo, paper, 15 cts., postpaid.
EASTER CONCERT BOOK. 16mo, boards, 50 cts., postpaid.

Complete Catalogue free.

HENRY D. NOYES & CO.,
13½ Bromfield St., Boston.

Fillmores' Easter Music for Choirs and Sunday-schools now ready. Send for descriptive list. FILLMORE BROS., 119 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, or 40 Bible House, New York.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.

4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100 paged Agency Manual free. EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

MAINE, BANGOR.

BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Choice between two courses of study, Classical and English Biblical, in Junior year; one course in Middle and Senior years. Optionals in Hebrew and Cognates, and in Greek. Entrance examination on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 9 A. M. Apply to Prof. C. A. Beckwith, or Prof. G. W. Gilmore, Bangor, Me.

WHEATON SEMINARY

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley, outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.

62d year. Summer term, April 8, 1897. Illustrated prospectus. Address
MISS A. E. STANTON, Principal, Norton, Mass.

Books for the Household

Household Economics.

A Course of Lectures in the School of Economics of the University of Wisconsin. By HELEN CAMPBELL, author of "Prisoners of Poverty," "American Girls' Home Book," etc. 8vo, gilt top, $1 50.

"A truly remarkable work . . . the author evinces a thorough knowledge of her subject, and she treats of it in a luminous and logical manner, and is thoroughly practical . . . the book should be read in every intelligent household where the author's living voice cannot be heard."—N. Y. Observer.

"Too high praise is scarcely possible for the masterly manner and thorough grasp of fact and sound philosophy which give these lectures their strength and attractiveness . . . its comprehensiveness is truly remarkable."—Phila. American.

"The subject is treated practically, suggestively and most helpfully."—Chicago Advance.

The Majestic Family Cook Book.

By ADOLPHE GALLIER, Chef of the Majestic Hotel, New York. Containing 1,300 selected recipes, simplified for the use of housekeepers, also a few choice bills of fare, 8vo, $2.50.

"M. Gallier has taken advantage of his long professional career in the culinary art, and now presents in convenient form his entire lore in a neatly printed volume . . . the author may be considered the most accomplished of artists . . . the book is invaluable for every household."—N. Y. Times.

Good Living.

A practical Cookery Book for Town and Country. By SARA VAN BUREN BRUGIERE. Third Edition, 8vo, $1 75.

This book contains over 1,300 receipts drawn from the highest authorities and many countries; from France, Belgium, England, Holland, Denmark, Spain, Italy, Austria, Russia, as well as nearer home.

"After a careful examination of this book, we can confidently recommend it as one of the most thorough, comprehensive cook books that we have ever seen."—Boston Home-Journal.

NEW BOOKS.

Robert the Bruce

And the Struggle for Scottish Independence. By Sir HERBERT MAXWELL. New volume (No. 19) in Heroes of the Nations Series. Fully illustrated. Large 12mo, $1 50; half leather, gilt top, $1.75.

The "Heroes of the Nations" is a series of biographical studies of the lives and work of certain representative historical characters, about whom have gathered the great traditions of the nations to which they belonged, and who have been accepted, in many instances, as types of the several national ideals. Edited under the editorial supervision of Evelyn Abbott, M. A., of Balliol College.

The God-Idea of the Ancients;

Or, Sex in Religion. By ELIZA BURT GAMBLE, author of "The Evolution of Woman." 8vo, $2.25.

Mrs. Gamble's purpose has been not only to furnish a brief outline of religious growth, but to show the effect which each of the two forces, female and male, has had upon the development of our present God-idea. Her investigation of the subject has served to accentuate the conclusions arrived at in her earlier book relative to the inheritance of each of the two lines of the sexual demarcation.

G. P. Putnam's Sons
New York and London.

Just Published! Eighteen New Copyright Editions of the Genuine "Oxford" Teachers' Bibles

NEW COPYRIGHT EDITIONS 124 FULL PAGE PLATES
HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE OXFORD

With New Helps, Maps, and 124 Full-Page Plates.

The Best Biblical Compilation of the age, and the most modern of all Teachers' Bibles, placing the Student, Preacher and Teacher in possession of recent discoveries in Bible Lands.

"Contains hundreds of pages of illustrations, notes, glossaries and other helps to the exposition of the Bible—helps prepared for this work by the most eminent Biblical scholars of the day, and revised up to the latest possible date, to keep in touch with the last discoveries of science, the last lights of interpretation. This edition has reached, in former issues, a sale of over two million copies, and it is safe to say that nothing offers even fair competition with it in general favor."—The Interior, Dec. 24, 1896.

At Prices from $1.25 to $20.00.

For sale by all Booksellers. Send for Catalogue.

Oxford University Press, American Branch,
HENRY FROWDE, 91 and 93 Fifth Ave., New York.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 11 March 1897 Number 10

HOME MISSIONARY FUND

Carrie F. Meriam, Worcester, Mass	$2.00
Elizabeth F. Kimball, Andover, Mass	2 00
Mrs. Susan E. Merrill, Haverhill, Mass	2.00
Miss Mary P. Merrill, Haverhill, Mass	2 00
Mrs. J. J. Abbott, Whitinsville, Mass	4.00
Eben Peabody, Danvers, Mass	2.00

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS

6 Months for $1.00

3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

LENTEN experiences may be expected at any season by those who seek God with all their hearts. But the present is a specially favorable time for self-examination, devout meditation on Christ's sacrifice for us and solemn reconsecration of ourselves to his service, because many find greater impulses toward God in the associations and suggestions of Lent than at any other time. The fruits of these experiences in holier living will depend much on the definiteness of purpose with which we seek to set ourselves right before God. If we sincerely repent of sins which we know have held us down, if we honestly seek to give and receive forgiveness wherever it is necessary in order to live in peace with neighbors and friends, if we renew habits of private prayer and public worship which have been too much neglected, if we frankly confess our unworthiness and unite with our brethren in the common effort of our church to gain greater gifts of the Holy Spirit, if we come to the Lord's table with earnest longing to receive him into all our lives and wholly to do his will, then his temptation in the wilderness will make him seem more than ever a high priest who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; his passion and resurrection will, more profoundly than ever before, reveal him to us as our all-sufficient Saviour and our living Intercessor. May these days bring us all into closer union with God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

"Massachusetts day" is to be observed by the Y. P. S. C. E. of the State next week, beginning March 14. The occasion supplies an essential link between the local society and the larger and international movement. This is important, as it at once broadens the Endeavorers' view and makes it possible for them to see good work besides their own. Knowledge of what others are accomplishing is helpful. The city can contribute to the town. The village can instruct the city. Methods tried may be suggestive, failures known can be avoided. The work done by the several State departments is advertised, and thus the individual societies gain a desired acquaintance with State officials. This year the order of exercise, proposed by a special committee appointed by the executive board, includes a very valuable feature, namely, the presentation of five-minute papers upon "the four grand divisions" of the pledge. After sixteen years it is more certainly realized that the pledge is the life of the organization and it is the inspiration of life in the membership. The pledge supplies the incentive and impetus before wanting in every young people's service. It serves to maintain life upon a higher plane. Dr. Clark has always held that the pledge is primary. At Washington he called it "the Magna Charta of Christian Endeavor." And the best results are accomplished under it. If the societies of Massachusetts can, by observing this day, solidify the relation existing between the local movement and the greater work, and can so consider the pledge as to quicken the consciences of Endeavorers, the event will prove a blessing to the young people of the State.

Dr. Behrends puts plainly, on another page, some very important questions. Others are asking them with anxious thought. We hope to receive many answers to them, whether reassuring or otherwise. We are aware that there are reasons for apprehension. But we believe we have good evidence that the essentials of Christian faith are not less tenaciously held today than they were a generation ago; that the incarnation, the atonement, the resurrection, the judgment of all men by Jesus Christ, the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, his indwelling in the church and in the individual believer, the revelation of God through the Scriptures, his providential government of the world and guidance of his children, are vital realities with many millions of believers in this country. We do not believe that these truths have less weight with Congregationalists than with those of other denominations, nor that the conception of them is changing more among us than in other religious bodies led by thinking men. We trust that our leaders who will prevail in shaping the thought of the church are seeking to be led by the Holy Spirit, and that they will not seek in vain, and we await with interest, but not without confidence, the answer to the question, Is it only an eddy, or is it more?

The manual of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, contains the following rule: "This church will receive a member of another Church of Christ, Scientist, but not the member of a different denomination, until that membership is dissolved." The Christian Science Journal says that the words in italics were added in consequence of The Congregationalist's criticism of the rule, and in order that Congregational churches might give letters of recommendation to such of their members as might wish to join the Christian Scientists. We suppose it is hardly necessary to inform the editor of that journal that when a member takes a letter from one church to another his membership with the church he leaves is not dissolved. It is transferred, and the transference is not complete till the church to which the letter is addressed receives the member and notifies the church which gave the letter of the fact. It is not according to Congregational usage to grant letters of recommendation to members of our churches to join Christian Science organizations. Our usage is defined by a statement which the Christian Science Journal quotes from our columns, and which was written by Dr. Quint, as follows: "If a member, alleging change of views, asks to be released from covenant obligations, the church can properly adopt a vote granting such release and dropping the person's name from the roll of members." Thus the membership is "dissolved," so that one who was formerly a member of a Congregational church is free to join a Christian Science or any other organization.

Strange to say, the demand for light on the administration of religious societies has arisen in Rome itself. In an inspired communication from the Vatican, sent by a regular correspondent of a metropolitan journal, we find it stated that Peter's Pence Fund is waning year by year owing to circumstances, some of which Leo XIII. could alter if he were to be less of a democrat and more reactionary. The correspondent, who is also a well-informed Roman ecclesiastic, also adds:

> The financial ministry of missions publishes annually the statement of the amounts received and the amounts expended, giving names, assets and receipts. Why cannot the Vatican make a similar statement? Why cannot the Holy See every year show to the public its budget? It will be said that an arithmetical operation is not a financial operation, but that is wrong. The day when the faithful would see the coming and going of the sums of money they would acquire confidence. If at all times they count with love upon the Pope, they have not the same feeling toward the court of Rome. But that is not all. This renewal, this increase of faith, would have for a corollary a sort of control. Every time that the receipts would be lowered in the expenses the simple evidence of it would result in wonderful stimulation. Modern society demands light. Give it to it.

When this sentiment is voiced in Rome by Catholic ecclesiastics, it cannot truly be described as reactionary for Protestant laymen in this country to utter it as they face the problem of administration of their denominational affairs.

English Nonconformists have been unwilling to publish the number of their members, fearing to make comparison of their strength with that of the state church. They have contented themselves with publishing the number of seats provided in their church buildings, which aggregate considerably less than those in Episcopal churches. But a writer in the Contemporary Review presents statistics of communicants in nine leading Nonconformist denominations, making 1,807,723, as compared with 1,778,351 communicants in the Church of England. The five Methodist bodies lead with a total of 987,400, and Congregationalists come next with 406,716. Nonconformists have 3,103,285 members in the Sunday school, while the state church has only 2,329,813. That church is firmly rooted in England, by tradition and custom and pride in the cathedrals and churches, as well as by strong affection for her institutions and the many complicated relations in which church and state are bound together. There are strong arguments against disestablishment, some of which have weight with Nonconformists. But the figures given above, showing that the Established Church is already in a minority in England, indicate that she can retain her prestige and privileges only by the consent of those denominations which grow and prosper without the favor she receives from the state. Perhaps the knowledge of this fact has something to do with the more cordial relations which English ecclesiastics have been seeking to promote of late with Nonconformist bodies.

The course of theological thinking in this country has followed somewhat closely, though at considerable distance of time, that in Germany. We therefore welcome the signs of reaction against radicalism which are appearing in the German Church. The Literary Digest publishes a translation of an article describing a new movement from the ablest of the conservative church papers of Germany. This article declares that "the liberal and liberalizing forces within the German Church have in recent months lost considerable ground, and the beginning of the end seems at hand. On the other hand, the defense of the old faith has grown internally and externally." Special courses of lectures in the interests of what is called the old faith are being successfully maintained in many places. Says this article, "Recent events have shown that in Germany the Protestant Church is at heart thoroughly evangelical and loves its Bible above everything else." In the same direction the Chronik, a representative of the liberal theology, confesses that the conservative theologians in the nine Prussian universities are numerically much stronger than the liberals. There are sixteen liberal and twenty-six conservative theologians in the university faculties of the old Prussian provinces, and in the newer provinces there are eight liberals and nine conservatives. Twice as many conservatives as liberals have been appointed by the government within the last two years. Many pastors are rallying to the defense of the divine character of the Scriptures, and the literature for the same purpose is greater than it has been for many years. The effects of this reaction are already beginning to be felt in our seminaries, and an independent movement in the same direction is appearing both in institutions of learning and in churches.

WELCOME TO THE NEW ADMINISTRATION

Its beginning is auspicious. It has been said that President McKinley's inaugural address is not brilliant. That is good cause for thanksgiving. It proposes no startling demonstrations. It reassures business men of a purpose to maintain stable government. It is frank and sincere. No one need misunderstand the policy of the administration. It is addressed to the whole people, and it manifests an earnest desire to promote, in practical ways, the peace, prosperity and righteousness of the nation. It faces squarely the problems before the country and inspires confidence that they can be solved.

The President has called to his aid experienced counselors. Some of them are eminently fitted for their special work and have undertaken it with much sacrifice of their personal interests. They have set an example of patriotism which will inspire others to follow it.

The welcome to the incoming administration is practically unanimous, and this has already inspired new confidence. Doubt and fear are contagious and they have spread as an epidemic. They have prompted wholesale indictments of institutions, of society, of government. They have given countenance to wild proposals to destroy the social fabric and build it again on new principles, to reorganize business from its foundations, to treat men as though human nature had been wholly misunderstood. But confidence is no less contagious than distrust. There are signs that it has begun to spread. Men will be more honest when they see that honesty is expected of them; more patriotic when patriotism is evidently appreciated. They will work harder and more unselfishly to restore business prosperity as they find it valued for high and unselfish ends. At the outset this appears to be the disposition of the new Administration, and this disposition is reflected in those who are served by it. The outgoing Administration hailed its advent without jealousy or distrust. Men of all parties and sections look to it hopefully. No sign of discord appears within itself. With the blessing of God and the support of the people it is fitted to overcome the unusual difficulties before it and to win success.

Our duties as citizens are plain. Every one can promote the national welfare. We have ample reason to expect that the Administration will do its best for the public good, and we must give it our confidence and support. Many have expected too much of government. They have laid at its door responsibilities which belong to all the people, and have charged it with creating conditions which they have very imperfectly understood. Government cannot do everything. If it is indiscriminately abused or petulantly nagged it cannot do anything. Let us not embarrass it by hasty criticism and irritating complaints. Let us show our disapproval of attempts by newspapers to try it for deeds which only they as yet have prophesied.

The chief need of our country at this time is that its citizens should have confidence in its rulers, who in entering their office deserve confidence; in its future, which will be what the people make it; and in one another. We must enjoy the prosperity we already have, and increase it by experience that it is more blessed to give than to receive. We must be patient to win prosperity by dealing justly, loving mercy and walking humbly with our God. Example is better than exhortation and far better than the habit of faultfinding. The new Administration comes into power with the ring of hope and courage in its utterance. It is welcomed by the tone of confidence throughout all the land. The continuance of that confidence will strengthen its courage. These words of the new Secretary of the Treasury to some of his fellow-citizens just before starting for Washington may well stand for the voice of the new Administration to the whole people:

> Called to new and untried duties, I am strengthened and encouraged by your expressions of confidence. They will stimulate zeal and fidelity, and if, when my service is ended, it can be said of me, "He tried faithfully to serve, not a class, not a coterie, but the country as a whole," I shall then merit the good words which you now so trustfully bestow.

LABORERS AND MINISTERS

The Bureau of Statistics of Labor has begun the issue of a quarterly Labor Bulletin. The first number, issued March 2, has statistics of the wages of the laborers in all the cities of Massachusetts. There are 276 quotations in all. Of these twenty-two are at $1.50 per day, forty-three at $1.75, ninety at $2, sixteen at $2.25, twenty-nine at $2.50, thirteen at $3 and others at scattering figures. When the employment rises in character the wages rise accordingly. In Springfield the return for the paving department is put at $4.50 to $5.50. This is very high, but about forty-two per cent. of the 276 are returned at over $2 per day. That means about $600 a year for the common laborer in the cities, taking the $2 figure, which is the most common.

In the Congregational Year-Book about 600 salaries are enumerated for ministers in Massachusetts. Their average is about $1,400, but if a few of the high ones were omitted the average would fall rapidly down to $1,000 or thereabouts. About thirty are of $600 a year or below, some with and some without a parsonage. The salaries today average lower than they did two years ago when the Year-Book was issued. Here are educated men with only the compensation which the ordinary, unskilled city laborer receives. In the last report of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society the "average salary" for its missionaries is thus returned: for 1892, $766.58; for 1893, $777.65; for 1894, $812.11; for 1895, $804.83; for 1896, $791.90.

When the laborer is paid $2.50 per day his annual compensation, on the basis of 300 working days to the year, becomes $750, and when it is $3, as it is in some instances, it is $900. There are many ministers all through the rural districts of New England, and doubtless all other parts of the country, who do not receive more than is earned, according to the current estimate of value of service in the open market, by men who have never given a tithe of the time that the ministers have given for preparation for their life work.

The difference between the market value of service to the public and the higher value which must attach to the work of these ministers is painfully apparent by these figures. They are far from being a credit to the state of civilization in which such facts can be true. But it is useless to quarrel with the facts. These things are a feature of the civilization of the present day, and the balance of compensation for the educated and struggling minister, who is rearing a family and educating sons and daughters at college, must be found in the consciousness of service given to humanity. But that consciousness will not pay board and tuition bills, nor will it renew threadbare clothing, nor fill the coal bin. It is purely a moral comfort, to be made the most of by those who have nothing better to fall back upon.

Yet it is said, to the honor of these poorly paid ministers, that they face this situation, knowing that it is before them and that their compensation and their share of the good things of life will be small compared with what they might make if they were to devote themselves to business pursuits. Surely it is a discredit to our appreciation of service in the uplifting of humanity that a laborer in the streets, under the direction of a boss, with no responsibility for the success of his work, no mental demand in laying out his year's operations, no strain over great opportunities to be filled faithfully for the eternal well-being of those under his charge, no apprehension of the displeasure of a critical public, receives as large a financial reward as the man who has to face all these obstacles and to bear all these burdens.

The minister must sustain a scale of living commensurate with the respect which is paid to his profession. He must practice hospitality to a degree unknown to the laborer. He doubtless does (whether he should or not) have a deeper anxiety for the education of his children, and does endure far larger sacrifices in order that the family may have a high mental training.

The sympathies of the political students of the times are turned more than ever in late years to the large accumulations of wealth, and to the comparatively small properties of the laboring people. But with a grade of compensation in which common laborers receive as much as many ministers, and in which skilled laborers receive much more, there seems to be room for considering others than the wage-earners. Many skilled workmen are receiving higher pay than many men who have given from four to ten years for their education, and who are not below mediocrity either—men who, if they had entered some mechanical occupation, instead of going to college, would have been, financially, far better off today. On the material side of it there is little encouragement for such to become educated in order to fit themselves for their life work. It is only when the patriotic, unselfish and public-spirited side of the case is considered that the high value of these men to the state appears. The lives which must be recorded as failures, measured by the standard of the wage-market, are really what makes our Government and constitution possible and permits the men of more material mold to secure higher pecuniary compensation than many whose service to mankind is really unspeakably larger. In the present order of things there is no remedy for this, but in the adjustment which is coming through the self-sacrifice of the under-paid ministers there will be a different standard of worth sometime.

THE FINANCES OF OUR BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES

In response to many inquiries, we print this week on another page a table showing the receipts and expenses of the Six National Congregational Societies for 1886 and for 1896. This table has been sent to the officers of each of the societies, who have certified to us that these figures are correct according to their annual reports.

As will be seen, the average increase in operating expenses during the last ten years has been from about nine per cent. to about twelve and one-half per cent. of the receipts. In 1886 it cost $148,643.92 to collect and administer $1,613,281.34, while in 1896 it cost $256,682.53 to collect and administer $2,057,563.75.

It is not difficult to explain the reasons for this increase in expenses in face of comparatively lessened receipts. The first half of the last decade was a period of business prosperity. At its beginning some, at least, of the societies were still administering their affairs on the scale of an earlier period, when their incomes had been much less and the work much more restricted. But at this time their receipts were increasing from year to year, and of course the work was correspondingly enlarged, involving greater expenses. Their directors were encouraged to expect and to plan for still further growth. In 1893 the business panic suddenly and severely affected their incomes. But in the hope that the country would speedily rally from its depression, the business arrangements of the societies were continued on substantially the same scale, as was the case with most business enterprises. Prolonged depression compelled greater expense in endeavoring to collect money enough to save the societies from debt and their work from disaster. This was only partially successful. Some of the agencies for this purpose called for largely added appropriations. The special efforts to extinguish accumulated debts, as in raising the Howard and Jubilee funds, required the distribution of more printed information and other expenses. Even the process of reduction on the field, in some cases temporarily cost more than continuance of the work on the same scale would have done.

Thus the societies now find themselves burdened with increased expenses, with diminished incomes, or, if their receipts have kept up with past years, it is because of money obtained at high cost to pay debts rather than to be applied to work in the field, for which they have been compelled to cut down appropriations largely. The burden laid on their directors is a heavy one. They are mostly men of great responsibilities in the ministry or in business. They give their services freely without remuneration and solely in the interest of the churches. The business they are administering belongs to the churches. Home and foreign missionaries, finding their small salaries reduced and their work seriously curtailed, urge their necessities on the officers of the societies, who strive to make the churches understand and care for the responsibilities they have assumed. The increase in expenses, as we have shown, is to a large degree caused by the assumed necessity of greater efforts to inform the churches and persuade them to maintain their work on the scale which they have demanded. It is for them to answer whether or not so large a proportion of their contributions must continue to be used to induce them to furnish the means necessary to carry on their missionary enterprises. The question also should be carefully considered whether greater economy in administration is possible. Indeed, the Home Missionary Society proposes to test the matter by reducing its operating expenses for the coming year by $20,000, or about 22 per cent., and also its appropriations for the field by 18 per cent., making a total cut of $75,000. We are informed also that the American Missionary Association and the Church Building Society have already taken steps to reduce considerably their operating expenses.

So far as we know, this is the first time the total exhibit of the receipts and expenses of the six societies have been published together. We have issued them at the earliest date convenient since all the reports were printed, and we propose to print them each year hereafter. We may have occasion in future to analyze the reports and consider them in detail, but our present purpose is simply to set them before those who are partners in the benevolent work of the denomination, and to ask that they be carefully considered by all who are interested in that work.

REJOICING IN THE LORD

Personal reasons render it natural and proper for the Christian to rejoice. The great issue of life has been met satisfactorily. His face is set heavenwards. He is assured of forgiveness for sin, of aid in living righteously, of the fruitfulness of his endeavors, of the companionship of the purest and noblest souls, of the fullest appreciation and the sweetest sympathy, of increasing opportunities and of the ultimate explanations of the mysteries of life. He has learned the secrets of happiness in this world, contentment and fidelity in service, and also in the world to come, the companionship of the Redeemer and the redeemed.

More general, although not less powerful, reasons also impel him to rejoice. The revelations of God in human history cheer him. He perceives that divine truth steadily is gaining dominion over mankind, that righteousness is not a failing but a conquering force and that modern civilization, in spite of its many grave defects, is a great advance upon that of any former period of the world's history. He comprehends that the progress of humanity towards goodness is accelerated with every generation, that hostility to Christianity often is directed far more against its faults and mistakes than against its essential principles, and that the helpful influence of even the humblest believer may be immeasurable in the ultimate scope of its reach and power.

Surely these are solid reasons for rejoicing in the Lord. Let any who, nevertheless, are tempted to be disheartened, remind themselves that not to rejoice thus is to misrepresent their Lord and his cause. His gospel is one of good tidings. To seem to regard it otherwise is to lead people to misunderstand it and perhaps to disregard it. It does not seem real to any to whom its adherents appear to find it different from, and less than, it is declared to be.

True Christian rejoicing, of course, is a permanent mental state rather than a merely temporary mood. That it usually is thoughtful, tranquil and self-controlled rather than boisterous is because it is elemental and enduring. It is the ever-blooming flower of the undying plant, happiness, which is firmly rooted in the soil of eternal devotion.

CURRENT HISTORY

Greece Defies Europe

To the ultimatum of the Powers, Greece, just as her limit of time expired, replied: "We will not withdraw either troops or fleet, sent to preserve peace and restore order where you were pledged to do it, and failed. We will willingly let the Cretans decide whether they prefer Turkish or Grecian suzerainty with Cretan autonomy, but we will not withdraw and leave them to rapine and anarchy." During the six days that intervened between the delivery of the Powers' ultimatum and this noble reply Greece prepared for the worst. Troops and provisions were landed on the southern side of Crete, despite the nominal blockade. Reserves were called out and sent to the Thessalian border. Enthusiasm reigned in Athens, and King George and the Parliament sent forth appeals calculated to stir the patriotism of every Greek and rouse the sympathy of lovers of liberty everywhere. We doubt whether the concert of the Powers will bear the strain which Greece's defiance will put upon it.

"Public opinion," which Lord Salisbury last week confessed was more influential and uncontrollable than ministerial wishes or wiles, public opinion in Great Britain, France and Italy will not tolerate the use of force against Greece by those Powers. In Great Britain indignation is unrestrained and breaks forth in speeches in Parliament, sermons, addresses at open air mass meetings, editorials and signed letters of sympathy sent to King George. The direct appeal to the Archbishop of Canterbury by the head of the Greek Church of course has had telling effect.

But should the Powers determine to coerce Greece they can do little before she will declare war on Turkey, arouse all the latent war spirit in Macedonia and the Balkans, and once war is declared the end no man can foresee. Turkish troops in large numbers, led by German officers, now stand ready to pour into Greece at a moment's notice. Experts differ as to the outcome of a war between Turkey and Greece, and they also differ as to whether such a conflict would necessarily cause a resort to arms by the great Powers, but the preponderance of opinion is that such a result would follow. That Greece has dared to be so bold without assurance of support and practical victory for her contentions few believe, but which Power it is, Great Britain or Russia, future events alone can disclose. But all agree that the disintegration of Turkish power in Europe has gone far on its way, and the situation is so critical that war is actually nearer now than at any time in a decade or two. In view of these facts, how important it is that the representative of the United States in Constantinople should be a man of much experience, tact, courage and prestige.

President McKinley

Our Washington correspondent has described the events of the inauguration in such a way as to make it unnecessary here to do more than call attention to some facts that may otherwise be overlooked, and to set forth in a concise way the principles and policies which seem likely to govern the incoming Administration.

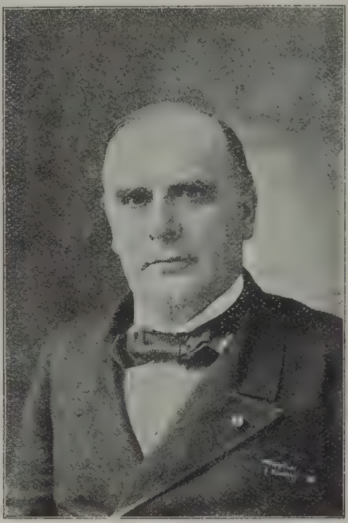
No one who heard or read Mr. McKinley's farewell speech to his neighbors at Canton, or who witnessed his devotion to his wife and mother while journeying to Washington and during the first hours of their stay in the national capital, or who saw him beaming with delight as the multitude cheered him whenever it had the opportunity, could fail to be impressed with the opinion that we have in the incoming President a man who has a heart responsive to all the simple but deep emotions which are primal and commendable.

Nor can one who reads the words with which he opened and closed his inaugural address fail to be convinced that he enters upon his task, so full of power, privilege and responsibility, fully realizing the futility of all his efforts unless they be done as in the sight of God. How else can such solemn words as these be interpreted?

> Fellow-citizens: In obedience to the will of the people, and in their presence, by the authority vested in me by this oath, I assume the arduous and responsible duties of President of the United States, relying on the support of my countrymen and invoking the guidance of Almighty God. Our faith teaches that there is no safer reliance than upon the God of our fathers, who has so singularly favored the American people in every national trial, and who will not forsake us so long as we obey his commandments and walk humbly in his footsteps. . . .
>
> Let me again repeat the words of the oath administered by the chief justice, which, in their respective spheres, so far as applicable, I would have all my countrymen observe:
>
> "I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."
>
> This is the obligation I have reverently taken before the Lord Most High. To keep it will be my single purpose, my constant prayer—and I shall confidently rely upon the forbearance and assistance of all the people in the discharge of my solemn responsibilities.

Mr. McKinley escorted his mother to church last Sunday. He will be a regular attendant at the Foundry M. E. Church, which is within walking distance of the White House.

The Inaugural



Barring its unqualified indorsement of protection—and even in this respect it is less insistent than might have been expected—Mr. McKinley's inaugural sets forth a program which comes nearer being nonpartisan than any similar utterance known to this generation. Adherence to the gold standard, reform of the currency system, economy in expenditure and abstinence from debt, religious toleration, execution of law by regularly constituted authorities, punishment of lawbreakers—capitalists as well as wage-earners, a non-partisan Civil Service, arbitration of international disputes, a dignified, self-respecting foreign policy, abolition of sectional hatred—who is there, North or South, East or West, Democrat, Republican or Populist, who does not believe in most, if not all, of these principles? His suggestions respecting currency reform and the appointment of a monetary commission show that Mr. McKinley realizes the significance of the Indianapolis Convention of Business Men, and will give a free hand to Mr. Gage. His pledge to enforce laws now in existence intended to restrict dangerous combinations of capital, and to recommend and support new statutes calculated to still further restrict trusts, indicates that the President is alert to the signs of the times. The most radical civil service reformer can take no exceptions to the unqualified indorsement of this reform principle, by which renewed pledge Mr. McKinley shows that his record as a congressman is to be complemented by one equally notable as an Executive. His assurance that it will be his constant aim "to do nothing and permit nothing to be done that will arrest or disturb the growing sentiment of unity and co-operation" between sections of the country formerly antagonistic will have a favorable effect in the South, and yet at the same time he makes it equally plain that free and fair elections are the ideal ever to be kept in mind, and that "lynchings must not be tolerated in a great and civilized country like the United States." Pre-eminent, however, among all his suggestions in its immediate and practical influence is his exhortation to the Senate to ratify the arbitration treaty with Great Britain, while his outline of the proper foreign policy for us to follow will discourage the "jingoes" among us, and at the same time reassure those of us who hope for a different attitude toward American citizens deprived of rights guaranteed by treaties with Turkey and Spain.

The Cabinet

The following list of Cabinet officials was sent to the Senate on the 5th, and confirmed the same day practically without any opposition, though after some discussion:

> John Sherman of Ohio, to be Secretary of State; Lyman J. Gage of Illinois, to be Secretary of the Treasury; Russell A. Alger of Michigan, to be Secretary of War; Joseph McKenna of California, to be Attorney General; James A. Gary of Maryland, to be Postmaster General; John D. Long of Massachusetts, to be Secretary of the Navy; Cornelius N. Bliss of New York, to be Secretary of the Interior; James Wilson of Iowa, to be Secretary of Agriculture.

Of these the veteran in public service is John Sherman, who retires from the Senate to assume responsibility for our foreign policy. We wish that we could enthuse over this nomination, but we cannot. Discretion in method, tenacity of purpose and physical strength are lacking, and, instead of being a staff for the President to lean upon, he will, we fear, cause him more trouble than any other member of the Cabinet. Mr. Gage is the "discovery" of the Cabinet, who, while without experience as a public official, comes to his new duties fully equipped in technical experience as a financier, and with a range of information and breadth of sympathy respecting other pressing problems which few men in this country possess. If there are any who doubt this we commend to their attention the biography and character analysis of Mr. Gage in the Review of Reviews (March). Mr. Alger has had experience as an executive, once serving the State of Michigan as governor, and his military career in the Civil War will help him in administering the War Department. Mr. McKenna served in Congress with Mr. McKinley, and comes from the Federal bench to prosecute offenders against Federal law. Mr. Gary, representing to some extent the new South, is a man whose administration of vast business interests justifies the hope that he will administer wisely the department which so vitally influences all business and social life. Mr. Long, as legislator in Congress and governor of Massachusetts, has been tested and tried and not found wanting in ability or courage to stand for reforms. Mr. Bliss, one of New York's greatest merchants and cleanest Republicans, will, we are sure, administer economically and wisely a department which calls insistently for such administration. Lacking technical knowledge of Western problems he will not fail to administer in accordance with large, wise principles. Mr. Wilson is a successful, practical farmer and also a professor of agriculture in an Iowa college, with much experience as a legislator, local and national, and apparently a man pre-eminently fitted for the post.

This Cabinet, though not great, is far from mediocre. In Messrs. Long and McKenna the President has old personal friends, whose loyalty he tested while they served together in Congress. In Messrs. Gage, Gary and Bliss he has men who will splendidly represent the business interests of the country. In Messrs. Sherman and Long he has experienced politicians of the best type. The seat of authority in our politics having shifted from the Eastern seaboard to the Mississippi Valley, it is not surprising to find the majority of the Cabinet taken from the Interior, and yet it is well balanced. Only two of the Cabinet are college bred men. Ecclesiastically speaking, they range from the Roman Catholic Attorney General to the Unitarian Secretary of the Navy. Mr. Sherman is not a church member, but inclines to the Roman Catholic faith. Mr. Gage was one of Dr. Swing's most faithful adherents. Mr. Bliss is a Congregationalist and a trustee of Broadway Tabernacle, New York. Yet, led by the Methodist President, they will all work together harmoniously, so absolutely are questions of state and church dissevered in this country.

The New Senate

It is doubtful whether at any prior time in the history of the Senate so many new men entered this body as have been sworn in since March 4. The best of those senators whose terms expired March 4 have either been returned, or have retired because of physical frailty, while several of the least deserving of this class have been relegated to obscurity, let us hope. Mr. Hill of New York, for instance, is out of office for the first time in twenty-five years. We think it can be safely said that the infusion of new blood brings with it the promise of better days for the Senate. Moreover, in its new presiding officer, the vice-president, Mr. Hobart, the Senate has a man of far larger caliber and of far greater personal force than the average vice-president, and though the address with which he began his service as presiding officer of the Senate was in perfect taste, it also revealed, in a veiled way to be sure, his intention to be more than a figurehead, in short, to be a reformer if need be. He realizes that the people will back him in an attempt to make the Senate "fruitful of works," to quote his own expression; and he is sure of popular support if the Senate dares to dispute by its acts, as it so often has in the past, his contention that "all the interests of good government call for prompt and positive legislation. . . . To obstruct the regular course of wise and prudent legislation after the fullest and freest discussion is neither consistent with true senatorial courtesy, conducive to the welfare of the people, or in compliance with their just expectations."

National Legislation—Successful and Unsuccessful

President Cleveland was consistent up to the last, and by his veto of the Immigration Bill, his failure to sign the sundry civil, naval, Indian and agricultural appropriation bills has imposed upon the special session of the new Congress a responsibility which neither the new president nor Speaker Reed cared to have cast upon it. The veto of the Immigration Bill was due to Mr. Cleveland's inability to assent to a law radically reversing our historic policy, and establishing a test which he believed would be ineffective. Moreover, certain provisions of the law were sure to involve us in controversy with Canada and call forth retaliatory legislation there. He declined to sign the appropriation bills because they came to him at an hour too late to give opportunity for that scrutiny which the presence of countless jobs made imperative. The last days of every Congress are periods when the worst passions and basest motives come to the surface. Trickery and jobbery then have opportunities which grow out of the exigencies of the hour, and the legislative product seldom will endure inspection. With a weak or unprincipled man in the presidential office the opportunity for theft is greater than when a man like Mr. Cleveland is at the helm. Men differ much as to the amount of money which the country has lost or gained by his constructive, positive acts. But there can be no doubt that by his exercise of the veto power he has saved the taxpayers many dollars. As one scans the record of the Fifty-fourth Congress it is seen to be nearly as barren of results as was the Fifty-third.

The Arbitration Treaty

With the death of the Fifty-fourth Congress all amendments to the arbitration treaty became void, and it will now go to the foreign relations committee just as it came from the hands of Mr. Olney and Sir Julian Pauncefote. The new, though temporary, chairman of the foreign relations committee, Senator Davis of Minnesota, is a Radical rather than a Conservative, yet he has the merit of being able and exceedingly well informed, open to argument, but resolute when once a conclusion is formed; and whatever the committee may decide to do with this or other matters brought before it, it may be counted upon to command more respect for consistency and dignity than it has enjoyed under the lead of Mr. Sherman. With an unusually large number of new men entering the Senate coming directly from the people who favor the arbitration treaty, and with such an indorsement of it as Mr. McKinley ennobled his inaugural with, we are confident that it will be ratified in substantially its original form perhaps before the extra session which the President has called for March 15. Mr. McKinley's words on this subject deserve reproduction here and must have weight with the senators. He said:

> Arbitration is the true method of settlement of international as well as local or individual difference. It was recognized as the best means of adjustment of differences between employers and employés by the Forty-ninth Congress, in 1886, and its application was extended to our diplomatic relations by the unanimous concurrence of the Senate and House of the Fifty-first Congress, in 1890. The latter resolution was accepted as the basis of negotiations with us by the British House of Commons, in 1893, and upon our invitation a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain was signed at Washington and transmitted to the Senate for its ratification in January last. Since this treaty is clearly the result of our own initiative, since it has been recognized as the leading feature of our foreign policy throughout our entire national history—the adjustment of difficulties by judicial methods rather than by force of arms—and since it presents to the world the glorious example of reason and peace, not passion and war, controlling the relations between two of the greatest nations of the world, an example certain to be followed by others, I respectfully urge the early action of the Senate thereon, not merely as a matter of policy, but as a duty to mankind. The importance and moral influence of the ratification of such a treaty can hardly be overestimated in the cause of advancing civilization. It may well engage the best thought of the statesmen and people of every country, and I cannot but consider it fortunate that it was reserved to the United States to have the leadership in so grand a work.

Too High a Price for Comforts

Vigilance becomes more and more imperative as the complexity of life in our great cities increases; and enormous structures above ground, and excavations under ground, whether for the transportation of passengers, merchandise, gas or electricity, multiply vastly the danger to the pedestrian, unless along with the engineering skill which makes them possible there goes in like proportion a recognition of, and sense of responsibility for, the increased opportunities for disaster if workmen or employés are incompetent or careless. Just where the responsibility lies for the awful explosion in Boston, March 4, in which six people were instantly killed, three others fatally, and scores of others seriously injured, and property valued at $50,000 destroyed, will be determined, we trust, as promptly as is consistent with thoroughness and justice. Then, when those thought guilty of criminal negligence are found, let them have a swift but fair trial and the heaviest penalty the law permits, if proved incompetent or careless. The legislature of the State and the city officials already have moved promptly toward this end. Let the public see that there is no let-up on the pressure. Justice to the dead and dying and the living demands retribution, in order that there may be reformation, and safety for the millions who walk the streets or ride in the cars.

Rome and Canadian Parochial Schools

The representative of the Laurier ministry sent to Rome to lay before Leo XIII. the evidence charging certain of the Catholic clergy with unlawful interference with Canadian politics has returned, and reports that a special commission of cardinals has been appointed to consider the case. When it has reported a permanent apostolic delegate for Canada is to be appointed. Meanwhile, the mandament which was to issue from the Catholic bishops respecting the Manitoba schools settlement will not be issued, and the Catholics of Manitoba have announced their intention to re establish their own schools at their own expense, aided, of course, by the faithful throughout Canada. The recent Catholic conservative victory in a Manitoba by-election was won by the use of clerical authority over the electors, and the Liberals intend to have the Archbishop responsible for it haled into court, as he should be. The courts in the eastern provinces already have declared elections so influenced null and void.

NOTES.

Do the men who were so optimistic when Utah made professions of reform view with undisturbed souls the suggestion of Senator Cannon that a statue of Brigham Young be placed in the Statuary Hall of the Capitol of the nation? Yet it is as logical as anything well could be.

Those who wished to make the appointment of chaplains and religious advisers in Massachusetts' prisons and reformatory institutions a matter for the wardens of those institutions, and not the governor as now, to decide have had leave to withdraw their petition. It is well.

Latest advices from Ponape to the Hawaiian Mission Board indicate that the Spanish officials are dealing in a more kindly way with the American missionaries' converts, and permitting a greater freedom in religious matters. The strained relations between the United States and Spain, owing to Cuban complications, might reasonably have been expected to produce quite a different state of affairs.

The preamble to the resolutions offered in the Kansas legislature last week, giving statutory force to the Ten Commandments, is interesting:

> Whereas, The men of the present generation have become doubters and scoffers; and
>
> Whereas, They no longer live in fear of God; and
>
> Whereas, Having no fear of punishment beyond the grave, they continually violate the law given to the world from Mount Sinai.

This would seem to prove the contention of those who insist that underneath the Populist movement there is much of the Puritan spirit and belief in God. But it reveals little faith in their fellowmen.

IN BRIEF.

While we strive to make every issue of The Congregationalist strong and readable in every particular, we are especially impressed this week, as we glance over our forty pages, with the variety and timeliness of the matter presented. Able articles from Drs. Behrends and Stimson deal with questions of vital importance to the denomination, a novel trip of Yale theologues is graphically described, Deacon Dudley's profitable Sunday afternoon with a Boston Labor Union is set forth, and last week's festivities in Washington are delineated by a woman's delicate hand. Mrs. Allbright furnishes a striking story for the Home Department. Our page of Gleanings reflects the opinions of a number of our readers on various topics. The news columns are as full as usual, and the statement about the finances of our benevolent societies has been prepared with great care, and collates figures never before brought together in this fashion.

The benefactions of a tobacco dealer to McGill University, Montreal, have amounted to $2,100,000. It is fortunate that so much of profits on the vile weed has not gone up in smoke.

A vessel sailed into New York harbor last week which had stowed away in its hold a huge block of lava from Maui, where Samuel Chapman Armstrong was born. It will be sent South to Hampton and placed over the grave of one of the knightliest of Americans.

Rev. Dr. H. A. Hazen has won. The New England Genealogical Society has voted in favor of his suggestion that women be admitted as members. If a committee appointed to investigate the legality of the step reports that under the society's charter they can be admitted they will be.

Many appreciative words have reached us concerning our recent special number on Mt. Holyoke College. A large extra edition has already been disposed of, but a few available copies still remain, which can be had at six cents apiece. We are glad to hear of the good results already accruing from the observance of Mary Lyon Sunday.

The studies in sociology pursued by Yale students in New York city, as told by our correspondent on page 338, have a fascinating interest. We should not be surprised to find their examples followed by students in other institutions. We would not, however, advise young men without experience to attempt such investigations except under competent guidance.

There is often a grim humor and always sturdy American spirit in what Theodore Roosevelt does and says. When Ahlwardt, the Jew-baiter, arrived in New York to preach anti-Semitism, Roosevelt ordered a special corps of policemen who were Jews to guard him from the assaults of any other Jews. How could the man have been educated more effectually in the first principles of our democracy?

Rev. J. W. Suter, editor of The Church, having published in a Boston daily an unqualified apology for and retraction of the language recently printed by The Church impugning the validity of the bishop's pastoral on the inspiration of Scripture, the standing committee of the diocese of Massachusetts, which had begun to consider the necessity of judicial procedure against him, has dropped the case.

If President McKinley means to maintain the dignity of our Government in its relations with other nations and to protect American citizens abroad—as we believe he does—and Secretary Sherman agrees with him in this purpose, then we do not know any one better fitted to represent the United States at Constantinople than Hon. John W. Foster, ex-Secretary of State; and we hope that, with assurances of hearty support, he would accept the position if it were offered to him.

The announcements which disfigure the front of the People's Temple, Boston, says Zion's Herald, "are considered by our ministers and laity in general sensational, unseemly and humiliating." That notorious institution seems to have descended a step lower still in using the wall of what is called a Christian temple for posters to advertise wares of other houses quite different from "the best spiritual blessings in the city," which are declared to be furnished inside that structure.

The head of the Christian Scientists, Mary Baker Eddy, has issued an order forbidding any of them in the United States and Canada to teach a student Christian Science for a year, beginning March 14. She directs that all Christian Scientists shall sell as many of her books as they can, and adds, "If a member of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, shall fail to obey this injunction, it will render him liable to lose his membership in this church." Yet the leaders of that church, so-called, are arguing and urging that Congregational churches ought to commit to it some of their members by fraternal letters of recommendation!

At this hour of jubilation, when men's thoughts are either reverting to the successes of Mr. Cleveland or the opportunities of Mr. McKinley, it is not inopportune to consider how different all might have been had Guiteau not shot Garfield, or had the surgeons of that day possessed the x-ray apparatus which now enables the practitioner to locate the offending bullet with almost faultless accuracy. Dr. G. F. Shrady of the Medical Record, in his Forum article on Recent Triumphs in Medicine and Surgery, says on this point: "With the Röntgen ray the whereabouts of the truant could doubtless have been accurately determined, and a successful operation for its dislodgment might have been possible."

The Providence Journal, attempting to give reasons why colleges and churches should be taxed, declares that "religion is only in the vaguest way regarded as a public benefit." If that were in any sense true this country would be a very poor place to live in. The opening sentence of President McKinley's inaugural, after announcing his assumption of his office, stands in refreshing contrast to this libel on the American people. The President said: "Our faith teaches that there is no safer reliance than upon the God of our fathers, who has so singularly favored the American people in every national trial, and who will not forsake us so long as we obey his commandments and walk humbly in his footsteps."

The Church Service Society is a new organization formed last week in New York city by representative Presbyterians. Rev. Dr. L. F. Benson of Philadelphia is its president and Rev. Dr. Henry van Dyke vice-president. Its purpose is to study the forms of public worship, present and past, in Presbyterian and other churches, with the aim to promote harmony and unity. Here is a field of deep interest, which will reward study and lead those who examine it beyond the consideration of forms. Changes in methods of worship mean changes in men's ideas of God. We hope this society will be able to tell us what these changes have been and what they signify. But while they seek to promote unity we trust they will not try to establish uniformity.

Why is it that a black sheep is so apt to attach to himself the sympathies of some very respectable people? When we consider how critical the average modern church is of a man's personal and pastoral qualifications, even when his character is as pure as gold, it seems a marvel that bad men who creep into the ministry should succeed in getting decent people to indorse them, ministerial associations even temporarily to harbor them and churches to pass flattering resolutions in regard to them. If some of the ruthless criticism vented upon good men in the ministry could be transmuted into indignation against the few scamps who disguise themselves in ministerial vestments, it would not take so long to hunt them down and drive them out as it sometimes does now.

Dr. George S. Mallory, editor of The Churchman, died in New York city last week, aged fifty-nine years. He graduated at Trinity College and the Berkeley Divinity School, then served ten years as instructor at Trinity College, later became its treasurer and a liberal donor to its funds. For thirty-one years he and his brother, Marshall H., have managed and edited The Churchman, the leading Protestant Episcopal religious weekly in this country. Other journals of that church in New York have come and gone, thousands of dollars have been sunk by rivals, but The Churchman has survived. Under Dr. Mallory it has been tolerant of all schools in the church. He was a man of wide information, and had standing as an interpreter of canon law.

It was the dream of Mother McKinley's life that her son should become a clergyman and a Methodist bishop. She has been disappointed and yet made happy, for she believes in Providence and the providential ordering of personal and national affairs. The Bible on which the President took the oath was printed, bound and specially decorated at the Western Methodist Book Concern, and presented to Mr. McKinley by four bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. It bears the following inscription:

> Presented to his Excellency, William McKinley, by the bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, on behalf of eight millions of redeemed Americans, as a token of their high appreciation of his love for the Declaration of Independence, his devotion to the Constitution as amended, his fidelity and bravery in defending the honor of the flag, his loyalty to the Ten Commandments and Golden Rule, and his advocacy of protection to American institutions, industries and men.

Without losing its vigorous grip in this country, the Y. M. C. A. cause is marching forward in other lands. Under the lead of J. R. Mott, the College Y. M. C. A. field secretary, a Students' Y. M. C. A. of Japan has just been organized. The central committee consists of ten Japanese and five foreign missionaries, Dr. J. D. Davis of our mission being one of the number. The basis of union adopted was membership in churches which accept the Bible as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and Christ as the only Saviour, true God and true man. The remarkable spiritual blessing which has attended Mr. Mott's student conferences in other Asiatic countries has characterized all his work in Japan. Mr. Pettee writes that not for years, if ever before, has Okayama seen such meetings. At one gathering thirty-two young men signified their willingness to accept Christ.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM NEW YORK

Dr. Behrends and Dr. Abbott

Dr. Behrends never speaks in his pulpit without having something to say, something worth hearing or reading and pondering in the exercise of one's best powers. According to reports of his most intelligent hearers and the extracts given in the papers he has never done more solid and useful work than that called out in the last few weeks in defense of the Bible. Perhaps the strongest, most profound and practically useful of these discourses was that preached to his people on the last Sabbath in February and given for substance in the Brooklyn Eagle of March 1. Not often of late has a more thoroughly studied and convincing sermon on his general theme been known as emanating from any pulpit in the land. It is not easy to see how its auther can conscientiously evade the duty of giving the discourse to the Christian public for the widest possible distribution. It could not fail to gain a general reading, and would go far to answer the questions of honest inquirers and to solve the doubts of many sincere but untaught souls, troubled with the specious guesses or the bold assumptions of pseudo critics of the Bible, and who have a right to look to such thorough scholars as Dr. Behrends to help them out. And then there are multitudes of Bible students who would like nothing better than to see just how some of the self-constituted and self styled "higher critics" of the sacred volume would extricate themselves from the exceedingly tight places into which the doctor's learning, dialectic skill and spiritual insight locks them up by this timely discourse.

University Settlement Work

The report of the University Settlement work for 1896, under the lead of Mr. James Reynolds, shows progress in finding out and relieving the deepest wants of our East Side population and in correcting the numerous abuses visited on them by rapacious and conscienceless villians. Among these are pretended physicians, male and female, pretended insurers of property and life, sellers of furniture on the installment plan, venders of worthless drugs, etc. The Penny Provident Fund scheme is working well, having nearly 2,000 depositors and many more coming. But the libraries seem to show the largest results, 1,087 readers using 4,000 to 5,000 volumes a month. The woman's auxiliary, with its kindergarten work, various methods of social reform and visits for counsel, finds the same thing true as to the library. The books are read with avidity, none are lost or stolen, and their good influence on the readers is more and more manifest.

Anthony Comstock's Work

The Society for the Suppression of Vice celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary by a large and earnest meeting in Carnegie Hall, Mr. M. K. Jesup in the chair. Mr. Anthony Comstock made his annual report. Dr. John Hall offered prayer. Mr. Jesup, Dr. Faunce and State Superintendent of Public Instruction Skinner made addresses, in which Mr. Comstock received deservedly high commendation.

A rehearsal of the society's history shows a vast amount of work done and immense gain made in the quarter century, with much of the same work yet undone and the secretary's path none the smoother with the passing years. This, however, is certain: good men and women are getting rid of much of their doubt as to the need, practicability and wisdom of the prolonged fight with this deadly form of iniquity, and are giving to Mr. Comstock more of their sympathy and support.

"The New Journalism"

The war on "the new" (and nasty) "journalism" is breaking over the pale of our churches and ministers. Decent people of all names and professions and decent papers—notably the Post and the Tribune—are rendering good service in the ranks. The Newark (N. J.) public library lately by vote excluded two of our unsavory city dalies from its files. Several other reading-rooms over there have followed suit, and the example bids fair to be largely contagious. A prominent banker here, whose family has been slandered by a sheet that saved itself by a timely apology, publicly announces that he will cast aside the natural revulsion from meddling with such a vile business and sacrificing valuable time, and will prosecute to the bitter end any future attacks of this kind. If enough citizens will do likewise the abomination will be crushed. HUNTINGTON.

DEACON DUDLEY'S SUNDAYS IN BOSTON

V.

BY ALDEN ENDECOTT

A drizzling rain was falling on pavements already coated with thin ice. Hannah was sure that it would be folly for one of her years and with such fragile bones to venture forth, but Jacob was not to be deterred by any such condition of affairs, however parlous. Had not special arrangements for his admission at the Central Labor Union that Sunday afternoon been made by a clever young trades-unionist whom he had met in such a strange way last summer? Was he to lose the opportunity of seeing a picked body of wage-earners, or to miss the chance of hearing them discuss their own particular problems of daily life?

So, as Hannah settled down to write to their beloved son William, a civil engineer in Spokane, Jacob arrayed himself in suitable garments and soon set forth for 45 Eliot Street. A rainy Sunday afternoon in a great city is a dismal time for those who do not have pleasant homes, congenial companions or who lack the art of finding solace in books or music, and as Deacon Jacob Dudley walked through the streets of the South End, as he saw the closed saloons, the crowded tenements, the groups of loafers around the corners and the many whose only Sunday reading was the inflated, noxious, vulgar newspaper, he wondered whether society was doing all it might to make it easy, or possible even, for these herded people to spend their hours of leisure in ways calculated to elevate them, and purify society as well.

In fact, the deacon felt far from happy as he found his way up the stairs to the hall where the labor leaders were assembled. It had been gratifying to find the saloons closed actually as well as nominally, but the glimpses he had had of the home life and personal habits of the multitude had saddened him. Yet the deacon knew in his heart of hearts that neither the size nor position of a country house was an infallible index of the character of its inmates, nor the measure of the felicity or virtue there, and any of the residents of the Denison House, whom he met later that afternoon, could have told him that the family life in some of the forbidding tenements which he had passed was far nearer the Christ ideal than the life in not a few Back Bay mansions.

Truth to tell, the deacon needed just such an awakening as came to him that day to save him from losing his faith in the plain people. His life in a comfortable Back Bay boarding house, his exemption of late from toil and all worry about the wherewithal to settle his debts, his delight in the spiritual and æsthetic opportunities which Boston affords to people of leisure, had made him forget his own humble origin and his own early struggles for a living, and filled him with a pride which, if it had not had its fall in Boston, would have caused him trouble on returning to his home in St. Johnsbury.

Perhaps Jacob's report to Hannah will best set forth the impressions and convictions which developed during Jacob's sojourn in the strange land of Trades-Unionism.

"I went up stairs, past narrow halls crowded with men smoking, arguing, vote winning, lobbying. My friend satisfied a doorkeeper that I was 'safe,' and took me into a small hall crowded with not less than 150 men and a dozen women, delegates from the many trades-unions of the city. They were a clean, wholesome-looking lot of folks, resolute, shrewd, self-possessed and self-respecting, well versed in parliamentary law and able to speak tersely and to the point.

"On the walls of the hall hung charters granted by the Federation of Labor and Knights of Labor to the local unions, and some furled and scarred flags and banners also were to be seen. All the furniture was very plain and worn. At one table sat an official receiving dues. At another table sat officials who filed but did not pass upon credentials, this being done later by a representative committee appointed by the chair. Promptly at three o'clock the president called for order. Talking ceased, and business began immediately."

"Was there no prayer? Was it 'business' and nothing else?" asked Hannah.

"Not a word of prayer," replied Jacob, "but they did some practical, godly business, nevertheless."

"What?" asked Hannah.

"Well," replied Jacob, who felt that he had a serious task before him in pleading to Hannah for a favorable verdict on any set of men who, meeting on Sunday, failed to seek the divine guidance, "they decided, without a dissenting vote, to use all their influence with Massachusetts legislaters in favor of a bill, now before the legislature, which will compel all corporations, municipal or otherwise, to give their employés one day's rest in seven. They voted to indorse a bill, also before the legislature, which provides for 'a more humane treatment' of the poor in the charitable institutions of Boston, and provides for the management of the latter on scientific principles."

"All the Christian preachers, all the philanthropists, all the men and women in Boston who have studied the labor problem and charity problem also support these bills, don't they, Jacob?" asked Hannah.

"Yes," answered Jacob, "they do, and I've made up my mind that these labor men know more and do more that's calculated to do good than can be credited to organizations with far greater opportunities for getting light and spreading it. This afternoon they showed their sympathy with, and agreed to help, fellow-workmen in Ohio in a very substantial way. They condemned Senator Lodge's immigration restriction bill on principle, whereas to have indorsed it would have fostered their own selfish interests. Caring more for what they call 'the solidarity of mankind' than for themselves they refused to indorse a bill which proposes to shut out Canadian and European competitors. They debated long and ably a question of constitutional interpretation, the point at issue being whether an individual's lack of moral character could justly disbar him if he were duly accredited by a trades union to represent it in the federation of trades unions. Strict constructionists, jealous for the autonomy of the trades-union, insisted that the federation struck at the vital principle of the federation when it assumed to punish the man, and they declared that preservation of the permanent right of the trades-union to determine who its representatives should be was far more important than that the temporary wrong done by the selection of an unworthy man should be righted. But all those who took this position were careful to make it clear that they in no way condoned the alleged evil practices of the individual wrongdoer."

"Were you the only outsider present, Jacob?" inquired Hannah.

"No, one of Harvard's professors was there, a right manly, plain-spoken, straightforward fellow, by name Taussig, and it was fine to see how little the bookman and the wage earners, the theorist and the men of affairs, differed, when he, at their invitation, spoke to them on The Eight Hour Day Problem. As between increased wages and present hours, and present wages and lessened hours, the Harvard professor urged the men to take the latter, because the time for leisure, if profitably employed, would do more for their growth in manhood than the additional money could do."

"Why do these men meet on Sunday, Jacob?"

"Because it seems to be or is the only time when they can get together to discuss, for hours at a time, their special interests. Such meetings are held twice a month, not every week. Many of those present would far rather be at home, but duty to themselves demands that they organize for mutual aid. Beside, with most of them Sunday is only a holy day up to 12 M., then it becomes a holiday."

"Jesus, the carpenter, was not a trades-unionist was he?" interjected Hannah, surprised at Jacob's toleration. "He wouldn't spend Sunday afternoon thinking about wages, shorter hours, trusts, strikes and all that sort of thing, would he?"

"Times are different now, Hannah. He might and he might not. You know what he said as recorded in Matt. 12: 12."

IS IT ONLY AN EDDY, OR IS IT MORE

BY A. J. F. BEHRENDS, D. D.

I venture to give a bit of my personal experience and to ask my brethren whether I am the victim of hallucination or not. I find no pleasure in the convictions which are forcing themselves home upon me. I have tried to shake them off, only to find them tightening their grip upon me. So I venture to bring them out into full daylight, that others may tell me how far I am right and how far I am wrong.

I have always looked with disfavor upon elaborate theological creeds. I do not believe in demanding subscription to them, either by those who unite with the church, or by candidates for ordination to the Christian ministry. I believe that history proves that creeds are no security to sound doctrine, but are really provocative of dissent, and so are elements of disturbance.

I have also come to believe less and less in the efficiency and in the propriety of ecclesiastical censure. I have no confidence either in church courts or in councils for the exposure or the condemnation of doctrinal heresy. I have made up my mind that I will never sit as member in any such council, no matter how serious the charge of heresy may be. I believe in leaving all such matters to the individual churches. In other words, I have a profound faith in the laity, who, I believe, are in many cases a good deal more doctrinally sound than the men to whose preaching they listen. I remember one man saying to me some years since, "I go to church every Sunday morning. I always listen attentively, but I believe very little the preacher says." There are many such in the pews. Silence does not imply indorsement. The pews give us a good length of rope, but the rope is not an endless one, and the pews have a way of bringing the man who goes too far to a sudden halt.

And as I believe in throwing the responsibility for ministerial doctrinal soundness upon the churches, so I believe in meeting novel and subversive views by free and frank discussion. I fear, however, that our hostility to ecclesiastical censures has also fostered a hesitation to use freedom and boldness of speech. I have noticed that such speech is resented as discourteous and as savoring of persecution. It seems to be assumed that the critic has a right to be heard; but that the man who challenges his facts, and punctures his logic, is in the thumb-screw business. Liberty of speech is supposed to mean relief from all unfavorable comment. There is in many quarters a quiet assumption of intellectual superiority, which is galling in the extreme. The so-called liberal thinker uses words which cut to the quick, but he must not be answered in that way. I do not believe in ecclesiastical censure; but neither do I believe in the abdication of free speech. I can see only one way in which, under our Congregational usage, heresy can be met, and that is by an absolutely free and bold pulpit. That, of course, is conceded in theory; but in practice, it is discouraged, and even denounced. In many quarters the "let alone" policy is advocated and followed, with the result that the general public concludes that Congregationalists have no common, serious convictions.

There is not a drop of ecclesiasticism in me. But I believe in historical Christianity. I believe there is such a thing as apostolic doctrine, firmly rooted in the New Testament Scriptures. And, if I have read aright the history of Congregationalism, especially in New England, it has always been the sturdy advocate and expounder of a thoroughly Scriptural faith. Our theology has always been clear, definite and evangelical. It has not spoken in muffled tones. The Westminster Confession, in its origin and history, is as much our own as it belongs to the Presbyterian Church. We have freely criticised and dissented from some of its phrases, but we have never repudiated it. We have been supposed to accept it for substance of doctrine. But, unless my eyes and ears deceive me, we are drifting far away from its great landmarks. The doctrine of the Trinity is reduced to a form of logic. The incarnation is so formulated as to reduce it to the pantheistic statement of a universal indwelling of God in all men. Inspiration is reduced to intuition. Atonement dwindles down into a rhetorical expression. Expiation and propitiation have become figures of speech. Our ranks seem to be honeycombed with universalism and annihilationism. The reality of the fall is boldly denied, and the most extreme doctrines of natural evolution are openly advocated in our pulpits. Sin is declared to be only the remnant of our animal ancestry, which we are gradually sloughing off. The revolutionary theories of Wellhausen are invested with infallible authority, and the narratives of the Old Testament are reduced to a mass of fables and forgeries.

Such seems to me the present situation. Meanwhile, what is being done? Nothing. There is a good deal of restlessness. Many are bewailing the fact that men are rash and are unsettling the faith of the people. But the moaning dies away in whispers. There is no sharp challenge from those to whom the people have a right to look for guidance. We comfort each other by saying that it will all blow over, and that the good old Book will survive. And I believe that. But I also believe that the good old Book and the good old gospel may survive by swamping us. Congregationalism cannot live on its past. Its past history is associated with the most vigorous defense of the historic faith. When that historic faith is abandoned the grave of Congregationalism will have been dug. And the old faith will march over that grave to final and glorious victory. Others will rally under the banner which we have deserted and in the triumph we may have no share. For the gospel is vastly more important to Congregationalism than Congregationalism is to the gospel. The gospel can do without us, and our decadence and disappearance would not be an anomaly in history. We are urging increased activity along denominational lines. Our most imperative need is a revival of evangelical doctrine. A Scriptural faith will make us mighty, and without that we shall waste away, slowly but surely.

Is it only an eddy, or is it more? I cannot help asking the question. I hope that it is only an eddy, and that my fears are groundless. But sometimes I fear that it is more than an eddy, that it is a rising and destructive flood, not for Christianity but for Congregationalism, for Congregationalism seems to have yielded most to doctrinal vagueness and disintegration. If we are only in an eddy I shall be glad, and perhaps my brethren can reassure me. At all events I have spoken my anxious word, and I have spoken it in the painful solicitude of love.

Brooklyn, March 1.

Where Lies the Remedy

By Rev. Henry A. Stimson, D. D.

When, some months ago, I undertook to write two or three articles upon our missionary and church work, I had nothing further in mind than to call attention to a feature or two of the existing situation which deserve special consideration. The response they have met is pleasant evidence of the deep interest that is felt in the welfare of our missionary societies. Some lines of criticism have been opened and various suggestions made for meeting the exigency that presses so hard upon us. I am urged to "go to the heart" of matters and suggest a practical remedy. I am not aware that there is anything more in the situation than is known to all, or that I have any special wisdom. There has long been a standing prize for the man who can tell just what to do. Felix qui rerum potuit cognoscere causas. There is call for much hard thinking, doubtless for some free conference and possibly for not a little self-sacrifice before we get our Congregational Ship of State settled upon her course with all sails set and drawing well in the new waters which the changing times seem to be opening to us all. (For that times have changed there is no question. The churches feel it quite as much as the missionary societies; indeed, they feel it first and longest; it only reaches the societies through them.)

I am pretty confident that release from our present financial straits does not lie in any devices. Suggestions have been made that may prove valuable. Glebes in the form of gardens or farms in connection with our home missionary churches would often make it easier to support the minister, and in some rural parishes it doubtless will be possible to secure gifts of land temporarily or permanently for this use. Many home missionaries will say, "How would I have lived if it had not been for my garden?" But any extensive application of this suggestion will take time, and looks to a much more permanent pastorate than our churches or pastors are now generally able to secure.

So with modifications of our present collecting agencies; on special fields and in particular lines improvements may be suggested; information ought to be widely distributed and the gifts of the many secured, but no new devices can be counted upon to produce a very radical change. A new method of serving, and even a new cook, does not go very far in making up for insufficient provender or dyspeptic appetites.

Nor do I believe that we are going to get much help from criticism of "cost of administration." This is a well-worn expedient. It is sure to come to the front in every time of difficulty. It is so easy to sit down and figure; and we all of us could do the work so much more cheaply if we only had to do it. It has been said, "There are three kinds of lies—lies, blankety-blank lies and statistics." Only an amount of information which few possess, and a uniformity of bookkeeping which does not exist, would make possible a comparison of the cost of administration in different societies and at different times that would be trustworthy and enlightening. As it is, no two sets of figures will agree as to what is administrative cost.

Furthermore, it is always to be borne in mind that neither economy nor efficiency is in inverse ratio to expense. On the contrary, there are many conditions in which the expense may be the very best measure of the work. What is easier, for example, than for a missionary superintendent to reduce his expenses to a minimum by staying at home instead of traveling among the churches under his care; and what, from any standpoint, is more unprofitable? It is easy to cut down the expenses of a central office by employing no stenographers and few clerks, tying your $4,000 secretary to his desk to save the salary of a $500 assistant, and is there any bigger piece of foolishness, unless it be to economize in printed matter, giving missionary information and stirring appeal for the widest and the freest possible distribution, because of its cost? My personal judgment has always inclined to the conviction that the harder the times the greater ought to be the outlay upon wise "administrative expenditure," just as a business man extends his advertising if he wants to push his business.

I knew a local society for charitable work among the poor that for years spent of the $800 or $900 which it raised $700 for the salary of the lady visitor. It was the very best possible use of the money. If they had not raised or expended one dollar beyond what they paid that devoted and accomplished woman to keep her at work among the poor they would still have been the bountiful benefactors they were.

Wisdom lies, then, in getting the very best possible men to administer the affairs of the society and then trusting them. If we want the best men in the denomination to administer our great societies, as we certainly do, we must pay them enough to live upon in the conditions in which we put them, and to dignify the position. In all my acquaintance with them I never heard one of them complain, nor do I recall one who laid down his office because of an offer of larger pay elsewhere. But most of them are compelled to live far from their offices and in the practice of an economy which, while it is edifying, must often prove extravagant in the wear and tear to which it exposes the physical and nerve force of the men who are of almost priceless value to the churches. In hard times when the pressure is severest upon these men in the strain of trying to make inadequate resources meet the needs of the great fields intrusted to their care, and when head and heart are alike wrung by the burdens they have to bear, it would be a wise economy if, instead of cutting down their salaries, which they themselves are generally the first to suggest, there were a fund from which they could then be relieved from all personal and domestic cares until the great strain upon the society were over.

Having chosen our men we must trust them. Are we to assume either that they do not care or do not know how to do the business to which they have given their lives? We do not need to ask whether they are open to suggestion, or to insist that they are not above criticism. Their position makes them sensitive to every touch; they live in constant contact with the churches and the people of the entire denomination. No men are so widely or so well known; none receive so much personal correspondence in connection with their official duties.

The great waste in all missionary and philanthropic expenditure is on the field, and in the effort to secure definite and permanent results. Concentrating attention upon "administrative cost" is diverting it from the real point of need. It is saving at the vent and wasting at the bung. Far better increase administrative outlay if it would result in sending able secretaries far and wide to the mission fields to inspire the laborers, to guide their labors, to adjust differences, to familiarize themselves with the details of the work, to come into personal contact with the men on the ground, and so to unite all, both the contributors and the workers, in the one common cause. To speak only of the dead, did any one grudge the cost when Dr. Anderson or Dr. Treat or Dr. Means visited the distant missions or traveled among the home churches; or was there any wiser outlay than that which years ago brought Dr. Henry M. Storrs or Dr. Coe, and I will add Dr. Clapp, to those of us who were on the home missionary frontier? If any one doubts let him open the life of Dr. Norman Macleod and see what it meant to the churches of Scotland, no less than to the missions in India, when he was taken away from his parish and sent for a year among the distant missionaries.

What we need is, I believe, a revival of interest in the work itself. We are striving to save the Lord's lost souls, not to economize our own resources. We remember how freely he gave himself for us, and how freely he would have given himself for any one of us if we had been the only one in need. We are bringing in his kingdom not in individual lives alone, but in the world which is to be the scene of his triumph. The church is working out the plan of God in human society. Of course it will have problems and endless difficulty. It is an intricate task. The saving of individual souls seems easy in comparison, for it is the building up of those souls into the complex whole of his kingdom. It is worth the doing, but it requires endless devotion and sacrifice. It is not going to be done in a day, and not without the cost of many a noble life—freely given.

There is always danger that we trust too much to methods and expedients. They have their place; they are so many implements and tools, but that is all they are. The power and the fruitage are not in them. Time and again God uses the things that are not to bring to naught the things that are. At our anniversaries and great meetings we are tempted to glorify means, when the expansion of these is never the measure of progress. We may increase our contributions and multiply our missionaries, we do not correspondingly increase results. The blessing is from God. It may be that the burdens which are suffered to weigh so heavily upon us are to bring us back to this.

* * *

By culture I mean that fine product of opportunity and scholarship which is to mere knowledge what manners are to the gentleman.—C. D. Warner.

A NEW METHOD OF PREPARATION FOR THE PASTORATE

BY CHARLES S. MACFARLAND

"The proper study of mankind is man." Ministers and theological students are coming more and more to recognize the value of a study of men as well as of books. Along with mental culture there is the necessity for a touch with life. The senior class in the divinity school of Yale University have been recently supplementing their work in the department of sociology and Christian ethics by a visit of several days to the city of New York, where its life and institutions were carefully studied. The class was accompanied by Prof. W. F. Blackman, who had charge of the expedition, and by Profs. G. B. Stevens and L. O. Brastow and Rev. I. C. Meserve of New Haven.

Arriving in New York early in the morning, after breakfasting at a Fulton Street restaurant, the party proceeded to the building of the United Charities, and were received by Dr. W. H. Tolman (Yale), general agent of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, under whose direction the trip had been planned.

After a brief address by Dr. Tolman a visit was made to the Galilee and East Side work of Calvary Parish on East 23d Street. Here they were met by Mr. W. H. G. Chandler, and shown through the various departments by Mr. J. W. Lee (Yale, '61). They visited first the neat restaurant, where a bounteous meal can be obtained for ten cents; then the Galilee Mission, where an average of sixty men a night meet at a gospel service. The Olive Tree Inn offered clean and pleasant lodgings for fifteen cents. The reading-room, boys' club, gymnasium, wood yard and Tee to tum Club were inspected in turn. An interesting department of this work is the Indian Tea Divan, a store where tea, coffee and sugar of good quality are sold at very low prices. The parish store, with general groceries, is the newest agency in this work.

As the party passed through the crowded streets on their way to the boat, which was to convey them to the harbor institutions, they were the objects of much attention. Various explanations were heard in passing, one being that it was a delegation to the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight and another that it was McKinley's cabinet. One hungry looking fellow, seeing the crowd filing into the Galilee restaurant, eagerly rushed up and inquired, "Is it free grub?"

Proceeding to the wharf the steamer for the islands was taken, by courtesy of Inspector-General Knowles of the Department of Public Charities. The hospital and schools on Randall's Island were reviewed. Returning to Blackwell's the Hospital for Incurables with its 2,700 cases was visited. It was a literal chamber of horrors. Superintendent Terry then conducted the visitors about the almshouse colony. Passing through a large crowd of eager men and women who were surrounding a band of Salvation Army singers, the party, after walking through the Surgical Hospital, visited the beautiful chapel of the Good Shepherd, where the rector, Rev. C. C. Proffitt, spoke earnestly of the joy he found in his work among these poor people.

After lunch at the home of Mr. Terry, the wards for aged women, blind women, blind men, and that for deaf, dumb and blind were visited in turn. In the former, a woman 107 years of age gave the students a most touching five-minute sermon. The Epileptic Hospital was perhaps the most saddening sight of the day.

Next, after passing between large squads of striped convicts, who were breaking stone, the visitors were received by Superintendent Leet and conducted through the great City Hospital. Blackwell's Island with its thousands of lame, halt and blind, its sufferers of every conceivable kind, is a great city of refuge. The students were greatly impressed by the cleanly and pleasant appearance everywhere, and especially by the cheerfulness, happiness and hope of the sufferers. It was learned that much of this is due to the efforts of the present reform administration. After a visit to the penitentiary the return was made to the wharf, and after a Yale "yell" for Superintendents Terry and Leet, the steamer was boarded for the city. A visit to Bellevue Hospital and the morgue finished the day.

Most of the party partook of a Bowery supper and repaired to the typical Bowery lodging house, where they were to spend the night. It was The Majestic only in name. In the evening several parties of the students, under the lead of detectives and guides, visited Chinatown and other similar localities. They were prayed for in the Joss-house by a Chinese priest, and visited a Chinese theater and restaurant. Our party went down to Mulberry Bend, which is so vividly described in Riis's How the Other Half Lives, where many sad sights were seen. Perhaps the saddest was that in an undertaker's squalid establishment, where the dead body of a young prostitute, only 21 years of age, was surrounded by several of her fallen comrades, who had taken up a subscription in order to give her a "Christian" burial. As one of the students looked at the plate on the casket a bystander remarked, "That is her real name." A guide with the party, who was one of the "gang," explained that there was really little to see in the district now compared with two years ago. He bore very emphatic testimony to the work of Mr. Roosevelt. There is actually much less vice and almost none open to the public eye.

The next morning, after partaking of ten or fifteen cent breakfasts, the first place visited was the University Settlement in Delancey Street, where Head-worker J. B. Reynolds (Yale) spoke of the need of a strong scientific basis for his kind of work. Calling attention to the actual conditions of the people around him, Mr. Reynolds illustrated by saying that the rents were as high per cubic foot in Delancy Street as on Fifth Avenue. Education is the primary effort here. The settlement is visited by from two to three thousand young people a day. Its various clubs are now becoming self-supporting and are in this way encouraging self-responsibility. He spoke also of the force of the settlement in the life of the neighborhood. Its influence in politics and labor is considerable, and is illustrated particularly in its improvements in the public schools. The great need is for increase of appliances. It cannot meet the demand made upon it.

Led by Rev. J. B. Devins, a tenement house pastor, the mayor's office was next visited, where Mayor Strong made a brief address. Then Street Commissioner Waring was visited and his work of reform, which has had its greatest effect on the poor, was described. A visit was then made to the People's Five-Cent Baths, where 94,000 people were accommodated last year, and where the present average daily attendance is 400.

Proceeding to Mulberry Street, a typical tenement house was inspected. At the Central Police Department the students were very courteously received by Commissioner Theodore Roosevelt (Harvard), who spoke especially concerning the pleasant and helpful co-operation between the department, the priests and the ministers in efforts to improve the condition of the poor. Mr. Devins described Mr. Roosevelt as a man who "says what he thinks, thinks for himself, and does what he says." He gave the impression to his visitors of being such a man. In closing Mr. Roosevelt introduced as his co-laborer a newspaper man, Mr. Jacob A. Riis, author of How the Other Half Lives, who bore testimony to the good work of the present administration. After a vigorous Yale "yell" for Yale-Harvard-Roosevelt, and a visit to the Rogues' Gallery, a start was made for the Bowery Young Men's Institute.

The next point of interest was the Industrial Christian Alliance, where lunch was served. The manager of the alliance, Mr. A. W. Milbury, spoke earnestly concerning his own experience and conversion, and of the work of his institution. Following him Mr. W. R. George described the George Junior Republic for boys and girls.

After inspecting the massive, and it is not too much to say magnificent, model lodging house which is being erected by Mr. D. O. Mills, the California millionaire, the party proceeded to the Grace Parish Building, where they were met by the vicar in charge, Rev. G. H. Bottome (Yale, '91). Here is located the Grace Parish Settlement, which is magnificently housed. The gymnasium, carpenter shop and cooking school were inspected. The hospital, including three departments called the homes of Simeon, Anna and the Holy Child, are beautifully situated. After a visit to the chapel, large and as beautiful and artistic as Grace Church itself, the return was made to the United Charites Building.

Here a symposium was held, presided over by Dr. Tolman. Addresses were made by Mr. E. L. Hunt, secretary of the Students' Club of the city, Mr. Charles Loring Brace (Yale) of the Children's Aid Society, which looks after the children of the "unworthy" poor, and Dr. E. T. Devine, who described the work of the Charity Organization Society. Mr. W. S. Rosenau spoke for the Hebrew Charities Association. Dr. A. F. Schauffler represented the City Mission and Tract Society. He spoke of the hearty co-operation between the societies of the various religious denominations. He said that if immigration could be shut off for ten years the city could be transformed.

The State Charities Aid Association work was presented by Mr. Homer Folks (Harvard). He spoke particularly of the value of taking children out of the poorhouses. The president of the East Side Federation, Rev. J. B. Devins, emphasized the fact that entire co-operation existed between pastor, priest, rabbi and lay worker. Rev. Walter Laidlaw, secretary of the new organization, The Federation of Churches and Christian Workers, described its plans and work. The closing address was one of thanks to those who had so courteously received the students by Professor Blackman, and with the Yale "Brekek-ek-et" for Yale, New York, Tolman the meeting adjourned.

As to general observations, it may be said that the students were mainly impressed by two things. First, the awfulness of the problem, and, second, the great philanthropic spirit which is in the air. It was a vision of sin and of grace. It was plainly evident that much had been accomplished by the overthrow of Tammany. All bore evidence to the good work of such men as Waring and Roosevelt. It is interesting that so large a number of college graduates are in effect co-operating with the Salvation Army and Rescue Mission workers in this field.

The trip was a success and will doubtless become an annual affair in connection with the theological course at Yale. It was of especial value to those students whose life has been spent far away from great cities and who consequently know little of the life of such. The theological student needs to know men as well as books. He needs to recognize the awfulness of sin as well as the love of God. He must find a place in his theology, if he cannot in his theodicy, for Blackwell's Island, Mulberry Bend and Chinatown.

Students who had been many times to the city and who had even lived in New York said that they had seen more of this phase of life in the city in these two days than in years of residence. The value of such a study is unquestionable, and if it brings the academic mind of the theological seminary more in touch with actual life it will serve a much needed end.

In and About Chicago

War on Department Stores

The attack on these great establishments is becoming bitterer every day. Those who are directing it are collecting large sums of money to use in securing legislation and in other necessary ways, and are organizing their forces with skill. The managers of the stores say that these attacks are caused by the hard times, that the stores meet a want in the community, and that while that want exists it will be impossible to prevent business men from ministering to it. It would seem as if there might be legal difficulties in the way of suppressing these stores, and compelling the people who patronize them to buy of the small dealers who would take their place. Any increase of the license paid to the city will naturally be met by a corresponding increase in the goods sold.

War on Cigarettes

It is now thought that steps have been taken which will lessen the use of cigarettes by the boys in our public schools. It has been ascertained that most of the cigarettes which the boys smoke are obtained at little stores near the schoolhouses, and that they contain poisonous material which renders their use very dangerous. The Common Council has now imposed a tax of $100 on each dealer, has limited the distance from the school building at which they may be sold, and rendered the continuance of the business so difficult as practically to destroy it altogether.

City Ownership of Its Streets

A decision of importance to Chicago has just been handed down by the Supreme Court. It relates to the claim which the city has made of the right to open a street across a railroad without special compensation to that road. The decision seems to rest on the fact that the streets belong to the city, and that in granting a railway the privilege of using them it does not thereby put itself under obligation to pay for the privilege of crossing them when increase of population demands. The legislation has grown out of the effort to compel certain roads entering the city on what is known as the belt line to elevate its tracks. It is estimated that this decision, which affirms the rights of the people, will save the city at least $2 000,000.

Congregational Candidate for Mayor

Most people are satisfied with the nomination by the Republicans of Judge Sears as successor of Mayor Swift. The latter has filled the office creditably and has undoubtedly done all that he could to restrain and diminish vice and to administer the finances of the city honestly. His task was harder than that of his successor will be. Judge Sears comes of a good family and has an excellent reputation. He is a member of a Congregational church, of the club, and as a judge has made a good record for himself. He has never been a politician, although deeply interested in the reform side of political life. If elected he will enforce the civil service laws, and will show no one any favors. His majority ought to be large. It is thought that ex-Governor Altgeld will prove a disagreeable factor in the coming campaign, and that, if possible, the question of free silver will be made a prominent theme for discussion.

The Washington Park Church

Professor Curtiss, who has been pushing this church for nearly two years, while Professor Mackenzie has supplied the pulpit, has, together with the latter, hit upon a novel scheme for raising funds for the house of worship now in the process of erection. Professor Mackenzie, through an Edinburgh photographer, has procured pictures of localities mentioned by Ian Maclaren in The Bonnie Brier Bush and some of his other writings, and proposes to give the people of Chicago an opportunity of visiting these localities and thus fitting themselves the better to enjoy the stories they have perused. The professor will read from Dr. Watson's works and illustrate their meaning with his pictures, which are said to be very beautiful. The first lecture was given Friday evening in the Union Park Church and was well attended.

Systematic Giving

The condition of the treasuries of our benevolent societies is in such a condition as to render any discussion of the problem of raising funds for the carrying on of Christian work a matter of importance to all Christians. The Baptists of Chicago and vicinity have just closed a three days' conference on the subject of giving. Some of the most prominent men in the denomination have taken part in it. Dr. T. J. Morgan of the Home Missionary Society, New York, Dr. Anderson of the University of Chicago, Drs. Henson and Lawrence, pastors in the city, and many others equally interested in the aggressive work of the Baptist churches of the country, were at the conference and contributed to its success. If attendance and interest in the subjects discussed are indications of success, the conference accomplished all that had been anticipated. Two or three similar conferences have been held East. Their object is to reach the consciences of the members of the Baptist churches and lead them to give systematically and according to their means. Such topics as Giving in the Old Testament, Giving in the New Testament, Christian Stewardship, Giving as Productive of Spiritual Fruit, Giving for the Sake of Display Rather Than from Principle, were considered. Judging from the interest manifested in this conference, the conditions upon which Mr. Rockefeller has promised to pay $250,000 towards the debts of the Baptist benevolent societies will be met. It certainly is the sincere hope of their Congregational brethren that they may be.

Farming on City Lots by the Poor

Following the example of Mayor Pingree of Detroit, the Salvation Army proposes to farm vacant city lots, and in this way do something toward lessening the suffering of the worthy poor. The "Gage Farm," a tract of more than one hundred acres and belonging to the city, may be divided into small lots and assigned to those who will cultivate them. The plan, in most of its details, was explained last week to a select company of influential persons at the house of Judge Kohlsat by Commander Booth Tucker and a great deal of interest awakened in it. It is estimated that from an outlay of $6,000 at least $40,000 may be realized. As so much land within the city limits is vacant, it would seem as if there were no reason why it should not be put to some use. Postmaster Hessing, one of the candidates for mayor, wants to have it planted with beans.

The City Missionary Society

The fourteenth annual report of this flourishing and useful society has just appeared. From it a few items of interest may be taken. When this society was organized, in 1882, there were 17 churches within the territory now included in the city limits. They sustained 24 Sunday schools, in which there were about 9,000 pupils, and had a membership of nearly 5,000. Since that time 53 churches have been organized, with 5,500 members, and 53 Sunday schools started, in which there are now 13,500 pupils. The society has secured property for these churches worth not less than $375,000, at an outlay for service of every kind of $303,386. From these missionary churches 19 persons have entered, or are preparing for, the ministry. The past year 888 persons were added to their membership, 440 of the number on confession of faith. Preaching has been furnished in English, Welsh, German, Norwegian, Swedish and Bohemian. The Bethlehem Church, Bohemian, received a notable addition of 47 on Easter Sunday, and thus brought up the membership of the church to 170. If the progress in this field has been slow it has been marked, and is likely to be far more rapid in the future.

Last year the amount of money received from the churches was $30,290.91. The year began with a debt of $4,000, which has been paid, and closes with obligations amounting to $2,095, for which there are pledges and other resources exceeding the debt by more than $1,000. Considering the times this society has reason to be grateful for the means it has had to dispense and for the work it has been permitted to accomplish. To keep anywhere within sight of the demands of this rapidly growing city at least $50,000 a year would be required, and in addition a fund for the erection of churches for the congregations which might easily be gathered.

A Letter to Mrs. Cleveland

For ingenuity in arranging attractive sociables no church can surpass the First. Inauguration evening was celebrated by an old-fashioned reception, in which the stately dames of Washington's times appeared in all the glory and dignity of quaint costume. Lady Washington was there, Mrs. John Quincy Adams, Mrs. General Jackson, Mrs. Benjamin Franklin and Dolly Madison. Groups of colonial girls were centers of attraction, as was charming Nellie Custis. General Washington and his generals were also present in their old-time uniform. Professor Scott was master of ceremonies. The supper was served in colonial style. A significant feature was the reading of a letter composed by Mrs. Goodwin, directed to Mrs. Cleveland and fitly appreciative of her character and of her Christian influence during her husband's Administration. The letter was sent with the hearty approval of all present. It is as follows:

Mrs. Grover Cleveland; Dear Madam: The ladies of the First Congregational Church of Chicago, recognizing the rare consistency of your Christian character in the high position which, in the providence of God, you have occupied these many years, desire to express to you their gratitude that in you the daughters and young mothers and all the women of the land have had so conspicuous an example of one who has sought to adorn the doctrine of God and her Saviour in all things.

The eyes of all were upon you in your untried youth, when, with an enthusiasm unparalleled in the history of our country, you were welcomed to share with your honored husband, the President of the United States, the highest gift of the American people, with its great responsibilities. Then followed the four testing years of administrative life, and the four succeeding years of comparative seclusion, and again the last eventful four years.

Under such prolonged search-light only true womanhood has been revealed, the favor of God has rested upon you and the favor with which you were received has but increased. We have rejoiced that amid all the distractions of official and social life, incident to so high a position, you have ever maintained a heart open to God and a simplicity of life in accord with his teachings.

You have exalted the beauty and sacredness of home life as exemplified in your own household. You have honored God's day and house, his Word, his church and his ordinances by your regular attendance upon divine services and by your life ordered in accordance therewith. We would also bear grateful tribute to your ready sympathy with all good works, your exemplary attitude toward temperance and to your affable and gracious manner with all people, all of which will be associated with your memory in future years. We thank God for your example, and take pleasure in expressing our obligation to and high regard for one as a Christian woman who has so reverently and beautifully fulfilled her mission as the mistress of the White House and the first lady of the land.

Chicago, March 6. FRANKLIN.

The Home

FELLOWSHIP IN SERVICE

We work together, if far apart;
Loyal and strong is each servant's heart;
One is our Master, Christ the Lord,
And we catch the sound of his guiding word,
And onward go where he shows the way
Till we stand with him in the perfect day.

The work we do is not quite the same.
Some, as heralds, the news proclaim,
Some are working among the vines,
Some in the field where the hot sun shines,
And some work quietly in the gloom
Of a shady place or a narrow room.

Some are singing the Master's praise,
Some are cleaning the dusty ways,
Some are teaching the young with care,
Some are spending the days in prayer;
We are all working with voice or pen,
The young and the old, the women and men.

We work together, if far apart,
Hands in unison, heart to heart!
We work as having one common aim,
We work as bearing the same good name,
We dare not loiter, but still pursue
The work of the Master, with him in view.

For how shall the servants of Christ be still
When his kingdom is hindered by force of ill?
His will being done, the world would be Happy and prosperous, good and free.
Shall we not labor until is won
The whole glad world for God's dear Son?

—Marianne Farningham.

FAMILY WORSHIP AND GRACE AT MEALS

BY REV. F. W. BALDWIN, D.D.

There are many Christian homes at the present day in which the time-honored custom of grace before meals and of family prayer each morning or evening are things of the past. They have been given up, reluctantly oftentimes, with the feeling that, however beautiful or desirable in themselves, they are more or less incompatible with the changed conditions of life and the growing independence of individual members of the home in their religious ideals and practices. This is especially true of city and suburban homes, where the whole life of the household is made to revolve around the question of the railway timetable or the trolley, where the head of the family is always away from home at the mid-day meal, and where different members of the household are obliged, it may be, to take their morning meal at different hours. Whatever the causes or the justification, it is unquestionably a fact that the forms of Christian worship in the home are not so generally observed as they once were, and the daily recognition of the divine love to the home is not so common upon the lips, even if it be as common in the heart.

Parents find their children more and more restless under the old forms of worship and are themselves more and more impatient with what often seems to them to be nothing but a form. It is so with the matter of grace at meals, and often so with prayer itself. How many good people, fathers and mothers, shrink from the daily and thrice-daily repetition of substantially the same words; how few feel themselves gifted enough to enable them to rise above the commonplace and the dull. They remember their own childhood, perhaps, and how tedious to the children these forms often were, and so they conclude that, on the whole, it is probably quite as well to omit them entirely.

Others, who continue the habit and could not be persuaded to give it up, recognize the difficulties and are eager to know how to make the worship of the home all that it should be, the happiest and most welcome act of the common life. What other act can so unite the hearts of husband and wife and help to make and keep the home a shrine? What other way so good is open to parents for training themselves and their children in the fundamental truths of the religious life? How else can the unity of the home be preserved and its religious character maintained? Secret prayer is not enough. The life in God must be shared or it must surely lose much of its fire and joy.

The writer of these lines has felt all these problems pressing in his own home and has often wished that he might have help in solving them. He is persuaded that parents can do almost anything, if they are only wise enough. They can prevent children from growing up to dislike worship; they can make it sweet and wholesome and attractive, and they can also train the children themselves to such participation in it as will make it in deed and truth family worship.

Why should not the child be taught to pray before others, using his own little words, to pray for others, and often to lead the whole family in thanksgiving and in praise to God? The prayer might be much simpler and shorter, but that would not always be a defect or a thing to be regretted, and the child would feel that the worship was his as well as his father's and mother's. We keep our little folks back too much, until the time comes when they are timid and afraid, and then it is too late. If we trained them to read the Bible and to take their turn in prayer, our own reading and praying would be far more natural and beautiful, more childlike and more helpful to the children.

The same is true of grace at meals. It easily degenerates into a mere form, and many families do not pretend to have it except when they happen to have a clergyman with them at the table. There are some clergymen who do not relish having all the worship of the household thrust upon them as a supposed act of courtesy. The writer was not long ago being entertained at dinner in the home of a worthy member of the church where he had been that morning preaching. Instead of turning to the minister, the head of the family reverently bowed, and all of the seven grown children present repeated with him and with their mother their form of thanksgiving. It was a blessing to the minister, and one he will not soon forget. For it was in keeping with the practice long pursued in his own home, of having a common blessing known by all the children, and which even the youngest repeats, in her turn or in unison with the rest. It runs as follows:

> For these and all thy gifts of love
> We give thee thanks and praise;
> Look down, O Father, from above,
> And bless us all our days.

It is a simple thing, but probably it will be remembered in after years as one of the cherished things of the childhood home. There are many choice stanzas or sentences that might be used in this way, though we think one or two will be found to be better than more.

> Our Father, bless thy gifts,
> Which we are about to receive from thy bounty:
> May thy gifts be our refreshment,
> And thy grace our consolation, through our Lord.

And so brief forms of prayer may be used, some choice collect, found in the manuals of devotion, or, better still, something that embodies one's own truest feeling of praise and gratitude and confession from day to day.

When we learn to be natural, simple and childlike in our family worship and in all the expressions of our religious feeling, we shall have less difficulty in keeping the hearts of the children, and our own hearts will be kept warm and human and Christian.

LENTEN DAYS

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER

The actual keeping of Lent in rigid strictness and formality is, of course, limited to certain sects of the Christian Church, but perhaps some features of Lent may commend themselves to most thoughtful people. Fasting, for instance, carried to an extreme, is not to the physical advantage of the feeble or the aged, nor would it prove beneficial to those who must toil and tax their energies, but a modified fasting, an abstinence for a while from some innocent, but not necessary, indulgence, and an active self-denial in the form of some earnest work for those who are helpless or in distress, can certainly be harmful to none, and may prove to be a means of grace.

Our period is singularly lacking in reverence. One is impressed by this in reading the lives of men, removed from us by only the century's breath. In Woodrow Wilson's remarkable story of Washington's career, the temper of the times is clearly brought out, and the most casual reader cannot but perceive how men clung to the thought of God, and how in critical moments they instinctively turned to him, and proclaimed days of fasting and prayer.

To grow nearer to God is the wish, as it is the aspiration, of every devout disciple. Yet our lives are so brimmed with work, our duties are so relentless, the demands on our strength and our time are so incessant and so peremptory, that we have little space left for meditation, for reading the Bible and for communion with the Throne. Most of us would be surprised if we made an honest comparison of the time given each week to the newspaper versus the Bible, and we cannot but mournfully own that to prayer we give the fag end of our days—the hurried bit of time in the morning, the tired out bit of time in the evening.

If Lent shall come to us with a gentle admonition, urging us for the opening weeks of the spring to turn our faces heavenward, as our blossoming hyacinths face the sun, it will bring to us an angel's message. In lives so busy as are ours there must be omissions. Certain things must be left out. Certain work must be laid aside now and then. Illness comes to us with an arresting hand and gives us pause, but why wait for illness? Health may serve us as well as illness if we can but summon resolution to our aid.

For most people there is profit in following out an actual program, and the keeping of an individual Lent might not be amiss for some busy mothers. Why not plan for these days of early spring an excursion into those lanes and dells of the Bible which lie away from the beaten track, making your daily reading a loitering among the minor prophets, or a happy dreaming in the precincts of Revelation? Possibly your Bible reading has been rather limited to the Psalms and the gospels, and your favorite chapters can never be anything but dear to you. If your Bible open of itself to the ninetieth or the one hundred and third Psalm, to the fortieth chapter of Isaiah, the fourteenth of St. John, or the eighth of Romans, then indeed you have been fed on the finest of the wheat. But there are gems everywhere in God's Word, and in Lenten days it may be a pleasure to set yourself to their discovery. Take a little more daily time for this, either by yourself or in company with several friends who may be won to spend part of their afternoons in a similar pursuit. You will find the Lenten days bringing you by degrees into a larger and fuller life. On the prose of the kitchen and the commonplace levels of the sitting-room something of heaven's golden light will fall, and, or ever you are aware, your feet will step to music and your soul be thrilled with gladness.

The great festival days of the Christian year, Easter and Christmas, are not the property of any portion of the church—they belong to us all. When the solemn shadow of Good Friday recalls the day of our Lord's supreme self-surrender on the cross, surely we may take up our little crosses and carry them on more earnestly in his name. Finite and imperfect as we are we need help at every moment, and whenever help is given by any material occasion it is well to embrace it.

Our young ladies very appropriately choose Lenten days for special charitable work, and their classes for sewing and for other forms of ministration bring them into touch with the poor, the orphan and the sick, so that the Lenten impulse lasts through the seasons which follow. No sweeter sight will ever greet my eyes than that which I find in Saturday sewing-schools for the poor held not only in Lent but the winter long in the place where I live, and I rejoice in the vision of fair young faces and bright, beautiful girlish life consecrated to service along quiet, unobtrusive lines. The world takes little note of this kind of work, but the world is the better for it, and the Master owns it with his abundant blessing.

A STREET CAR INCIDENT

BY LILLA THOMAS ELDER

Why is it, when some one does a beautiful and unselfish act, that we are surprised and find it a matter for comment and discussion? At heart most of us are philanthropists. We have abundant sympathies, but given the opportunity how many of us actually carry out our resolutions? Oftentimes those from whom least is expected are the ones to shame us in our own final reluctance. Recently in a Boston street car an incident occurred which gave thought to at least several women who were passengers at the time.

A little woman about thirty, surely not more, sat holding a bundle in a gray shawl, which proved, on closer inspection, to be a baby. The woman did not seem strong. Her brilliant black eyes and sensitive mouth were every now and then convulsed by the twitchings of some nervous affection, yet very tenderly and surely did she hold the gray bundle in her arms. Presently some one leaned over for a closer look at the wee atom inside the shawl. Then the little woman could no longer restrain herself, brim full as she was with the excitement of the event.

"Look," she said, "I found it—it's a little boy, not over two weeks old—in a churchyard, this noon, in Roxbury. It was covered over with newspapers and no one had seen it, though 200 people must have passed it during the morning. Poor little thing," and here she peered into the small pink face, "it was almost perished with cold."

"And what did you do with it?" some one asked.

"O, I picked it up and took it to a friend's house, and we warmed it and fed it and dressed it, and now I'm taking it home." She spoke with a slight French accent, in an impetuous way, and her black eyes danced with the joy of possession as she added, "They wanted me to send it to the Children's Home, but I told them I found it and I was going to keep it. Do you want to see it?"

By this time several other women sitting opposite had been drawn into the conversation. It really seemed an extremely social affair for a street car, where ordinarily people gaze blankly at their neighbors or look fixedly at the panorama of outside things, as though looking through air. But there was nothing ethereal about this plain little work-a-day woman with the black eyes and the baby. We couldn't have helped seeing her had we tried, and no one wanted to try. Even the men in the car turned their heads as the Frenchwoman got up, balancing herself as best she could, and displayed to those opposite the quiet, sleeping, unconscious face of the little babe. Just so slept the dear Christ in Mary's arms, and this was one of his little ones.

"It's a nice baby," we said, "but have you no children of your own?"

"O, yes, two—the oldest is seven—but I want this one too."

"But what will your husband say?" some married woman asked.

"O, he'll be tickled to death! That don't worry me. Why, if he knew I was bringing it home, he'd come to meet me to help carry it."

O, loving hearts! How many beat under shabby coats, and how often the purest generosity is found among the poorer classes. No question of ways and means seemed to have worried the baby's new mother. Indeed she said, quite convincingly: "I think if God let me find the baby he will help me take care of it."

"Well," said a young woman, "I fear my faith is not as great as that."

"Nor mine," echoed another from across the car. And we looked at the little woman holding the gray bundle in a great wonder, so surprising did it seem to us, each one apparently better off than she in this world's goods, that with two little ones already to care for she should add to her labor and responsibility and take this homeless waif to her heart. But he was no longer motherless. In the soft black eyes that still moved nervously in quick jumps and starts glowed a pride and joy in the new baby boy, and in the slender hands that now and again adjusted the wraps about him was a gentleness, a tenderness, that insured love and blessing to the little stranger. In the face turned towards him as he lay asleep, all unconscious of what he had escaped and of what he had found, was the promise of motherhood. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." But in no spirit of self-righteousness did the woman think of this thing she had done. To her it was the only thing to do, an impulse born of a tender heart, of an unselfish nature, an impulse born of God.

A FRIEND IN COURT

BY MARY ESTHER ALLBRIGHT

Donahue Court was down in the center of the Valley Settlement. It was a good-sized square, formed by surrounding tenements, and reached by passing under a kind of bridge connecting two houses which faced the outer street. It was dingy and damp and unsavory in Donahue Court, and the buildings were of the kind that only very poor people live in, yet every house was crowded, and the square, in all kinds of weather, was swarming with children of varying size and color. And such shrewd, hardened faces as some of these children had! They formed a community all by themselves and were very exclusive. Outsiders were eyed with disfavor, and it was not often that any of them ventured farther than the inner edge of the entrance alley.

Near the close of a dark November day Selma Andersen slipped out for a few minutes' respite from close rooms and crying babies. Selma was her real name, though in the court she was never called anything but "Sis," or possibly "Sissy" by some of the tiniest toddlers, who were her perpetual companions. She was tall for thirteen, and a little bent with the tugging of heavy babies. Her face was thin and freckled, and her eyes were an uncertain color, but she had thick, rich brown hair, and her mouth was sweet and womanly. "Sis" Andersen was thought well of, on the whole, in the settlement, and among the younger element her ideas and wishes were duly respected.

On this particular night, however, some of Selma's ideas were doomed to collision with the "court" public opinion. As she groped her way out of the dark hallway which led upstairs to the rooms which she called home, she found the square unusually quiet. None of her usual companions were in sight.

"Where is everybody?" thought the girl, curiously. "Must be something going on outside. Why, there's a lot of 'em!" And she crossed to a secluded corner, where some kind of a mass meeting seemed to be in session. As she approached the leaders in the group nudged each other, and there was a sudden silence. Selma looked about with some indignation. "Well," she said, 'what ails you? What you talkin' about?, You needn't stop for me. I kin go home." And she turned away, with her head held high and an unwonted flush on her face.

The leaders of the conclave looked at each other. One of them was her own brother Joe. "May as well tell her," he whispered, hurriedly. "She'll find it out. Say, Sis," he called, in a half-coaxing, half-defiant tone, "come back here. We'll tell ye, only you've got to keep shady. We're gettin' up a lark, and we perpose to have some prime jell'n' pr'serves in the bargain. It's good dark nights now, and they ain't fur off."

Selma's face clouded with dissent, but she hesitated. The odds were too great against her. The crowd eyed her calculatingly. "Where is it?" she asked, quietly enough, and coming closer, so as not to be overheard. Joe took this as a sign of acquiescence and was thrown off his guard. "It's just across the flats and up the hill a little piece," he whispered, confidentially.

"They's lots of trees around in the back yard. The cellar winder goes up just as slick, and you can see rows of things in a kind of a but'ry. I went in there one day when the dog wasn't there."

Suddenly Selma started and a quick suspicion flashed over her face. "Dog? What dog?" she demanded. "Joe Andersen, you ain't goin' to steal from the—sup'rintendent's cellar, and take his preserves and things?"

"What did I tell you?" said Jack Davis, turning to Joe with disgust; then obstinately to Selma: "Yes, it's that cellar—and we mean to clear out everything we can get there. We don't never get no jell. They're rich; let 'em get some more."

"But the dog," suggested Selma, with a faint hope. "He's awful fierce, and they keep him for a watch dog."

Jack hesitated, and his face darkened. He was the leader, the most hardened and daring among the recognized gang of youthful thieves and "hard cases" which inhabited the settlement. "Never you mind the dog," he muttered meaningly. "He'll be took care of."

There was an ominous silence after this threat; then Selma looked full in Jack's face, a great resolution hardening in her own. "Jack Davis," she said, her voice trembling a little, "you know how good the sup'rintendent's been to us that goes to the mission, and how he come here to see me when I was sick—'n' all. He got your father work, too, last winter, 'n' you know how much he thinks o' that dog. It goes out with his babies and the nurse girl, and with him when he takes a walk. He's worth a lot of money, too. An' you shan't touch him, so!" she went on, her anger rising as she saw the obstinacy in the boy's face. "I'll go there myself, first, and tell 'em to look out."

Another dire silence in the court at this declaration. Selma and Jack looked full in each other's faces as if measuring strength. Then the boy turned on his heel with a grim, "Do it if you dare!" and stalked away, accompanied by his own immediate friends and followers.

At seven o'clock Selma stood peering out of her upper window. The night was very dark, and it was beginning to rain. The fretful baby, her special charge, had gone to sleep. "O, dear!" thought Sis, tremblingly, "whatever shall I do? They'll try it tonight; it's just the time. I'll have to hurry. Jack Davis 'll do something awful if he ketches me. There won't be no peace for me now as long as I live here, anyhow." She hesitated, then seemed to see a kindly, beloved face rising up before her. She reached for her old waterproof, wrapped it around her, and put on a straw sailor hat. Her face looked thin and old with anxiety as she turned back for an instant before descending the shaky, unlighted stairway.

At the bottom she paused again and took a survey of the court. Near the passageway into the street she saw a lurking, shadowy figure. "They're watchin'," she muttered. "I can't get out there. I'll have to go through Rat Alley."

"Rat Alley" was simply a space about a foot and a half wide, which ran back between two of the tenements to a street beyond. It was dark and damp and musty—a thoroughfare for the creatures which gave it its name, and carefully shunned by every child in the place. No one would think of it as a chance of escape for Selma. She waited a minute, then, under shelter of a heavy gust of rain, glided rapidly over to the opening. It was a tight squeeze, but Selma was slender as well as determined. She gathered her skirts close about her, set her teeth, clenched her hands and edged her way rapidly through.

As she emerged she glanced up and down the short street, sped along to the end of it and took her way across the flats. How the rain did come down and how the wind blew! But Selma had no umbrella to hold and was accustomed to walking through puddles without rubbers, so she got on very well. At last she reached the hill, and here the surroundings began abruptly to change. The weather-beaten tenements gave way to smart looking apartment houses, and these again to pretty homes with "grounds" and lace curtains in the windows. A little farther on the houses became more imposing. There were lighted piazzas and vestibuled doors. It was in one of these—the one at the top of the hill—that the superintendent lived.

Selma reached it at last, half drowned and out of breath. The house was brilliantly lighted, and there were moving shadows on the window shades. Selma was afraid to go to the back door, for the big dog Bruno, was probably there, and he might not recognize her as one of his friends. Besides—if somebody else should be hanging about among the trees—yes, the front door would certainly be best.

So, finally, the slight figure in the drenched waterproof ventured up the piazza steps and rang the bell. It was answered by a sensible-looking girl in a little cap and a white apron. Selma summoned all her courage. "Is Mr. Edwards in? May I see him?" she faltered, eagerly. The girl looked down at her in surprise, and glanced at her wet feet and the polished floor of the hall. "No, he isn't in, and you oughtn't to be out in such a rain," she said, with decision. "You'll have to come in the morning if you want to see him," and the next instant Selma was standing outside the closed door looking up helplessly at the silk draperies.

"Well," she thought, turning away, "I guess the dog'll have to go. Maybe they've put something into his supper already. I'm awful sorry, 'cause of the superintendent. He wouldn't 'a' shut—O my! I b'lieve that's them! Jack Davis and Joe and the other fellows—yes, sir, it is. They're goin' to do it now. Whatever shall I do! He sets so much by that dog! He said so himself that time he come to see me. 'Selma,' says he, 'that fellow's devoted to me and my babies, and I'm very fond of him.' That's what he said, and he looked at him—well, I'd like to have him look at me that way!"

She waited there in the rain and fog, shrinking behind a clump of shrubbery, and watched the boys as they turned the corner and entered the street which ran by the "back yard full of trees." Her heart was beating hard, but her eyes were watchful. As the group neared the back gate they paused, and all but one crouched down behind the hedge. "That's Jack Davis," thought Selma. "He's goin' to throw some meat over to'ard the kennel; then they'll all run. What'll I do? That girl won't listen to me. I'll have to get the meat."

Selma's resolution was taken. She stole across the lawn on the inside of the hedge, conscious that her mortal enemies were a few feet from her. Jack was just a little in advance. He raised his arm and sent something flying toward the kennel; then the entire group of conspirators took to their heels and scampered away toward the flats.

One instant Selma paused. She was very much afraid of the dog. It was dark and wet there under the trees. Only an instant—then she darted forward after the meat. She reached it, got it into her hands, was just conscious of hearing a fierce growl and of seeing a huge form springing at her through the mist; then with one wild cry of excitement and terror Selma fainted away and fell in a heap on the brown November leaves.

Mr. Edwards had just reached home and was hurrying in to light and warmth when he heard the cry of distress. When he reached the spot he found the great dog standing guard over a disconsolate heap in a wet waterproof.

"Back, Bruno!" said his master. "Who in the world is this? She's fainted, poor child, whoever it is"; and without further word he took "Sis" in his arms and started for the kitchen, followed humbly by Bruno wagging his tail in sympathy.

After a few minutes of excitement and various ministrations by everybody in the big house Selma opened her eyes and looked about her. The first one she saw was the superintendent. She smiled faintly, but in a puzzled way, then seemed to collect herself and sat up suddenly. "Did he get it—the meat?" she asked anxiously. "Don't let him have it—it's got p'ison on it." The listening group around her exchanged glances, and there was a prolonged "O!" in various tones and voices. The superintendent sat down beside her and took her hands. "Bruno is all right," he said. "We found the meat, and wondered what it meant. We thought there must be something wrong. Now can you tell us about it?"

Selma thought of Jack Davis and his wrath and shivered a little, but she said bravely, "They'll 'most kill me, I s'pose—but I'll tell, I told 'em I would." And she did tell the whole story, very simply, yet in such a way that her keen listener understood all that it meant of courage and sacrifice. "Selma," he said, when she had finished, "you have done a great deal for me—something I shan't forget. And you shall never suffer anything because of tonight. You won't be afraid, will you? I'll take care of you. Now go to sleep." The weary girl sank back on the pillow and closed her eyes, thinking happily to herself, "He looked at me kinder'n he did that time at the dog!"

◆

There are two kinds of discontent. One is from beneath and results, if yielded to, in brooding, laming melancholy. The other is from above, and is a sign of God's purpose for our education. It is not for pilgrims and sojourners to be content while there are hights to climb upon the pilgrim way. This was the truth in Bunyan's parable of the enchanted ground. The sleep of content means the sacrifice of opportunity. Therefore it is that in hours of worship and petition we ask for guidance rather than for rest. And therefore the antidote for discontent is action—action in the little duties and quiet ministries which are open always and to every one. In this we grow toward that likeness in which alone we shall be satisfied.

Closet and Altar

If we leave our doors wide open to God he enters in and makes a heaven of our souls.

For a few weeks let those obtrusive worldlinesses which block the doors of our hearts stand back, and let the way be clear that he who longs to enter in and help us may come and meet no obstacle. This is our Lenten task. "If any man will hear my voice and open unto me I will come in and sup with him," says Jesus. To still the tumult and clatter a little, so that we may hear his voice, and to open the door by prayer—that is the privilege and duty of these coming weeks. May God be with us during this Lent! May we be with God! May there be much of the fasting which our Father loves, much penitence for sin and much opening of long shut doors to Christ!—Phillips Brooks.

"I know that thou art a man of God," said the widow of Elijah. We talk of the man of letters, the man of honor, the man of mark, but how infinitely better to be known as a man of God—one of God's men, a man after God's own heart! And how splendid the tribute when we are so addressed by those with whom we have been wont to live! That "familiarity breeds contempt" is one of the world's commonplaces; but when a man is filled with the Holy Ghost the more he is known the more clearly he is proved to be a man of God.—F. B. Meyer.

"The Spirit himself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered."

Hast thou ne'er felt some sweet and saintly spirit
Glide graciously into thy very own,
And soothe its troubled fears, and strongly bear it
In prayer unto the Heavenly Father's throne?
Hast thou ne'er flung thee down to restless slumber
Nor known some heart for thine did meanwhile pray,
And all the cares that late did thee encumber
Had vanished with the morning quite away?
Yea, I have felt such holy benediction,
A childlike peace that words could not express,
And when I asked and learned it was no fiction,
My heart has overflowed with thankfulness.
Ah, is it not most beautiful to bear
Another's soul to heaven thus in prayer?
—Charles W. Jerome.

With the night shadows, Lord, our hearts return to thee. We have walked through unseen dangers and thou hast preserved us. We have been tempted and thou hast shown us the way of escape. Pardon us in thy lovingkindness for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord that we have sinned against thee both by transgression and neglect, and help us with sincere repentance to forsake our sin. We bring our fears and perplexities, our doubts and cares, to leave them at thy mercy seat. Grant us to rest this night with quiet hearts through faith in thine abiding care. Remember all who are in need. Quicken thy church with divine life. Have all our dear ones in thy holy keeping, and grant them gifts according to thy love. And may the quiet of the evening and the sleep of night bring strength, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Tangles

22. ENIGMA

Though born to a title in which I take pride,
With serfs, as with princes, I equally share;
In hovels or castles I'm at ease to reside,
Howe'er meager or tasteless or regal the fare.
With revenge and remorse I enact a full part,
To envy and malice I'm counted no stranger;
But for war's gory horrors I have not a heart,
Seeking rather for shelter in danger.
Rebellion is naught where I am not found,
The Slave-Trade maketh a factor of me,
Yet when Anarchy's bombs scatter terror around,
My home still remains in security free.
By the wise and the unwise I'm needed, I ween;
All society's cliques retain me a place;
Yet in private, not public, my presence is seen,
And always appears in rare luster and grace.
I linger in vases so fragile and rare,
Breathing perfumes of essences pungent aud sweet;
I am hidden in faces angelic, where
The skill of Correggio and Raphael meet.
Alpha and Omega of eloquence pure,
In places of note forever I stand;
By speech and debate my power shall endure
While statesmen are honored as peers in the land.
Though not at the head in Florence and Rome,
The galleries of Dresden repeat yet my name;
Dear America takes me and gives me a home;
I expand in her freedom and live in her fame.

S. F. S.

23. ANAGRAM

The world may try a name to write
Higher than this we claim tonight,
But old-time legends still are true—
"The phœnix is but one," not two,
And to this one our faith we plight.

Our MAIN RACE holds its poise aright;
In vain to flatter or to fright,
To daunt or dazzle me or you,
The world may try.

The TOTAL stands in all men's sight,
By Freedom's beacon burning bright,
And from the time he first cries "oo,"
Guards it as none beside may do;
Though at this flame its fires to light,
The world may try.

M. C. S.

24. QUEER TRANSFORMATIONS

1. Unite a kettle and a tree and make a chemical. 2. Force a dwarf to swallow a ten-cent piece and have a first principle. 3. Put everything inside of a pig and it turns a sickly yellow. 4. Cut off the head of a male duck and it becomes a garden implement. 5. From a piece of lead sulphide take a drink, stir up what is left and have a horse.

MYSTICALIA.

25. NUMERICAL

One walked, a canny lad 1–2,
Upon the 1–2–3–4–5;
A bonnie lassie came in view,
Just as romance might well contrive.

Afar the city spires shone dim;
Faintly a church clock chimed eleven;
Shyly the lassie looked at him,
And 1–2 3–4 5–6–7.

The almost midday sun well might
1–2–3–4 5–6–7 head;
But though the eyes shone dewy bright,
The rosy lips no murmur shed.

They parted where in wide expanse
1–2–3–4–5–6–7 lay;
O, fatal blow to all romance!
They hadn't anything to say!

M. C. S.

ANSWERS

16. Match-less.
17. "A verse may find him who a sermon flies,
And turn delight into a sacrifice."
18. Wheel, heel, eel.
19. "When shall we three meet again."
20. 1. Bass, bass. 2. Bow, bow.
21. Ermine.

The verse makers must send all puzzle bouts-rimés to compete for the prize before the close of March. These are the rhymes to which the lines' are to be fitted: fair, part, share, heart; near, two fear, true; place, home, race, roam.

Among recent solvers have been: Nillor, Middletown Springs, Vt., 12, 14, 15; Mrs. F. P. Tripp, Taunton, Mass., 14, 15; S. B. T., Dover, N. H., 12, 14; Old Fellow, Boston, Mass., 6, 7, 8, 9, 10; M. M. S., Bedford Park, New York city, 14, 15; True Blue, Malden, Mass., 12, 15; Sarah E. Irish, Portland, Me, 6, 7; Howard Ripley, Webster Groves, Mo., 7; Abbie A. Tidd, Westboro, Mass., 7, 11; Marguerite H. Rogers, Bar Harbor, Me., 7, 9.

A tangle not reported solved was 13; 11 had one solver.

The hunt for the introducers of "May Day's Friends" will be most fascinating, but as the search necessary will be considerable the tangler adds a little extra stimulus in the form of a prize—an elegant and much-admired volume of Photographic Views of the World—for each of the best two lists of the names. The lists, whether small or large, are all to be forwarded within ten days.

Don't blame the cake-box if your cake dries up quickly. It will keep moist and fresh if you use Cleveland's Baking Powder.

No flour is "just as good as"
"Duluth Imperial"
Flour
except in the minds of dealers who want to palm off poor brands for bigger profit. If you really want DULUTH IMPERIAL, see that you get it. 20 loaves more in every barrel.
If your grocer doesn't keep it, and won't supply you, don't get another flour—get another grocer; or send us a postal, and we'll tell you where to get it.
DULUTH IMPERIAL MILL CO., Duluth, Minn.

The Conversation Corner

MY DEAR CORNERERS: You have been reading for a week now about our nation's new President, and seeing pictures of himself and family and the scenes of his inauguration at Washington. By way of contrast we will put in the middle of this Corner another of the great rulers of the world, with all his family. The cut is taken from a photograph kindly sent us by one of our own Cornerers now in the German capital. Here is his letter:

BERLIN, JAN. 27, 1897.

Dear Mr. Martin: Today is the Kaiser's birthday, so I thought it would be a good day to answer your letter on. Just half an hour ago I saw the Emperor and Empress in a sleigh on Unter den Linden. The sidewalks were crowded, and as they went by all the people cheered and seemed very much excited. I inclose a picture of the royal family, or, as the Germans say, the Kaiser familie. As you will see by the picture, there are six boys and one girl. The princess, who is the youngest, is four years old, and the crown prince, named Wilhelm, is fifteen. There are pictures of the princes in the photographer's windows, such as riding bicycles, playing tennis, etc., but I thought this one showed the whole family best.

While the Kaiser's family is in Berlin they ride on the Thiergarten and on the Linden every day, so they are quite a common sight now. They only spend three or four of the winter months in Berlin and go to Potsdam, ten miles from the city, for the summer. There are fine decorations of flags and fireworks all over the city today, because it is the Kaiser's birthday. It seems something like our Fourth of July. There is one rink in the city where the princes usually go to skate. I have not been there yet, but hope to go before I go away, so that I can say that I have skated with the princes.

I am studying Latin here with German books and vocabulary, but with an American teacher. That makes it easier, but sometimes I have to use my German-English dictionary to translate my Latin-German vocabulary. That American flag you sent me met a felt want! I like to show my colors in a foreign land. EUGENE C.

The flag must have been the picture on our "Corner souvenir," and I am glad it filled the "felt want" in the patriotic heart of our Yankee boy abroad! Now let's see what Eugene's younger brother has to say about it:

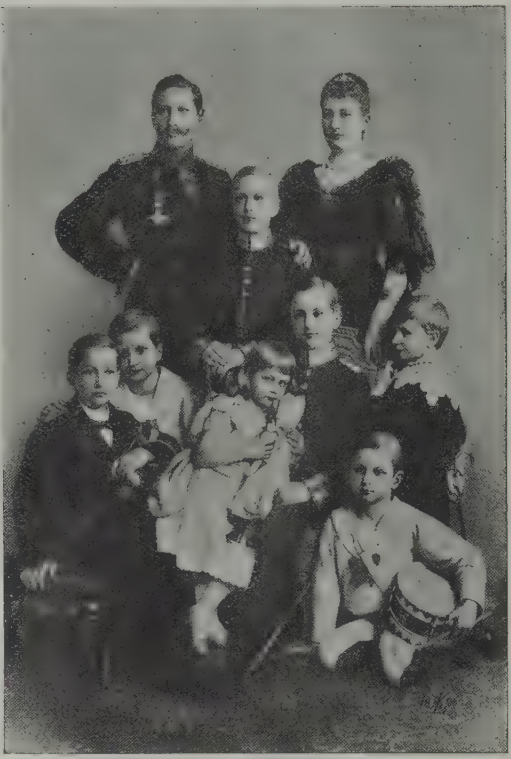
UNTER DEN LINDEN, 62/63, III.

Dear Mr. Martin: We see the Kaiser lots of times, and lots of gorgeous carriages too. This morning we went out in the Thiergarten and played tag. We saw the little princess out riding in the Thiergarten and the Empress was with her too, and a little prince too. The prince boy was clapping his hands. There is a lot of snow in Berlin and the sun didn't shine for three weeks. Policemen stand in the street all the time to take care of the Kaiser. The Kaiser has white plumes on his coachman's hat. He rides through the middle arch of the Brandenburg Thor, and everybody else has to go through the side arches. One day we went into the palace and saw a lot of gorgeous rooms with smooth floors and we had to wear big slippers. The outside of the palace looks like a common gray house, only it is bigger. Good-by from SYDNEY C.

What a fine looking group of children! I think I will give you their names, as one of the boys—or their mother—has written them on the back of the photograph. 1, Crown Prince, Wilhelm; 2, Eitel Fritz; 3, Adalbert; 4, August; 5, Oscar; 6, Joachim; 7, Princess Victoria Louise. Which do you like best? I think I like them all best—except little Vic (with her doll) she is the bestest of all! Adalbert looks sober and August cheery, Joachim (with his cane) is shy, and Eitel Fritz is merry, Oscar is ready for noise and fun, and Wilhelm is a manly fellow, wondering if he will ever be the emperor of Germany!

I suppose you know that they are great-grandchildren, twice over, of Queen Victoria, because the Kaiser's mother, Victoria Adelaide, was the Queen's daughter, and the Kaiser's wife, Augusta Victoria, was daugher of Helena Augusta Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein, another daughter of the Queen.

I do not like Kaiser Wilhelm himself very well, because he seems to be autocratic and revengeful and often unjust, but I have heard two pretty stories about him in connection with children. One is that at little Victoria's birthday party at Potsdam, when the children wanted to dance and it was not convenient to get a military band, he sent out into the street for an Italian organ grinder, and afterwards gave him 150 marks. The other story is that when he visited Dresden and was riding through the streets, a little urchin on his way to school shouted out to him, "Say, Herr Kaiser, can't we have a holiday tomorrow?" The Kaiser laughed, said, "Ja, Ja," and rode on. The next morning all the Dresden school children found that a special decree had been made by the Emperor, granting them a holiday!



UNSERE KAISER FAMILIE

Can you tell who our Berlin correspondents are? After you have endeavored to think as far as you can, try one farther endeavor—and you will "guess" it.

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK

"The Two Lambs." The Connecticut lady's request for "an old book for children," with this title, is thus answered:

SMYRNA, N. Y.

I have the story of "The Two Lambs" inquired for in the Corner of Feb. 18, in a little book received as a reward in 1844. The title is: "The Safe Path, or the Evils of Yielding to Temptation" (American S. S. Union). The other story is, "Parley the Porter." N.

LEXINGTON, MASS.

I have not seen "The Two Lambs" for many years, but I remember the story. The "other lamb" was named Peace. MRS. H.

HANOVER, MASS.

"The Two Lambs" is the name of a small and dimly illustrated pamphlet, printed at Newburyport (no date) by W. and J. Gilman, and "sold at their store, No. 2, Middle Street." It is called "An Allegorical History, by the author of Margaret Whyte." F.

And now Mrs. L., of Gilsum, N. H., sends the little old book itself published by the American Tract Society—a relic of ancient writing and printing, "dimly illustrated" indeed! It is marked: "Price, 3 1-2 cents." The allegory is of two lambs, Peace and Inexperience, and the Good Shepherd. It is "an old book for children"—far too old; I am glad we have books in our day better adapted to them. Still it helped somebody then, for the leaves of this copy are worn out and stitched together with thread.

An Old Hymn. In answer to the query of Mrs. M. of Lowell (Feb. 18), I have letters from New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Connecticut. The hymn she wants may be found in most of the old hymn-books, beginning, "Sinners, will you scorn the message," the line she had in mind being from the last stanza:

O, ye angels, hovering round us,
Waiting spirits, speed your way.

It may be found in Songs for the Sanctuary, the Sabbath Hymn and Tune Book, Songs for Spiritual Worship and others. The reference which surprised me most was to 111, Watts and Select, and there, in the little old edition used in my boyhood, I find it, with dates and names of ministers giving it out penciled against it. In the books which have music it is set to "Hamden," "Belmont" or "Grace," but in the South I think we used to sing it to "Greenville," wondering as we sang how some of the congregation would understand the couplet—

Rebel sinners, rebel sinners,
Glad the message will obey!

Piece in Old Reader. A lady in Rochester, N. Y., writes that she went to school in Monson, Me., near Moosehead Lake, about sixty years ago, and "recalls a few snatches of the poetry of Logan, the Indian chief," as—

My wife and my children—O, spare me the tale,
For who is there left that is kin to Geehale?

That is in Pierpont's National Reader, and is entitled Geehale, an Indian Lament. It is credited to the "Statesman, New York," begins—

The bluebird is singing on Michigan's shore,
As sweetly and gayly as ever before—and closes with the lines she quotes. The once familiar speech of Logan, the famous Indian chief, precedes this piece in the Reader, so that doubtless the poetry is founded on that traditional speech, preserved and so highly praised by Jefferson. Whether "Geehale" was the poet's name for the chief, or one of his own names, does not appear. His Indian name was changed to Logan for James Logan, the friend of William Penn.

German Watchman's Song. (See Jan. 21.) Mrs. A. of Marietta, O., writes that it was in Lowell Mason's "Odeon," of years ago, and a Bangor member says it is in Harper's Franklin Square Song Collection, No. 3 (with music).

L. H. M

The Sunday School

Lesson for March 21 1 Cor. 9: 19–27

CHRISTIAN SELF-RESTRAINT

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

This lesson is chronologically out of place. It belongs near the close of the next quarter. But it is made the last lesson of this quarter because the committee is directed to provide one selection for each quarter which may be used to teach temperance. It is not, however, unsuited to this position.

The last lesson introduced us to Saul as a persecutor and described his conversion. This gives us a pen picture of him after his conversion, drawn by his own hand. It shows us the Christian's ruling purpose. We see:

1. How this purpose determines his social relations. Saul the persecutor and Paul the apostle are the same man. Both are possessed by the same intense nature, bending every energy to accomplish its purpose. But how changed is the purpose! Saul threw his whole self into the work of exterminating Christianity. He left a trail of martyrs' blood along the paths through which he swiftly journeyed far and wide. Paul the apostle swept through the Roman empire, building churches of Christ in its great centers, conquering every kind of foe in his whole-hearted devotion to one purpose, "to preach unto the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ."

He had planted a church in Corinth, and he wrote this letter to answer their questions as to how they should manage its affairs [chap. 7: 1]. One of these questions referred to what they ought to pay their minister. Paul replied that a pastor ought to have a salary sufficient to support himself and his family [chap. 9: 4–12]. But he said that he preferred to preach without any fixed salary, because he was bound to preach [v. 16], and because he could thus have greater freedom in preaching [v. 18]. Then, as was his custom, he made this a starting point from which to enter a larger subject. This time it was how a Christian should live and work in order to accomplish his purpose, to win souls to Christ.

The great principle, he said, was to make one's self of service to those whom one would help. Paul was not under obligation to any, but he put himself under obligation to serve all men in order to interest them in the gospel. First and most he loved Christ, who gave himself to save souls. Next he loved those whom Christ died to save. It was therefore with manly, absorbing enthusiasm that he set himself to bring men to Christ. He put himself within the circle of their interests. He was not under Jewish law, but with the Jews he obeyed that law, that he might disarm their prejudices and make them willing to listen to his gospel. With Gentiles he put the Jewish law aside and lived as Gentiles lived, or rather as Gentiles would live if they loved Christ, for he never forgot that he was the servant of one Master. With those who were timid about using their rights and privileges through fear lest they might lose the favor of God, he, too, was timid. He entered into sympathy with all sorts of men that he might use every opportunity to save men.

The Christian in social life ought to subordinate every other aim to the one ruling purpose. He chooses the company, not where he can get the most pleasure, but where he can do the most good. He enters into sympathy with those with whom he associates, thinking their thoughts and following their customs and talking of the subjects in which they are interested, so far as becomes a Christian. He seeks to capture them that he may deliver them to Christ. And in doing the most good he finds the greatest pleasure.

2. How the Christian's ruling purpose determines his personal habits [vs. 24–27]. The people of Corinth knew well about prize winning in athletic games. Those who got prizes were heroes in society, and gained enough to reward them amply for all their self-denial of appetite necessary to give them the greatest physical endurance for the contest. Their crown was a laurel wreath which soon faded, and the newest winners absorbed the attention, while the heroes of other years were forgotten. But the soul winner gains men to immortal life and brings to Christ honor which never dies. He wins an unfading crown.

If, then, it is worth while for a Greek to discipline his body to the utmost so as to win in the athletic games, how much more will the earnest Christian deny himself everything which can hinder his success in gaining the confidence of men and influence over them, that he may bring them into obedience to Christ! How much more will he strive to develop every gift—physical, mental, spiritual—that he may lay them all at his Master's feet and may win for him the trophies in which he glories most, the souls for which he laid down his life!

The application of this lesson to the subject of temperance is plain. That is only an incidental thought in a purpose that absorbs all Christian ambition. The use of stimulants for the pleasure they give is, at the most, a trifling matter. Such use hinders the Christian's influence with many whom he longs to bring nearer to Christ. He may claim the freedom to use them, but he will not use them. His business is too important, his purpose too great and absorbing, to be marred by self-indulgence. We seek incorruptible crowns. They can surely be won, but only by the wisest use of all our powers. Shall Christians risk missing the aim of their lives to gratify an appetite?

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic, March 14–20. Rejoicing in the Lord. Rom. 12: 9–15; Ps. 20; 33: 1–5, 20–22; Matt. 5: 1–12.

Ought we to rejoice? What sources of gladness are available? What is the unfailing source? (See prayer meeting editorial.)

EVOLUTION AND THE OLD GOSPEL

Prof. A. B. Bruce is lecturing now on the Gifford Foundation at Edinburgh University. He is discussing, as Dr. Lyman Abbott is in The Outlook, the theological import of the theory of evolution. The comment of Prof. James Orr, who is not an entire stranger to us in this country, on Professor Bruce's lectures is interesting and suggestive:

> Whether the rational and spiritual nature of man can be included in a law of evolution depends very much on what evolution means, and here a narrower definition of terms is needed than Dr. Bruce has yet given us. The place where the subject "grips" is in the conditions under which man is supposed to be started off in his career as a moral and spiritual being, and in the bearings of a semi-brute origin on the doctrine of sin. We shall look with interest to what Dr. Bruce has to say on this head. The subject has more than theoretic interest. Altered views of sin carry with them altered views of redemption, and we are mistaken if current interpretations of evolution have not something to do with the strange silence observed in many pulpits on the whole class of subjects connected with Christ's propitiatory work and the saving benefits that flow from it. We want to know whether "the new dogma" leaves place for "the old gospel." If it does not, there will have to be a new clearing-up.

He whose yesterday is full of industry and ambition, full of books and conversation and culture, will find his tomorrow full of worth, happiness and friendship.—Newell D. Hillis.

Enameline
The Modern
STOVE POLISH.
DUSTLESS, ODORLESS, BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.
Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

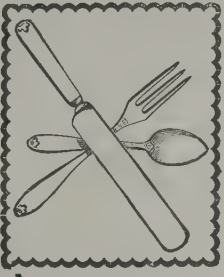

Table Tools
It's awkward to have a silver plated Knife, Fork or Spoon, minus a portion of the plating, placed before a guest at your table. When SILVER
ELECTRO-SILICON
POLISH
is used for cleaning silver, plated ware outlives its owner, and solid ware holds its original value without defacement, for the next generation.
We'll send you a trial quantity for the asking, or box, post-paid, for 15 cents in stamps. Sold everywhere. Avoid substitutes.
THE ELECTRO SILICON CO., New York.

A Matter of Taste
That people who have tried different chocolates prefer
WHITMAN'S
Instantaneous
Chocolate
to all others. It is distinctively delicious—distinctively pure.
Your grocer has it in 1 lb. and ½ lb. tins.
STEPHEN F. WHITMAN & SON, Philada.

GRANULA
Our Home Granula Co., DANSVILLE, N. Y.
Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of the Jackson Sanatorium, Trial box 25c. Book with recipes FREE.
The Perfect Health Food

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES. North Adams Training School for Nurses. An opportunity for excellent training is offered by the North Adams Training School for Nurses. Apply to Mrs. John Bracewell, North Adams, Mass.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

Literature

THE BEGINNINGS OF A NATION

Mr. Edward Eggleston, the author of this work, the first of a series on Life in the United States, here has turned from the field of romance to that of history, but without abandoning many of the characteristics of romantic work. His volume will be, and indeed already has been, widely commended for its brilliancy and interest, as it certainly merits. It also will be praised for its more solid qualities, and this, too, it deserves to some extent. It does not profess to be a detailed history, although it often goes considerably into details. It deals with salient features and goes into particulars only in the endeavor to justify its main conclusions. In the first of the three main divisions The Virginia Colony is the subject, and its vicissitudes, the characteristics of its leaders, etc., are described with graphic force. The chief cause of its misfortunes is declared to have been the purpose of its promoters to outrival Spain and find a passage by sea to the Pacific rather than to found a state. But a more important cause certainly was the ignorance of its founders of how to start a healthy colony. Had they understood this no dreams of a passage to the Pacific would have sapped the vigor of their settlement. The Puritan Migration, including that of the Pilgrims, is considered in the second part, and The Catholic Migration, The Prophet of Religious Freedom, i. e., Roger Williams, and New England Dispersions are discussed in the third part under the head, Centrifugal Forces in Colony-Planting. Mr. Eggleston has covered a wide range in his researches and has made picturesque and effective use of his material. The fact that he throws his light upon the subject from a somewhat new angle is of both interest and value. Moreover, his portrayals of character and policy alike are often shrewd and his literary style is delightful. That his book is helpful and permanently valuable will be granted readily. That it is the final statement upon its theme, or is wholly trustworthy, will be properly disputed. The critics most familiar with the subject, and with the demands and methods of modern historical writing, will find in it most to be condemned. The author evidently has endeavored to illustrate that thoroughness of research and precision of statement which now are conceded to be the vital qualifications of the historian. It is equally evident, however, that he has not altogether succeeded.

One leading purpose is, in the author's words, "To make these pages reflect the character of the age in which the English colonies were begun, and the traits of the colonists, and to bring into relief the social, political, intellectual and religious forces that promoted emigration." This main purpose is well carried out here and there, yet upon certain points the author vacillates a great deal. At times he insists that that age is not to be judged by its own standards but by those of modern times, and he condemns the intolerance of the Puritans severely. Yet at other times he seems to apologize for them and to justify them on the ground that they knew no better and were noble men and women, in some respects in advance of their age. Determined to free himself from any undue partiality for them because of their great achievements, he nevertheless has failed to escape its influence altogether. He says of himself, "I have not been able to treat [them] otherwise than unreverently." The reader must not assume him to mean to treat them irreverently. That is not his purpose. He simply aims to regard them with the cool, impartial scrutiny of the critical historian. Yet he cannot be said to have succeeded. It is impossible to go fully into explanatory details, but it may be mentioned, for instance, that in his description of the development of Puritanism in England he has failed conspicuously to do justice to the abhorrence on the part of the Puritans of the claims and schemes of the Roman Catholics. One reading his book would infer that this was a minor matter and that the Puritans objected chiefly to uniformity in ecclesiastical costume, to the laxity of common life, to the corruption of the clergy, the desecration of the Sabbath, etc. It is quite true that all these were factors in the situation, but it is equally true, and it deserves far more prominence than he gives it, that many things to which the Puritans objected were to their thought objectionable principally because of Papist associations and significances. In fact, his Puritans are far from being typical.

The discussion of Roger Williams and his relation to the early colonists is of great interest, but is neither conclusive nor even impartial. In spite of the lack of a consistent theory and of a consequent wavering between enthusiastic admiration and the consciousness that much in Williams, after all, was open to grave objection, he has drawn a vivid and entertaining picture of the man, but it is as fairly to be called a special plea—in favor of Williams—as is any one of those which he accuses others of having drawn on the other side. It is unjustifiable to assume, as is here assumed throughout, that Williams was controlled by the loftiest conscientiousness and that the authorities of the Bay Colony were prejudiced and disposed to "bully" him out of his convictions. There is no more reason to question their intent to be fair than to dispute his. Nor is it quite candid to accuse the late Dr. Dexter of seeking "with characteristic wealth of learning and ingenuity . . . to diminish the force of these generous words"—alluding to Robinson's famous utterance about more light breaking forth—without adding that the more "generous" interpretation has very little evidence in its favor, and that of the most general character, while that which Dr. Dexter suggested has considerable and somewhat specific support.

Mr. Eggleston must have been singularly unfortunate at Austerfield, if he ever have visited that village at all, as his words imply. To say, as he says, that "no tradition of the Pilgrims lingers among them. They have never heard that anybody ever went out from Austerfield to do anything historical. They listen with a bovine surprise if you speak to them of this exodus, and they refer you to the old clerk of the parish, who will know about it," must amuse those familiar with the place, and his declaration that the Pilgrims "were just common country folk like these" is entirely misleading. The people are not only well aware of the historical interest of their village but proud of it, and, instead of being stolid or bovine, although this of course may be true of individuals there or anywhere, the inhabitants of that village and of the surrounding region are intelligent and in a considerable degree well informed. Many are well educated. Some of the Pilgrims, moreover, were connected, or accustomed to associate, with the best families in the country around, and most of them must have been possessed of a high degree of intelligence for their time. It is true that Mr. Eggleston concedes them to have been "vivified by enthusiasm," but they were far more than enthusiastic clodhoppers. As to the "flat, naked and depressing landscape," most people call it beautiful in its quiet, peaceful way, but Mr. Eggleston certainly has a right to his own opinion, and the matter is a trifle. Yet his treatment of these minor matters indicates a lapse of self-control because of the desire to support a theory, and this is an indication of the gravest defect in his book. The work is not what it professes to be—a calm, patient study and statement of the precise truth, but it sometimes is modified by conspicuous carelessness and even by apparent prejudice. A mistake as to detail also needs correction. Does not the author know the date of Forefathers' Day? The Pilgrims landed at Plymouth on Dec. 11, Old Style (21 N. S.), not on Nov. 10. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.]

RELIGIOUS

For Christ's Crown [W. B. Ketcham. $1.50] is a volume by Rev. Dr. D. J. Burrell. Dr. Burrell is a brilliant preacher, gifted with the power of making the truth simple and telling by his presentation of it. These sermons apparently represent his ordinary work, and their intense practicalness explains his strong hold upon the public. Less profound in respect to thought than the productions of some other well-known preachers, and less polished in form, they nevertheless are notable discourses. They abound in strong common sense, in effective interpretation of Scripture, in successful application of truth to the hearer, and in that deep spiritual fervor without which no sermon ever strikes home with lasting effect. Illustrative material abounds, and it is strikingly successful in causing incidents and experiences of common life to make plainer the meaning of the divine Word.

The Hope of Israel [Chas. Scribner's Sons. Imported. $1.40], by Rev. F. H. Woods, contains the Warburtonian lectures delivered in Lincoln's Inn Chapel, London, from 1890 to 1894. They form a review of the argument from prophecy. The author accepts substantially the conclusions of the higher criticism, and endeavors to show that, although in his judgment it is impossible to insist upon the literal fulfillment of Old Testament prophecy, for the most part, in the manner which used to be accepted, the true significance of prophecy not only is now better understood but also is as rich as ever in the essential spirituality which always must be its vital and distinguishing feature. In our judgment he goes somewhat too far in his concessions. He is more ready to give up the Old Testament prophecies as forecasts of the future than some other scholars of trustworthy attainments, and more ready, probably, than is necessary. But some will claim that his concessions render the more convincing the claims which he does make, and there can be no doubt that so much as he insists upon as to the spiritual significance of the prophecies and their fulfillment in Christianity is beyond the power of any critic to refute. The book is not intended for ordinary readers so much as for special students, although it is not too learned in style, or even in substance, for the intelligent laity.

Two more volumes in the series known as Ten Epochs of Church History are at hand. One is The Age of the Crusades [Christian Literature Co. $2.00], by Rev. Dr. J. M. Ludlow. It condenses a great subject into a small compass, and therefore is hardly more than an elaborate sketch. But in spite of this fact it is a scholarly work, well digested in respect to material, well conceived and proportioned in respect to plan, and written with spirit and good judgment. The different Crusades are described, after several preliminary chapters upon social conditions, chivalry, the feudal system, the papal policy and the menace of Mohammedanism, and it will prove useful, both as a reading narrative of the subject and as a book of reference. It contains the substance of what is important in regard to the Crusades, and will serve well the needs of many readers who have not time for more elaborate works.

The other volume is The Age of the Great Western Schism [Christian Literature Co. $1.50], by Rev. Dr. Clinton Locke. Much the same criticism may be passed upon this volume. It is a careful, conscientious study leading up to the famous Council of Constance, and following out its results to the church, including the Councils of Basel, Ferrara and Florence. And there are chapters on the German Mystics, the Inquisition in the Fourteenth Century and literature and art during the same period. The work of Wyclif and Huss is outlined, and the ecclesiastical student will find here a clear picture of the times, drawn with intelligence and skill.

The Bible as Literature [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50] is a series of articles by prominent Biblical scholars on various topics from Genesis to Revelation. Indeed it goes a little farther, for it concludes with a chapter on the influence of the Bible on English Literature. Professor Cook shows that it has had its effect upon the style and language of English authors for twelve centuries. Many of the contributors to this volume have made reputations as special students of the themes of which they treat. Professor Genung writes on Job, Professor Marvin E. Vincent on the Parables, Professor Stevens on the Epistles of Paul and Dr. Griffis on the Song of Songs. These names and others insure accurate and scholarly work, and the value of such a series of studies, bringing into the foreground the literary significance of the Bible which has been so largely overlooked, is obvious.

The Bible Illustrated series has received an additional volume in Second Corinthians [$2.00] from the press of the F. H. Revell Co. Rev. J. S. Exell is its compiler. The type is exceedingly small, though clear. It purports to contain anecdotes, similes, emblems, illustrations, etc., gathered from a wide range of home and foreign literature. We have discovered, in a somewhat extended examination of it, very few anecdotes, similes, emblems or illustrations, except in so far as numerous citations and outlines of interpretations by eminent divines, or extracts from their discourses or other writings, may be so termed. The illustrative element in the form announced is not wholly lacking, but certainly the announcement is misleading. Whether the book is the worse on that account is another matter, but the intending purchaser should know exactly what it is before ordering. Those who value a work of this sort will find it a good example of its class.

Two volumes of Lenten readings are sent us by Messrs E. P. Dutton & Co. One is called The More Abundant Life [$1.25] selected chiefly from the unpublished manuscripts of the late Bishop Phillips Brooks, by W. M. L. Jay. Passages of Scripture, brief poetical selections and short prayers accompany the utterances of Bishop Brooks. It is well suited to stimulate the religious meditation which ought to be, and commonly is, a feature of Lenten observance. It will do much to promote an enlightened and spiritual type of piety. The other volume is the Daily Round for Lent [50 cents], by an anonymous author. The same classes of material are included, the reflective selections and suggestive passages being briefer. They are practical and promotive of self-examination and consecration.

STORIES

The Forge in the Forest [Lamson, Wolffe & Co. $1.50] is by C. G. D. Roberts. It is a picturesque story of Acadian life at about the middle of the last century, when the struggle of the French and English for the control of the country occasioned keen intriguing and some vigorous fighting. The elements of the plot are comparatively simple, but the story is a spirited and engrossing tale of rivalries in love, politics and war, of daring adventure and of patient suffering, brightened by a romantic affection and crowned at last with happiness. The author has made excellent use of his decidedly fresh and agreeable material, and the result is a frontier romance of real power and more than ordinary interest.

Mr. S. R. Hocking is very apt to point a moral in his stories, but they are none the less stories. His book, For Such Is Life [F. Warne & Co. $1.50], which already has reached its tenth thousand, shows most effectively how greed and unscrupulousness in the race for wealth sometimes overreach themselves, and how an honorable and self-denying course is best in the long run. These valuable lessons, however, are not thrust upon the reader, although he cannot escape them. The book is a novel, genuine and interesting, full of incident and skillful characterization. Its scene is partly in England and partly in Australia, and we do not wonder that it has found favor.

Why the author of Bound in Shallows [Harper & Bros. $1.25], who is Eva W. Brodhead, should have portrayed her hero throughout the story as wearing a beard and why the artist who has drawn his picture has represented him uniformly as beardless is a little problem. We suggest that it would be well for author and artist to confer together on such matters. Apart from this infelicity, the book is a good one. The hero is a man whose moral fiber is too feeble and loose to enable him to stand long against temptation, yet who possesses a certain personal charm which is more beguiling to the two heroines than the sturdier manhood of rivals for their affections. The author has shown considerable skill in delineating the decay of his hero's already weak moral sense and its final collapse, and also the varying emotions of the two girls who love, or think they love, him. The background is a rural settlement in the Cumberland Mountains, and its characteristic features and the tone of its life are described with successful clearness and force. The book is exceptionally good as a study of character.

Mr. S. R. Keightley is a comrade, in respect to style, of Dr. Conan Doyle and Mr. Anthony Hope, and he keeps step quite successfully with them in literature, although by no means as productive as either of them. His new book, The Last Recruit of Clare's [Harper & Bros. $1.50], contains passages from the supposed memoirs of Anthony Dillon, an Irish chevalier of St. Louis in the French service. The story is one of intrigue and adventure, not without some fighting, and it gives the reader a good idea of the hand to mouth life of many a man of good blood and brave services in the days described, who was reduced to great straits and was forced to associate with adventurers and criminals, but succeeded in using them for his own rehabilitation, social and professional. The style of the book is vigorous, and the rapidly increasing library of works of this sort will naturally include this addition.

Macleod of the Camerons [D. Appleton & Co. 50 cents] is by M. Hamilton. It is a strange story of a hasty and imprudent marriage; of the strength of the temptation to separate when the real lack of congeniality between husband and wife came to light; of the blended fascination and terror of an unlawful love which never became outspoken, and never was even fully realized, until it had become evident that it was proffered by one doomed to insanity; and of the final possibility that such a wedded couple should settle down into an endurable, if somewhat humdrum, life and grow together rather than apart and live, on the whole, in considerable happiness. To our thinking the best feature of the book is its portrayal of life in military and naval circles at the Malta station, but it is not a very high type of society which prevails there, after all.

In the Old Herrick House and Other Stories [Harper & Bros. $1.50] contains three stories by Ellen D. Deland. They are for young girls pre-eminently, although by no means lacking in interest for a much wider circle. Family pride, such as is said to be illustrated pre-eminently in Philadelphia, is a conspicuous feature of the book, and the danger of its exaggeration is indicated. The stories are wholesome and vivacious, and the girls will delight in the book.

MISCELLANEOUS

A new edition of the late Sidney Lanier's Johns Hopkins Lectures on The English Novel [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00] is out. They were delivered in 1881 and published two years later and represent the author's latest literary work, with a single comparatively minor exception. They are twelve in number, and upon their first publication they took rank at once as exceptionally thoughtful, discriminating and enlightening discussions. They are reprinted after careful revision and several omitted passages have been restored. A few minor corrections, also, have been made, but they retain essentially their earlier form. The book needs no extended comment here.——Captain John Codman, who, during the Crimean War, was in command of an American steamer in the French and Turkish supply service, has written a bright little book about his experiences. It is called An American Transport in the Crimean War [Bonnell, Silver & Co. 75 cents]. Mr. J. C. Ropes has furnished its introduction.

It is a graphic and eminently readable account of the author's observations of the campaign and it throws considerable light on some important features of the war.

Dr. M. C. Hazard, whose volume, The Tearless Land, we recently had pleasure in commending, also has compiled Marriage Chimes for True Lovers [The Pilgrim Press. 75 cents], a collection of poems on love, marriage and home. These different sections include a choice series of groups of poems, mostly short and all by writers of merit, and the volume, which is prettily bound, and which contains opposite to the title-page the form of a marriage certificate, evidently is intended to be presented to happy couples upon the occasion of their union for life.——A number of poems by Ednah P. Clarke are gathered into a tasteful little volume called The Opal [Lamson, Wolffe & Co. $1.00]. Several of the poems have appeared already in The Atlantic, The Century, or elsewhere. They are striking poems, pervaded by a distinct individuality. Sometimes the author trifles a little with meter, but never unpleasantly, and the instinct of the true poet, as well as its appropriate power of expression, finds illustration throughout the book. Some of the poems are unusually musical and fasten themselves in the memory.

Mr. Harold B. Warren is the author of six etchings taken at Scrooby and Austerfield [Damrell & Upham. $3.50] and therefore of interest to all to whom the story of the Pilgrims appeals. We have great pleasure in testifying to their fidelity. The principal criticism which we have to make is that the view of the Bradford Cottage is not that which one ordinarily obtains. It seems to be taken from a different angle, but it is a good reproduction of the house. The other plates represent Scrooby, taken from the Bawtry Road; the old mill near the ford on the cartpath as one enters Scrooby from Bawtry; the manor farmhouse as one sees it today; a part of the manor house estate, with a view of Scrooby church beyond; and the Austerfield church. The collection is so moderate in price that it ought to have an extensive sale in this country.

NOTES

—— The publication of Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton's new book, In Childhood's Country, is unavoidably postponed until next autumn.

—— Canon Knox-Little's new book, on St. Francis of Assisi, is nearly ready for the press. To compare it with Paul Sabatier's will be interesting.

—— Mr. H. G. O. Blake, the editor of Thoreau, proposes to prepare before long two more volumes of Thoreau's Journal, entitled Late Spring and Late Summer. These will complete the circle of the year.

—— Even the usually correct British Museum people have made the mistake of supposing that Marie Corelli, the name of the queen's favorite novelist, is an assumed title. But it is the author's actual legal name.

—— A memorial to Herbert Spencer, upon the completion of his system of synthetic philosophy, is proposed. Probably it will be either a statue, like Darwin's in the Natural History Museum in London, or a portrait in the National Portrait Gallery.

—— Mr. Henry James was asked to prepare a biography of James Russell Lowell, but was not disposed to do so, and Professor Norton is reported to have said that probably none ever will appear. But his letters, which Professor Norton has edited, answer the same purpose in a degree.

—— Mr. E. B. Hill of the Detroit Journal has for fifty years been making a collection of copies of first editions of Poe's works and other relics of the poet. It includes between 600 and 700 articles. He has given it to the New York Shakespearian Society and it will be placed in the Poe cottage at Fordham after it has been removed to Poe Park.

—— The Cong. S. S. & Pub. Society hereafter will issue its publications with the imprint, The Pilgrim Press, Beacon Street, Boston, but will add its own legal title beneath in the cases of denominational books. Its full name is too long for ordinary use and apt to create the impression that it deals only in denominational or juvenile works.

—— The Bookman reports an amusing utterance, recently overheard at the meeting in London to promote a memorial to Robert Louis Stevenson. Mr. Barrie alluded in his speech to Emily Brontë. "But I thought it was Charlotte who wrote Jane Eyre," whispered somebody on the platform. "O, Emily was Charlotte's second name," was the reply.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Boston.
The Liquor Problem in Its Legislative Aspects. By F. H. Wines and John Kosen. pp. 342. $1.25.
The Complete Poetical Works of James Russell Lowell. pp. 492. $2.00.
The Chief End of Man. By George S. Merriam. pp. 296. $1.50.
Charles Scribner's Sons. New York.
The Middle Period. American History Series. By John W. Burgess, Ph.D., LL.D. pp. 544. $1.75.
Louis Napoleon and Mademoiselle de Montijo. By Imbert de Saint-Amand. Translated by Elizabeth G. Martin. pp. 512. $1.50.
A History of China. By S. Wells Williams, LL.D. With a concluding chapter by F. W. Williams. pp. 474. $2.00.
America and the Americans. pp. 292. $1.25.
G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.
History of Ancient Peoples. By Willis Boughton. pp. 541. $2.00.
American Orations. Civil War and Reconstruction. Edited by Alexander Johnston, re-edited by J. A. Woodburn. pp. 481. $1.25
British India. The Story of the Nations Series. By R. W. Frazer, LL.B., I.C.S. pp. 399. $1.50.
Harper & Brothers. New York.
Harper's Round Table. pp. 1,276. $3.50.
Harper's Monthly Magazine. Vols. 92, 93. pp. 976, 972. Each $3.00.
Harper's Bazar. Vol. 29. pp. 1,100. $7.00.
Harper's Weekly. Vol. 40. pp. 1,288. $7.00.
New Amsterdam Book Co. New York.
A Minion of the Moon. By T. W. Speight. pp. 231. $1.25.
Death—and Afterwards. By Sir Edwin Arnold, K.C.I.B. pp. 65. 60 cents.
J. B. Lippincott Co. Philadelphia.
Glamour. By Meta Orreo. pp. 344. $1.25.
Bachelor's Bridal. By Mrs. H. L. Cameron. pp. 202. $1.50.
J. H. Abbott. Cleveland.
Comments on the Revelation of Jesus Christ. pp. 91. 75 cents.
W. J. Shuey. Dayton, O.
Great Moments in the Life of Paul. By Rev. E. W. Work, D.D. pp. 200.
Werner Co. Chicago.
New American Supplement to the Encyclopædia Britannica. Vol. 2. pp. 1,308. $3.00.
Government Printing Office. Washington.
Annual Report of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. pp. 770.
Pacific Press Pub. Co. Oakland.
Thoughts from the Mount of Blessing. By Mrs. E. G. White. pp 201. 75 cents.

PAPER COVERS

Curtis & Cameron. Boston.
Handbook of the New Library of Congress. Compiled by Herbert Small, Charles Coffin and A. R. Spofford. 30 cents.
D. Appleton & Co. New York.
Tatterly. By T. Gallon. pp. 311. 50 cents.
J. D. Wattles & Co. Philadelphia.
Light on the Story of Jonah. By H. Clay Trumbull. 20 cents.

MAGAZINES

February. Yale Review.—Educational Review.

March. Atlantic.—Pocket.—What to Eat.—American University.—Lippincott's.—Pall Mall.—St. Nicholas.—Preacher's.—Chautauquan.—Homiletic.—Catholic World.—Philosophical Review.—Scribner's.—McClure's.—Review of Reviews.—Harper's.—Century.—International.—Appleton's Popular Science.—Bookman.

◆

There is an Episcopal temperament, and a Methodist temperament, and a Calvinistic temperament, from which sects grow by natural evolution. At the core of character they mean little more than red hair or a birthmark. The Master will know his own only by the name in the forehead.—Austin Phelps.

◆

AN ACTOR IN A CONGREGATIONAL PULPIT

Till within a few years Congregational pastors, as a rule, have regarded the theater either with silence or with unqualified condemnation. More recently the subject of dramatic entertainments has begun to compel discriminating attention. In a number of social organizations connected with the churches something in that line is occasionally offered. It is not a strange thing to see the announcement of an opera, a colloquy or a play given as an entertainment by a Sunday school or a C. E. Society. Usually they are theatrical performances under other names. It is openly acknowledged that many church members occasionally attend the theater. A majority of the people in most of our cities—fifty-seven per cent. in Boston, for example—are more or less regular attendants at the theater. The question is a pertinent one—can the churches afford to ignore or condemn indiscriminately an institution which directly influences at least as many people in the cities as they do?

A few churches are frankly meeting this question. One of them, we judge, is the First Congregational Church of Kansas City, Mo., of which Rev. Dr. Henry Hopkins is pastor. At his invitation, on Sunday evening, Feb. 1, Mr. James A. Herne, the author and leading actor of Shore Acres, spoke in the First Church of the theater from the actor's standpoint. In introducing him Dr. Hopkins stated the position which many Christians hold with respect to the stage. He said:

> The time has passed when the legitimate drama needs any defense, and the time never was when such men as Joseph Jefferson, Sol Smith Russell and James A. Herne need to be apologized for in any presence. In every decade there are men and women not a few who dignify the actor's calling, and by their work and accomplishments adorn the society in which they move. Meantime, there is, and always has been, a bad, corrupt and corrupting theater, against which too much cannot be said. It is bad, and is growing worse. Those who know say that not only in New York, but in all the great centers of population there is a distinct debasement of the stage, taken as a whole. In the presence of these facts not a few moral and Christian people are perplexed. Some say total abstinence from the play is the only consistent ground—you cannot attend a good play without encouraging all evil institutions. On the other hand, an increasing number take the ground that the stage, like the press and the pulpit, is established as a great public educator; it is, and is to be, one of the most powerful social factors. We must discriminate. Because there is so much that is evil all the more are we under obligation to recognize the good. We must discriminate as we do in the novel, in the newspaper, in the picture and the statue, in the very food we eat.
>
> Very largely, I judge, the members of our churches take this position. At any rate, they go to the theaters, and they do not always exercise discrimination, either. Our Methodist brothers have an article in their discipline forbidding it, but I am told that there are as many Methodists who go to the play as of other people, and I never heard of a Methodist being turned out of the church for disobedience to that rule. Some members of all the churches attend some of the plays. In this state of divided opinion and practice, we may as well look the facts in the face; it is wise to seek all the light that we can obtain. We think that we are fortunate in finding the right man to speak to us upon the theater from the actor's standpoint.

It is but fair to add that a converted actress, who was on the same evening conducting evangelistic meetings in the First United Presbyterian Church, described the theater as being, even in the most charitable light, one of the works of the devil.

Gleanings From Our Mail Bag

THE DESIRE FOR PROSPERITY

A correspondent thinks a recent editorial in The Congregationalist with the above title falls short of reaching the whole case. He does not believe that the utterances of politicians or the tone of the press give much reason to hope for deliverance from the oppression of trusts and monopolies; and he draws a picture from his imagination which is real enough, though we fear the remedy he suggests will not be heeded. Still, it may help to bring about a change in public opinion and in legislation, which is greatly needed. He says:

Let us suppose a case. Here is a quiet country village whose inhabitants derive a comfortable living by their trade with each other and the surrounding country. Among them are found all kinds of mechanics and stores keeping goods suitable for the requirements of their patrons. Thus in comfort and plenty are families raised, the younger taking the place of the older, or branching off into new enterprises suitable to the growth of the place, and while there are none very rich there is a feeling of independence in all, and to those who have good health and are industrious there is a chance of gaining a competence. But now the scene changes. A few wealthy individuals arrive who are said to be men of energy and enterprise, but to whom the words avarice and covetousness would be much more applicable. They are determined to monopolize the business of the place, and they build a big store and keep everything and undersell everybody else. The small dealers are all driven from business. The older ones may be given a berth in the big store (if they can command any trade) long enough to insure that trade. Then their services will be no longer required at any price. And as to the younger element, out of the 200 employed in the different kinds of small business only about fifty will be needed in the big store, and then the struggle begins to see which of the 200 shall get the places, the competition enabling the proprietors to grind down the wages to the lowest limit. As to the villagers: suppose they can buy cheaper at the big store than before it existed, if their business is destroyed, their families left in idleness, what have they to buy with? Or how are they benefited? The same may be said of the farmers of the surrounding country. Their home market is destroyed. They are told by the proprietors of the big store that unless they will sell their produce as low as they can buy in the larger market by the carload they cannot deal with them. This is no fancy picture. The greatest curse of the country and the greatest foe the producer and the wage-earner have to contend with today is monopoly. Would that all could see it and act wisely in regard to it. Let the big stores severely alone and they will die a natural death. W. P. T.

THE KINDERGARTEN IN SAN FRANCISCO

A correspondent objects to Occident's statement in our issue of Dec. 31, that Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper "inaugurated the kindergarten movement" in San Francisco. Our correspondent says:

Mrs. Cooper's name the world over will always be associated with the host of kindergartens of which San Francisco is so justly proud, and I have no wish to detract from her deservedly great reputation in this regard. Yet it is but justice to group with hers three other names—those of Miss Emma Marwedel, Prof. Felix Adler and Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin. Miss Marwedel was mainly engaged in private kindergarten work, but her name should not be omitted, for it was with her that Mrs. Wiggin (then Miss Kate D. Smith) received her training as a kindergartner. In 1878 Professor Adler visited California, and by his influence the San Francisco Public Kindergarten Society was organized. Its efforts would almost certainly have failed of immediate, perhaps of ultimate, success, had not Miss Smith consented to open its first class, then the only one west of the Rocky Mountains. Mrs. Cooper visited Miss Smith's work at Silver Street, her interest was thus aroused, and soon the city held a second kindergarten, this one supported by subscriptions from Mrs. Cooper's Bible class. Out of this grew what is now the Golden Gate Kindergarten Association. M. L. S.

A DEVICE FOR INCREASING GIFTS

The article On Giving, in The Congregationalist Jan. 14, is timely and suggestive, but, may we not say, is not emphasis placed exclusively on custom and habit? Is there not some newly devised plan whereby more money may be had for our benevolent objects? We confess we were led into this line of thought some two weeks ago, when our church took up its annual collection for foreign missions, and we were not satisfied with what we then felt we could put into the contribution box.

Most churches have stated seasons for receiving contributions once each year for the six or seven great benevolent societies of our denomination. Some are more fortunate than others, as some months are more favorable for giving than others. The rich can give a stated or fixed sum and at any time. They can, as The Congregationalist suggests, make rules unto themselves, and follow them. Not so the masses of givers, and if so they may be sure to be on the safe side, however much they may incline to be liberal.

Special occasions occur. Unexpectedly money comes to hand, and you are just then inclined to give to some object in which you have interest, or the demands are more urgent. How shall we meet these conditions and this class of givers? We venture one suggestion that might be adopted by some churches. Attach to each pew in some conspicuous place a neat holder filled with envelopes. Have printed on each one the various benevolent objects for which collections are taken, with the date for receiving them. Then state plainly that the object of these envelopes is to give an opportunity for additional contributions from time to time, by inclosing the amount and checking with a cross (x) opposite the name of the society it is intended for. Have one or more receiving lock boxes put up in convenient places, where these envelopes can be dropped as the people pass out of the church. These boxes should be under the care of the church treasurer, to distribute the gifts as designated by the donors on the envelopes. Thus a simple, convenient way of giving would be afforded every one, and the habit and spirit of frequent giving would be greatly encouraged thereby, and thousands of dollars secured for the use and support of the various societies. W.

A MISTAKEN INFERENCE

We have never impugned the honesty of intention of the people in the Western States though we have differed from many of them in our opinion of the results which would follow the adoption of free coinage of silver. Our correspondent, whose letter we print below, has failed to understand us, though we by no means question his intelligence:

Gentlemens, As my time has expire, please stop sending The Congregationalist, to me. I will not take any paper that call western peoples Repudiators. We are as honest on the average as east people are. I think it is small potato for a "so call" religion paper to publish. Your truly, E. W.

South Dakota.

INVERTED HOSPITALITY

Apropos of the recent article in The Congregationalist entitled Anniversary Guests and Hosts, let me relate an experience:

We expected guests to remain from Tuesday until Friday. We turned back relatives and tried to head off friends. Tuesday we were notified that our delegates would not arrive until Wednesday night, time not specified. We gave up going to the convention ourselves and sat up to await the promised arrivals. After keeping the watch until a late hour we lay down to alternately doze and listen for the sound of the doorbell until morning. Next we reasoned that strangers in the city might have been belated in finding the way and so the third day passed in anxiety. After the meetings were over we had word that our expected guests had not come to town at allon account of the weather. The household lost all the meetings and we were disappointed in not sharing the society of the visitors.

There was no blame attached to any one, but the slip-up indicates that the free entertainment plan is not the most comfortable for either guests or hosts. It would be more convenient and scarcely more expensive for people to put up in the center of the city at places where rooms can be obtained cheaply. There would then be greater opportunity to mingle with other visitors, which is a great part of the profit of such gatherings. If there were interferences those who expected to become guests would not feel obliged to come or grieved that they had disappointed or troubled others. The suburban fares would almost have paid the keep in several cases of which we know. W. R. C.

REDUCING EXPENSES OF MISSIONARY SOCIETIES

I am much interested in the article of Dr. Bradley in your issue of Jan. 28. He has broken the ice in an exceedingly important quarter. The fact cannot be concealed that the financial condition of the benevolent boards, and back of that of the churches, and still further back of them of a great number of the business firms and corporations and individual members of the churches, is in a bad way, and that many annual reports at the beginning of the year indicated that the assets are quite too close or running behind the resources. There is money enough in the country, no doubt, but the benevolent boards are not getting hold of it, and the church treasurers are not getting enough of it, and the mechanics and tradesmen and farmers are declaring that they get very little of it. Where it is, and who has it, many of us do not know. Now at this time when expenses and receipts ought to keep step with each other, yet when receipts are lagging so much, why not make a resolute effort to keep the two running mates a little closer together by beginning at the top to reduce expenses? The home missionary churches which have asked for $250, for example, have had to get along with $200. Why not apply the same reduction to salaries of officials? It is a disagreeable condition, but ministers and churches have had to face it. It does not arise from hostility to the work that any of these suggestions are made. It comes from a "condition not a theory." B.

Perhaps our correspondent failed to note our editorial statement in the same issue and reaffirmed this week that the directors of the Home Missionary Society had already decided to reduce the expenses of that society twenty-two and one-half per cent. Other boards are earnestly considering the same question. They may, we believe, be trusted to fix on the way in which reductions can be made with least injury to the work the societies have in their charge.

"BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES AND HARD TIMES"

In fairness to the C. H. M. S. I ought, perhaps, to state that my recent article on the above topic was written and published before I knew of the deep cut in the society's administration expenses. I am confident that the reduction thus voluntarily made has greatly increased the loyalty of the churches, which have a right to expect that such economical policy shall continue to characterize the administration. Probably the reduction thus made is as large as safety warrants at present, but we shall all look with favor upon any devices that the executive committee may discover whereby the salaries of missionaries on the field shall not bear the chief burden of reduction in times of financial stringency. D. F. BRADLEY.

MISSIONARY MAGAZINES

Is Congregational Work to do away with the several society periodicals? If it is to be a résumé only, I do not see its mission. It is very disappointing in its general make-up and lack of "snap." C. M. C.

The Missionary Herald assures its readers that no thought is entertained of giving up that periodical, and we are sure that none of its readers wish to have it discontinued. We do not suppose any of the societies intend to suspend any of their publications. Congregational Work is intended not to supersede, but to supplement them.

INAUGURATION SCENES AT THE CAPITAL

BY LILLIAN CAMP WHITTLESEY

Every four years Washington has a holiday distinctively her own. To make every fourth 4th of March as great an occasion as possible is the steady purpose that runs through all planning for the city. Never before have inaugural visitors had such an æsthetic treat as that afforded this year by the opening of the new Corcoran Art Gallery and the completion of the Congressional Library.

The interchange of civilities between the outgoing and the incoming Administrations have been a marked contrast to the unpleasant events in the Senate. The President and Mrs. Cleveland asked Major and Mrs. McKinley to dinner the day after their arrival from Canton. Mrs McKinley was unable to accept the invitation, and Mrs Cleveland responded to her regrets with a note and a basket of flowers. She was most considerate of the semi-invalid who was to succeed her at the White House. The private apartments were put in complete order under her supervision, and made beautiful with an abundance of choice flowers by her order. The new secretary to the President, Mr. John Addison Porter of Connecticut, makes a pleasing impression by his polished manners and businesslike methods. The position will be an especially important one in this Administration. The Lamonts gave a dinner party and reception to General and Mrs. Alger, and will turn their house over to them for its unexpired lease. The other official families of the new Administration are at hotels for the present. The head of the Cabinet occupies the handsome white stone house on K Street, which he built a few years ago. All the hotels were very full during inaugural week, and people paid large prices for accommodations. There was no lack of rooms to be had in the resident portions of the city. Not as many inaugural visitors were in town as usual, but more money was spent. The many who wanted to come could not afford to do so in these times. A large proportion of those who came are rich people. When we know of a scramble for rooms at $25 per day, and a readiness to pay $150 inaugural day for the use of two windows that look out upon the avenue, and read that one man paid $1,250 for out-of-door seats for his 250 invited guests, we begin to understand what it may be to have money to burn.

Washington society has only words of regret and good wishes for Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland. They have been both fortunate and sensible in not sharing their private affairs with the public. But they have met all the social obligations that come to the occupants of the White House with great courtesy.

The citizens of the District have no more voice as to who shall be President than they have as to the weather that initiates his term of office. But they unite with a will irrespective of party to give him a hearty welcome, and they never plan for any but a bright and balmy Inauguration Day. The open stands along the avenue were almost ornamental this year. The unsightly boards were covered with paper, marked and colored to represent stone work—shades of Ruskin! The receipts from the permits for these stands and from the ball defray all expenses of the inauguration. It is not the people's money that decorates the avenue, but a guarantee fund raised among the disenfranchised people who live here all the time.

When the morning of the fourth dawned clear and crisp a universal smile illumined the faces of the people. We have had such direful weather on so many inauguration days that we fully expected something dreadful, though we said we did not. This day was perfect—breeze enough to sway the many-colored streamers and to toss the thousands of flags into gay ripples, bracing enough to make the parade a pleasure to marching men and prancing horses, a brightness and balm in the air that made the day in the radiant sunshine one of joy to hundreds of thousands of spectators. The simple program was followed without delay or serious incident. Major McKinley with Secretary Porter and the Senate committee, Senators Sherman and Mitchell of Oregon, rode in Senator Sherman's carriage to the White House. Troop A of Cleveland and Major McKinley's old Ohio regiment, the Twenty-third, acted as escort. In less than an hour the President and the President-elect rode down the avenue in a carriage drawn by four horses. Mr. Cleveland took none of the honors, but Mr. McKinley constantly raised his hat to the cheering crowd. Few could see the ceremonies in the Senate chamber. Early in the week the retiring vice-president had been presented with an elegant silver service and a testimonial engrossed on parchment and signed by all the senators in town. In his brief speech he referred to this mark of appreciation. A vast throng saw the two Presidents as they came arm in arm upon the platform, and witnessed Mr. McKinley's acceptance of the highest gift in the nation. Behind him sat his wife, who had been carefully assisted to an armchair, and not far away was his happy-faced mother. Surrounding him were the leading men of the nation, before him a rejoicing, sympathetic multitude. What greater trust did ever mortal man assume? The ex-president gave close attention to the inaugural address. There was little demonstration on the part of the people, but excellent order and an evident appreciation of the greatness of the occasion. Returning to the White House waves of cheers rose from the dense mass that spread from curbstone to stands, windows and roofs, while the fluttering of handkerchiefs was like flecks of foam upon a breaking sea. The marshals and aids, with their broad sashes of blue and white, and half a hundred fine bands gave style and spirit to the pageant. A large detachment of regulars and the various companies of State militia furnished precision, and ten governors of States with their staffs roused much enthusiasm, which became greater when General Howard, commanding the third division, rode along. The only variety to the marching platoons of soldiers and civilians were a company of men on bicycles, another whirling red, white and blue umbrellas and the Indian boys from Carlisle who carried the implements and results of their manual training instead of arms.

The President's reviewing stand, an ornamental affair built on classic lines, was filled with a large party of invited guests. He and Vice-president Hobart reviewed the parade from beneath a glass covered portico. With them was Garrett Hobart, Jr., the only child in these two distinguished families. He is a slender lad of about twelve, who looked with keen and eager eyes upon the lines that for three hours went sweeping by.

It was dusk before the last detachment passed and soon the rockets and bursting bombs began to play about the monument, while search-lights from various points made northern lights in the southern sky. Like fairy wraiths they made the flags gleam in the darkness and the monument to point a ghostly finger to the stars. Then came a grand illumination on the avenue, while from thousands of houses beams of light from uncurtained windows sent out a welcome to the new administration. The many thousands of people who crowded the ballroom bade it a personal welcome. Mrs. McKinley was heroic enough to be there, and hundreds of gentlemen were equally heroic in making a human cable of themselves to protect the presidential party from the crush as they walked across the room. She has a sweet and delicate face and carries herself with dignity. No wines were placed upon their table at supper. The whole day was one long succession of inspiring and beautiful events, a happy omen for the change that a long-suffering people hope will bring prosperity to this beloved country.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN

Topic, March 21–27 How Our Bodies Influence Our Souls (a Temperance Topic).

Our bodies have their rights. The monks of old thought differently. They believed the spiritual life could be carried on better if the claims of the physical man were ignored. They thought they could bring him into submission by fasting and vigils. We are not in danger of falling into their precise mistake, but we, too, in the prosecution of a lofty purpose, in the effort to grasp spiritual things, even in the whole-souled endeavor to do Christian work, may forget that our bodies have their rights. If we fail to give them a proper amount of sleep and exercise, if we have no idea what foods are best for us, if we allow for no real vacation in our year of labor, we shall reap the bitter fruits of such error both in our bodies and in our souls. Fagged and nerveless, we shall be without the power to take hold of things unseen, without the needed equipment with which to serve our Master day by day. Christ chose not invalids but strong, healthy and, we may surmise, athletic men, to be his disciples.

On the other hand, there are limits to the rights which our bodies possess. Their appetites and passions are to be held in leash. They cannot always have the thing they crave. They are to be "kept under." Modern gymnasiums, with their varied appliances for developing every muscle, are established on the principle that the body is to be the servant of the mind that tenants it. It is to be developed, toughened, made symmetrical. This is in the interests not merely of a splendid outward man, but of a vigorous, wholesome moral and spiritual life. But such an aim requires the overcoming of laziness and inertia. Animals, in which the impulses of the body have free sway, may attain strength and agility, but they know nothing of that systematic, purposeful exercise which, adopted by a human being, counts for so much.

The true relation of body and soul, then, is reciprocal, each recognizing the other, but the soul dominating. Any one who wants to be in spiritual health and to serve Christ will care for his body, and it will repay such care by making him so much the more effective.

In and About Boston

Dr. McKenzie at Tremont Temple

It is due largely to the persuasion of Mr. Moody that Dr. Alexander McKenzie has consented to speak on Monday noons during March at Tremont Temple. The evangelist, anxious to conserve and extend the results of his two months' campaign, felt it desirable to continue, with some degree of regularity, the great central mass meetings and chose Dr. McKenzie as their leader.

The audience last Monday noon filled the floor and first balconies and was quite similar in its make-up to those who have of late been drawn to the same auditorium by the desire to hear Mr. Moody or Mr. Murphy. There was a good sprinkling of ministers in the body of the house, as well as on the platform, and men here and there wearing the blue ribbon showed that the recent Murphy movement has by no means spent itself. Henry M. Moore presided and fervent prayers were offered by Drs. Plumb and Bates. The choir which has been singing at the Moody meetings was present in considerable numbers, the Moody quartet sang and a solo was rendered by a young woman whose conversion at the Moody meetings three weeks ago has led her to abandon her preparation for the stage.

Dr. McKenzie's sermon from the text, "Silver and gold have I none but what I have that give I thee," was directed to the average hearer, though there were not a few injunctions in it apparently designed for his brother ministers, as when he told them that there was something better for them to do than to discuss things, or as when he said he had no leisure to preach his ignorance, or, again, as when he leaned over the desk and asked a row of clerics before him if yesterday they preached their doubts or their faith.

But the bulk of his sermon was a straight, forceful appeal to all his hearers to use what they have, to do what they can. We waste from a third to half of our time bemoaning what we haven't got. Never think of your poverty or your ignorance. Silver and gold are all right in their places. They build our churches and send out our missionaries, but a man has to be independent of wealth in order to use it properly, and there is a limit to what wealth can accomplish. This positive principle of action should govern our conduct. Life, for instance, is too short for an amusement about which nothing better can be said than that there is no harm in it. The times demand men of action, courage, convictions. The air is thick with negations. The speaker had naught but sympathy with scholarship, and cherished no fears regarding its discoveries, but the things already known seemed of greater practical consequence to him. We do not know all about the atonement or the incarnation. Paul never undertook to explain the Trinity, but we do know that God is, that he is our Father, that he loves us, that he has written a letter to us, that he has spoken to us by his Son.

Young Women's Christian Work

The close of thirty-one years of the Boston Y. W. C. A. was observed last week at the Berkeley Street home. Mrs. H. F. Durant, the president, was in the chair. The annual report of the directors dwelt chiefly upon the timely assistance given through the Travelers' Aid Society to young women newly arrived in the city. It showed that in the year past 1,658 girls, 142 of whom were friendless, were thus directly aided, and that with this purpose in view 446 steamers had been met at the docks.

At the two houses of the association on Berkeley and Warrenton Streets, 1,666 boarders were received, 232 of whom remained permanently. At the former place a social center for the locality is maintained, and excellent results have been secured in the Durant gymnasium, the instruction classes and the employment department. In all 4,674 situations were filled through the agency of the association. The receipts of last year were $11,662, not including a balance of $2,824 from 1895. Expenses were $9,589.

Rev. Dr. W. T. Perrin made the anniversary address, paying a tribute to the efficient leadership which the association has had for three decades. The president, Mrs. Durant, was re-elected.

Dr. Gordon's First Lenten Lecture

Every other year the Old South Church observes the Lenten season by a special Sunday evening course, in which prominent ministers and educators participate. In the alternate years no outside talent is employed, but the pastor gives a series of connected discourses. This is the year for one of Dr. Gordon's courses, and it was successfully inaugurated last Sunday before a large congregation. His general theme is Messages from the Cross, and each of the seven last words of Jesus will be made the subject of a sermon. The words "I thirst" were treated last Sunday, from which this theme was developed, The Cry of Humanity. He said that the dignity of man is measured by his wants. They are the source of the advances in art, science and philosophy. The highest and greatest of all the demands of humanity is for religion. The passion for righteousness is essential to human nature. Unless a man possesses it he is not truly human.

Again the Ministers' Meeting

The regular meetings of the Boston ministers, discontinued during Mr. Moody's presence in Boston, were resumed last Monday and a large and attentive audience gathered to listen to the paper by Rev. Daniel Evans, prepared and read at the last Commencement at Bangor Seminary, on The Changes in Theology which Necessitate a Broader and Deeper Work of the Church. Mr. Evans spoke of the new theism, which no longer thinks of God as separate from his works, but recognizes his immanence and feels that his works express the harmony of his character and that he is realizing his thought and purpose in the world by a gradual and organic evolution.

There is a change in our thought of revelation and the Bible. Written by unscientific men in an unscientific age and for purposes other than science, it is not the place in which to seek scientific information. We now make a distinction between the "Word of God" and the Bible and are coming to feel how unfortunate is the word infallible as applied to the Bible and to believe that the evidence of inspiration is in the message of the one inspired. There have been changes in our thought of Christ. The desire to know him, historically, apart from the visions of the prophets and the accounts of the apostles, is evidenced by the sales of the many lives of Christ, and by the popularity of many pictures of events in his life.

The work of the church, in view of this larger conception of salvation, must be ethical as well as religious. The whole of a man's life must be saved and the division into things sacred and things secular must not be allowed. It must include the helping of men intellectually. People are reading in magazines and newspapers of the results of philosophical and scientific research, and they are asking crude but sincere questions as to the bearing of these new truths upon their religion. The work of the church in society must be deeper still. Outside there is a famine for the word of God, and while it is easier to work with the hands than it is to pray with a soul, yet prayer is the better thing and only is powerful to cast out demons. Men need now the eye to see Christ, rather than a scaling ladder to bring him down. Christ has been, and is, the root of all the good the church has accomplished down to the present time.

Help for the Submerged Classes

For six years the Union Rescue Mission has waged its "fight against sin, misery and want," and observing the close of its successful campaign held an anniversary meeting recently in the Bromfield Street Church. A good attendance showed the public interest in the work, and the presence of a large proportion of men, many of whom appeared to be of the class who are touched by the mission workers, and the presence and words of the superintendent, W. H. West, and of a number who had been aided by the mission to make a permanent new start, carried a telling suggestion of its value.

These six years of rescue among shipwrecked beings have been eventful. For the lone, dissipated and discouraged men and women who walk the city streets meetings have been held at the rooms on Kneeland Street every night in the year, save in July and August, when a tent is used. The audiences have been large, and attractive services are the rule. At these 2 000 meetings the general attendance would probably aggregate over 150,000 persons, a total which doubtless includes tens of thousands of "lost" and "fallen" single individuals. Nearly 7,000 requests for prayers have come from as many persons, and many of these have professed conversion. The unemployed and homeless who have been sheltered at the mission during this period number over 100,000. Also as many meals have been given, and the days' work given to needy men amounts to over sixty years' time.

The past year closed with some financial embarrassment, showing receipts of $5,667 and expenses of $5,719. A few other items increase the indebtedness to $1,100. While so many have been helped, however, on comparatively little money, it is not the time to lessen the regular work, and a maxim of the mission, peculiarly its own, is just now brought specially to the attention of interested workers and givers—"Doubly welcome if quickly done."

New features added to the work in 1896 are an industrial department opened in Cambridge, and a free supper given once a week at the mission and provided thus far by the Broadway Baptist Church of Cambridge. It is a truth realized by the workers of the rescue mission and impressed on all workers for Christ that these masses who cry for help are not all born in the slums.

Inaugural Patriotism

Inspired by the loyal thought of Governor Wolcott in a proclamation issued previous to the day of President McKinley's induction into office, the public schools held a general observance which tended toward the implanting of a genuine sentiment of patriotism. Principals and teachers led off with remarks or short addresses, special appropriate music formed an important part of the programs, and papers prepared for the occasion or selections rendered by the pupils instilled into their young minds, through personal participation in the great day, a suggestion of individual citizenship in a free nation. Portraits of great men exhibited and sketches of their lives were features which added instruction to the exercises.

In the Old South Meeting House Governor Wolcott presided at a unique service, which also commemorated the centennial anniversary of the inauguration of John Adams, Massachusett's first gift to the presidential chair. A number of patriotic societies were represented and besides the pupils from other schools the highest two classes in the Boston Latin School sat in a conspicuous place, according to old-time custom. Delegates from the legislature were also present. The addresses were by Governor Wolcott, Speaker J. L. Bates, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Dr. William Everett and Senator Roe.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come

Foreign Missionary Prayer Meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 A. M.

Boston Evangelical Alliance, adjourned annual meeting, Bromfield Street Church, March 15, 10 A. M. Subject, Aggressiveness for Christ.

Evangelistic Association of New England, conference in Roger Williams's Church, Providence, March 8-14. Speakers, Rev. Messrs. Smith Baker, D. D., W. N. Brodbeck, Alexander Blackburn and J. A. McElwain.

Middlesex Union Association, March meeting, Ayer, March 16, 1 P. M.

Benevolent Societies

The Congregational Home Missionary Society is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

Woman's Home Missionary Association, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

Woman's Board of Missions, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

The American Missionary Association, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

The Congregational Church Building Society —Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

Congregational Education Society (Including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

Cong. Sunday School & Publishing Society.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

Massachusetts Board of Ministerial Aid.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

Ministerial Relief.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

The Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

The Boston Seaman's Friend Society, organized 1827. Chapel and reading room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS

The East cannot afford to be slow in its movements for stricter enforcement of Sunday observance. The Western tide of disregard for the Lord's Day has touched Cleveland through the Baseball Club's announcement for the first time of a schedule of games which include Sundays. The invasion of new territory by this plan should make defense in the East more active. We hope the ministers' efforts will be irresistible.

Commenting upon the noble contributions of a Ladies' Society in a small New England country parish toward a new meeting house a correspondent writes, enthusiastically: "What may not a band of resolute women accomplish!" The many churches which have felt such a force will second the sentiment.

The conversion of parents is peculiarly hopeful, since it usually means a family for Christ, the extent of whose influence is immeasurable. The Iowa converts who begin their Christian life by consecrating their children in baptism are laying good foundations.

What work is so unifying as that of winning souls? Success, then, to all pastors who, like the one referred to in North Dakota, join with neighboring ministers in revival services, instead of importing an evangelist.

Together with the many cheering reports arriving fresh for the new Year-Book come some discouraging items. There are fewer of the latter, but such indications should not pass without teaching lessons.

A novel and healthful method of collecting benevolences is being tried in Nebraska. From the same State comes a suggestion for arranging mothers' meetings in various sections of a field.

Probably our Welsh churches will suffer more and more from such conditions as confront one in Wisconsin, but the remedy could be simply stated and should be applied.

An appropriate service in a new Worcester edifice was calculated to carry peculiar suggestions to the invited worshipers.

United efforts like those in Fall River, Mass., could hardly fail to attain large results.

Christian Endeavor work in Rhode Island looks to Providence chiefly for its leadership.

Of Special Note

Large benefactions for the worthy poor in Connecticut towns.

Reward of effective firemen's service in a Connecticut city.

Fellowship among certain Maine churches which pays.

Practical Lenten topics in a New York city church.

An idea in Michigan for the midweek meeting.

Special meetings for children in Nebraska.

OUR OPPORTUNITY IN WYOMING

Wyoming is half as large again as all New England. It has an area equal to Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware combined. It is great in its plains and snow-capped mountains, bountiful in its streams, in its wealth of gold, silver, lead, tin, asbestos, mica, graphite, kaolin, fire-clay, salt and inexhaustible quantities of marble and precious stones, petroleum, iron, soda and coal. Its upland plains fully meet the descriptions in Fenimore Cooper's The Prairie, and its mineral springs and wonderful parks are the admiration of tourists of the world. Its 2,000,000 cattle and 1,000,000 sheep, with horses and mules, present an enormous industry.

Its hope, agriculturally speaking, lies in the fact that it need not depend upon natural rainfall, light at the foot of the Rockies, but may bring the soft snow water from the mountains, and by well-planned systems of irrigation put much of the sage brush and prairie country into a fine state of cultivation. The land is very productive when thoroughly watered. The northern portion of the State already contains several quite complete systems, and along many of the mountain streams there are neighborhoods of settlers who irrigate the land in their vicinity. The latter is true in the Big Horn Basin, which has also the prospect of a large system down through its central part. East of the Laramie Mountains the Wyoming Development Co. controls a fine level tract of about 120,000 acres, with complete irrigation facilities for the successful growing of crops on about 60,000 acres. The water is brought from the Laramie River through a tunnel three-fifths of a mile long, cut through the solid rock, and by three immense canals, one thirty-two miles long. It is estimated that of the State's area 15,000,000 acres are covered with timber. Settlement and purchase of these lands are but fairly opened.

In the northern part of the State, in the central east and at the south a few missionary stakes have been set, and with heroic effort the corner stones are being put into place by faithful pastors and workers. All these, with the struggling missionary academy, need not less, but more, parental care. It may seem a burden today; tomorrow it will be looked back upon as a privilege. It is no less a duty today to enter and care for the large unoccupied fields in this great frontier region. A Western State presenting the rare feature of a majority of its population native born of native parents presents a field of unusual opportunity. The Big Horn Basin, at least 100 x 150 miles in extent, has, so far as I can learn, but one missionary. The whole central portion of the State is in a similar condition. There are neighborhoods twenty to fifty miles from trading points without a missionary to visit them regularly.

From a Sunday school planted by the C. S. S. and P. S. three years ago a church of forty members has developed, with a commodious house of worship, a parsonage, auxiliary societies and two out-station schools. Another, conducted solely by a Christian mother, has now a membership of eighty. More Sunday schools planted in Wyoming this year will mean more churches there ten years hence. He that hath eyes to see the opportunity and a heart to invest his substance in laying Christian foundations in this region will reap a hundred-fold in satisfaction as he watches its magnificent development. C. M. D.

MR. MOODY IN CINCINNATI

The first meeting last week was, on the whole, hopeful. It had been announced that the service would be held Wednesday night, but Mr. Moody sent on word that he would arrive for an afternoon meeting. Fully 3,000 persons gathered.

The subject was Prayer, and there was much of it. Mr. Moody said that a large audience in Boston had promised to pray for Cincinnati, that two audiences in New York city had promised the same, and that when in Philadelphia he had asked of a great audience who would remember Cincinnati in prayer the whole body of people sprang to their feet. So that, as he said, it is doubtless true that never before in its history have so many earnest souls been praying for this city.

There has been almost no machinery. Ten days before his coming Mr. Moody sent on a few advance plans. His chief thought was "sing and pray." The burden of his first note here was, "Get right." This well-worn phrase seemed to be the very voice of God, and as he uttered it again and again hundreds of upturned, eager faces grew more and more serious until the same old story, told with new power, touched every heart. Many at this first meeting expressed a desire to be prayed for. Professor Towner had a chorus of about 1,000 at the evening service. Rev. R. A. Torrey of Chicago will aid in the work, and conducted the first after meeting. There will be four meetings every day until the close, March 23. A.

BUILT ON THE ASHES

The new First Church edifice in Auburn, Mass., replacing that destroyed by fire, was dedicated March 2 before a large gathering in which the surrounding towns were well represented. Rev. Dr. Alexander Lewis preached the dedicatory sermon on the theme, The Useful and the Beautiful. After the dedication covenant by pastor and people, Rev. G. A. Putnam offered the prayer. The church was organized in 1776, before the existence of the local government. The first pastor was Rev. Isaac Bayley. The present pastor is Rev. C. M. Pierce, who has labored here since 1890. Twenty-three members organized the church. The present membership is 122. The oldest living member, Mrs. Clarissa Merriam, gave a handsome pulpit Bible, while Deacon Stephen Sibley, who has been a member of the church for 75 years and deacon since 1859, presented the pulpit hymn-book.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES

Bangor

Through the kindness of several friends of the author the Senior Class has been presented with the autobiography of Rev. C. G. Finney.——The Juniors have just begun a course in the theory of ethics under Professor Beckwith.——The Seniors finished their work in pastoral theology with a written examination, March 5.——Professor Sewall will have the class four hours per week in sociology for the present.

Yale

Last week phases of institutional work in New York city were presented to the Senior Class in sociology by those who had made special investigations.——The Leonard Bacon Club debated Resolved, That the Modern Type of Belles-lettres Literature Is Harmful in Influence. W. C. Ferris has been elected president and F. C. MacClave secretary.——C. S. Macfarland of the Senior Class has been selected on the Yale University team to debate with Harvard, March 26, at Cambridge.——Special lectures last week were by Professor Hoppin on Olympia and Prof. D. C. Eaton on Egypt.——Dr. G. A. Reisner of Harvard has just lectured before the Semitic Club on The Political and Social Life of Babylon.——Professor Brastow is lecturing before the Senior Class in homiletics on Christian Worship.——Arthur Hodges was class preacher recently.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS

IND.—Northeast Association met with Angola Church, March 2-4. By vote the name was changed to Fort Wayne Association. It was the annual meeting and full reports were made by all the churches but two. Sec. A. M. Wight of the Y. M. C. A. gave a telling address on Men and Boys. Other themes were: Restoration of Power, Revival Methods, The Brotherhood in the Church, The Influence of the Christian Home, The Modern Sunday School and Church Extension in the Ohio Valley. The fellowship meeting was solemn and uplifting. The final session was given to Superintendent Curtis, who spoke on The Apostolic Missionary, and Rev. N. H. Whittlesey on Aged Ministers.

CLUBS

MASS.—The March meeting of the Essex Club last Monday night at the Central Church in Salem had as the subject The Value of Music in Spiritual Development. Rev. W. A. Bartlett of Lowell gave the address and thereafter conducted a drill in congregational singing.. Solos were sung by Mr. W. W. Walker of Boston.

NEW ENGLAND

Boston

[For other Boston news see page 351.]

JAMAICA PLAIN.—Boylston. The annual reports showed total receipts for last year to be $6,949 and expenses $6 854. The benevolences amounted to $775, the largest of any one year in the history of the church. Eighteen new members were added, eight on confession. The S. S. and C. E. departments were reported in good condition. Twenty-one reports were given.

Massachusetts

BROOKLINE.—Harvard. During the season of Lent the Friday evening meeting is changed from its usual form, and sermons suited to the season are preached, Drs. Gordon, Herrick, McKenzie, Davis and Plumb exchanging services with Dr. Thomas.

NEWTON.—Eliot. A large class has been formed of business men not already in the Sunday school who meet during the Sunday school hour for the discussion of questions as to the application of Christian principles to many modern problems. Prominent clergymen and others have addressed them.

WELLESLEY HILLS.—First celebrated the 50th anniversary of its foundation Feb. 24. The members and guests had a bountiful supper, after which interesting letters were read from original members and former pastors. At the close of the festivities the church adjourned to the audience-room, where were heard an interesting historical address by the pastor, Rev. P. T. Farwell, a greeting from the mother church at Wellesley, by Rev. E. A. Benner, reminiscences of Rev. Jonathan Edwards, a former pastor, by Rev. A. B. Vorse, and remarks by Rev. Dr. D. L. Furber.

PEABODY.—South. The benevolent contributions of the church, including all its organizations, for the past year amounted to $2,516, of which nearly $800 were for foreign and about $700 for home missions.

MANCHESTER has had a religious awakening such as has not been known in the town for two generations. Of the accessions received to membership last Sunday, 65 in all, most of them were on confession, and many were heads of families.

BEVERLY.—Dane Street has closed the first year's trial of the free pew system with a balance in the treasury, the first in years. In celebrating the event at a parish social the supper was served by the men to 600 persons. A generous increase in the salary of the pastor, Rev. F. J. Van Horn, has been voted. Needed improvements have been made in the property, including sidewalks, water moter for the organ and refurnishing of the pastor's study. The church is harmonious and happy and the spiritual interest is constant.

HAVERHILL.—West. At the reunion the reports showed a fairly prosperous year. Benevolences amounted to $387. A fine piano, secured through the efforts of the young people, was presented to the church. Nearly 100 of the 144 members responded at the roll-call. Of the 93 persons received to church membership during the present pastorate of 16 years only one has died. Rev. J. N. Lowell is pastor.

MIDDLEBORO.—First. A revival is in progress, promoted by the labors of Rev. R. S. Underwood, the evangelist, who assisted, Feb. 17-28, in daily meetings of unusual power.

ATTLEBORO.—Second. At the unanimous request of his people, Rev. E. L. House has declined his call to Somerville. When Mr. House announced his decision the large congregation broke into enthusiastic applause. The church has promptly voted a substantial increase of salary.

NORTH ATTLEBORO.—Trinity feels that it has secured the right man in Rev. C. A. Ratcliffe. He is a strong thinker, and is making an excellent impression upon the community.

FALL RIVER.—Last week Sunday the Congregational churches raised $479 for the work of Miss Seymour, a missionary of the A. B. C. F. M. among the Armenians of Harpoot, Turkey. Collections were also taken the same day among nearly all the Protestant churches of the city for the relief of the orphans of the slaughtered Armenians. One man offered to give $1 extra for every $3 collected. The total sum will be fully $2,000.

CLINTON.—First reports for last year additions of 39, on confession, 24; present membership, 480; Sunday school members, 650; C. E. members, 206; amount raised for all purposes, $11,366, of which $2,010 were for benevolence, and $5,062 for the new building fund. Rev. W. W. Jordan is pastor.

GRAFTON.—Union. The present membership, 109, is an increase of 11 over last year, and shows an encouraging gain among the men. The expenditures were $3,737. The Ladies' Society raised $205 at their annual fair. In the past two years this society has contributed $1,000 toward the new building. The new bell has been received and paid for. The Sunday evening services of the Men's League have been of more than ordinary interest, and the attendance the largest in the history of the league. Considerable religious interest has been manifested in special meetings with good results. The pastorate of Rev. David Howie has been prosperous.

WORCESTER.—Old South. Dr. C. C. Hall of Brooklyn, president elect of Union Seminary, addressed an audience that filled the church Feb. 22. The lecture was under the auspices of the Men's Union and the theme Civic Righteousness.——Park. The annual supper and roll-call was held Feb. 24. The total membership is 228, of whom 102 responded. About $1,200 were raised for church expenses. Rev. I. L Willcox is pastor.——Bolton Hall of New York city addressed the Ministerial League lately on the single tax theory.——Union held a unique evening service Feb. 28 for all the laborers who had worked on the new edifice. Printed invitations were sent to all who could be reached, about 500 in number, and the others of an equal number were invited through the press. The congregation filled the house and represented varied crafts, nationalities and faiths. The pastor, Rev. Dr. J. E. Tuttle, preached on Temple Building. A brief after meeting followed the service with the central thought, How am I building?——The late Rev. H. T. Cheever left $500 each to the National Temperance Society, the National Christian Association and Welcome Mission of this city, and $500 to Bowdoin as a fund whose income shall be given to students pledging to abstain from the use of tobacco and strong drink. Books and pamphlets are also left to Bowdoin and Bangor Seminary.

AYER.—The program as announced for the Ministers' Union of this vicinity included as speaker and subject Rabbi Fleischer of Boston on The Jew. The meeting was held March 2 and opened the third year of this organization, whose object is a broad fellowship of ministers of all denominations.

SPRINGFIELD.—North. The recent fair of the ladies was a financial and social success. It happened that Rev. F. B. Makepeace's birthday occurred the same day, and he was presented with a handsome revolving oak bookcase.——St. John's has had a notable revival. During the recent illness of Rev. J. W. Tolliver, the pastor, the members began a series of extra meetings for prayer. Much interest was aroused and after the pastor resumed his work the services were continued. The result has been over 25 conversions and nearly all these persons will unite with the church.——First. The last social given by the ladies of the church was in the form of a reception and members of the church and congregation were especially invited. Rev and Mrs. F. L. Goodspeed and Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Dixon received, assisted by the members of the parish committee and their wives. Special music was furnished. To aid the pastor it has been found necessary to engage an assistant, Rev. Arthur Titcomb, for six months. Thirty-six persons were received to membership last Sunday, eight on confession. The evening services are largely musical. Last Sunday the Philharmonic String Quartet assisted.——South. Rev. Dr. P. S. Moxom is forming a class in preparation for church membership and the communion, meetings to be held on four successive Fridays.——Park. Rev. A. E. Cross has begun a series of Sunday evening sermons on Short Talks on Great Books. The first to be considered was How Christ Came to Church, by Dr. A. J. Gordon. A cornetist has been secured to assist regularly at the evening services.

Maine

SOUTH PORTLAND.—Bethany acknowledges with gratitude the sum of about $1,300 from the churches and friends of the conference in aid of its new building. There are full congregations and the Sunday morning prayer meeting sometimes has an attendance of more than 100. Fifteen conversions have been recorded since the new year began, and the Sunday school has increased.

WATERFORD.—First. Rev. C. P. Cleaves, the pastor, exerts his influence over the young men of the town by acting as physical instructor of a newly organized athletic association, whose object is to develop men bodily and socially. The town encourages the idea by giving free use of the town hall.

HOLDEN.—Miss Washburn's work meets with acceptance and a revival interest. A number of hopeful conversions have resulted. The C. E. Society has largely increased. Nearly 100 copies of Congregational Work have been placed in families.

GARDINER.—First recently gave a reception to the pastor, Rev. J. L. Quimby, and his wife, the occasion being the fifth anniversary of the pastorate. A steady growth in all the departments has been noted during this pastorate.

FARMINGTON began the new year hopefully and voted to increase the pastor's salary. The Sunday school is large and the C. E. Society is doing excellent work in outlying districts.

DEDHAM.—Good work is being done by Miss Washburn and Mrs Gray, especially in the schoolhouse meetings in various districts, where several persons have decided for Christ.

Secretary D. P. Hatch and Rev. C. L. Parker of Ashland are making a tour of the State presenting the missionary cause. They will speak at 15 points from Biddeford to Bangor.——Rev. C. E. Harwood of Cranberry Isles has been obliged to take a few weeks rest after a period of intense work.——A good degree of interest has been developed since the beginning of the new year in Gorham and in the Warren Church, Westbrook, by union meetings with the Methodists.

New Hampshire

RINDGE.—Not only the church but the entire community has sustained a great loss in the recent death of Deacon O. D. Converse. He was a man of earnest Christian spirit, one of the leading members of the prayer meeting and Sunday school, and many years a deacon. He also had been honored with all the important offices in the gift of the town.

PORTSMOUTH.—The pastor, Rev. L. H. Thayer, has arranged a series of discourses for Sunday evenings till Easter bearing on A Religious Life, and including the topics: Conversion, Growth in the Religious Life, Discipline of the Body, Of the Mind, Of the Heart, Of the Conscience, Of the Will, Discipline of the Devout Spirit and Life.

FRANCESTOWN is bereaved in the death of three of its oldest members, W. R. Sawyer, aged 90, his wife aged 83, after a married life of 61 years, and Miss Mary Pattee, a long time Sunday school teacher, aged 79. These deaths were the occasion of an appropriate memorial service, Feb. 28.

CROYDEN.—The 75th birthday of Deacon George W. Dunbar was recently celebrated happily with appropriate festivities, including two original poems, one an ingenious acrostic by a daughter of the pastor.

PLYMOUTH.—During last year nine were received to the church, five on confession, making a total of 145. Benevolent contributions were $523. The Sunday school average attendance is 188.

Berlin.—Rev. J. A. Hainer's assistance has greatly promoted spiritual interest. His work has been thorough and earnest and many have expressed a desire to be Christians.

Vermont

Berlin.—First had an eventful day Feb. 24. In the morning a council examined the candidate, Mr. J. J. Goodacre, for ordination, and in the afternoon the house was filled to witness the impressive service of ordination and installation, The sermon was by Rev. S. M. Jackson, D. D. In the evening the old meeting house, which has been repaired at an expense of $2,200, was rededicated free of debt. Rev. W. S. Hazen, D. D., preached a vigorous sermon, which was listened to with marked attention. The pastor has supplied here two years. The church is one of the oldest in the State and celebrates its 100th anniversary next year.

Rutland has just issued its annual report in a neat pamphlet of 50 pages, which contains exterior and interior cuts of the church. There were 20 additions on confession and 27 by letter, and a net gain of 19. The total membership is over 780 and the total benevolences were $3,171. The parish expenses were $6,011. The numerous societies of the church are in a flourishing condition. Rev. G. W. Phillips, D. D., is pastor.

Returns for the new Year-Book show a net gain in church membership of 285. Additions on confession have been 764, by letter 477, total 1,241. Removals by death 372, by letter 395, by discipline and roll revision 180, total 956. A loss of 421 appears in S. S. membership, and a loss of 371 in C. E. enrollment. The S. S. membership is now less than the membership in the churches, the former being 21,748, the latter 21,817. Benevolent contributions were $55,670, a decrease of $3,027, and home expenditures $212,074, an increase of $10,851. Three new churches were added to the roll, making 206. None have been dropped for the past six years.

Rhode Island

Providence.—Beneficent. The two days' Scottish festival recently held was successful in interest and income. Scotch music, ballads, costumes and decorations were happily combined. The Chinese S. S. scholars, 70 or more, gave a reception to their 40 teachers and friends, about 200 in all, last week. The orchestral music, decorations and presents were Chinese. An appetizing spread was also furnished by the pupils.——Plymouth. Rev. S. H. Woodrow was recently elected president of the State C. E. Union for the year, Harold Capron of Pilgrim Church as vice-president and Rev E. T. Root of Elmwood Temple is president of the Providence Union. Our churches are this year responsible for some strong work in Endeavor lines.——Union. The League of Men has been giving a series of popular entertainments in the chapel this winter. Its lyceum committee has arranged regular debates, with public evenings from time to time.——Pilgrim. The Men's Club has a monthly supper and social evening. Professor Manatt of Brown University, formerly consul at Athens, addressed the club's last meeting on The Turkish Question, as affected by Cretan affairs.

Pawtucket.—Weeden Street is rejoicing in the possession of its house of worship, through the generous gift of a deed from the Lorraine Manufacturing Co., which has been a good friend to the church for years.

Connecticut

Hartford.—The will of Anson Chappell has recently been admitted to probate, and contains these public bequests: To the C. H. M. S. and the A. M. A., $6,000 each, and to Washburn College and Hampton Institute $3,000 each. After a number of personal bequests the remainder of the estate is left to the A. M. A.——Fourth had a total of 414 pledges last year, providing $4,965, of which $1,600 are yet to be paid.——Pearl Street has lost one of its original members in the death of Deacon Nelson Hollister at the age of 87 years.

Salisbury, Rev. J. C. Goddard, pastor, reports a membership of 213, there being 17 accessions last year, all but two on confession. The receipts were $5,257, of which $1,651 went for missions. The Sunday school has an average attendance of 269. Two Christian brotherhood bands have been organized during the year, one in this town and one in Lakeville, and both are flourishing.

Plainville.—The sustaining of the Strong will in the Superior Court according to a recent decision is received with much satisfaction. By it $75,000 were left in trust, the income of which is to be distributed among the worthy poor of the town, under the direction of the selectmen and the ministers of the Congregational, Methodist and Baptist churches.

Simsbury.—The Weatogue chapel and schoolhouse was entirely burned lately. It was originally erected on the common for a schoolhouse. A second story added later was finished for a chapel, which had recently undergone $800 worth of improvements. The building was valued at $2,000 and was insured for half that amount.

New Fairfield.—Rev. W. F. Berger has been conducting revival services such as the town has not had before for almost a generation. Only the oldest inhabitants remember when the house was filled as now, almost as many going forward nightly as were formerly present at the preaching service on Sunday mornings.

Norwalk.—First. At an interesting fireman's service last week Sunday evening a purse of gold was presented to the firemen in recognition of their efficient efforts in saving the edifice from destruction by fire three weeks ago. Speeches and responses were made, making the occasion a novel one.

Terryville.—Rev. Dr. W. A. Gay has been conducting a revival with special meetings since the Week of Prayer, and, as a result, a large number joined the church last Sunday morning, the great majority being men. About 30 conversions are reported.

Ledyard.—By the will of the late Israel Allyn the church receives a legacy of $1,000, the interest to be devoted to the support of the gospel. The A. M. A., the C. H. M. S. and the American Tract Society also receive $200 each.

West Hartford.—First. The society has received a legacy of $2,000 from the late Marion Whitman. Considerable discussion was held at the annual meeting over the pledge system, but it was adopted for another year.

New Haven.—United. The Men's Club service was addressed last Sunday evening by Mr. W. R. George the founder of the George Junior Republic at Freeville, N. Y.

Putnam.—The women have begun a systematic helping of the worthy poor of the city, a larger number of whom have been found in distress than was supposed.

Collinsville.—The present membership is 399, including 14 additions last year. The benevolences amounted to nearly $800.

Second Church, Waterbury, Rev. Dr. J. G. Davenport, pastor, gave over $6,000 last year in benevolences, besides large individual gifts by members. ——Bristol has voted for incorporation. Resulting from the recent revival, 39 have just joined the church, all but two on confession.——The Kent Sunday school held recently its first session in many weeks, a strict quarantine having prevailed owing to scarlet fever.——Montville is enjoying a revival. ——The C. E. Society in Oakville has bought 300 volumes for the Sunday school of Union Chapel.

MIDDLE STATES

New York

New York.—Manhattan is planning for a parish house as the center for general aid and for industrial work. The church is preparing to labor in a densely settled region on the West Side, and committees of the Young Men's Club and Young Women's Society are already at work. The Sunday school is also reaching out extensively. Rev. Dr H. A. Stimson is pastor. At the communion service, March 7, 23 new members were received, four on confession. During Lent prayer meeting topics will include: Religion from the Standpoint of the Business Man, of the Clerk, of the Wage-Earner, of Society, of the Doctor, of the Working Girl, and Good Friday.

Brooklyn.—Plymouth gave an informal but cordial and well-attended reception to Dr. Lyman Abbott and his assistant, Rev. Horace Porter, with their wives, during the afternoon of Feb. 26, in the newly decorated church parlors, made joyous with music and fragrant with flowers.——Park rejoices that Rev. M. B. Taylor of Canton, Mass., chaplain-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, accepts its unanimous call to begin regular service April 1.

Lewis has been greatly revived, nearly 100 persons having manifested special interest. The pastor, Rev. F. M. Dickey, was assisted for a time by Rev. H. A. Depfer. Improvements in the church property are a new roof on the edifice, the renovation of the whole building and refitting of the parsonage. The paint was contributed by the editors of the New York Tribune. This field is back from the railroad and the change wrought is remarkable.

Berkshire is feeling not a little troubled over the prospect of the ending of the present pastorate of Rev. J. J. Hough in the near future. On account of failing health Dr. Hough is not able to continue the work. At the last meeting at Owego his association passed a hearty resolution expressing love, sympathy, high esteem and regret in view of the termination of this long, successful and happy pastorate.

Binghamton.—First. The Helpers' Benevolent Society held several entertainments the first week in March for the benefit of the city poor. The annual Shrovetide social was also held that week, and proved of more than ordinary interest.——Plymouth is beginning to take on new life with its new pastor, Rev. Thomas Clayton, and bids fair to continue its already remarkable growth.

Buffalo.—Plymouth Mission has the largest Sunday school among our churches in the city, and with its many young people adopts institutional features as far as possible. Rev. H. E. Gurney, State evangelist, is carrying on meetings in this field. Rev. A. L. Grein is pastor.

Roscoe has been aroused spiritually by a visit of Mrs. Weaver, the evangelist. The pastor, Rev. W. J. Carter, has an extensive parish reaching 15 or 20 miles among the hills. He often holds meetings in schoolhouses and homes many miles from his church.

Candor.—The house of worship is undergoing repairs inside. The walls and ceiling are being newly frescoed and the floors recarpeted. E. A. Booth, Esq , has given $100 toward the carpet.

Deer River.—First. Rev G. A. Shaw has withdrawn from the pastorate on account of poor health. His new field in Greenwich, Ct., will have but one church to be served.

New Jersey

Bound Brook.—The pastor, Rev. J. O. Jones, is preaching a course of six Sunday evening sermons on The Great Hereafter, which have drawn large congregations. He is the leader of the fortnightly reading club, which is studying Biblical literature. Special evangelistic meetings have resulted well. Nine new members were received at the last communion, and others are to come. Dr. Farnsworth spoke to the church on Turkish missions, Feb. 28, and, though he made no appeal for money, $35 were given him.

Newark.—Belleville Avenue has secured a successor to Rev. S. L. Loomis in the person of Rev. Dr. Rice, junior secretary of the American Tract Society. His pastorate begins April 1. The outlook for the church is now good. It has kept well together while without a pastor, Dr. W. H. Ward supplying the pulpit much of the time. The C. E. Societies and the Young Men's League are doing well.

THE INTERIOR

[For Chicago news see page 339.]

Ohio

Cleveland.—The ministers at their March meeting followed the February discussion of Present Day Preaching with addresses by four laymen upon Present Day Hearing. The discussion was practical and profitable. Resolutions were adopted protesting against the Cleveland Baseball Club's announced schedule for the coming season, including Sunday games. The club has never played Sunday games at home, and there is a strong sentiment against it on the part of the daily papers and many patrons of the game.

Unionville.—A pleasing feature of the services is the large number of men attending, especially Sunday evening. Recently, with an average attendance, a count showed but one more woman present than there were men. Rev. W. H. Morton is pastor. During the four years of his pastorate the congregations have increased greatly.

The yearly figures for the State show 248 churches, one being new; 38,023 members, including 3,681 additions, 1,474 on confession; 2,651 removals, 441 by death; 37,372 S. S. members; $69,201 benevolences, a decrease of $5,186; and $375,561 home expenses, an increase of $6,846.

Indiana

Anderson.—Hope celebrated its fifth anniversary of organization Feb. 26. Supper was served in the parlors. Mrs. E. R. Cheney read a historical paper. Rev. N. A. Hyde, D. D., spoke on The Future Prospects of Congregationalism in Indiana. Supt. E. D. Curtis had as a theme Reminiscences of the Early Days and Rev. W. C. Gordon, the first pastor, sent an apostolic letter. A movement to undertake the furnishing of the basement was received with enthusiasm, and several subscriptions were offered. This improvement is needed for the social features of church work hitherto deferred.

Fort Wayne.—South. Superintendent Curtis was with the church Feb. 28, on home missionary day. Fifty dollars were in the collection and the pastor, Rev. E. E. Frame, was elected a life member of the C. H. M. S.

Michigan

Detroit.—Woodward Avenue. A Men's Club has just been organized for sociability and the discussion of current topics.——Old First has just subscribed $150 for the A. M. A. A barrel has been sent for the furnishing of the Donald Gifford room in the Fauk Home for Missionary Children at Oberlin. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton is giving a series of Sunday evening addresses on A Man and His Family, A Man and His Affairs, A Man and His City, A Man and His God.——Canfield Avenue received a silver communion service from the Junior Endeavorers of the First Church, and a supply of table linen from the primary department of the Sunday school, all in readiness for the March communion.——The regular monthly Ministers' Meeting of the city and vicinity was held March 1. The ladies were invited to meet with their husbands. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, by special request, gave his lecture on Robert Browning, which was greatly enjoyed. Supper was served at 6.30.

Highland Station.—Over 40 persons have decided to begin better lives as the result of union services of the Methodist and Congregational churches, under the lead of Rev. W. R. Struble. The meetings have also brought the churches into closer fellowship.

Greenville.—Rev. A. M. Hyde creates new interest in the midweek meeting by arranging a number of questions on the topic, which are distributed the Sunday previous. The pastor recently gave his lecture on Henry Ward Beecher in Lake Odessa.

Wayland has recently dedicated one of the neatest small meeting houses in the State. A whole day was devoted to the services. A Ministers' Meeting was held in the morning, at which visiting clergymen took part.

Muskegon.—The seating capacity of the edifice is taxed, and the problem of securing more accommodation is before the officers. The Ladies' Society has raised nearly $600 in a year.

Ada has been stirred by union services with the Methodists.——A recent series of meetings in Helena has resulted in 50 conversions.

Wisconsin

Dodgeville.—Welsh. The congregations are well sustained, but the church suffers from the loss of the young people, who prefer English services. A fine parsonage was built last fall. An outstation at Bunker Hill is supplied by the pastor.

Viroqua.—Rev. J. H. Dixon, pastor, has added a large choir of male voices to the Sunday evening attractions. The congregations are greatly increased.

Milwaukee.—Hanover Street takes the six societies on its list of benevolences, notwithstanding its hard struggle to pay off its large debt.

THE WEST

Iowa

Larchwood.—During the Hartsough meetings, which closed Feb. 21, more than 250 persons signified a desire to become Christians and 72 united with the church. Of these 17 were business men, and in 11 cases their wives joined at the same time. A large accession is expected at the next communion. As one of the results of the revival parents have been led to consecrate their children, 14 being baptized by the pastor, Rev. D. E. Evans.

Keosauqua.—During Rev. E. E. Perkins's eight months' residence as pastor congregations have steadily increased, the Sunday school has doubled in size, a library of 125 volumes has been secured, the salary has been raised easily and the pastor promptly paid each month, and a barn has been added to the parsonage property.

Osage, Rev. W. W. Gist, D.D., pastor, observed with appropriate services Forefathers' Day, Lincoln Day and Mary Lyon Day. A supper and concert recently given by the women netted $175.

Charles City.—For the past three months Rev. C. C. Otis has held in connection with the evening services after meetings, in which many decisions for Christ have been made.

Iowa City.—The pastor, Rev. M. A. Bullock, D.D., began his 10th year of service March 1. The women have purchased a new grand piano.

Minnesota

St. Paul.—Plymouth, after long and careful deliberation, and in accordance with the advice of trusted brethren acquainted with the situation, has unanimously voted to continue work as a separate organization in the present location. Various plans have been considered, such as union with People's Church, the selling of the property and dividing the proceeds among the Congregational churches of the city, or a union with Park Church, keeping the historic name of Plymouth. Both the church and the committee of conference feel that it has a work to do for the present in the old location, to which it should address itself with new consecration. The site is valuable and will eventually be needed for business purposes. Should the edifice be sold the church may change its location, but it is believed that this historic organization will continue its work and that it has a noble future. While it has dismissed many persons to new churches it has a loyal and sifted membership of 150 to 200.

Minneapolis.—Lyndale. A mission has been started in an adjacent neighborhood, where a Presbyterian enterprise has been abandoned. Rev. M. A. Stevens has been placed in charge. There is opportunity for useful work and the enterprise will be under the care of the mother church.——New Brighton. Business developments in the stockyards are bringing new families here and congregations are increasing. During the financial depression the church has suffered, but has given generously for the support of the work.——Oak Park has been supplied by Supt. S. V. S. Fisher of the Scandinavian department, with great profit to the people. Indications are favorable and a pastor will soon be called.

Spring Valley.—Rev. P. H. Harman, the former pastor, is preaching in the opera house, and has gathered a congregation which at present is inclined to organize into a church. There is a good attendance and some enthusiasm. A subscription has been raised for running expenses. In the meantime the church pursues the even tenor of its way, has called a devoted pastor and is united and prosperous. It is believed that the withdrawal of supporters will not materially affect its prosperity.

Wabasha.—The 40th anniversary was recently commemorated. The church was organized with six members, one of whom is still in active service, having been S. S. superintendent for over 30 years. The church is harmonious, prosperous and free from debt, has a beautiful building and a commodious parsonage. It has had 16 pastors, Rev. W. H. Medlar, the last one, having served for eight years.

Appleton has suffered from the removal of members, but is prospering and has a vigorous out-station at Correll, where evangelistic meetings have been held with good results. Correll is planning to build in the spring, having been crowded out of the schoolhouse where it worships.

Freeborn.—A series of meetings has been held here, with good results in reclaiming Christians and in conversions. The pastor, Rev. Wilbur Fisk, has done faithful service in this large country field for 20 years.

Mapleton prospers under Rev. J. A. Derome, and has been strengthened by the absorption of a neighboring church, where the population was dwindling. Revival meetings are to be held.

Ortonville.—Rev. G. W. Shaw has been invited to remain another year. The hard times affect church finances unfavorably. A preaching station has been opened at Odessa and a Sunday school organized. A series of meetings has been held here, with conversions, Rev. E. C. Lyons of Appleton assisting.

Disappointed at losing its pastor, who is called to a larger field, the Glenwood church at once secured another, and the work is progressing.——St. Anthony Park, pastorless for a few months, is now prosperous and united under Rev. E. S. Pressey, who has just been installed.

Nebraska

Omaha.—Hillside. Rev. Jacob Flook, pastor, has adopted a new plan for benevolent contributions during 1897. Instead of taking collections in connection with public service the pastor will present the various subjects to the congregation, and the week following solicitors will visit the members and receive their offerings. The Sunday evening services have been largely evangelistic of late, and in the after meetings several persons have professed conversion. Quite a number of these are pledged to unite.——Plymouth still clings to the hope that the C. C. B. S. will be able to help in its struggle to pay the debt on the building.——Cherry Hill. A mothers' meeting has been organized and found very stimulating. The mothers are divided into groups, each of which has charge of the cottage prayer meeting in its vicinity each week. Rev. L. S. Hand is pastor.

Chadron.—Rev. A. E. Ricker lately held a week of special meetings for children and young people, taking the hour from four to five each day, immediately after the close of school. The attendance ranged from 70 to 90, and a good impression was made. The church is paying its back debts, $50 having been lately sent to the C. C. B. S. on the parsonage loan, and it is expected the whole amount due will be paid during the present year.

Grant.—Rev. C. W. Preston of Curtis has been assisting the pastor, Rev. G. W. Knapp, in special meetings which have refreshed and strengthened the church. A Sunday school and out-station have been established at Sawyer's schoolhouse, a few miles north, and a Y. P. S. C. E. will also soon be in operation. Mr. Knapp will be assisted in special meetings at Madrid by Rev. C. G. Murphy of Wallace.

Holdrege.—Rev. V. F. Clark received 18 persons to membership, Feb. 28, all but two on confession, the first fruits of evangelistic work under Major Cole. Six of these were heads of families. Mr. Clark will close his work with the church some time in April, and Mr. A. L. Squire, a Senior in Oberlin Seminary, is expected to enter upon the pastorate in May, immediately after his graduation.

North Hastings.—This country church, cared for by Rev. R. M. Travers in connection with Doniphan and West Hamilton, has lately moved its place of worship to another schoolhouse, to avoid conflicting with the services of another church which has come into the neighborhood. Mr. Travers now preaches three times a day on alternate Sundays, riding 26 miles.

Arlington, which has been pastorless for six months, has secured the services of Rev. James Valliers, who is pursuing post-graduate studies at the Presbyterian seminary in Omaha. He is to preach here alternate Sundays for a year.

Calhoun.—There has been for some time a deep spiritual interest in the church and at the various out-stations, and 10 persons united Feb. 28, nine on confession. The services at the out-stations were also quickening and helpful.

Clarks.—A movement is now on foot to unite Clarks, which has been pastorless for more than a year, owing to inability to raise the amount needed for salary, with Genoa in a field to be served by one pastor.

Ogalalla has received to membership six persons on confession. Four others were elected but were kept at home by grip. The pastor, Rev. W. S. Hampton, conducted the special meetings.

Ainsworth.—Rev. Samuel Eveland has been assisted in special meetings by Rev. L. M. Andress of Long Pine. Interest has been increasing with hopeful conversions.

Successful home missionary rallies have been held recently at Red Cloud and Indianola.

North Dakota

Valley City.—A work of grace has begun here, the pastor, Rev. W. H. Gimblett, uniting with the M. E. pastor in evangelistic services, held every afternoon and evening alternately in the two churches. The attendance is steadily increasing. The town is deeply moved. No outside help has been called in, and a strong bond of union is being formed among the churches.——Special meetings are also being held at Portland, Rev. N. P. McQuarrie helping the pastor, Rev. J. T. Killen.

South Dakota

Yankton.—After more than three months' absence, Rev. E. M. Williams was in his pulpit again Feb. 28, to the evident satisfaction of his congregation. Rev. L. P. Rowland of Grand Rapids, Mich., for 15 years secretary of the Boston Y. M. C. A., began evangelistic meetings here March 3.

Meckling.—Evangelistic services have been held during two recent weeks. Rev. B. W. Burleigh of Mitchell assisted the first week, and Rev. J. M. Bates of Wakonda the second. Rev. C. T. Halbert is pastor.

Arizona

Prescott.—Union meetings, in which four churches participated, were held for four weeks with little in the way of results except the quickening of Christians. Stormy weather interfered with the meetings somewhat. Rev. T. D. McLean is to go East, April 1, for study. He leaves the church in excellent condition, and his departure is universally regretted.

Tucson.—An orchestra is a pleasing feature of the Sunday school, lately introduced. The attendance has increased about 40 per cent. since Jan. 1. A marked feature of the Sunday congregations is the unusual proportion of men.

Nogales.—A new bell has been purchased and put in place. It is hoped that money can soon be raised to finish the tower for its protection.

New Mexico

Atrisco.—Mexican. A week of special meetings was held by Rev. G. E. Birlew and Rev. Mr. Hernandez, lately from Mexico, with a fair degree of interest.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES

A successful conference of the International S. S. Field Workers' Association was held in Louisville, Ky. Fourteen States and one Province were represented.

Virginia held its annual convention at Lynchburg last month. This was the first State meeting for 1897. In April Georgia and Alabama in the South and Minnesota in the Northwest lead off with spring meetings.

Chelsea, Mass., has recently been systematically canvassed by volunteer workers under the direction of the Interdenominational District S. S. Association, and plans for a similar canvass have been made for Washington, D. C. As the result of a canvass made in Hannibal, Mo., last fall, by 60 visitors making 1,850 calls, large accessions are reported to all the schools. The visitors found 1,804 who attend Sunday school and 2,508 who did not, while 3,308 reported as being church members and 2,857 not, of whom 21 per cent. only expressed a denominational preference.

A series of district conventions was held in Calidonia and Essex Counties, Vt., during the first half of February, the towns visited being West Concord, St. Johnsbury, Lyndonville, West Burke, Barnet, Ryegate, Peacham, Danville and Hardwick. A program for the ten meetings consisted of written reports from the schools, A Comparison with the Previous Year, Relation of State to District Organizations, the Why and How of the Secretary's Work, Primary Teaching, Bible Study, The Sunday School and the Home, The Sunday School and the Church, and a normal lesson by Mr. I. B. Miller, the field secretary for New Hampshire and Vermont. Much new interest was awakened.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES

Nashville Endeavorers are protesting against liquor selling at the Tennessee Centennial.

On a recent cold evening some Philadelphia Endeavorers distributed coffee to the motormen on two street car lines.

Three young men and three young women who had fled from Turkish persecution have formed a society at Bourgas, Bulgaria, with the assistance of a Quaker lady who has been aiding Armenian fugitives.

The Rhode Island Union has issued a large, attractive souvenir in the shape of a cloth bound book giving a history of Christian Endeavor in the State with portraits and sketches of leading workers and hints on methods.

New Zealand now has a fully organized union of delegates from eight local unions. Each local union furnishes two representatives to the general council. Triennial conventions will be held alternately in the northern and the southern islands.

A Philadelphia society conducts a weekly meeting for policemen at one of the city stations. A meeting for motormen held by the same society in one of the car sheds led to the request by the motormen and the superintendent of the station that similar meetings should be held every week.

The Woman's Board of Missions has made an appeal to the societies to continue their support of Miss Abbie G. Chapin of China and Miss Annie Stockbridge of India. It has also called for gifts for the International Institute for Girls in San Sebastian, Spain, and for the American College for Girls in Constantinople.

For March the Prayer Chain prays for our churches, that they may be filled with the evangelizing spirit of Christ, that the members may dwell together in Christian unity and service, that they may loyally uphold the pastor's hands, and that the great mission of the church in winning men and training them into Christlikeness may be fulfilled.

Most of the American churches in New Mexico already had young people's societies so no great gain of societies was reported at the convention, but the additions to the church from the societies had increased by 150 per cent. over the preceding year. One-fifth more money had also been raised. The society that had raised the largest amount had made none of it through sociables, and a discussion on the ways of raising money brought out a general condemnation of that method. A Spanish-American secretary was chosen as one of the officers of the Territorial union.

On Dr. Clark's voyage to India a delightful meeting was held one Sunday evening on the Red Sea. Among those present were ten Christian Endeavorers representing Missouri, Ohio, Illinois, Massachusetts, Canada, England and Australia. Some were on their way to work in mission fields. Dr. Clark spoke twice in Bombay on the day when he landed, but because of the plague the public meetings in the city that had been planned had to be given up. In the American mission church he found five C. E. Societies, four of them for Juniors. An interesting meeting was held in the Soldiers' Home at Poonah, where Mr. Robert P. Wilder and Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D. D., were present and took part.

Finances of Our National Societies

Below are given the receipts and expenses of the six national Congregational benevolent societies for 1886 and 1896 These tables are compiled from the annual reports of the societies. The fiscal years of the societies are not uniform and do not coincide with the calendar year. We have compared the reports of the years which end at some dates in 1886 with those ending in 1896. The tables do not include independent expenses of the Woman's Board, whose receipts are included in those of the American Board, nor the expenses of the Woman's Home Missionary Association, whose receipts are distributed through the five societies for home work. No account is taken of the State auxiliaries, which contribute to the Home Missionary Society besides expending considerable money in their own States. The salaries of State home missionary secretaries and superintendents are not included in the expense account of that society. In some instances expenses include considerable amounts paid as interest on borrowed money. Annuities are not included. We comment in our editorial columns on the figures here given.

AMERICAN BOARD

1886, Total Receipts		$661,735.67
Donations	$384,247.98
Legacies	107,190 97
Other sources	170,296 72
1886, Expenses		$41,552.78
1896, Total Receipts		$746,236.63
Donations	* $601,966 25
Legacies	116,988 70
Other sources	27,281.68
1896, Expenses		$58,568 32

* Including amount raised for debt, $131,000.

1886, 6.3 per cent. of receipts for expenses.
1896, 7 8 per cent. of receipts for expenses.

NOTE. The receipts as recorded for both years include all amounts expended for missionary purposes collected by the Woman's Board. They do not include an income which is applied directly to the payment of rent of offices.

The expenses for both years do not include the independent expenses of the Woman's Board incurred by them in collecting funds. In so far as the special income referred to above is applied in payment of rent of offices, that amount does not appear as an item of expense.

HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY

1886, Total Receipts		$384,518.06
Donations	$206,578 41
Legacies	171 327 26
Other sources	6,612 39
1886, Expenses		$35,846.66
1896, Total Receipts		$538,606.33
Donations	* $293,556.77
Legacies	† 233 510 58
Other sources	11,538 98
1896, Expenses		$84,817 84

* Including Howard Roll of Honor shares, $80,439.64.
† Including Stickney legacy, $72,245.

1886, 9.3 per cent. of receipts for expenses.
1896, 15 7 per cent. of receipts for expenses.

AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION

1886, Total Receipts		$335,704 20
Donations	$215,564 36
Legacies	47,584 19
Other sources	72,555 65
1886, Expenses		$40.027.64
1896, Total Receipts		$409,879.09
Donations	* $184,551.15
Legacies	† 86,642 22
Hand Fund income	‡ 68,830.44
Other sources	69,855.28
1896, Expenses		$59,227.90

* Including Jubilee shares, $20,237.21.

† Not including Daniel Hand Endowment Fund, amounting to $305,025.

‡ This amount includes items of expense amounting to $6,100, which do not appear in general expense account.

1886, 11.9 per cent. of receipts for expenses.
1896, 14 5 per cent. of receipts for expenses.

CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY

1886, Total Receipts		$120,597.84
Donations	$113,097.91
Legacies	2,153 88
Other sources	816.19
Loans refunded	4,529.86
1886, Expenses		$13,391 03
1896, Total Receipts		$132,967.98
Donations	$87,683.71
Legacies	12,326 90
Other sources	2,341.19
Loans refunded	30,616 18
1896, Expenses		$24.801.97

1886, 11.1 per cent. of receipts for expenses.
1896, 18 5 per cent. of receipts for expenses.

EDUCATION SOCIETY

1886, Total Receipts		$85,149 84
Donations, C. & E.	$18,229.07
" N. W.	55,675.81
Legacies, C. & E.	1,900 00
Other sources, C. & E.,	7 657 51
" " N. W.,	1,687 45
1886, Expenses		$13,280.79
C. & E.	$4 822.39
N. W.	8,458 40
1896, Total Receipts		$166,026 24
Donations	* $106,584 15
Legacies	13 923 53
Other sources	45,518.56
1896, Expenses		$20,285.17

* Including gift of $60,000 from Mr. Roland Mather.

1886, 15 6 per cent. of receipts for expenses.
1896, 12.2 per cent. of receipts for expenses.

NOTE. Receipts do not include gifts made directly to colleges aided by the society, and not passing through its treasury, amounting in 1886 to $51,529, in 1896 to $127,949.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND PUBLISHING SOCIETY

1886, Total Receipts		$25,575.73
Donations	$25,294 09
Other sources	281.64
1886, Expenses		$4,545 02
1896, Total Receipts		* $63,847.48
Donations	$49,033.41
Legacies	9,679.57
Other sources	5,734 50
1896, Expenses		$8,981.38

* Including $5,000 appropriated from profits of the business department of the society.

1886, 17.8 per cent. of receipts for expenses.
1896, 14 1 per cent. of receipts for expenses.

TOTALS FOR THE SIX SOCIETIES

	RECEIPTS	EXPENSES
1886	$1,613,281.34	$148,643 92
1896	2,057,563.75	256,682.53

1886, 9 per cent. of receipts for expenses.
1896, 12 5 per cent. of receipts for expenses.

A committee appointed at the Southern California convention to plan for helping the Armenians sent out an appeal to those engaged in raising oranges asking them to send to a central point as much fruit as they would contribute. A New York firm consented to handle the fruit without charge, and offers of help in transportation have come from different sources. It is expected that by the sale quite a sum will be raised.

The press department of the New Jersey State Union endeavors to be represented by a press committee or by the secretary in each local union of the State. Reports to the State press department are requested at least once a month. From the reports a bulletin of about 800 words is made up every two weeks and a hundred copies are sent to the local press committees to make selections for the neighborhood newspapers.

AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION

JUBILEE YEAR FUND TO RAISE $100,000 IN SHARES OF $50 EACH

First Cong. Church, Marietta, O.
Mrs. Elizabeth S. Hall, Exeter, N. H., two shares.
University Cong. Church, New Orleans, La.
Two Friends in Massachusetts, two shares.
Cong. Church, North Dighton, Mass.
Woman's Home Missionary Society, First Cong. Church, Montclair, N. J., by Mrs. Caroline W. Sweet, two shares.
Woman's Home Missionary Society, Belleville Avenue Cong. Church, Newark, N. J.
Ladies' Union of Evangelical Church, Athol, Mass.
H. G. Maynard, Northampton, Mass.
Woman's Home Missionary Society, First Cong. Church, Burlington, Vt.
Mrs. J. H. Gleason, Reading, Mass.
Mrs. Elizabeth S. Porter, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. A. A. Westcott, Hopedale, Mass.
Ladies' Auxiliary, Pine Street Church, Lewiston, Me.
Cong. Sunday School and Departments, Lebanon, N. H.
North Cong. Church and Society, Portsmouth, N. H.
Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Kimball, Portsmouth, N. H.
Woodward Avenue Cong. Church, Detroit, Mich., two shares.
Friends in First Cong. Church, Derry, N. H., in memory of Miss Mary F. Pinkerton.
Rev. J. A. R. Rogers, Hartford, Ct.
Prof. and Mrs. E. C. Silsby, Talladega, Ala.
Cong. Church and Society, Norridgewock, Me.
Somerset Conference of Cong. Churches, Skowhegan, Me.
Park Church, L. M. C., Brooklyn, N. Y.
First Cong. Church, Canandaigua, N. Y.
Mrs. L. G. Gillette's Sunday School Class, Grand Avenue Congregational Church, Milwaukee, Wis.
Y. P. S. C. E. and Sunday School of First Church of Christ, Middletown, Ct.
T. B. Goddard, Jewell, O., two shares.
A Friend, Ellington, Ct.
Woman's Home Missionary Society, Norfolk, Ct.
L. J. Stewart, Cappahosic, Va.
Ladies' Home Missionary Society, First Cong. Church, Washington, D. C.
Mrs. L. F. Crane, Dalton, Mass.
Mrs. E. J. Crane, Dalton, Mass.
Miss Clara L. Crane, Dalton, Mass.
W. J. Van Patten, Burlington, Vt.
Woman's Home Missionary Auxiliary, Center Congregational Church, Haverhill, Mass.
Tabernacle Cong. Church, Salem, Mass.
Cong. Church, Stoneham, Mass
Young Ladies' Society of Christian Workers, Andover, Mass.
Mrs. William Wales, Second Cong. Church, Dorchester, Mass.
Mrs. Odlin, Exeter, N. H., in memory of her husband, Mr. Woodbridge Odlin.
First Cong. Church, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
Woman's Home Missionary Society, Park Cong. Church, Norwich, Ct., two shares.
Y. P. S. C. E., Second Cong. Church, New London, Ct.
Rev. and Mrs. John Barstow, Medford, Mass.
Rev. and Mrs. G. S. F. Savage, Chicago, Ill.
Friend in Plymouth Cong. Church, Framingham, Mass.
In memory of William C. Gilman by his daughters, Norwich, Ct., five shares.
Park Cong. Church, Worcester, Mass.
Women Workers, Central Church, Chelsea, Mass.
L. D. M. S., Middlebury, Vt.
Rev. Hiram Houston, Dorchester, Mass.
Woman's Auxiliary, Tabernacle Church, Salem, Mass.
Rev. D. W. Waldron, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. J. S. Wood, Groton, Mass.
Mrs. E. P. Shumway, Groton, Mass.
Mrs. William Dyer, South Weymouth, Mass.
Mrs. M. E. Ames, Concord, Mass., two shares.
Cong. Church, Williamsburg, Ky.
Cong. Church, Taftville, Ct.
Cong. Sunday School, Enfield, Mass.
Rev. J. B. Bates, Caroline Depot, N. Y.
Miss M. E. Reed, Worcester, Mass.
Woman's Missionary Aid Society, South Cong. Church, Springfield, Mass.
Mrs. C. F. Hobart, Springfield, Mass.
South Cong. Church, Springfield, Mass.
A Friend in Massachusetts.
Mrs. C. M. Southworth, Boston, Mass.
Miss Carrie Southworth, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. S. M. Griggs, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. M. J. Weston, Boston, Mass.
H. M. Weston, Boston, Mass.
William Shaw, Boston, Mass.
A Friend, Worcester, Mass.
First Cong. Church, Branford, Ct.
Cong. Church at Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H.
S. R. Sage, Ware, Mass., two shares.
Mrs. B. W. Payne, Homer, N. Y.
Minnesota Woman's Home Missionary Union, Northfield, Minn.
Woman's Home Missionary Union, Ann Arbor, Mich.
Woman's Home Missionary Union, Newark, N. J., three shares.
Trinitarian Cong. Church, Waltham, Mass.
Cong. Church, Wakefield, Mass.
Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Draper, Andover, Mass.
First Cong. Church, Lowell, Mass
Rev. H. A. Hazen, D. D., and E. L. Pickard, Auburndale, Mass.
Shawmut Cong. Church, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. B. G. Knapp, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. M. F. Hitch, for Missionary Society, New Bedford, Mass.
Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Wilcox, Medford, Mass., two shares.
D. S. Cutler, Great Barrington, Mass.
E. J. H., Ware, Mass.
Rev. C. J. Ryder, D. D., and wife, Stamford, Ct.
Maverick Cong. Church, East Boston, Mass.
Frank Beebe, Holyoke, Mass.
L. S. Bartlett and M. L. Stedman, West Brattleboro, Vt.
Emma A. Smith, Old Mystic, Ct.
Harriet M. Metcalf, Ashland, Mass.
J. G. Fuller, Medford, Mass.
Mrs. E. F. Ames, Swampscott, Mass.
Charles P. Paine, New York, N. Y.
Rev. A. P. Foster, D. D., Boston, Mass.
E. Horatio Talcott, Torrington, Ct.
Rev. F. P. Woodbury, D. D., Montclair, N. J.
Miss Julia N. Balch, Newburyport, Mass.
First Cong. Church, Burlington, Vt.
Miss A. L. Pierson, Danvers, Mass.
Rev. A. F. Beard, D. D., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Cong. Church, East Weymouth, Mass.
Cong. Church, Pawtucket, R. I.
First Cong. Church, North Brookfield, Mass.
First Cong. Church, Newton, Mass.
John P. Taylor, Andover, Mass.
First Cong. Church, Norwood, Mass.
Mrs. E. H. Byington, Newton, Mass.
Immanuel Cong. Church, Roxbury, Mass.
People's Church, Buffalo, N. Y.
Winter Hill Cong. Church, Somerville, Mass.
Rev. M. F. Hardy, Townshend, Vt.
M. M. Fisher, Medway, Mass.
E. C. Clark, Boston, Mass.
Highland Cong. Church, Lowell, Mass.
Jeanie M. Aldrich, Roxbury, Mass.
Mrs. J. H. Kendall, Cambridge, Mass.
Rev. Arthur Mitchell, D. D., Dorchester, Mass.
Mrs. F. L. Fuller, Wellesley Hills, Mass.
Parker Blood, Groton, N. H.
Rev. C. M. Southgate, Auburndale, Mass.
A. A. Sweet, Newton, Mass.
Mrs. E. E. Slocum, East Providence, R. I.
Cong. Church, Washington, Ct.
A Friend, Littleton, Mass.
Andover Seminary Students, Andover, Mass.
Rev. F. H. Kasson, Boston, Mass.
Rev. J. E. Roy, D. D., Chicago, Ill.
Rev. G. W. Andrews, D. D., Talladega, Ala.
Tougaloo University, Tougaloo, Miss.
Martha M. Buttrick, Lowell, Mass., in memory of Mrs. Lucretia Buttrick.
Rev. Vincent Moses, Bradford, Mass.
Mrs. Vincent Moses, Bradford, Mass.
Friend in Massachusetts, two shares.
Mrs. S. B. Sharpleigh, Allston, Mass.
Hancock Cong. Church, Lexington, Mass.
Rev. George F. Chapin, Saxton's River, Vt.
Rev. Austin B. Bassett, Ware, Mass.
East Cong. Church, Ware, Mass.
Rev. E. M. Cravath, D. D., and wife, Nashville, Tenn.
Woman's Missionary Union, Alabama.
F. J. Ward, Roxbury, Mass.
G. W. Amyansen, Newtonville, Mass.
Miss S. E. H., Ware, Mass.
C. E. Aldrich, Jr., Roxbury, Mass.
Abraham Lincoln Cent Society, Talladega, Ala.
First Cong. Church, Peoria, Ill., two shares.
Eliot Cong. Church, Newton, Mass., four shares.
Mrs. Louisa Buell, Plainville, Ct., two shares.
Union Cong. Church, Springfield, Mass., two shares.
F. W. and A. M. Wood, Shawmut Church, Boston, Mass., two shares.
Rev. M. E. Strieby, D. D., New York, N. Y., two shares.
Samuel Holmes, Montclair, N. J., two shares.
South Cong. Church, Peabody, Mass., two shares.
Charles L. Mead, New York, N. Y., two shares.
J. W. Field, Boston, Mass., two shares.
Mrs. J. N. F., Boston, Mass., two shares.
Union Church, South Weymouth, Mass., two shares.
Rev. N. Boynton, D. D., Detroit, Mich., two shares.
Tillotson College, Austin, Tex., two shares.
Pres. Merrill E. Gates, LL. D., Amherst, Mass., two shares.
Mrs. L. C. and Miss C. A. Dean, Freetown, Mass., two shares.
H. W. Hubbard, New York, N. Y., two shares.
Mr. and Mrs. E. Boynton, Medford, Mass., two shares.
North Cong. Church, St. Johnsbury, Vt., two shares.
Woman's Union, Tennessee, two shares.
Miss C. W. Lawrence, Danvers, Mass.
Woman's Home Missionary Society, Burlington, Vt.
Cong. Church, Pepperell, Mass.
Rev. Reuen Thomas, D. D., Brookline, Mass.
Cong. Church, Auburndale, Mass.
Tompkins Avenue Cong. Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., ten shares.
Cong. Church, Wenham, Mass.
Two Friends, Worcester, Mass.
In Memoriam.
Evangelical Free Church Sunday School, Globe Village, Mass.
Mrs Eliza Meacham, New Haven, Vt.
Members and Friends of the Y. P. S. C. E. of the First Cong. Church, Pasadena, Cal.
Park Street Cong. Church, Boston, Mass.
Estate of Elizabeth A. Kimball, by George E. Hills, Esq., Groveland, Mass.
A Friend, Lawrence, Mass.
In Memory of Deacon James H. Dunham, by Mrs. Abbie Y. Burr, Pittsfield, Mass.
Hancock Cong. Church, Lexington, Mass.
A Friend, New York, N. Y.
North Cong. Church, New Bedford, Mass.
Second Cong. Church, Putnam, Ct.
Cong. Church, Cromwell, Ct.
Y. P. S. C. E. and Woman's Home Missionary Society, First Congregational Church, Amherst, Mass.
Ladies' Benevolent Association of Central Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.
A Friend, Indiana.
Woman's Home Missionary Union of Missouri.
Ladies' Auxiliary, Malden, Mass.
Cong. Church, Lynnfield, Mass.
South Cong. Church, Ipswich, Mass.
Prospect Hill Cong. Church, Somerville, Mass.
First Cong. Church, Branford, Ct.
C. H. Warren, Cambridge, Mass.
First Cong. Sunday School, Thomaston, Ct.
Young Men's Christian Association, Nashville, Tenn.
Fisk University and Departments, Nashville, Tenn.
Woman's Missionary Society, Wadena, Minn.
South Cong. Church, Peabody, Mass.
Park Cong. Church, Norwich, Ct.
A Friend, through Woman's Home Missionary Association, Boston, Mass., eight shares.
Rev, Samuel Johnson, New Haven, N. Y.
John Y. Pearson and wife, Rosebud, S. D.
Evangelical Cong. Church, Lancaster, Mass.
Mrs. A. F. Spaulding and Mrs. Keene, Brighton, Mass.
Eliot Cong. Church, Newton, Mass., four shares.
Central Cong. Church, Chelsea, Mass.
First Cong. Church, Newton Center, Mass., ten shares.

Previously reported,	431
Subscriptions reported above,	286
Total number of shares reported,	717

Deaths

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

BLOOD—In Medfield, March 1, Carrie L., widow of the late Lester W. Blood, and daughter of Deacon Francis S. and Caroline L. Wight, aged 33 yrs., 1 mo., 22 dys.

CAVERNO—In Kewanee, Ill., Feb. 9, of pneumonia, Matilda H. Bacon, wife of Xenophon Caverno, aged 28 yrs.

FARRINGTON—In Westboro, of congestion of the brain, James W. Farrington, of Newton, Mass., aged 39 yrs., 11 mos. Interment at Glens Falls, N. Y.

GIBSON—In Boulder, Col., Feb. 12, George S. Gibson, aged 66 yrs., a native of New Ipswich, N. H. He was an upright citizen and a faithful member of the church.

GOODALE—In Suffield, Ct., at the home of her son, Rev. D. W. Goodale, March 6, Mrs. Elizabeth Goodale, aged 71 yrs., 18 dys.

JAMESON—In Boston, March 6, Mary Joanna Cogswell, wife of Rev. E. O. Jameson, aged 64 yrs., formerly of Millis, Mass.

KELLOGG—In Wolcott, Ct., March 1, Rev. E. Martin, father of Rev. H. M. Kellogg, pastor of the church. He was born in Pulaski, N. Y., 81 years ago, and was a graduate of Hamilton College and Seminary. His parishes included New Haven, New York, New Boston, Greenwich and Lyme; he also preached for a time in New Jersey and New Hampshire. For the past six years he has resided in Wolcott.

SHAPLEIGH—In Brookline, March 4, of heart failure, William T. Shapleigh, aged 63 yrs., one of the partners of the Oriental Tea Company and a highly esteemed member of the Old South Church, Boston.

SERENO D. BONFILS

Sereno D. Bonfils, a deacon and a trustee of Trinity Congregational Church, New York city, entered into rest on Wednesday, Jan. 27, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. Mr. Bonfils was, on his mother's side, a descendant of John Alden, and was closely identified with the progress of Congregationalism in the northern part of the great metropolis. He was one of the founders and stanch supporters of Trinity Church and gave largely of his means to neighboring churches of the Congregational order. But his memory will be cherished fully as much for his lovely Christian character as for his benefactions. The funeral service, which took place on Jan. 30, in Trinity Church, was largely attended by many who felt his loss to be a personal bereavement. Mr Bonfils leaves a wife and two sons, Rev. Ellsworth Bonfils and Carlton Bonfils. The service was conducted by Rev. Messrs. J. M. Whiton, Ph., D., H. M. Brown and Franklin Gaylord, pastor of the church.

MISS SARAH J. HOLBROOK

On Sunday morning, Feb. 14, almost at the hour when the first ringing of the bell was calling the people of Holbrook to church service, Miss Sarah J. Holbrook suddenly passed from this life to her reward in the life beyond. Her illness had been severe from the first, but was borne with remarkable gentleness and patience, never being moved from her bright hope and strong faith in her Saviour.

Miss Holbrook was a woman of rare moral worth. She was one in whom Christ was honored. In being acquainted with her one would be very strongly impressed with the deep worth of her unpretentious but true Christian character. There had been in her life a great deal of suffering, but rarely did she look upon the gloomy side. Her religion was her life, and her sufferings really brought her into a sweeter and more vital communion with her suffering Saviour.

There are souls in this world through whom God finds the ready means to bless a wide circle of other souls. Miss Holbrook was of this type. She was a most useful Christian, she sought to be used of God and was ever humble in being used. God permitted earthly riches to come to her, and she, in turn, gave them in many ways and places where they would be peculiar blessings for good to the cause of righteousness and truth. Both young men and young women, pursuing with scanty or no means the course of an education, have realized the strength of her Christian kindness by being lifted over the financial difficulties which bar so many out of the richest privileges of our land.

If I were to describe her Christian life in one word I can find no better one than helpfulness; surely those who know her as I have had the privilege of knowing her will recognize her thus. Her character is described in the words, Sincere devotion to Christ and his kingdom.

She has contributed annually for many years with liberal gifts to the large and progressive missionary work of our church associations. The fields where her rich benevolence will long continue to bear fruit are many and far extended.

Her friendship was always given in order that it might bless the one or the cause receiving it. It was with this high motive that the circle of her friendship was ever widening, and in the increasing years of her life she sought that God might make her more and more useful unto the triumph of righteousness and the knowledge of truth.

She was a woman that humanity can but ill afford to spare. The whole movement of her life for more than fifty years was strong for good. She became a Christian in her girlhood and was ever solicitous for the glory of her Lord, becoming ever stronger in the knowledge of his grace and love.

Her own immediate community deeply grieves at her death; all feel that one is taken whose place cannot easily be filled. While much of her thought and generosity was given to wider extended and higher works, she did not forget the smaller interests of her own community.

All who knew her mourn her death, for she had been a friend to all. We yield reluctantly to the inevitable, but we know that he who knoweth all things from the beginning doeth all things well, and while we grieve that she is gone we rejoice that she was so abundantly prepared to meet her Lord. The memory of her life will be a benediction to all who knew her.

WARREN FRANCIS LOW.

FRANCES S. CLAYES

At Toronto, Canada, entered her eternal home on the morning of Feb. 21. Miss Clayes was the daughter of Rev. Dana Clayes, whose ministry for many years was in Meriden, N. H., and who was almost until his decease at a ripe old age one of the board of trustees of Kimball Union Academy in that place. There Frances Clayes was born and spent her girlhood. She was a pupil at Kimball Union Academy of such educators as its distinguished principal for thirty-five years, the late Cyrus S. Richards, A. M., and of the botanist Alphonso Wood, Cyrus Baldwin and others. At the close of Mr. Clayes's ministry at Meriden the family moved to Portland, Me., where her younger womanhood was passed. Later they came to Wakefield, Mass., the home of her mother and of her maternal ancestors. Here for many years she lived and did much of her life work. Lovely in spirit, quiet in manner, retiring in disposition, but earnest in Christian life, those Wakefield years were her opportunity to impress and help to higher living all with whom she was associated.

For many years she was the beloved and faithful superintendent of the children's department in the Sunday school of the Wakefield Congregational church, of which she was a member at the time of her death. The present pastor well said on the day of her funeral that although he had never seen her face while living, as she had been many years absent from the town, he felt as if he knew her, and the church is now reaping the fruit from the seed she sowed in its faithful teachers and workers in church and Sunday school who were once under her training and care. Never very robust in health, she has for several years been an invalid.

Her last two winters were spent in the home of Rev. T. B. Hyde of Toronto, whose wife was to her as an adopted daughter. Here she quietly and peacefully passed to the heavenly home. Our deepest sympathy goes out to the sister, her only surviving near relative, who has been her lifelong and most devoted companion and who has tenderly ministered to her in her declining health.

It is impossible to estimate the real worth of such a character. Her life and work have left their impress on many who still survive her, who through her influence and example follow her in deeds of love, tender sympathy for suffering and helpful work for those who need their care. Those lives are her best monument. Her truest epitaph is, "Her works do follow her," and her best welcome into the Master's presence, "She hath done what she could."

MRS. PAMELIA PARSONS SHEPLEY

Died at Blairsville, Pa., Feb. 12. She was born, Jan. 20, 1815, at Westport, Me. A few years later her parents, Capt. Jotham Parsons and Mrs. Olive (Greenleaf) Parsons, removed to Wiscasset where their children grew up and received their earlier education; later she enjoyed the advantages of the school of Rev. Solomon Adams at Portland, and afterwards was employed as his assistant.

Mrs. Shepley early became an earnest and devout Christian, a member of the church, and was active in church work. In 1839 she was married to Rev. S. H. Shepley, pastor of the Congregational church in New Gloucester, Me., and was a wise and efficient helper of her husband in that sacred relation. With a quick intellect, carefully educated, and with some experience and much interest in the work, she was prepared to co-operate with her husband, not only as a pastor's wife, but in the other field of service which he was about to undertake. After five years of educational work elsewhere Mr. and Mrs. Shepley became proprietors of Blairsville Female Seminary, now known as Blairsville College for Women. Under their management the institution was prosperous and attained a widespread reputation. Owing to failing health their work was relinquished in 1865. In the thirteen years of her connection with this school Mrs. Shepley accomplished a most important part of her earnest and useful service for others by the impress of her consecrated personality and lovely character upon the hundreds of young women who were her pupils during these years. Two children survive, Mr. H. P. Shepley and Helen, the wife of Major T. D. Cunningham, both of Blairsville.

MARGARET MURRAY ROBERTSON

The writer of Christie Redfern's Troubles, Shenac's Work at Home, and many another charming story, entered into her rest on Sabbath, Feb. 14, at Montreal. One who knew her for nearly fifty years writes this memorial of her.

She was the daughter of Rev. James Robertson, a Scotch Congregational minister, a godly man and a preacher of singular power as an expounder of Scripture. If ever a man literally "preached the Word" it was he. He came from Stuartfield, in Scotland, to Sherbrooke, in the Province of Quebec, Canada, in 1832, at a time when the settlements in "the eastern townships" were in a very primitive condition and church life was at its most elementary stage. It was necessary for him to do something more than his people could do for him to maintain his large family, and he bought, cleared and worked a farm just outside the town.

Margaret's mother died when she was but a child. But under the father's influence three of the sons obtained a college education and became eminent at the bar, and two of the daughters were graduates of Mt. Holyoke. Rev. Andrew Murray of South Africa and Prof. W. Robertson Smith were near relatives.

On leaving Mt. Holyoke Margaret Robertson took charge of an academy at Sherbrooke, and conducted it for several years with remarkable skill and success. The influence of Mary Lyon was felt in the intellectual power of her teaching and the spiritual warmth by which it was pervaded. She was never weary of quoting Mt. Holyoke. Her sister, afterwards Mrs. (Rev.) Donald Gordon, was invited to succeed to the principalship on Miss Lyon's death.

Christie Redfern was her first book. It was published in Philadelphia by the American Sunday School Union and in London by the Religious Tract Society. It became instantly popular—true to nature, a description of real people, with a strong religious tone, but never "goody-good," catching and holding the attention of the young and the old alike. It gratified her to be told, as she was by the writer of these lines, that religion was in her stories as the sugar in one's tea, tasted throughout but nowhere in a lump. The homely illustration truly characterized all her writings. These were, besides those above named, The Bairns, The Orphans of Glen Elder, Eunice, The Inglises, Frederica and Her Guardians, The Little House in the Hollow, David Fleming's Forgiveness, Little Gabriel, Stephen Grattan's Faith, Little Serena in a Strange Land, Janet's Love and Service, The Two Miss Jean Dawsons and By a Way She Knew Not.

Her later years were spent with relatives in Montreal, where she was much honored and beloved. The last illness was but of a week's duration. It is believed that many of the early Mt. Holyoke graduates, pupils of the Sherbrooke Academy, readers of her books and a large circle of relatives and friends will be interested in this brief summary of a noble and fruitful life.

F. H. M.

GUSTAVUS D. PARKER

Died of apoplexy at his residence, corner of Dudley and Magnolia Streets, Wednesday, March 3. He was born at Randolph, Mass., and while a boy moved with his family to Dorchester. He received his early education in the public schools and graduated from the Chauncey Hall School. He afterwards engaged with his father in the shoe and leather trade from which he retired in 1883 and has since devoted himself to the management of his estate. Mr. Parker was a member of the Immanuel Church and of the Boston Congregational Club. Upright and honorable in character, genial and courteous in bearing, kindly and affectionate in disposition, he was respected in the community, esteemed in his church and beloved by a large circle of friends; but it was in his home that the manly and attractive qualities of his character shone with greatest luster, and here his loss is deeply mourned by his widow, the daughter of Rev. Dr. R. J. Adams, his two sons and two daughters. Funeral services were held at the family residence Saturday, March 6.

WEEKLY REGISTER

Calls

BURNAP, Irving E., Monterey, Mass., to Eliot Ch., S. Natick. Accepts
COLE, Thos. W., late of Sterling, Kan., to McPherson. Has begun work.
CURTIS, Chas. H., Hassalo St. Ch., Portland, Ore., to asst. pastorate Westminster Presb. Ch., Minneapolis, Minn.
DAVIES, Howell, formerly Lansford, Pa., to First Ch., Streator, Ill. Accepts.
DEPEU, John, Norfolk, Ct., accepts call to North Ch., Bridgeport.
DOE, Franklin B., Ashland, Wis., accepts call to be field secretary for Ripon College.
GARNER, Alex. C., Mobile, Ala., to Plymouth Ch., Washington, D. C. Accepts.
GILMAN, Burton S., W. Colchester, Vt., to Gardner, Mass.
HART, I. T., Syracuse Univ., to Woodville, N. Y. Accepts, and has begun work.
HOUSE, Edwin L., Attleboro, Mass., declines call to Franklin St. Ch., E. Somerville.
KELSEY, Wm.; recalled to Alpha, Parker, Otter and Mt. Pisgah, Okl.
KENT, Robt J., Lewis Ave. Ch., Brooklyn, N. Y., to superintendency of Brooklyn Ch. Extension Society. Accepts.
KINNEY, Theo. H., Bangor Sem., to Baptist Ch., W. Hampden, Me.
McKINNON, Norman, to remain at Foxcroft and Dover, Me., where he has supplied for a year.
McLAREN, Jas. H., formerly of Prince Edward Island, accepts call to First Ch., Racine, Wis.
MURPHY, Thos. F., Hartland, Wis., to Lake Mills. Accepts.
OLMSTEAD, Julian H., Walton, N. Y., to Tyndall and Bon Homme, S. D. Accepts.
PARSONS, Henry W., St. Paul, Minn., to Milton St. Ch., same city.
RAWSON, G. H., formerly of Concord, Wis., to Big Spring, Jackson and Davis Corners. Accepts.
RICE, Wm. A., junior secretary of American Tract Society, to Belleville Ave. Ch., Newark, N. J. Accepts, to begin Apr. 1.
ROBBERTS, Jas. F., recalled to Park, Altona and Tabor, Okl.
SENTER, Geo. A., to S. Woodbury and E. Calais, Vt.
SPANSWICK, T. W., to Mt. Hope, Okl., in connection with W. Guthrie.
THOMPSON, Alex. W., San Jacinto, Cal., to Etiwanda. Accepts.
TITCOMB, Arthur, Farmington, Me., to be pastor's assistant at First Ch., Springfield, Mass., for six months. Accepts.
VALLIERS, Jas (Presb.), to preach at Arlington, Neb., alternate Sundays for a year.
VAN OMMEREN, Hendrik, to remain another year at Grass Lake, Mich.
WARREN, Willis A., Waterville and Morristown, Minn., to Spring Valley. Accepts.

Ordinations and Installations

ALEXANDER, Jas., i. Newport, N. H., Mch. 2. Sermon, Prof. J. W. Churchill, D. D., other parts, Rev. Messrs J. B. Lawrence, A. T. Hillman, Drs. F. D. Ayer and Cyrus Richardson.
BURKHOLDER, Clarence M., o. La Grange, Ill., Feb. 25. Sermon, Dr. J. W. Sturtevant; other parts, Rev. Messrs. H. A. Bushnell, D. D., P. W. Perry and M. N. Preston.
GOODACRE, Jas. J., o. and i. Berlin, Vt., Feb. 24. Sermon, Rev. S. N. Jackson; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. J. Hall, W. S. Eaton, A. A. Smith, W. S. Hazen, D. D.
PRESSEY, Edwin S., i. St. Anthony Park Ch., St. Paul, Minn., Mch. 2. Sermon, Rev. E. P. Ingersoll, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. H. Chandler, W. B. Millard, Drs. D. N. Beach and J. W. Strong.
STOKES, W. T., i. Vernon Heights Ch., Mt. Vernon, N. Y., Feb. 17. Sermon, Dr. A. J. F. Behrends.

Resignations

ANDREWS, Stephen M., Windsor, Mass., after a six years' pastorate.
CRAGIN, Chas. C., Sebastopol, Cal.
GUNNER, Byron, Second Ch., Painesville, O.
HINCKLEY, Frank E., Woodland, Cal.
KING, James P., Tyndall and Bon Homme, S. D.
McLEAN, Thos. D., Prescott, Ariz., to take effect Apr. 1.
ORTH, Andrew P., Bethlehem Ch., Davenport, Io.
PRATT, Dwight M., Williston Ch., Portland, Me., to take effect May 1.
PRESTON, Elmer E., Hemingford, Reno and Hyannis, Neb., to return to Kansas.
TURNER, Leonard A., Second Ch., Plymouth, Neb., to take effect April 21.

Dismissions

SPENCER, Edward G., Penacook, N. H., Mar. 1.

Churches Organized

LOS ALAMITOS, Cal., 21 Feb., 10 members.
WASHINGTON, D. C., University Park Temple, 9 Feb

Miscellaneous

HARRIS, Clarence J., has been presented by his Colchester (Vt.) friends with a valuable dogskin robe; also with a purse of money from the pupils of the high school.
POST, W. S., and wife, of Wapping, Ct., who have both been ill for several weeks, left last week for the Adirondacks. Rev. W. S. Foster will supply the pulpit.
WATSON, Wm. H., Red Lodge, Mont., has the sympathy of the whole community in the death of his youngest child, a bright boy a year and a half old.

For Dyspepsia
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. W. S. Leonard, Hinsdale, N. H., says: "The best remedy for dyspepsia that has ever come under my notice."

Styles correct,
Prices right!
Only four words but what a world of meaning!

Macullar Parker Company,
Clothiers and Outfitters for
Men, Youths and Boys.

400 Washington St., Boston.
166 Westminster Street,
Providence.

Best

Results prove the greatest merit. No other medicine has such a record of cures as Hood's Sarsaparilla. In every city, town and hamlet in this broad land some one can be found who has been cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and whole neighborhoods use it as their spring tonic and family medicine. Nearly every one needs

Spring

Medicine. Just as a machine must be relieved occasionally of the accumulations that come with constant use, so the human system needs the cleansing, purifying, toning-up effects of Hood's Sarsaparilla in the Spring. A few bottles taken now will do untold good in giving vigor and vitality, and those who take this will be so well pleased with its results that it will become their family medicine and their constant friend. Remember there can be no substitute for Hood's Sarsaparilla as a Spring Medicine, because its unequaled record of cures of all blood diseases proves beyond question that

Medicine

Hood's
Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.
Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Hood's Pills are prompt, efficient and easy in effect. 25 cents.

Palestine in Pictures.

396 Plates (8 in. x 10 in. each).

(25 Parts, Colored Map with each Part.)

This series of views by an American artist is the best ever published, and is indispensable to every Bible student. Two years ago we filled orders for 50,000. WE RECOMMEND THEM WITHOUT RESERVE.

Price, postpaid, $2.50.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset St., Boston, Mass.

A 50=Year Case.

The problem of a good book cabinet is not difficult. It should store books, and there its mission ends. One does not ask for ornamentation in such a cabinet, but merely for structural simplicity with good workmanship.

The design here shown answers every legitimate demand. It is built with a care and accuracy rarely seen in ready-made furniture. It will fairly merit the title of "half century work"—that is, it is good for fifty years of service.

The wood is a special order of White Oak, without a flaw. It has a rich quarter-sawed graining. The cabinet is 56 inches wide, with easy storage for 300 volumes. The corner posts stand out from the front, and are handsomely carved.

The cabinet is dust proof. It is mounted on extra stout steel-bearing casters. We have it in both Oak and Mahogany.

General catalogue for 1897. Square octavo, 256 pp., 300 illustrations. Sent to any address on receipt of five 2 cent stamps.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

Fine weather, the tone of President McKinley's inaugural address, the certainty of early tariff revision, and some increase in the general movement of merchandise, have all contributed towards producing a better feeling in trade circles. Many commodities are also strong in price and show advancing tendencies.

The iron and steel industry is daily gathering strength and steel mills have many orders. The woolen mills are active and purchases of raw wool continue in anticipation of a duty on the staple in the new tariff measure. In cotton goods the situation is less satisfactory, but the demand is better than it was. The shoe trade is looking for an improved demand and hides have been quite active.

At several trade centers a marked increase in the orders from jobbers is reported. The monetary situation, although a trifle stronger, is still one of easy rates. The supply of commercial paper is increasing, but too slowly to suit the views of note brokers. The exports from the United States continue to exceed the imports, and as before observed the balance of trade in our favor is very heavy.

The stock market has been most largely affected by the complications in the Levant, although it is the consensus of opinion that an European war would give our security markets merely a temporary shock and that the after effect would be a buoyant speculation.

EDUCATION

—— Edward O. Sisson of Chicago has been elected dean of the new Bradley Polytechnic Institute in Peoria, Ill.

—— Of the bequest of William Lampson to Yale, $150,000 is given to erect a much needed building in place of the old Alumni Hall, and the remainder goes to endow the professorships of Latin, Greek and English literature, the occupant of each chair to receive a salary of $4,000.

—— Windom Institute, located at Montevideo, Minn., is making a canvass for funds with which to liquidate its debt, and has already paid $4,000. Mrs. William Windom has given an additional $1,000 and efforts are being made to liquidate the whole of the remaining debt. The school, 130 miles west of Minneapolis, is doing an excellent work in a portion of the State poorly provided with schools for the higher education. It has passed through trying experiences and has experienced financial difficulties but its friends are responding nobly.

—— Rev. J. H. Garrison, D. D., editor of the Christian Evangelist of St. Louis, has just been elected a member of the board of trustees of Drury College. This, together with the conference, Feb. 16, of all the Congregational and Christian ministers of St. Louis for mutual helpfulness, is significant of the cordial relations between these two denominations. Not a little of the influence which has tended to suggest closer union of these brethren has been exerted by Dr. Garrison and President Fuller of Drury. On the Day of Prayer for Colleges at Drury Prof. S. I. Curtis of Chicago strongly presented the Duty and Privilege of a Life of Service. Only seven or eight of the college students are not professing Christians. Organization for Christian work is undemonstrative but very thorough, and almost every term some confess faith in Christ for the first time.

—— Students in the Greek department of Drury College, Springfield, Mo., will give the Antigone of Sophocles in English verse in the Baldwin Theater on the evening of March 19. With the exception of the choruses, for which Bartholomew's rendering has been used, each actor has made his own translation. From the libretto which has been sent us we judge that this has been skillfully done. People in Springfield are deeply interested in the play. Railways entering the city will bring people from a distance at reduced rates. The annual debate with Washburn College occurs on the 18th of the month, and thus furnishes an additional reason for visiting Drury at that time. Drury is one of the six colleges west of the Missouri which Dr. D. K. Pearsons has during the last three years helped into a position of independence. To them all he has given $270,000, and through this gift has helped them to secure for themselves a total sum of nearly $1,200,000. Unless Eastern colleges are on their guard some of their Western rivals will bear away the palm for scholarship and scholarly enthusiasm. Young ladies have the same advantages in Drury as young men. The average expense for a year need not exceed $225, and may be made as low as $170. One can but rejoice that a Christian college like Drury is already exerting such an influence on the rising generation in the Southwest.

◆

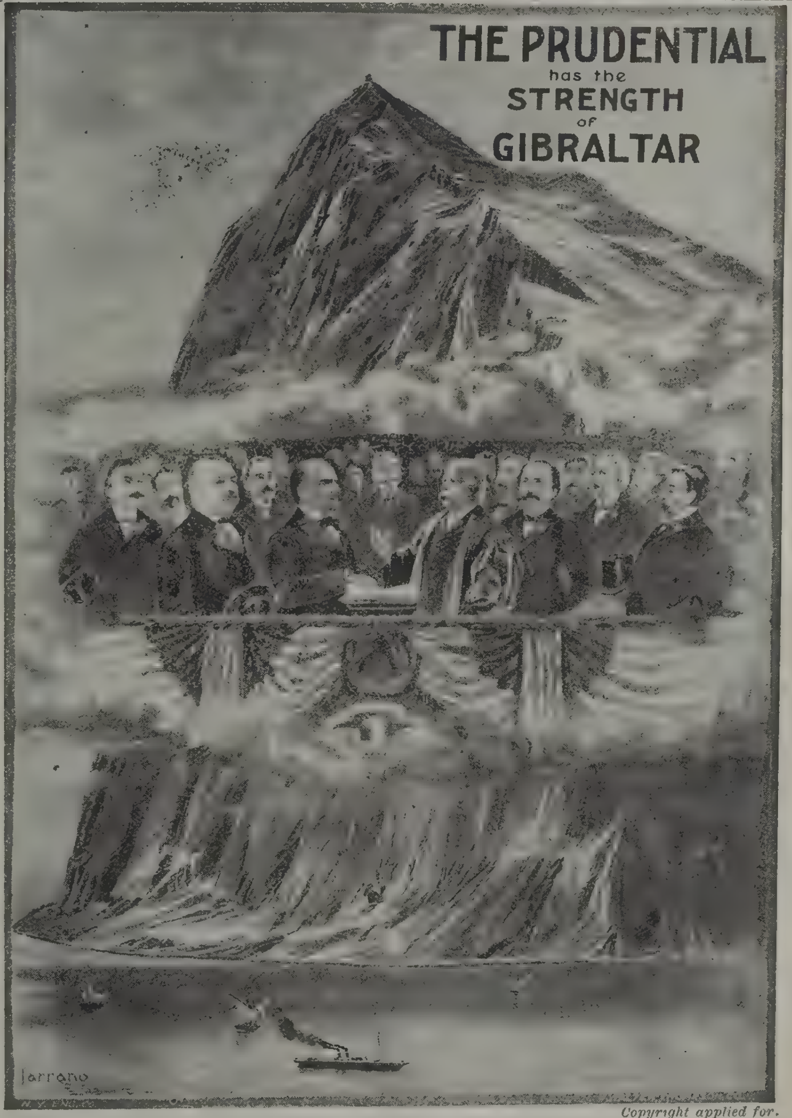
The frequency with which relatives of deceased believers in cremation ignore the wishes of the dead, and bury rather than cremate, may be due to a fact suggested by this new anecdote of Lord Houghton, who said: "Last words and injunctions! I have told my children absolutely to disregard everything I say during the last six months of my life."

HALL'S
Vegetable Sicilian
HAIR RENEWER

Beautifies and restores Gray Hair to its original color and vitality; prevents baldness; cures itching and dandruff. A fine hair dressing.

R. P. HALL & CO., Props., Nashua, N. H.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.



Copyright applied for.

1897 WITNESSES THE INAUGURATION BY
THE PRUDENTIAL

of a new policy. The company has practically raised Industrial Insurance to the level of Ordinary Insurance, and now issues Life Insurance Policies on profit-sharing plans for children, women and men. Ages one to seventy; amounts $15 to $50,000.

Simple in Terms, Liberal in Provisions, Combining Investment with Protection.

Assets, $19,541,827. Income, $14,158,445. Surplus, $4,034,116.

Premiums payable weekly, quarterly, semi annually, annually. Write for particulars.

THE PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF AMERICA.

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President. HOME OFFICE, Newark, N. J.

ACCESSIONS TO THE CHURCHES

	Conf.	Tot.
CALIFORNIA.
Compton,	1	3
Helix,	—	5
Highland,	—	3
Jamul,	—	5
Los Alamitos,	—	10
Los Angeles, First,	7	21
Bethlehem,	15	15
Mentone,	3	4
Norwalk,	—	3
Oakland, First,	18	28
Market St.,	1	4
Oak Chapel,	—	6
Perris,	—	7
Pomona,	13	19
Redlands,	1	9
Sacramento,	5	5
San Francisco, Bethany,	2	4
Third,	—	4
Santa Barbara,	3	9
Santa Monica,	—	4
Sierraville,	6	6
S. Riverside,	1	4
CONNECTICUT.
Bristol,	37	39
Hartford, Center,	—	10
Fourth,	7	18
Harwinton,	—	7
Plymouth,	—	3
ILLINOIS.
Albion,	13	13
Ashkum,	10	10
Beardstown,	52	53
Braceville,	—	21
Chicago, Covenant,	13	13
Douglas Park,	37	51
Warren Ave.,	33	51
Cobden,	14	14
Danvers,	2	4
Galesburg, Knox St.,	—	3
Melvin,	6	8
N. Aurora,	1	8
Oak Park, Second,	—	20
Olney,	—	14
Summer Hill,	4	7
Victoria,	10	10
Wyanet,	22	26
INDIANA.
Angola,	—	10
Elkhart,	5	8
Fort Wayne, Plymouth,	—	9
Kokomo,	11	11
Washington,	3	3
IOWA.
Atlantic,	16	19
Aurelia,	11	11
Davenport, German,	3	3
Dubuque, Summit,	30	30
Hope,	—	37
Larchwood,	25	63
Madison County, First,	16	16
Magnolia,	14	14
Ogden,	—	7
Oto,	31	31
Prairie City,	4	4
Rodney,	—	8
Sargeant's Bluff,	—	15
Shelby,	3	6
Shell Rock,	3	6
Slater,	10	10
Union,	—	8
MAINE.
Ashland,	4	4
Houlton,	21	21
Muscongus Island, Bethel,	12	12
MASSACHUSETTS.
Boston, Berkeley Temple,	5	15
Boylston,	3	3
Eliot,	4	6
Highland,	9	13
Phillips,	21	21
Maverick,	4	5
Mt. Vernon,	2	5
Second, Dorchester,	3	4
Shawmut,	2	14
Union,	6	6
Walnut Ave.,	18	24
Cambridge, Wood Memorial,	19	25
Chelsea, First,	4	4
Everett, Mystic Side,	2	3
Grafton, Union,	—	4
Great Barrington,	6	10
Haverhill, Riverside,	3	5
Hyde Park,	—	4
Lowell, John St.,	3	3
Kirk St.,	6	12
Trinitarian,	15	22
Lynn, First,	5	10
Malden, First,	5	10
Manchester,	55	65
Medford, Mystic,	7	9
Quincy, Bethany,	11	12
Rockport, First,	11	11
Springfield, First,	8	36
MICHIGAN.
Allendale,	13	13
Bass River,	3	3
Crystal,	13	15
Eastmanville,	3	3
Freeport,	—	12
Garden,	—	6
Grand Rapids, East,	5	9
Barker Memorial,	10	12
First,	3	9
Park,	3	9
Smith Memorial,	4	7
South,	—	11
Irving,	—	20
Lansing, Pilgrim,	18	28
MINNESOTA.
Brainerd, Second,	—	14
Graceville,	9	9
Minneapolis, Forest Heights,	—	24
MISSOURI.
Carthage,	—	12
Pierce City,	38	52
NEBRASKA.
Fairfield,	—	15
Holdrege,	16	18
Lincoln, Vine St.,	—	5
Long Pine,	12	12
McCook,	—	10
Ogalalla,	6	6
Omaha, Plymouth,	—	5
Rosefield,	—	26
Seward,	—	9
Venango,	3	3
NEW YORK.
Ithaca,	5	12
Mt. Vernon, Vernon Heights,	15	20
New York, Manhattan,	4	23
Pilgrim,	8	15
Ogdensburg,	—	3
NORTH DAKOTA.
Abercrombie,	—	3
Amenia,	—	10
Crary,	7	7
Dickinson,	—	6
Gardner,	3	3
Valley City,	—	8
OHIO.
Mansfield,	16	21
Marysville,	—	12
Radnor,	38	43
Somerdale,	47	47
Toledo, Washington St.,	11	19
Wellington,	6	8
OKLAHOMA.
Alpha,	4	4
Coldwater,	10	10
Medford,	14	15
S. Enid,	—	5
Stillwater,	—	8
Springdale,	—	11
Waynoka,	—	4
OREGON.
Clackamas,	5	5
Hood River, Riverside,	4	4
Hubbard,	1	7
Klamath Falls,	14	14
Portland, Sunnyside,	—	7
Riverside,	4	4
Sherwood,	—	6
Tualatin,	—	3
SOUTH DAKOTA.
Columbia,	3	5
Howard,	—	4
VERMONT.
E. Berkshire,	3	3
Londonderry,	5	5
S. Royalton,	—	3
Springfield,	5	7
Vergennes,	2	5
Wallingford,	5	5
Windsor,	1	7
WASHINGTON.
Emanuel, German,	—	19
Springdale,	26	26
WISCONSIN.
Dodgeville, Plymouth,	—	125
Eagle River,	—	4
Friendship,	—	6
Manning,	—	19
New Richmond,	2	3
Platte,	—	3
Poller, Covenant,	—	14
Two Rivers,	—	7
OTHER CHURCHES.
Atlanta, Ga., First,	—	33
Bound Brook, N. J.,	—	9
Dallas, Tex., Grand Ave.,	—	81
Deer Lodge, Tenn.,	12	12
Junction City, Kan.,	—	8
Kingston, N. H.,	7	10
Linton, Fla., People's,	—	17
Mt. Carmel, Pa.,	—	18
Nashville, Tenn., Union,	4	5
Rosefield, Kan.,	—	26
Tucson, Ariz.,	5	5
Churches with less than three,	30	54

Conf., 1,281; Tot., 2,594.

Total Conf., since Jan. 1, 3,159; Tot., 6,782.

OUR ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND

Amount received during the week ending Tuesday noon and acknowledged in detail by individual receipts	$133 60
Previously acknowledged	23,346.00
Total	$23,479.60

IT gives us pleasure to call our readers' attention to the value of Brown's Bronchial Troches as a remedy for throat affections. The fact that these troches have been manufactured and sold for over fifty years is an evidence of their real merit. Singers, speakers and others who make an abnormal demand on the vocal chords find Brown's Bronchial Troches soothing, strengthening and healing, quickly relieving hoarseness and sore throat.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN	Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS	Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK	Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR	Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC	New York.
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN	Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER	St. Louis.
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY	Cleveland.
SALEM	Salem, Mass.
CORNELL	Buffalo.
KENTUCKY	Louisville.

CONSIDER THE COST. Suppose the building is 60x25x20. It will require to paint it, 14 gals. ready-mixed paint at $1.25 per gal.—$17.50.

Or, four 25-lb. kegs of white lead, $6.00; five gals. pure linseed oil, $2.00; four cans tinting colors, 80 cts.; ½ pt. Japan dryer, 15 cts.; ½ pt. turpentine, 5 cts. Total, $9.00—a saving of $8.50 in favor of Pure White Lead without considering its greater durability. Examine the brand (see list).

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

CHINESE LANTERN PLANT.
COPYRIGHTED 1897 BY J. L. CHILDS

Most Ornamental Window or Garden Plant Known, and a Delicious Fruit.

Treated like a Tomato it grows and fruits freely in the garden during summer, or in pots both summer and winter. It bears continually numerous large, inflated husks, much the shape of Chinese Lanterns, at first a beautiful green color, changing to a yellowish hue, then to brightest scarlet, and as they hang suspended among the foliage they present a most novel and beautiful sight. Autumn frosts do not injure it, and it is a showy garden plant until December. In each "Lantern" a fruit is borne, of large size and rich ruby color, which is most delicious for eating raw, or for cooking and preserving. Branches of Lanterns cut and dried retain their rich and brilliant colors for years and make most charming vase ornaments. Grows 18 inches high; bears abundantly all the time in any soil or climate. No other pot plant so beautiful as this. Having an enormous stock we offer strong plants for early fruiting, by mail, postpaid, guaranteed to arrive in good order, at 25 cts. each; 4 for 50 cts.; 10 for $1.00.

A Great 60c. TRIAL COLLECTION of valuable Novelties. All the following, a complete Novelty Garden, for only 60 cts., postpaid (Worth $2.60): 2 Chinese Lantern Plants, 1 Rudbeckia Golden Glow, 1 Everbearing Tree Strawberry, 1 Dwarf Canna, 3 New Giant Gladiolus Childsi, 3 Fancy Orchid Gladiolus, 1 Mammoth Shamrock Oxalis, 6 packets Flower Seed Novelties, including the Golden Verbesena and Rare Japanese Maples, our Catalogue, and THE MAYFLOWER Monthly Magazine for one year—(64 pages, with colored plate each month, devoted to Flowers and Gardening)—all for 60 cents.

Our Great Catalogue OF FLOWER AND VEGETABLE SEEDS, BULBS, PLANTS AND RARE NEW FRUITS, is the finest ever issued. Profusely illustrated. Several colored plates. 144 pages. We send it Free to all who order or who expect to after getting it. See our new system of selling seeds in packets of two sizes, at 5 and 10 cents.

Address JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.

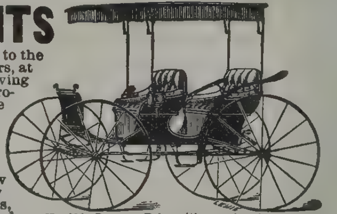
WE HAVE NO AGENTS

but have sold direct to the consumer for 24 years, at wholesale prices, saving them the dealers' profits. Ship anywhere for examination before sale. Everything warranted. 100 styles of Carriages, 90 styles of Harness. Top Buggies as low as $35. Phaetons as low as $55. Spring Wagons, Road Wagons, etc. Send for large, free Catalogue.

No. 37½. Surrey Harness—Price $15.00. As good as sells for $22.00.



No. 606. Surrey—Price with curtains, lamps, sunshade, apron and fenders, $60. As good as sells for $90.

ELKHART CARRIAGE AND HARNESS MFG. CO., W. B. PRATT, Sec'y, ELKHART, IND.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER,
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

IT WILL SERVE THE INTERESTS of all concerned if, in correspondence suggested by announcements in our ADVERTISING COLUMNS, mention is made of the fact that the advertisement was seen in The Congregationalist.

CURRENT THOUGHT

AT HOME

The religious press has much sympathy for Cuba. The Northwestern Christian Advocate believes that "no other nation would have hesitated to send warships to Havana had it been outraged to half the extent." The Western Christian Advocate believes: "We must be false to our past not to respond to their cry. Yet our battle ships are degraded to spy upon the patriots who would send arms and food to the struggling heroes! It would become them better to be hurling broadsides against the forts of Havana and launching torpedoes against Alphonso's navy. With a cause so ripe for action why should not the incoming Administration carve its imperishable record with the true blades of its soldiery upon the breastplates of Spanish tyranny? Speed the day! Liberty for Cuba, or war with Spain!" The Presbyterian Messenger expects "more heroic action after March 4, and ventures the prediction that the action of the present Administration in Cuban affairs will go down into history as a remarkable specimen of weakness and timidity."

ABROAD

The Brisbane Courier (Queensland) says: "The duty of this generation of enfranchised Queenslanders is to preserve the country for a nation of English speech and European civilization, and there is no proof or sign that the duty will be neglected. . . . We do not want to see an Eastern race settled permanently on our territory, and least of all the Japanese."

The Japan Mail criticises the decision of Japan's governor-general of Formosa for directing his subordinates to respect and refrain from interfering with the barbarous custom of foot binding. "The courageous discharge of her duty in this matter by Japan would win for her the approval of the civilized world and of her own historians, as well as the gratitude of many generations of Chinese women."

The Christian World, commenting on the recent vote on disestablishment in the House of Commons, says: "The Church, as represented by Mr. Balfour and the Tory majority, appeared to regard its assailants as an ironclad might look upon an attack from savages in canoes armed with bows and arrows. Things, however, are not always what they seem. The Establishment thinks it can afford to be contemptuous today; but what of tomorrow? The State Church rests today not on a rock but on a beer barrel, and there is no divine assurance as to the stability of that particular kind of foundation."

The British Weekly says: "The alliance between Liberalism and labor is the one hope of Liberalism." It also says: "As a force in London, religious, social, political, literary, Nonconformity was never in anything like so strong a position as it is now, and that position is being strengthened year by year." Dr. J. Guinness Rogers is equally hopeful. In Great Thoughts he replies to the question of an interviewer thus: "Is Congregationalism improving in quality? Yes, decidedly so. I look on with fear and trembling now and again; but considering the difficulties of the times we are holding our ground and improving. There is a deeper sense of national responsibility. So far from losing in doctrinal strength we are much stronger in doctrine than we were twenty-five years ago, and we are coming keenly and truly to appreciate the value of modes of religious life not in accordance with our old Puritanism. We are more willing to welcome anything that is really spiritual."

The temper of the Liberal press in England respecting the situation in Crete and Great Britain's proper policy there may be inferred from the following quotation from the Chronicle (London): "The policy of England may not lie in the direction of quitting a combination of the Powers so long as it is possible to influence that combination in the right direction. But it is not to give any unconditional backing to a hollow, selfish and treacherous compact. Our business is to carry on the lamp of freedom in the eastern Mediterranean. Our function is to make Greece strong, Servia strong, Bulgaria strong, to raise up friends among the free nationalities of Europe. We have the power, and the nation has the will. Let us play a man's part in this business; not this vile and underhand backing of the Turk. We are being out-maneuvered and disgraced. We see no light in the future, and in no partisan spirit we call upon the country to stand out from a policy of dishonor, to see to it that the Government does not deface its religion and stain its name."

We tell your doctor a[illegible] there is in Scott's Emulsion, just how much cod liver oil, hypophosphites, glycerine. But we do not tell him how these are combined. You have your secrets; this is ours. This knack of making the very best thing has come to us from years of experience with just one thing. We make only Scott's Emulsion—all our energy is bent on making that better than any other emulsion in the world. We have no other business thought. Is it any wonder that it is the standard?

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, New York.

In the selection of food care is exercised to secure the best. No attempt is made to disguise, by flavoring in cooking, the taste of decayed meat or vegetables. Why not this same care in the selection of Cod Liver Oil?

Peter Möller's
Cod Liver Oil

is kept free from contamination and all impurities during process of manufacture—hence it is free from all disagreeable taste or smell so common in Cod Liver Oil.

Ask for Peter Moller's Oil, and see that the bottle—a flat, oval one—bears our name as agents. Notice the date in perforated letters at bottom of the label.

Schieffelin & Co., New York.

"BROWN'S Bronchial Troches" give relief in all bronchial affections. A simple and safe remedy. Avoid imitations.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA is known to be an honest medicine, and it actually cures when all others fail. Take it now.

THE WAY TO FIND THEM.—Some of our readers ask for the local address of The Singer Manufacturing Company, advertising sewing machines in our columns. This establishment has permanent offices in every city in the world; thus any city directory will give their local address. Singer sewing machines are sold directly from the manufacturer to the user through the company's own employés, and in no other way. Either one of the three distinct types of Singer machines will be placed in your home for absolutely free trial on its merits, upon application to any of the company's offices. These machines are sold on the most liberal terms, accompanied by the guarantee of a responsible resident of your vicinity, acting directly for one of the best known industrial establishments in the world, whose reputation for fair dealing has been scrupulously maintained for nearly half a century.

"JUST GOOD FOR NOTHING."

That is How Thousands of Women Feel. Here is the Cure.

Dr. Greene's Nervura is the Greatest Health Giver in the World.

"I feel just good for nothing, tired all the time, and so nervous that it seems as if I should fly to pieces." How many women there are whose bitter cry of discouragement echoes these words. They are suffering from weak nerves and physical exhaustion. They need their nerves strengthened, their blood invigorated, and restoration from weakness and disease. They need Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, the great restorative and regulator, which has proved itself, by its wonderful cures, the greatest blessing to womankind the world has ever known.

It gives the weak, languid, and tired-out sufferer renewed strength, energy and ambition, banishes mental depression and discouragement, and restores again bounding health, vigorous activity, bright eyes and elastic step.

Mrs. Allie Swisher, 111 So. 12th St., Richmond, Ind., says:—"For the past fifteen years I have never passed a full month without a severe sick headache, nervousness and the other bad symptoms with all their attendant severe suffering, so that at times it seemed to me I did not care to live. I commenced taking Dr Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and have not been troubled with headaches since, and my other troubles are also cured."

Remember that the spring months are the best time to take medicine and Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy should be taken now. Dr. Greene's Cathartic Pills are the perfect pills for biliousness and constipation. Dr Greene, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful physician in curing diseases, can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

REDUCED FROM $25 TO $10

The Electropoise
TRADE MARK

This Most Wonderful Treatment Now Within the Reach of All.
Circulars, Testimonials, etc., Free.
L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS.
General Agent for the New England States.

THE CONFERENCES AT TUSKEGEE

"O Lo'd, we wants to thank you for this, our one day for instruction," were the words of the gray-haired colored man who made the opening prayer this year at Booker Washington's farmers' conference. That thought was the keynote to the whole great gathering; the good the men and women who attend get for themselves, and next the desire which they feel to carry this good home to influence their neighbors to come with them to the conference next year.

"Ah don' 'spect to see nuffin better dan dis day dis side ob heben," was the testimony of one man. Nor was he merely an enthusiast, wrought up for the moment, for this speaker was "Father" Mitchell, one of the oldest men who come here, and a regular attendant since the conferences were started. It is his proud boast, albeit his manner is modest, that he raises a hog each year to give towards the support of Tuskegee.

The conference lasts two days, the first day given to the farmers, the second to the teachers in the various schools in the south. The first day is unique with Booker Washington and more intensely interesting than any one who has not attended can possibly understand. The meetings this year are held in a broad, low building put up as a temporary shelter at Commencement last June, and left standing because the conference has outgrown any of the buildings here. The seats are rough, backless benches, but no fashionable audience in the easiest opera-chairs ever sat so attentive through even one act as did the hundreds of men and women on those hard benches.

The work of the first day was concentrated around a few principal topics. Booker Washington is eminently practical. He doesn't believe in reaching after the moon. "Let us devote ourselves," he said, "to the things we can remedy, and let the others go." The advantage of owning homes, the evils of the mortgage system, the tendency of the colored people to extravagance, the moral and physical hurtfulness of the one-room cabin—these are some of the practical lines along which Mr. Washington, with the skill of a born parliamentarian, steered the discussion amidst innumerable digressions.

The thought of the day crystallized in a set of declarations. Brief and simple as they were, President Washington before each article was taken up would go over it carefully and explain it in simpler words that every one present might fully understand it. The declarations were:

1. We believe there must be ownership of the soil as the foundation of all progress, and since fully three-fourths of the Negro race lives by agriculture, we urge that more attention be given to improved methods of farming, the raising of stock, poultry and fruit.

2. We discourage extravagance and advise all to live on less than they earn, that they may have homes and money in the bank, which are among the best evidences of our worth and progress.

3. We advise preparation to withstand competition, that we may continue to share, in an increasing degree, the common and skilled labor of the South, inasmuch as in the business world fitness, not color, will be the test.

4. We urge that each community keep its school open six months or more in the year, and that our young people be kept busy, in school or at work, that they may not become loafers and criminals.

6. We should make the immoral, among the leaders or in the ranks, feel the force of our condemnation. Ministers should teach the people that religion should enter into the smallest details of daily life.

6. We recognize the mutual dependence of the white and black races in the South and pledge ourselves to do all in our power to remove obstacles to our mutual progress.

7. In morals, education and property we note each year a steady gain. We advise the organizing of Negro conferences throughout the South.

The speakers were all the farmers themselves or their wives. Many of them knew by experience what slavery was. Some of

Continued on page 363.

4 These competitions will be conducted monthly during 1897

First Prizes, each of $100 Cash	$ 400
20 Second Prizes, each of $100 Pierce Special Bicycles	2,000
40 Third Prizes, each of $25 Gold Watches	1,000
Cash and Prizes given each month	$3,400 12
Total given during 12 months 1897	$40,800

HOW TO OBTAIN THEM. Competitors to save as many "Sunlight" Soap Wrappers as they can collect. Cut off the top portion of each wrapper, that portion containing the heading "SUNLIGHT SOAP." These (called "Coupons") are to be sent, postage fully paid, enclosed with a sheet of paper stating competitor's full name and address and the number of coupons sent in, to Lever Bros., Ltd., New York, marked on outside Wrapper (top left hand corner) with Number of the District competitor lives in. The districts are as follows:

NAME OF DISTRICT.

1 New York City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands, and New Jersey.

2 New York State (outside of N.Y. City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands).

3 Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and District of Columbia.

4 The New England States

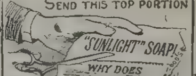
SEND THIS TOP PORTION



"SUNLIGHT" SOAP
WHY DOES A WOMAN LOOK OLD

$3,400.00 GIVEN AWAY EACH MONTH IN CASH, BICYCLES AND WATCHES FOR SUNLIGHT SOAP WRAPPERS

The Bicycles are the celebrated Pierce Special, 1897 Pattern, m'f'd by Geo. N. Pierce & Co., of Buffalo, Boston and New York. Fitted with Hartford Tires, First-class Nickle Lamp, New Departure Bell, Standard Cyclometer, and Hunt Lace Saddle.

LEVER BROS., LTD.,
NEW YORK.

RULES. 1. Every month during 1897, in each of the four districts, prizes will be awarded as follows:

The 1 Competitor who sends in the Largest Number of coupons from the district in which he or she resides will receive $100 Cash.

The 5 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Pierce Special bicycle, price $100.00.

The 10 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Gold Watch, price $25.00.

2. The Competitions will Close the Last Day of Each Month during 1897. Coupons received too late for one month's competition will be put into the next.

3. Competitors who obtain wrappers from unsold soap in dealer's stock will be disqualified. Employees of Lever Brothers, Ltd., and their families, are debarred from competing.

4. A printed list of Winners in Competitor's district will be forwarded to Competitors in about 21 days after each competition closes.

5. Lever Brothers, Ltd., will endeavor to award the prizes fairly to the best of their ability and judgment, but it is understood that all who compete agree to accept the award of Lever Bros., Ltd., as final.

A Vacancy In many a household there is an empty chair that ought not to be empty. Hosts of children have been carried off by croup when there was no need for it at all. Croup comes along without any warning. Usually it comes in the night-time, when the drug stores are closed. That is why every mother ought to have at her elbow a bottle of : : : :

Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam

It never fails to cure Croup if taken at the first symptom. Usually it cures after the disease has made considerable progress. But it is wise to keep a bottle on the shelf all the time.

This good remedy also cures Coughs, Colds, Pneumonia, Bronchitis, Asthma, Hoarseness, Whooping Cough, Influenza and all diseases of the breathing organs. It cures, remember.

Large Bottles, 75c.
Small Bottles, 35c.
Trial Size, - 10c.
At all good drug stores.

Made only by F. W. KINSMAN & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Druggists,
6th Av., cor. 39th St. and 4th Av., cor. 25th St., N.Y.

ECZEMA

Most Torturing, Disfiguring, Humiliating

Of itching, burning, bleeding, scaly skin and scalp humors is instantly relieved by a warm bath with Cuticura Soap, a single application of Cuticura (ointment), the great skin cure, and a full dose of Cuticura Resolvent, greatest of blood purifiers and humor cures.

Cuticura

Remedies speedily, permanently, and economically cure eczema, when all else fails.

Sold throughout the world. Potter Drug and Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston.
☞ "How to Cure Every Skin and Blood Humor," free.

PIMPLY FACES Purified and Beautified by CUTICURA SOAP.

Here's Hope! BRIGHT'S DISEASE AND DIABETES CAN BE CURED.

SEND for History of Cures and all details. We invite inquiry as to what we have done and are doing. We guarantee no misrepresentation. Investigation will compel belief.

CONSULTATION FREE.

The Tompkins-Corbin Co.
1300 Broadway, New York City.
Established 1890.

J. W. Corbin, Gen'l Manager. | A. W. Tompkins, M.D. Consulting Physician.

Continued from page 362.

the older women still wear the neat handkerchief of those days bound about their heads, and stiffly starched, cavernous sunbonnets cover heads side by side with others which exhibit the most modern millinery.

There are now a large number of local conferences in connection with this central one, and the people who come from those report here. Many reports are full of encouragement. People are beginning to own land. Some men have several hundred acres, mules and bank stock. Many, seeing the harm of the mortgage, which eats up a crop as soon as it is planted, are trying to escape from it. One man said proudly, "My cotton lays 'roun' my house now tell I'se ready to move it myself. No merchant kin tech it." Not a few are coming to see the extravagance of time as well as money. "We have been havin' too many Sundays in a month," was the confession of one man.

These people come from all the surrounding counties, and some from outside the State. Most of them drive in, and there can be no better test of a man's interest than the fact that he will drive over perhaps twenty-five miles of the roads here at this time of the year. Any one who doubts this would better look at the miscellaneous collection of teams hitched in the field back of the building where the conference is held. Horses, mules, oxen, wagon wheels and cart wheels all show what the red clay roads of Alabama in February can do.

The general work at Tuskegee has gone on finely. The new chapel given by Mrs. Stokes of New York is in process of erection, as is the new agricultural building. The new science building is nearly done—a handsome three-story structure, in which every part of the work has been done by the students themselves. They have even made the bricks which go into the walls.

The teachers', or as they call it here "workers'," day of the conference is no less valuable, though not so novel. The general tone of all the speakers was the same. Among those who are here are Pres. Horace Bumstead of Atlanta, Dr. H. B. Frissell, principal of Hampton, Mrs. S. C. and Miss Louise Armstrong, President Cravath of Fisk, Mr. George G. Bradford of Dorchester, Mass., one of the trustees of Atlanta, and Pres. J. E. Rankin, D. D., of Howard University.

Tuskegee, Ala., Feb. 25. M. B. T.

◆

At the annual meeting of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, held in New York last week, to which our New York letter refers, Rev. Dr. William H. P. Faunce said words concerning the so-called "new journalism," which deserve to be spread broadcast and taken to heart:

> If our journals were united in the defense of evil, our task would be almost hopeless; if they were united in defense of good, our task would be well-nigh needless. But now the journalism of our time is a house divided against itself, and therein lies our opportunity. Let every man who respects himself, who loves his country and his home, stand by, cheer and encourage, and substantially support those journals which today are standing for truthfulness in the reporter's pen, honor in the editorial chair, and honesty in the business office. . . . New journalism! They call it new? It is as old as the orgies of Nero on the Tiber, as old as the nameless vice of Pompeii, that God burned and buried beneath the hissing lava out of the wrathful throat of Vesuvius. It is as old as the shame of Noah and the murder of Cain, and the man who daily introduces it into his home is opening up direct communication between the cradle and the sewer, between the nursery and the poisonous swamp, and the result is the immediate introduction of moral typhoid into his family.

Extend the boycott! Personally and officially do all that you can to decrease the circulation of the vampire, scavenger press.

◆

Electricity has its perils, though they are less feared as people become used to it. But gas is far more deadly. Last year, in Massachusetts, according to the report of the commissioners, seventeen persons were injured by electricity, of whom five were killed. But out of 118 persons who suffered from inhaling gas, fifty-one died. Some better protection from such deadly poison is justly demanded, though not a few of these cases look like suicide. How terrible the possibilities of disaster are when a spark of electricity reaches and ignites subterranean accumulations of gas, the people of Boston today know too well.

◆

CLUBBING RATES

For the convenience of our subscribers we have made arrangements with the publishers of some leading periodicals by which we can furnish them, in connection with The Congregationalist, at a special rate. The postage is prepaid in all cases. Subscribers may order as many of the publications named as they choose, at the prices annexed.

Atlantic Monthly	$3.25
The Century Magazine	3.60
St. Nicholas	2.60
Scribner's Magazine	2.60
Harper's Magazine	3.25
Harper's Weekly	3.25
Harper's Bazar	3.25
Harper's Round Table	1.60
American Kitchen Magazine	.75

Let all who send to us for the above periodicals take notice that, after receiving the first number, they must write to the publication itself, and not to us, in case of any irregularity, or if they wish to have the direction changed to any other post office. The money which is sent to us for these periodicals we forward promptly to the various offices, and our responsibility in the matter then ceases.

Ask your Druggist for a generous
10 CENT
TRIAL SIZE.

ELY'S
CREAM BALM
contains no cocaine, mercury or any other injurious drug.

It opens and cleans the Nasal Passages, Allays Pain and Inflammation, Heals and Protects the Membrane.

CATARRH

COLD IN HEAD

Restores the senses of Taste and Smell. Is quickly absorbed. Gives relief at once. 50 cts. at Druggists or by mail; Trial Size 10c., at Druggists or by mail.

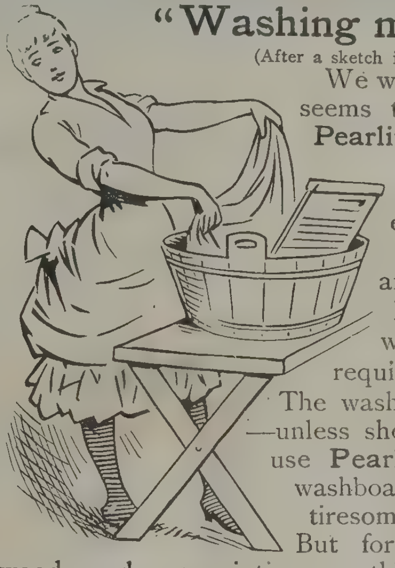
ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren St., New York.

Vapo-Cresolene

Cures While You Sleep,
Whooping Cough,
Croup, Asthma,
Catarrh & Colds.

CRESOLENE when vaporized in the sick room will give immediate relief. Its curative powers are wonderful, at the same time preventing the spread of contagious diseases by acting as a powerful disinfectant. Harmless to the youngest child. Sold by druggists. Descriptive booklet with testimonials free.

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 69 Wall St.
SCHIEFFELIN & Co., New York, Sole Agents.



"Washing made graceful."

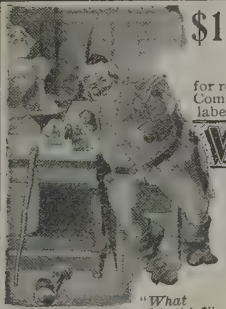
(After a sketch in New York Truth.)

We want to show it, because this seems to be a woman who uses Pearline (use without soap). She's doing no work to speak of, you see—she doesn't look as if she ever had to. She appears to be rinsing out the clothes, after letting them soak in Pearline (use no soap) and water, which is about all the labor required.

The washboard we don't understand—unless she's washing it. Women who use Pearline (use without soap) don't need a washboard. They don't have that tiresome, wearing rubbing over it. But for cleaning washboards or wood work or paint or anything of the kind, then they want Pearline.

Washing can't be made graceful unless it is made easy. Of all the ways of washing that are perfectly harmless, the easiest, quickest, most economical, is with Pearline. 495

Millions NOW USE Pearline



$1000.00 in 147 Prizes

1 of $100; 2 of $50; 4 of $25; 140 of $5 each

for recipes for using our Baked Pork and Beans alone or in combination. Competition closes May 31; awards made July 1st. A trade mark cut from label of can of must accompany every recipe. Our cook book, "Bean Cookery," free to all who answer this ad.

VAN CAMP'S BOSTON BAKED PORK AND BEANS

Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans is a delicious, satisfying dish for all occasions—a meal in itself. Equally good, hot or cold. In cans; three sizes; at leading grocers', or send 6c for sample can, or postal card for free booklet.

"What epicurean rascal is this?" Merry Wives, Act 2, Scene 2.

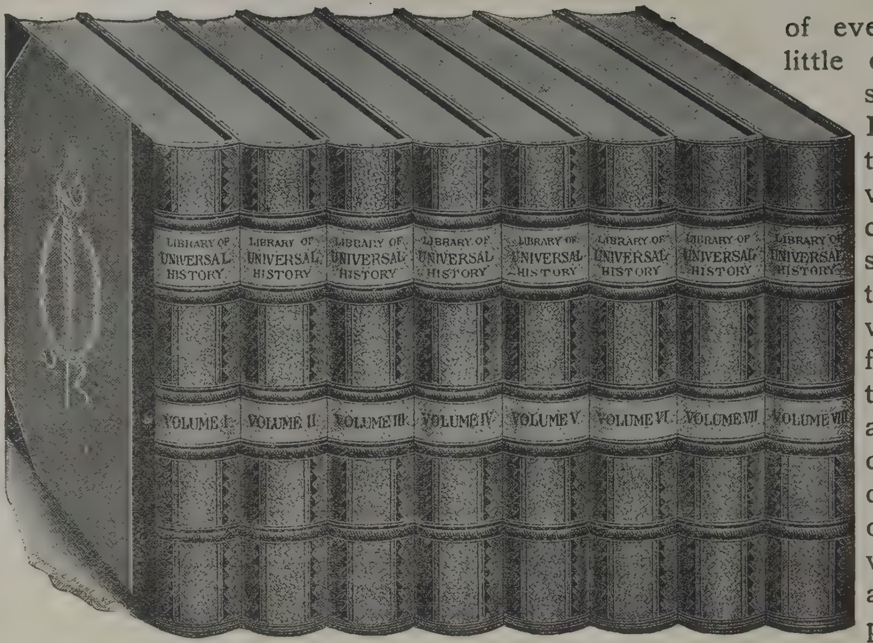
VAN CAMP PACKING CO.,
324 Kentucky Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

WHAT BRINGS RELEASE FROM DIRT AND GREASE? WHY, DON'T YOU KNOW? - - - - SAPOLIO

THE CORNER STONE

Seven of the volumes are on the press and the eighth and last will be ready April 1. By special arrangement with the publishers, a limited number of sets will be distributed through The New York Newspaper Syndicate to introduce and advertise the work. Those ordering now will secure the Library at about one-half the regular subscription price, which is from $36 to $48 a set according to binding. On receipt of only One Dollar the first seven volumes will be delivered at once, and the eighth immediately after April 1st. The balance is payable at the rate of ONLY 10 CENTS a day. The Syndicate allows a whole week in which to examine the work, when it may be returned if not entirely satisfactory and money will be promptly refunded.



LIBRARY OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
VOLUME I.
VOLUME II.
VOLUME III.
VOLUME IV.
VOLUME V.
VOLUME VI.
VOLUME VII.
VOLUME VIII.

of every library, little or great, should be a History of the World which is comprehensive, authentic, ably written, fully illustrated, and, above all, down-to-date. The one single work which at last completely fills all these requirements is that incomparable record of human development and progress, the

LIBRARY OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY

8 Splendid Volumes; Nearly 4000 pages; Over 600 Illustrations; Nearly 100 Colored Maps

FOUNDATION The material for the Library has been laboriously secured from the most trustworthy and latest sources of historical information, such as the Great Libraries and Museums of the world, and Government Archives. The data thus collected has been arranged and carefully written, under special commission, by ISAAC SMITH CLARE, the well-known historian, and has been reviewed and verified by the Professors of History in four leading American Universities. The text is preceded by an elaborate Essay on the Importance of the Study of History by Moses Coit Tyler, Professor of American History in Cornell University.

ILLUSTRATIONS The Library contains over 1000 illustrations from the foremost artists of Europe and America, embracing facsimiles of carved inscriptions recently discovered, battle scenes from famous paintings, interesting scenic representations, and authentic portraits and busts of ancient and modern celebrities from Herodotus, the father of History, to William McKinley and his Cabinet.

MAPS The geographical and physical features of the Library are carefully described and illustrated by a large number of new single and double-page colored maps, besides numerous charts and diagrams. Among the former are eleven separate maps of Europe alone, exhibiting the political and geographical changes from the fall of the Roman Empire to the present day. The maps cover a wide range, from the representation of the World according to Strabo and Ptolemy to charts showing the scenes of the late Armenian Massacres, and Dr. Nansen's route in the polar regions.

STYLE The old dry style of simply detailing events in chronological order has been discarded. Facts are brought out so as to interest the reader not only in the narration but the Philosophy of History. The pages are enlivened with historic stories of olden time and authentic happenings of today. Each nation is held up to view as a picture, and the whole work, with its lavish illustrations and superb maps, affords an inspiring panorama of the moving course of events in history from the dawn of time to the present year.

The very full Table of Contents and Exhaustive General Index make the Library invaluable for the purpose of following from period to period the historical study of all special topics, such as Education, Religion, Finance, Diplomacy, Literature, etc.

The Library is printed in large clear type made expressly for the work.

$1 down and 10 cents a day (payable monthly) secures the entire work for immediate use and enjoyment

SEE HOW LATE IT IS The Library presents a complete record of events throughout the world up to the time of the publication of the last volume. For instance, it contains the only authentic history of "The Armenian Massacres," "The Venezuelan Boundary Dispute," "The New Arbitration Treaty," "The Cuban Revolution," "The Revolt in Crete," together with the late history of every important nation, all illustrated and explained with a large number of new portraits, maps and diagrams. In a word, THE LIBRARY is the MOST RECENT HISTORY OF THE WORLD BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

HOW TO ORDER THIS SUPERB HISTORY OF THE WORLD.

Bring or send $1 to THE NEW YORK NEWSPAPER SYNDICATE, 93 Fifth Avenue, New York, and the first seven volumes of THE LIBRARY OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY, in cloth binding, will be forwarded to you at once. The balance is payable at the rate of only 10 cents a day for five months. We furnish free a little Savings Bank. You can have the half morocco binding for one extra monthly payment, and the full russia for three extra payments. We recommend the half morocco style, because it is elegant and serviceable, and will last a lifetime. Remember, you have a whole week for examination. Money will be promptly returned if the work is not entirely satisfactory. The confidence of THE SYNDICATE that the volumes will be gladly received, thoroughly appreciated and cheerfully paid for is shown by sending a $36 set of books on payment of only $1. We also feel that you will thoroughly appreciate the superb new work and speak favorably of it to others. Owing to the nominal price at which these introductory sets are sold, the cost of delivery must be paid by the purchaser. Sample pages with specimen illustrations will be sent on application. We refer to any newspaper in New York, Boston, Chicago, or San Francisco, and to this paper.

Address: NEW YORK NEWSPAPER SYNDICATE, 93 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Volume LXXXII Number 11

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 18 March 1897

GREECE

AH little David! least of all thy kin,
Fresh from the thyme-sweet meads of Thessaly
Where the cool pastures overhang the sea,
Leaving thy sheep to join the battle's din:
Here is Philistia, here the chosen hosts
Wavering half-hearted on the unfought plain,
Chiding thy zeal as “premature” and “vain,”
The while the turbaned giant struts and boasts.
We catch the shining of thy brave young face,
We watch thee fit the pebble to the sling
With straight, true aim and heart that knows no fear,
And turn to see, O wonder of disgrace,
The serried soldiery of Christ the King
Skulking, protesting, squabbling in the rear!

Written for The Congregationalist by
SUSAN COOLIDGE

PRESIDENT JORDAN ON REVIVALS

The president of Stanford University has been lately represented in the newspapers as having condemned revivals of religion, comparing them to intoxication, saying they were no more evidence of the divine power over men than drunkenness. In the single reference we made to the matter we suggested the probability of exaggerated reports, since an educational leader would hardly think it wise under any circumstances to make such an onslaught on such a widely recognized agency in promoting religious life. President Jordan in a more recent address has explained his position, which certainly is not the one attributed to him in newspaper reports. It would not, we think, call for remonstrance from many of those earnest in promoting revivals. In a local paper published at Redlands, Cal., he is quoted as describing mental emotions which rise to hysterical excitement and end in nothing or else result in insanity. He says:

> The lesson to us is that one should be temperate in all things; that religion shows itself in lofty ideals steadily followed in a clean life and in a pure heart. Sterile emotions are not religion, and hysteria, of the same nature as drunkenness, may be even more dangerous, because it comes forth unawares and because it may seem to come under the protection of the honored church. Such evil influences show themselves in the form of trances, which are sensory disturbances in which the brain has fantastic sensations or no sensations at all. All these are cases of insanity that have no relation to religion, that have nothing to do with normal conversion or change of life, and their effect is evil and wholly evil. Religion worthy of the name is an expression of the highest sanity. Religion of one form or another must be the central axis of the successful life. But mere emotion without purpose of action is not religion.

◆

OUR ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND

Amount received during the week ending Tuesday noon and acknowledged in detail by individual receipts	$105 41
Previously acknowledged	23,479.60
Total	$23,585.01

◆

The hearth where household sympathies have brightly burned is the best altar of the fires of our diviner aspirations. In wedded life duty is never the foe of love, but rather its unrestrained child.—Dr. James Martineau.

FREE STOP-OVER AT WASHINGTON.—On all through tickets between the East, West, North and South, reading via. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, a stop-over at Washington can be secured, without extra charge for railroad fare, by depositing the ticket, upon arrival at Washington, with the B. & O. station ticket agent at that point. Washington is always attractive to visitors, and particularly so while Congress is in session. This arrangement for stop-over privilege will doubtless be appreciated by the public, and will bring to the National Capital many travelers to view its superb public buildings, monuments, museums and thoroughfares.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

THERE is a right way to paint and a wrong way. The right way is to have the best paint—Pure White Lead (see list of genuine brands) and Linseed Oil—applied by a practical painter. The wrong way is to get some mixture about which you know nothing and apply it yourself or have some inexperienced, irresponsible person do it.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

When you plant seeds, plant
FERRY'S
Always the best.
For sale everywhere.
D. M. FERRY & CO.,
Detroit, Mich.

SEEDS New Complete Catalogue of BEST SEEDS that Grow mailed FREE to any address.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO.
Philadelphia.

Granula
A nutritious and digestive food, ready cooked.
Prepared from the best selected white winter wheat, grown in the famous Genesee (N. Y.) Valley. Specially adapted to the needs of invalids and children. Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of the Jackson Sanatorium.
GRANŪLA is a health food par excellence. Manufactured exclusively and sold under a registered trade mark by
OUR HOME GRANULA CO., Dansville, N. Y.
Pamphlet free. Trial box prepaid 25c.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
ISAAC RILEY,
Successor to Baird & Riley,
PLUMBER AND SANITARY ENGINEER,
85 Joy St., Near Cambridge St., Boston.
Telephone, Haymarket 294.

THE CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO
CINCINNATI, OHIO.
SOLE MAKERS OF THE "BLYMYER" BELLS
FOR CHURCH SCHOOL. FIRE ALARM &C
Catalogue with 2500 testimonials. Prices and terms FREE.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E. W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio.
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. ☞ Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

CHURCH REMODELING.
THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect,
10 Park Square, Boston.
Mr. Silloway's long practice in building or remodeling over 400 church edifices enables him to save and utilize all the valuable parts, and for a comparatively small outlay produce a building preferable to a new one of much greater cost. He proposes to continue the work of remodeling as a specialty, and tenders his services to committees who would practice economy, and where the means are limited.

KNICKERBOCKER.

No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address
KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.

SAVE MONEY.

FREE! FREE!
Send for our new 1897 Catalogue, illustrated in colors, containing full descriptions of all our Pianos and Organs. REMEMBER we are the only firm of actual manufacturers selling exclusively to the general public direct, at factory cost—the only firm where you get the Real Exact Value for your money. There are no Agents', Dealers' or Middlemen's profits added. ☞ CASH or on EASY PAYMENTS, ☜ to suit your circumstances. Pianos and Organs shipped on thirty days' trial in your own home under our special warrant for twenty-five years. No money required in advance. Safe delivery to purchaser guaranteed.

FACTORY TO FAMILY DIRECT NO OTHER WAY

REFERENCES:—Our bank, your bank, any bank, the editor of this paper, or any of the multitude of patrons who have purchased millions of dollars worth of instruments from us during the past 35 years. Our new book "The Heart of the People," containing a thousand recent references, sent free. Don't fail to write at once to

TERMS: No Satisfaction. No Pay.

NOTE.—As an advertisement we will sell to the first purchaser in a place one of our fine PIANOS, specially fitted and finished for only $160, or one of our latest PARLOR ORGANS for $25. ALL EXTRAS for each instrument FREE.

ESTABLISHED 35 YEARS.

CORNISH & CO., Piano and Organ Makers. Washington, N. J.

Special Offers Now Ready.
Mention this paper.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON.

Educational.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100 paged Agency Manual free. EVERETT O. FISK & Co.

MAINE, BANGOR.
BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Choice between two courses of study, Classical and English Biblical, in Junior year; one course in Middle and Senior years. Optionals in Hebrew and Cognates, and in Greek. Entrance examination on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 9 A. M. Apply to Prof. C. A. Beckwith, or Prof. G. W. Gilmore, Bangor, Me.

WHEATON SEMINARY
FOR YOUNG LADIES.
Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley, outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.
62d year. Summer term, April 8, 1897. Illustrated prospectus. Address
MISS A. E. STANTON, Principal, Norton, Mass.

HOME STUDY FOR BUSINESS We teach Book keeping, Business Forms, Penmanship, Com'l Law, Letter Writing, Arithmetic, Short hand, etc. thoroughly by MAIL at your own HOME. Success guaranteed every earnest student. We give a useful, Money Making Education which leads to a good paying position. A ten years' success. Highly endorsed. It will pay you. Try it. Catalog free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 47 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

DIVINITY SCHOOL
HARVARD UNIVERSITY
An Undenominational School of Theology.
The School has twelve instructors connected with several different denominations.
Only college graduates eligible for the degree of B. D.
Elective courses cover seventy-nine hours a week.
Courses in Harvard College are open without charge.
Special opportunities are offered for post-graduate study.
Of the 58 graduates and Resident Graduates of the last three years, 4 are still in the School, 2 are Professors, 2 are preaching in Baptist Churches, 2 in churches of the Disciples of Christ, 5 in Methodist, 13 in Orthodox Congregational, 6 in Presbyterian, and 17 in Unitarian churches.
Tuition Fee, $150 per year.
For further information address ROBERT S. MORISON, Secretary of the Faculty, Cambridge, Mass.

Religious Notices

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published unuer this heading at ten cents a line.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
REV. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

Hotels and Travel.

EUROPE, HOLY LAND, ROUND THE WORLD.—Parties leave April 24, May 8 June 5, 12, July 3, 7, for Europe; $260 and up: Sept. 11, Round the World. CLARK'S AMERICAN TOURIST AGENCY, 111 Broadway, New York.

EUROPE. Personally Conducted Low-Priced Tours. FRANK BAKER, 93 Nassau Street, New York.

KIMBALL'S TOURS
in Europe (9th season). Limited party sails June 23. Moderate price, comprehensive route. Address
EDWIN C. KIMBALL, 56 Summer St., Boston.

PASSACONAWAY INN,
YORK CLIFFS, MAINE. Opens June 1st.
ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

St. Denis Broadway & 11th Street, NEW YORK.
Opposite Grace Church.
EUROPEAN PLAN.
In a modest and unobtrusive way there are few better conducted hotels in the metropolis than the St. Denis.
The great popularity it has acquired can readily be traced to its unique location, its homelike atmosphere, the peculiar excellence of its cuisine, and its very moderate prices.
William Taylor & Son.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 369
The Modern Greek 369
Answers to Prayer 370
The English and the Boers 370
The Christian's Resources 371
Some Important Wesley Papers 386
Current History 371
In Brief 373

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

Scotland 388

CONTRIBUTIONS:

Greece—cover poem. Susan Coolidge 365
The Captain's Conversion. B. W. Williams 373
Prof. Henry Drummond. H. A. B. 374
Deacon Dudley's Sundays in Boston. VI. Alden Endecott 375
Turkey and Turkish Problems. Rev. Edwin Hallock Byington 377

THE HOME:

The Torch Bearer—a selected poem 379
Paragraphs 379
Saint Catherine. Rev. William W. Jordan 379
Pleasant to Live With. Mary F. Butts 380
Mother's Hymns—a selected poem 380
Money Making for Country Boys. James Buckham 380
In the Furrow—a selected poem 381
Queens of Service—a selection 381
Closet and Altar 381
Mothers in Council 382
The Inauguration Bible 382
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 383
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for March 28 384
PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 385
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for March 28–April 3 385
LITERATURE 386

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:

Progress in Rhode Island 391
Success in Debt Raising 391

MISCELLANEOUS:

President Jordan on Revivals 366
Our Armenian Orphans' Fund 366
In and About Chicago 378
An Unnoticed Phase of College Life 389
Be Somebody in Particular 389
In and About Boston 390
Notices 391
Biographical 395
Business Outlook 396
The Congregational Home Missionary Society 396
Concerning Our Benevolent Societies 397
Deaths 398
Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 399

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.
On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.
DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11¼ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.
READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd

Hotels and Travel.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'S TOURS.
ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED.
Parties will leave Boston April 20 for Grand and Comprehensive Tours (personally escorted throughout) to COLORADO, CALIFORNIA, THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST, ALASKA AND THE YELLOWSTONE PARK, The Wonderland of America.
Alaska (omitting California), May 27.
Yellowstone National Park Tours, June 3, July 15 and 29.
Washington Tours, March 26, April 5 and May 11.
European Tours, March 27, May 4, 15 19, June 9 and 26.
Independent Railroad Tickets via the Boston & Albany, Boston & Maine, and Other Lines; also Steamship Tickets to all points.
☞ Send for descriptive book, mentioning the particular trip desired.
RAYMOND & WHITCOMB,
296 Washington Street, opposite School St., Boston.

GAZE'S TOURS ESTABLISHED 1844.
Nile, Bermuda, Florida, West Indies, Holy Land, Egypt, Europe.
Programs ready, post free. Mention tour.
GAZE'S TOURIST GAZETTE FREE.
H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd., 113 B'way, N. Y.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.
ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,
BY THE
AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"
Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.
Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

COOK'S TOURS TO EUROPE
Arrangements suited to all. New routes, best accommodations.
High-class Select Parties, leaving March 27, May 8, May 29, June 9, 12, 16, 26. Also
GRAND SUMMER CRUISE OF S. S. OHIO
70 days for $475 up, leaving June 26.
Special Programme of Lower Priced
VACATION TOURS TO EUROPE.
THOS. COOK & SON,
332 Washington St., Boston.

WASHINGTON, PHILADELPHIA, MT. VERNON, GETTYSBURG.
APRIL 2-9.
All Expenses, $27.00.
Five days in Washington. Special attractions. Gettysburg $4.50 extra.
A. E. WINSHIP,
3 Somerset Street, Boston.

EUROPEAN TOURS.
15th Year. Terms reasonable. Parties limited. Conducted by
DR. & MRS. H. S. PAINE, Glens Falls, N. Y.

ANNUAL EUROPEAN TOURS
Limited party, personally conducted by Prof. CAMILLE THURWANGER, now forming, 31 Pierce Bldg., Boston.

VACATION TRIP TO EUROPE.
ENGLAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, GERMANY, SWITZERLAND, and FRANCE. Carefully planned; fine accommodations; party limited; two conductors; sixteenth season. For programme, with full information, address Prof. H. B. RICHARDSON, Amherst, Mass.

TO NORWAY AND SWEDEN.—Special Private Excursion to England (with coaching), Norway, Sweden, etc., 62 days (June 30–Aug. 31); moderate cost. Address for circular,
HONEYMAN, Box F., Plainfield, N. J.

THE CENTURY CO. announces an educational competition. It is on a most interesting and original plan. Thirty five prizes, amounting to $1,000 (first prize $500) will be given for the best answers to 150 questions. The topics selected deal with matters of general information; they are not scholastic, but are educational. Your training at school was only mental drill; you have forgotten all you learned there but "reading, writing and arithmetic." You will never forget the information derived from answering these questions, because every one deals with a living and useful fact. No cube roots, no parsing, no memorizing of dates; instead the learning of things that every one ought to know. If you make an honest attempt to win, you will learn to concentrate your mind, sharpen your wits, secure most valuable information, and stand a good chance of making $500 (perhaps $1,000: see below). If you gain first prize, the knowledge you have acquired will be worth more to you than the $500 you receive. To find the answers to these questions you must use the encyclopædic material in The Century Dictionary and Cyclopædia, because these questions like thousands of others can best be answered by reference to this great work. If you do not already possess a set, you can easily procure one. A limited number of clubs are now being formed for the purchase of sets at the lowest wholesale price. Each person joining a club (and those who apply at once can join) secures his set at a reduction of 40 per cent. and has the further privilege of paying for it in small monthly payments. A first payment of $5 will bring you the work and enable you to try for the first prize of $500, as well as the supplementary prize of $500 more.

$1,000 in 35 Prizes

$500 First Prize

Small Monthly Payments

THE CENTURY DICTIONARY and CYCLOPEDIA

The 150 questions are divided into three sets of 50 each. A month is allowed to answer each set. Try them at home. They will be an intellectual recreation for you and your family; also a good test of your ability to deal with words and facts. Have your children try them; it will be a real education for them. Write us for sample questions, to see how instructive and useful they are, or for a description of the work.

$500 MORE. We offer a further prize of $500 to the competitor who, laying aside The Century, succeeds most successfully in answering 90 per cent. of these questions from ten other works of reference, no matter in how many volumes each is published. This offer is made for the purpose of showing that The Century is superior not to any other one work of reference, but to any other ten. Address

THE CENTURY CO. (Dept. Dv.), New York

Brides

will be pleased

To receive from the clergyman a dainty little volume of choice poems on Love, Marriage and Home, containing a tasteful steel engraved certificate, instead of receiving a marriage certificate in the old-fashioned form.

Marriage Chimes

For True Lovers

Is just such a book. It contains 100 pages, bound in white and gold, gilt edges, orange blossoms and bells embossed or delicately outlined in gold on the cover, and put up in a white box. It has emblematic flower designs in half-tone. Price 75 cents. Special rates by the dozen to ministers.

The Pilgrim Press,
Beacon St., Boston.

New Easter Services

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

THE JOYOUS EASTER-TIDE, with Music.
EASTER MESSAGES (Primary), with Music.
SOME WONDERFUL EASTER DAYS, with Music.
5 cts. each; $4.00 per hundred.
EASTER RECITATIONS. 16mo, paper, 15 cts., postpaid.
EASTER CONCERT BOOK. 16mo, boards, 50 cts., postpaid.

Complete Catalogue free.

HENRY D. NOYES & CO.,
13½ Bromfield St., Boston.

Fillmores' Easter Music for Choirs and Sunday-schools now ready. Send for descriptive list. FILLMORE BROS., 119 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, or 40 Bible House, New York.

EASTER MUSIC

"The Prince of Life," prepared by J. R. Murray, is a beautiful service for Sunday Schools, containing Responsive Readings, interspersed with appropriate songs. Price, 5 cents per single copy

A SPECIAL CIRCULAR

Containing a list of our large and varied stock of music for Easter will be sent free on application.

The new music for 1897 is exceptionally fine, including in addition to the publication above named, splendid solos and duets, and fine anthems for the choir Among the composers represented are G. W. Marston, E. Marzo, C. A. Havens G. F. Root and others.

CANTATAS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Flower Praise (20c). Festival of the Flowers (30c). Under the Palms (30c).

THE MUSICAL VISITOR

for March will contain a supplement of Easter Anthems. Price, 15 cents.

THE JOHN CHURCH COMPANY,
CINCINNATI. NEW YORK. CHICAGO

Sacred Songs No. I.

By Ira D. Sankey, Jas. McGranahan, Geo. C. Stebbins.

This exceptionally fine collection is used by Mr. MOODY and Mr. SANKEY in all their meetings. Mr. Moody says it is the best book he ever used.

SACRED SONGS NO. 1

has won its way to popular favor more rapidly than any song book ever issued.

Over 100,000 Copies Sold in Three Months!

$25 per 100, in boards; add 5 cts. each, if ordered by mail. Get a copy and try it. If your bookseller cannot furnish it, send to Publishers.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
Chicago House, 215 Wabash Ave. 76 E. 9th St., N. Y.

JUST PURCHASED

the Library of Rev. JULIUS H. WARD, religious editor of "Boston Herald." Upwards of 10,000 volumes.

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston.

CHURCH ORGANS
Hook & Hastings Co.
Boston, Mass.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN AND COMPANY'S

NEW BOOKS.

The Mycenaean Age.

A Study of the Monuments and Culture of Pre-Homeric Greece. By Dr. CHRESTOS TSOUNTAS, Ephor of Antiquities and Director of Excavations at Mycenae, and J. IRVING MANATT, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor in Brown University. With an Introduction by Dr. WILHELM DORPFELD, a Map, Plans, and Tables, and over 150 Illustrations, including many full-page plates. Bound in handsome style, with embossed figures in gold, representing the ornamentation of the most distinctive objects found at Mycenae, the Vaphio Cups. Large 8vo, gilt top, $6.00.

A volume of remarkable importance, like Schliemann's and Lanciani's great works, offering a careful survey of Mycenaean culture and registering the results of research at Mycenae to date.

Memories of Hawthorne.

By his daughter, ROSE HAWTHORNE LATHROP. With a new portrait of Hawthorne. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $2 00.

A charming book, covering the Hawthorne family life in Salem, Lenox, and Concord; the term of Hawthorne's residence in Liverpool as United States Consul; his years of travel in France and Italy; and his last years in Concord.

A Transatlantic Chatelaine.

A Novel. By HELEN CHOATE PRINCE, author of "The Story of Christine Rochefort." 16mo, $1 25.

The "Chatelaine" is born in Europe, lives for some years in America, her husband and father taking part in the War for the Union; later she lives in France, and her intimate friend is in the Franco-German War. The story is very interesting, well written, and promises to be as popular as "Christine Rochefort."

The Spirit of an Illinois Town, and The Little Renault

By MARY HARTWELL CATHERWOOD, author of "The Lady of Fort St. John," "The Chase of St. Castin," "Old Kaskaskia," etc. 16mo, $1 25.

The first story relates to the Illinois of about two generations ago. The interesting narrative is lighted up with the charming heroine, the Spirit of the Illinois town. "The Little Renault" is a touching episode of Tonty's life in Illinois in 1680.

Upon the Tree-Tops.

By OLIVE THORNE MILLER, author of "In Nesting Time," "Bird-ways," "Little Brothers of the Air," etc. Illustrated by J. Carter Beard. 16mo, $1 25.

Mrs. Miller devotes this book to birds that haunt trees — thrushes, the crow, sparrows, swallows, wrens, woodpeckers, humming birds, orioles, larks, bluebirds, and many others.

A Satchel Guide

For the Vacation Tourist in Europe. Covering the portions of Europe commonly visited by tourists. Edition for 1897, carefully revised to date, both the text and maps. With Maps, Street Plans, Money Tables, a Calendar of Festivals and Fairs, and a List of Famous Pictures in Churches and Galleries. Accurate, clear, compact, so as to go nicely in one's pocket. Flexible leather cover, $1.50, net.

The Story of the Pilgrim Fathers, 1602-1624, A. D.

As told by Themselves, their Friends, and their Enemies. Edited from the Original Texts, by EDWARD ARBER, F. S. A. 12mo, $2.00.

Professor Arber's book is a valuable repository of facts, documents, and statistics that give new interest to the wonderful Pilgrim Story.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 18 March 1897 Number 11

HOME MISSIONARY FUND

A Friend, Weymouth, Mass...	$2.00
E. M. Smith, North Hampton, N. H.	2 00

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

FROM a number of sources we learn of special efforts to deepen the spiritual life of our churches. While in many cases denominated neither evangelistic nor Lenten services, these endeavors aim to secure both the quickening of believers and the conversion of those who have never made an open confession of Christ. It is natural and desirable that the events and teachings associated with the Master as he approached his cross should find special emphasis. In two of our prominent city churches, the Old South in Boston and the Union in Worcester, the Sunday evening discourses, for the present, are upon the seven words from the cross. Other churches, like the Harvard in Brookline and the church in Norwood, are giving a special character to their midweek meetings by inviting the participation in them of ministers from other places. Efforts of this kind are sure to appeal to all Christians who have any aspirations whatever for a deeper faith and a holier zeal.

Economy is coming to be a watchword of the time, and it ought to be. But it must be economy for a purpose, else it becomes wasteful. When our Lord fed 5,000 persons with five loaves he was economical in gathering up the pieces left over. But he didn't ask any one to leave over what he wanted to eat at that meal. He never stinted men in giving them what would make them more influential in building up the kingdom of God. "I am come that they may have life," he said, "and that they may have it abundantly." A minister asks us to publish, in the interests of economy, an argument for more infrequent meetings of State conferences of churches. He would have them held only once in two or three years. We believe that this would be stinting the churches. Many a minister, and layman, too, has gone back to his field from one of these meetings to do twice what he had before felt able to do. One of them writes, after such a conference, "I go back to my work with a double sense of responsibility. Instead of being, as I sometimes feel, a solitary worker, I felt in that conference that I was one linked to thousands. I have mourned my lack of success; I rejoice to hear the ring of success in the voices of others. There is a way for me to succeed. It is by heart communion with God in prayer and faith in the operation of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of my people." To multiply power through such meetings is the highest economy. To stay away from them for the sake of saving money is to deny life to one's self and to withhold it from others.

Not long ago a committee of business men met in Boston to promote a Christian institution which they had in charge. One of their number was absent. They knew that he was heavily burdened with business anxieties and that the outlook before him was very unfavorable. When his name was mentioned it was proposed that they should pray for him, and the suggestion was promptly and heartily acted on. A short time after the gentleman met some of the committee and told them that the future before him had much brightened. He had thought his way out. One of them asked when he had become convinced that he had discovered a way to conquer his difficulties. His answer showed that relief came at the very hour when his friends were praying for him. To some men such incidents as this, which are numerous, are only coincidences, but to many others they are evidences of our Father's interest in his children, and they give to life its highest courage and its noblest inspiration.

As the next new movement in Christian work, if we must have one, we propose a training school for critics. There are so many attempting the work of criticism that they ought to be taught how to do it. The Sunday school, for example, is having just now more than its share of it, and often from those who show by their remarks that they are practically ignorant of the subject. One of our contemporaries says, "It must be the conviction of every thoughtful observer that the Sunday school, as now instituted, stands in the way of religious training instead of assisting it." Why? Because most of the teachers do not understand the science of teaching. Yet for every thoughtful observer who says this of the Sunday school there are a hundred who know it is not true, because they are teaching in the Sunday school and leading children and youth to follow Christ. The remark we have quoted would never be made by an active teacher in the Sunday school unless he were too conceited to be in sympathy with his fellow-teachers. The science of teaching is of little account without knowledge of human hearts, and both need to be united with common sense to make a competent critic.

The article on the Eastern question and its possible solutions, printed this week, is of peculiar interest because it is colored by the vivid impressions made on the childhood and youth of the author when he lived in Constantinople. Mr. Byington is the son of a missionary, and is well acquainted with the character of the Turks and the history of the empire. He presents some reasons which have not usually been considered for the apparent hesitancy of Great Britain in her attitude toward Turkey.

In the current discussion upon evolutionary theology it is well to insist upon clear definitions. There is a definition of evolution which expressly excludes the divine supervision as a factor of change, and this is taken for granted by a party among the leaders of biological research and historical criticism. Professor Cope, in his recent book on the Primary Factors of Organic Evolution, wrote, "The doctrine of evolution may be defined as the teaching which holds that creation has been and is accomplished by the agency of the energies which are intrinsic in the evolving matter, and without the interference of agencies which are external to it." This definition, strictly applied, is explicitly anti-theistic in its treatment of the whole course of life. It leaves no room for what we call the miraculous element in sacred or profane history, and would require a revision of the Bible to eliminate all traces of the direct working of the power of God on matter. It is surely unnecessary to point out that such a theory of the growth and progress of the organic world is distinctly anti-Christian, but it is important to warn the unwary that this is exactly the presupposition with which many scientists approach every problem of life and criticism. The problem of God's method in the upbuilding of the world and the development of life is one of fascinating interest to the Christian, but he cannot begin by striking hands with an investigator whose first step of progress involves the exclusion of the thought of God's free presence in his works.

THE MODERN GREEK

With startling suddenness the Greek has leaped into the arena where the great Powers of Europe have been vainly maneuvering for the past two years to repress the wily and bloodthirsty Turk. He has challenged attention for his bravery, and has also already won victories in diplomacy which have astonished the world. Many persons in this country are asking, Who is he? Many have supposed him to be of little account because he belongs to a little country. He has been thought of as effeminate, mercenary and of low grade of moral character.

But the traveler in Athens, as he walks through its broad streets lined with handsome buildings of marble and stucco, cannot fail to recognize that the Greek is as truly a lover of beauty as were his ancestors of classic ages. The magnificent university buildings, the Academy of Science, the Archæological and Polytechnic Institutes, the high school for girls, the fine library and national museum suggest that the Greek is also a lover of learning. The fact that nearly all these institutions have been built and endowed by private gifts forbids us to think of him as only a mercenary trader. If we could inspect this university with its 1,500 students and sixty professors, if we could take time to examine the courses of study of these schools, we should find them worthy of comparison with the best institutions of the kind in Germany. When we look into its system of free national schools, from the primary grade to the university, we find that in popular education Greece compares favorably with the most cultured nations of Europe. The fact that it is a little country makes it the more remarkable that it has abundant and ably edited newspapers, and that its literature of today is not unworthy to be compared with its classics, which are identified with higher education in all Christian lands.

When we observe that the miserable village with its few roofless houses which the Turks left a little more than sixty years ago has become one of the fairest cities in Europe, with a population of 125,000, and that its period of real prosperity is limited to the single generation since the present king ascended the throne in 1863, our respect for the modern Greek rises so high that we may place him beside the modern American citizen. For Greece has advanced since the close of our Civil War with proportionally as rapid strides as the United States.

We have a fellow-feeling for Greece, because, though it is a constitutional monarchy, it has good and evil characteristics of a republic. It has manhood suffrage and a horde of politicians seeking office. It has only a single legislative chamber, and therefore lacks the balance in government which we gain from the Senate, even in the reckless moods which of late have prevailed in it. But Greece has a wise ruler in King George, and he has a kind-hearted and womanly consort in the Russian princess who shares his throne, who has borne to him noble sons.

Nor is the development of Greece confined to her cities. Her rural population are primitive in their habits, but thrifty and with a spirit of sturdy independence. Agriculture prospers with them. The area of ground which they cultivate has increased more than threefold within the last thirty years. The country is heavily in debt, but that is not strange, considering how recently it was utterly impoverished, and it has invested its borrowed money in railroads and in commerce which promise large returns if it can have peace. Besides, colonies of Greeks are flourishing not only along the shores of the Mediterranean, as in Alexandria, Smyrna, Trieste and Venice, but throughout all Europe. And everywhere, as has lately been shown in this country, they are loyal to their own nation and ready to sacrifice and fight for her honor.

Greece is a Christian nation. Christianity grew and spread through the world under the sway of the Greek tongue. The Scriptures, both of the Old Testament and the New, became known to mankind through that language. The Greek Church today is sadly in need of reform, but it is still Christian. And when we remember that nearly four centuries of Turkish misrule failed to obliterate Christian faith in that nation, in spite of unremitting bribes and persecutions, we should dishonor our Christianity if we did not extend our sympathy to Greek Christians.

Seventy-five years ago little Greece rose in defiance of her Turkish oppressor, and public opinion in Europe supported her till the slow moving Powers, England, France and Russia, were forced to aid in her deliverance. Public opinion, as Lord Salisbury lately admitted, has far greater influence in government now than it then had, and it is on the side of Greece. The Cretans are her brethren. They have been decimated again and again by Turkish barbarity. The modern Greek has demonstrated his manhood by turning to their relief against immense odds, and his shrewdness by offering to place himself at the service of the European Powers to secure for Cretans what those Powers know is simple justice. Little Greece is showing the same prowess today which she did twenty-four centuries ago, when she saved Europe from being overrun by Persian hordes. She is standing bravely for freedom; she deserves the sympathy of free people everywhere, and especially in this land where freedom has been won and held at great cost of blood and treasure.

ANSWERS TO PRAYER

The difficulties which perplex us concerning prayer are all solvable through the one fact that God is our Father. We often pray for things we feel that we need, things we believe would make us of more use in the world and better Christians. When the answers do not come, and we grow discouraged, what remains to sustain our faith? There is an answer to this question which satisfies the Christian heart.

Our Saviour tells us to pray. He assures us that our prayers will be answered. "Ask, and ye shall receive," he says. He prayed—often, earnestly, persistently. He prayed alone in the night, sometimes all night long; in the presence of his disciples, and sometimes before the multitude.

He prefaced every prayer with the word Father. He taught his disciples to use the same word. "When ye pray, say Our Father." He taught them also to pray in his name, which means in his spirit, taking his attitude toward his Father, as his disciple.

Any one who has known as a child what it is to trust a father and feel at home with him knows thereby, though it may be imperfectly, how God answers our prayers. The child asks often for things which seem to him to be for his good, but he is often denied or put off. Often he receives things he has not asked for, and finds them tokens of the father's thoughtful love; and all day and every day he is, without his asking, included in the father's plans, is fed and clothed and educated for his life work, while associates are brought into contact with him whose friendship he learns to prize. In all these things he sees his father's thought. As he grows older he discovers, what could not earlier have been explained to him, that some things he wanted would have done him harm. Other things denied he has ceased to desire, and for others still he no longer grieves.

But he is not sorry that he asked for all these things. Through every petition he has learned to know his father better, and his father knows him with an intimacy impossible except through such communion. He is sure that many things have been given to him which he could never have had, could never have been in a condition to receive, if he had not asked. In accepting the denial of other things he has shown a confidence in his father and a love for him which has gladdened his father's heart. Through asking and being denied, through asking and receiving and through giving, he and his father have been drawn closer together, till now the greatest gift of all is the father's love and the child's knowledge of it, and the privilege and power of loving him in return. Every step toward that gift, even though it caused suffering, was itself a gift.

Put ourselves in the place of the child, and God in the place of the father, and prayer in the place of asking, and we have the crown of Christian experience. No true prayer is ever in vain. It may not bring immediate and evident answer, but it is certain to bring its higher answer in that most precious intimacy with our Heavenly Father into which our Lord and Saviour introduces us, and which is the eternal joy of the redeemed.

THE ENGLISH AND THE BOERS

The inquiry in London into the connection of Mr. Cecil Rhodes, Prime Minister of the Cape Colony in South Africa, with the famous "Jameson raid" has made one or two facts plain. It is no longer possible to deny that the invasion of a state at peace with England was made with the connivance, and apparently at the instigation, of Mr. Rhodes. It also is evident that a strong disposition exists in English high circles to treat this grave offense lightly, and to show Mr. Rhodes that his purpose is approved. Of course the form of an investigation has to be gone through, for the sake of decency, but, even if the infliction of some penalty should prove inevitable, the guilty parties are not likely to be made to feel that they were so much guilty as unfortunate.

Probably it is true that the treatment of English settlers in the country of the Boers has been illiberal. Having found themselves in danger of being overrun by foreigners, many of whom are undesirable, the Boers have adopted stern and even severe measures for the preservation of their own control. But whether wise or unwise, this was natural and quite within their rights. Miners and other settlers entering their territory have known what to expect and were not compelled to remain. Stripped of extraneous issues, the kernel of the matter seems to be that the British authorities in South Africa, notably those of the great Chartered Company, saw an opportunity of fomenting a revolt on the part of their countrymen among the Boers, by aiding which actively from without by an armed invasion they could probably add valuable territory to the possessions of the queen. The shrewdness and energy of the Boers defeated this scheme disastrously. But the impression hardly can be avoided that, had the raid succeeded, some pretext for holding the territory occupied would have been found, and that its disavowal now is due chiefly, if not wholly, to its failure.

That many Englishmen indignantly repudiate such a selfish and unrighteous policy is fortunately true. Yet the old British greed of land and of additional opportunity for commercial expansion, especially at the expense of weak nations, has not disappeared. It still is a grave hindrance to the spread of civilization and Christianity. Good men everywhere must lament it. But let no one hastily charge the English with so grave a fault without recalling counterbalancing truths. Not all Englishmen indorse the Jameson raid. Thousands regret it and are ashamed of it. Moreover, in spite of such aggressions from time to time, hardly any other nation has done so much to uplift the world as England has done. Let her be judged not by a single instance but by her history as a whole. And let those nations only be first to accuse her whose records are unstained by similar actions.

THE CHRISTIAN'S RESOURCES

To appreciate what these are and how advantage is to be taken of them the intimate relation of Christians in this world to one another and to the Almighty himself and all heavenly beings needs to be remembered. They include whatever of spiritual sympathy, advice or aid, coming from outside of one's own self, which can be made use of at any time and the value of which can be depended upon. We sometimes name prayer and the study of the Bible among them, and there is a sense in which this is proper. Yet prayer is but a means of intercourse with God, and the study of his Word does but remind us of his promises to us, of how he has dealt with others of our race, and of how our human predecessors have used, or failed to use, the spiritual resources which he had placed at their disposal.

The Almighty himself is our first, chief and sufficient resource. He is the source of all resources. To him is due the sympathy and whatever of aid we receive from the unfallen and the redeemed alike on high. He inspires the fellow-feeling and co-operation which other believers around us afford us. It is the fundamental fact of our own religious experience that we have become truly acquainted with him and have learned to love him. This, then, is the primary, vital thing for us—to cultivate reverent, affectionate, obedient appreciation of the divine nearness to ourselves individually. We are to remember that nothing which concerns us is indifferent to him, no matter how trivial it may seem to us. The consciousness of his ever present and active interest in us is our most important resource.

Nevertheless, we may not disregard those resources which are more directly and visibly human. He has ordained them and wishes them to be appreciated at their full worth. And he has so constituted us that they are very precious to us. We should indeed be poorer and weaker if we could not look confidently to one another for not merely the various aid which human affection prompts, but also that which is distinctly the outcome of spiritual fellowship. Both the giving and the receiving it enriches the soul. It has a peculiar and lasting sweetness and power. Heavenly agents may be fighting for us, indeed, but they are invisible, and the assurance of human sympathy and help supplies a real need of every Christian heart. This, too, we are to accept thankfully and use freely.

CURRENT HISTORY

Suggestions for Reforms in State Charities

The commission, consisting of Messrs. W. F. Wharton, C. F. Folsom and D. R. Dewey, appointed by the governor last April to investigate the charitable, reformatory and penal institutions and methods of the State of Massachusetts, has published its report, and bills incorporating its recommendations are now before the legislature. The report is ably presented, showing thorough and thoughtful work, and its suggestions in regard to the revision of the system of administering this class of institutions as well as if existing laws concerning pauperism and insanity are decidedly radical. The commission recommends the abolishment of the overworked and poorly organized State Board of Lunacy and Charity and the division of its power and duties between two new boards. The number of insane increases every year, making sufficient work to employ a special board, some of whose members should be experts. It is further recommended that all insane persons who are supported at public expense be placed under the care, custody and control of the authorities of the commonwealth, the expense of their support to be borne entirely by the State. This would remove insane paupers from city and town almshouses. Another notable feature of the report is the recommendation that the child wards of the State shall be given to a special board to be called the "department for children." At present the work of caring for the State children comes within the province of the State Board of Lunacy and Charity, which it is desired to abolish. The commission also suggests various changes in the laws of settlement and in regard to the administration of reformatory and penal institutions. Especially noteworthy is the recommendation that all prisons within the State be placed under the sole control of, and be maintained by, the commonwealth.

We trust that this valuable report will bear fruit in many ways. It represents to a large extent the progressive sentiment of many of the State's leaders in social and industrial reform.

At Washington

The developments of the week have justified the favorable impression of President McKinley made by his inaugural address and his general bearing on that occasion. While not denying himself altogether to the callers and visitors who flock to the White House, he is showing discrimination in the hours which he places at their disposal and the amount of personal attention which he bestows upon them. The principle which he has adopted with reference to appointments to office is relieving him of preliminary details. He requires applicants to secure the indorsement of their respective senators and congressmen before venturing to solicit his favor. This does not mean, we take it, that the President is to give over the patronage at his command to the representatives of the States and congressional districts, but that he will avail himself of their judgment, and, wherever possible for him to do so, will fall in with their desires.

Under the last Administration, particularly in the later months, there was little deference in the matter of appointments to senators and representatives. Mr. McKinley evidently desires an era of good feeling, not merely because personal relations will be all the more agreeable, but because the best interests of the public service are more likely thus to be subserved. The small number of appointments, however, at his disposal is proving a great disappointment to hundreds who had come to Washington to the inaugural ceremonies with a special purpose in view, and at the same time is demonstrating the progress which civil service reform has already made. Certainly there has been a vast gain in a dozen years. President McKinley's Cabinet is conspiring with him in the effort to reduce to a minimum this nuisance of office-seeking. Three secretaries have gone so far as to retain in office the private secretaries of their predecessors, and in filling the other most important positions under them they are proceeding cautiously and with a view to efficiency in the men selected.

A New Congress

The Senate was in session only a few days last week, there being no occasion for it to do much more than to confirm the few appointments submitted to it. The Fifty-fifth Congress, in response to a special proclamation, assembled last Monday, and its deliberations and conclusions are anticipated with keen interest by the whole country. This is the first Congress in twenty years called together in extraordinary session so soon after its election, but public sentiment without regard to party distinctions is heartily in favor of its proceeding immediately to establish a tariff policy which can be counted as stable for some time to come. The President's message was short and confined entirely to the recommendation of immediate tariff legislation to meet present deficiencies in the national revenue. Congressman Dingley, chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the last Congress, was promptly on hand with a bill embodying the results of conference and debate as well as investigation covering a number of months. This bill is designed to increase the revenue by more than a hundred million dollars. The largest gains will accrue from sugar and wool, woolens and tobacco. The specific system has been applied on a broader scale than ever before. No doubt the large Republican majority in the House will permit a comparatively speedy action in regard to this bill, though when it comes to the Senate where the Republicans are not in full control there is likely to be, perhaps, a prolonged series of discussions involving readjustments and compromises. The attitude of the free silver senators is especially difficult to forecast, though they now seem inclined to take a reasonable attitude. Speaker Reed was unanimously and enthusiastically re elected to his old position. There was quite a struggle on the other side of the chamber to secure the position of minority leader. It fell, at last, to J. W. Bailey of Texas, a young man possessing decided talent.

Progress Toward Ratification

Interest in the arbitration treaty has in no way lessened, but expectation of its passage through the Senate has much increased. The great meeting in Cooper Union, New York, last Thursday evening, in spite of the interruptions which marred its close, well represented the sentiments of the people. Mayor Strong, President Seth Low, Bishop Potter, ex Secretary Fairchild, Mr. Samuel Gompers and ex-Judge Henry E. Howland were among the speakers, showing the support given to the treaty by the best citizens of all classes. Their arguments were effective, and their appeals were earnest that the Senate should ratify the treaty, and do it soon. Their positions are in hearty accord with the views of President McKinley and, we believe, with the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It seems probable that the Senate will insist on so amending the treaty that each case presented for arbitration shall be acted on by that body, and perhaps also will make judges in office ineligible as arbitrators. But these amendments are not likely to make the treaty less acceptable to Lord Salisbury. If it is ratified with these changes, it will no doubt be agreed to by the British Government, and we devoutly hope it will soon be concluded.

Let Us Have a Monetary Commission

No business of greater importance now demands attention than the establishment of a sound and permanent currency system. The prospect that this work is promptly to be taken up in earnest will do much to strengthen confidence and promote prosperity. President McKinley's proposal in his inaugural for the appointment of a monetary commission seems likely soon to come before the Senate and to be favorably acted on. It would then be ready for discussion in the House, when that body has disposed of the tariff bill and passed it on to the Senate. That such a commission is called for and that the call is to become increasingly urgent is manifested in many ways. One of these was the action of twenty five trade associations which met in Boston last week and decided to petition Congress to pass a bill authorizing the President to appoint such a commission. No doubt, if appointed, it will be composed, in part, of members of Congress. But if, in addition, the President is empowered to name several members, these would probably be experts in financial matters, and there would be good reason to hope for a report from such a commission, to be presented to Congress next December, which would find approval there and in business circles throughout the land. This is one of the most needed remedies for hard times, which, if carefully prepared by competent men and thoroughly applied, will prove a blessing to a whole generation yet to come.

Anti-Trust Legislation

The report of the Lexow Anti-Trust Commission to the New York legislature is mainly a dissertation on a subject already thoroughly discussed. It suggests nothing new. It brings forward some evidence to show that legislation against trusts has thus far been a failure, and that combinations of capital to control trade are inevitable. It describes the condition in which such combinations work the greatest evils, saying:

> A system which permits of the creation of monopolies among us, operating under foreign charters, arrogating practically undisputed control over the sources of supply, the volume of product, and the price to the consumer based upon an aggregation of capital so large and powerful as to defy assault, discourage competition, and impose an insuperable barrier to the entrance of lesser capital on terms of fair and equal competition, is, in our judgment, indefensible on any grounds of public policy.

The attempt of the report to suggest remedies for these evils hardly does more than to outline the difficulties in the way of applying any remedies effectively. It proposes laws which may restrain over-capitalization and compel the trusts to make public the nature and extent of their transactions. But it offsets these recommendations by mentioning the dangers which would follow radical interference by government with great combinations of private business. Perhaps the chief value of the report is in showing how great is the task laid on the people to maintain equal rights and equal opportunities for all in the conditions of society whose complications have multiplied amazingly in recent years. There is a way out of these difficulties, but it is only through educating the people to higher ideas of justice with larger knowledge of means by which the welfare of each may be advanced through the prosperity of all. It will require the patience and wisdom of a generation of men determined, at whatever cost, to serve the nation in the interests of the kingdom of God.

The Leaven of Liberalism at Work

The attempts of the Roman Catholic Church in Canadian provinces to coerce voters and members of Parliament to support its scheme for separate schools in Manitoba is not only likely to fail, but to weaken greatly the influence of that church over its own members. The pope apparently distrusts the action of his bishops, for he has appointed Mgr. Merry del Val as an ablegate to Canada to inquire into the school dispute. Meanwhile Archbishop Langevin of Manitoba has declared that Catholics who voted for the Liberal candidate in a recent by-election will be refused burial in consecrated ground if they die unabsolved, and that he alone will hear confessions of such sinners. Mr. Guite, a Liberal candidate in Quebec, recently was asked by one of the bishops to sign a pledge to vote in the House against any settlement of the school question not approved by the bishops; and he was threatened with the opposition of the church to his election if he refused the pledge. He did refuse, declaring that "neither before God nor my conscience can I renounce the liberty of exercising my franchise to the best of my judgment." It is probable that the papal ablegate will restrain the bishops from pushing to the extreme their efforts to control in their interests the votes of Catholics. But it is not likely that the people who have been roused to realize the rule of the clergy in political affairs will tolerate it in the future as they have in the past. Popular government is impossible when priests are permitted to control votes by threats of temporal or spiritual penalties on those who believe in their power.

Miserable Cuba

The struggle in Cuba drags itself wearily along, little occurring of special significance but the steady tendency being towards the final defeat of Spain. Yet this will be accomplished not by actual fighting but by the exhaustion of her powers. Consul-General Lee still represents us in Havana and the relations of the United States with Spain are somewhat more easy. The McKinley administration is continuing the general policy of its predecessor, and Spain has conceded the release of several more alleged Americans from her prisons Not unnaturally President McKinley finds it hard to induce any man of the requisite caliber to succeed Consul General Lee.

The European Deadlock

Conflicting reports render it hard to determine the state of the Græco-Turkish difficulty, but, if the war spirit be not actually abating in Greece, it certainly is somewhat less demonstrative. The comparative tranquillity of the European stock markets, which are most sensitive indicators of impending political disturbances, points to a general conviction that war somehow will be avoided. Some believe that Greece has one or more secret allies, probably Russia, at least, and has been put forward deliberately in order to create conditions likely to hasten the downfall of the sultan yet without compelling any leading Power to formally break its treaties with Turkey. But it is by no means certain that Greece has any ally, and that she has acted independently is perhaps to be inferred from her modification last week of her demands. She now seems to insist only that the Cretans be allowed to vote for themselves whether to remain under the rule of the sultan, to be annexed to Greece, or to have a government of their own under the joint control of the great Powers.

That no outbreak has occurred on the Macedonian frontier doubtless is due largely to the great numerical inferiority of the Greek forces, but also to the strong pressure of the other Powers, who fear a general conflict which might change the map of Europe radically. On the whole, war seems less probable with each passing day, although a stray spark may kindle it at any moment. The popular sympathy of western Europe continues chiefly with Greece, but, especially in England, it is more outspoken than influential and is not yet able to dictate governmental action. An enormous mass meeting was held last Sunday in London to indorse the Greeks, but such demonstrations make little impression upon Lord Salisbury. England, France and Italy are much inclined to adopt a common policy but are hindered by the reluctance of France to risk alienating Russia, and of Italy to hazard her place in the Triple Alliance which binds her to Germany and Austria. As we go to press it looks as if the great Powers—or some one, perhaps Italy, representing all—are about to take charge of Cretan matters by force, yet that Greece hardly will execute her threat of retaliating by declaring war upon Turkey.

The Austrian Elections

Some special features of interest were involved in the Austrian parliamentary elections just held. For the first time more than seventy deputies were chosen by what was substantially universal suffrage in their districts, the new regulations not being yet in universal operation. Moreover, the Socialists received a severe defeat at the hands of the Clericals and Conservatives. The victors are reactionary and would be glad to repeal the new education laws, so as to throw all instruction back into the hands of the Romish Church. But they are unlikely to accomplish this result, especially as the emperor, although a devout Roman Catholic, has proved himself a progressive monarch and favorable to wise reforms. And they can be depended upon to uphold good order and obedience to law, which their Socialist countrymen too often are ready to disregard.

NOTES

Both the Congregational and the Methodist ministers of New York and vicinity passed resolutions at their meeting, last Monday, touching the police department, and urging the mayor to remove Messrs. Parker and Grant, the obstreperous members of the Police Commission. To this same action his Honor had already been urged in an open letter from Seth Low. There was also a decided protest on the part of the ministers against the movement engineered by Mr. Platt to supersede the present Board of Police Commissioners by a State commission. The situation in New York city is more tense than at any time since the present Police Board went into office, but it is encouraging that the righteous element in the city is making itself felt so decidedly.

A somewhat noted champion of temperance and other reforms says the feeling is burned into his soul that the best work of the numerous reform societies is to arouse the church to take up reforms. We don't doubt it. That is the only work which many of these organizations think worth doing. If more of them were really doing the work which they are trying to scold the churches into doing, perhaps the churches would join them more heartily.

IN BRIEF

Systematic giving is a great improvement on spasmodic giving. But it soon fails without constant nurture of a mighty motive. Systematic giving requires systematic impulses.

Proposals are often addressed to us, as ministers, to buy stock in mining, land and other companies certain to pay abnormally large dividends in the near future. Are they sent because ministers are supposed to have a plethora of money or a minimum of brains?

A London judge has decided that money put into the contribution box by mistake cannot be recovered, the custodians having no right to return it, because it has become "an accepted offering to the Lord." Only a wise judge could be certain that the gift is accepted.

A news dispatch of March 15 announces, just as we go to press, that Rev. George H. Wells, D. D., formerly of Plymouth Church, Minneapolis, was killed by a railroad train at Wauwatosa, Wis. Dr. Wells was about to enter a sanitarium to be treated for nervous prostration.

There is no longer need to cite ludicrous examples of answers to Bible questions by Sunday school children to illustrate the deplorable popular ignorance of the Bible. The daily papers furnish abundant illustrations in their editorial and news columns in their efforts to show the opposing views of ministers about the Bible.

Swami Vivekananda, says the Indian Mirror of Calcutta, visited most of the principal cities of the United States during his stay in America in 1893, and wherever he went he made fresh converts to Hinduism. This statement is as true as many things which he claimed concerning himself, as The Congregationalist showed while he was here.

It would save many men time and money if the laws of our country which directly affect the people were more extensively taught in our public schools. For example, many thousands who are struggling for offices for which they are ineligible would have saved time and money and avoided bitter disappointment if they had understood the civil service laws.

Even Professor Grosvenor of Amherst, who wrote the interesting, though somewhat highly colored, volumes on Constantinople, and who has at times defended the sultan, says his sympathies in the present struggle are with the Cretans. Mussulman oppression on the island must be terribly severe to draw forth this much of a concession from the Amherst professor.

Congregational stock is to be finely represented in the forthcoming Yale-Harvard debate at Cambridge. One of the three Yale principals is Charles Upson Clark, a son of Kate Upson Clark of Brooklyn, so well known to many of our readers, and another is Mr. C. S. Macfarland of the divinity school, a frequent contributor to our columns and our representative at Yale. One of the alternates is Edward S. Hume of missionary parentage.

President McClelland of Pacific University, Forest Grove, Ore., was made happy, March 6, by a gift of $10,000 from Hon. H. W. Corbett of Portland, for the University endowment fund. Governor Lord had the same day appointed Mr. Corbett as United States Senator. President McClelland will return to the East soon to continue his canvass for the last $15,000 of the $100,000 which he is raising to secure the $50,000 promised conditionally by Dr. Pearsons.

The colony of Waldenses, which settled in North Carolina some three or four years ago, has steadily prospered. Its prospects are so good that 10,000 acres have just been added to its domain across the line in Tennessee, and about a thousand more of this interesting people will this spring come from their Alpine homes and settle on this tract. They are law-abiding and industrious, and purpose to become American citizens. This is the sort of immigration to be heartily encouraged.

Brooklyn has a rarity in a policeman and evangelist combined. For nine years he has filled both these positions, working twelve hours daily on the force, and as many of the other twelve as his strength will allow he gives to preaching, Bible reading, caring for the sick and poor and helping the unfortunate. The police authorities give him the fullest commendation as an exceptionally faithful, conscientious and efficient officer. That's the kind of religion that commands the world's respect.

During the last six years the theological students in German universities have decreased from 4,527 to 2,956. The causes seem to be a weakening of faith through extreme liberalism, the overcrowding of the ministry and the very small salaries paid to pastors. In Prussia a minister at the beginning receives $450, and cannot expect at any time to receive more than $900. It is significant that the only two universities which report increased attendance of theological students are Greifswald and Erlangen, which are among the less famous, but which are most conservative.

Some persons are disposed to question our statement, made two weeks ago, that the net gain of 594 Congregational churches in Massachusetts last year was only six members. Here are the figures, and each one may calculate for himself:

Total membership Jan. 1, 1896	110,179
Total membership Jan. 1, 1897	110,185

It should be said, however, that if the number of removals (5,312) during 1896 were subtracted from the number of additions (6,413) the gratifying gain of 1,101 members would be shown. The difference in the two exhibits arises from inaccuracies and oversights in the reports sent to Secretary Hazen.

Professor Drummond had the rare faculty of stating a truth in a striking phrase. He possessed the same gift which Ian Maclaren has of choosing felicitous titles for his books. He was also wonderfully skillful in grasping the central ideas of another man's writings. He once told a company of young men what books had done the most for him. Ruskin, he said, taught him to see; George Eliot, the power of character and the doctrine of influence; the Unitarian, Dr. Channing, taught him to believe in God; Frederic Robertson's sermons revealed to him the humanity of Christ; and it was through reading the life of the famous Brighton divine that Drummond learned the great lesson of tolerance.

Providence sometimes decrees that a chance meeting with a stranger shall be the occasion of much good to a man, if he will but profit by the occasion. Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, eminent both as a physician and man of letters, was traveling in England not long since. He there fell into conversation with a stranger who proved to be a man of great intelligence and culture. They discussed recent novels, each speaking with much freedom. Dr. Mitchell expressed his opinion of Thomas Hardy's Tess, some parts of which he thought were very melodramatic, especial emphasis being laid on the first part of the compound word. "In fact," he said, "they are so mellow that they approach the stage of rottenness." As they were parting the stranger said, "You may be interested in knowing that my name is Thomas Hardy."

THE CAPTAIN'S CONVERSION

BY B. W. WILLIAMS

I can vouch for the statements made in this communication. The pastor referred to is living in this region and is a successful, active and beloved minister, though not now young. He received his first call from a feeble church, and began his labors in a hall. The salary was small. Connected with his congregation was a prominent and wealthy man of the village, who pledged himself to pay a quarter of the pastor's salary and a quarter of the cost of a church building whenever the people thought they could erect one.

Shortly after our young pastor had been installed he was introduced to this man, Captain Choat, who, while he made himself agreeable, insisted on one stipulation—that the pastor could preach as he pleased and set forth the claims of the gospel, including the necessity for repentance and salvation, in the plainest terms, "but," said he, "you must never say one word to me about this, or speak to me upon the subject of personal religion—never."

Shortly after his first interview with the captain the young man entered his study on a Tuesday morning, took his Bible and began searching for a text. Upon the first page on which his eye rested he distinctly saw the portrait of the captain. He was amazed and turned over leaf after leaf, and on every one the portrait appeared. In vain he sought for a text, and closed the book, saying to his wife, "I am going out to make some calls." He did so, but the portrait was continually before him and wherever he called it stared him in the face. On Wednesday morning he entered his study, took his Bible again and searched diligently, but in vain, for a text. Every page was luminous with the captain's portrait. He closed the book in despair and decided to make a few more parish calls. From house to house he went, but was haunted at every step and in every house with the portrait. Thursday came with the same experience. He was now alarmed, and his wife was more alarmed as they thought of the pulpit. Friday morning came, without his having made the slightest progress in pulpit preparation, the portrait still staring at him from every page of his Bible upon which his eye rested. He had no barrel of sermons from which he could select two for the coming Sabbath. In despair he started out again for pastoral calls. On he walked almost unconsciously, but never without the portrait before him. He neared the captain's house. The door opened and the captain stood before him. Putting out both hands, he exclaimed, "I have been expecting you, and I knew you would come. Come in." And with tears in his eyes he told his pastor that he felt he was a lost sinner. He pleaded for help that he might find salvation, and before they separated the captain had given his heart to the Saviour. No trouble now about preparation for the pulpit. The young pastor's heart was full. His Bible was no longer a sealed book and preaching was easy. He now knew that God had hedged up his way in sermon preparation and had plainly told him to go to the captain's house and tell him the story of the cross. God went before him. A revival followed. Let the youthful pastor learn a lesson from this brief history and be afraid of no one in the performance of duty.

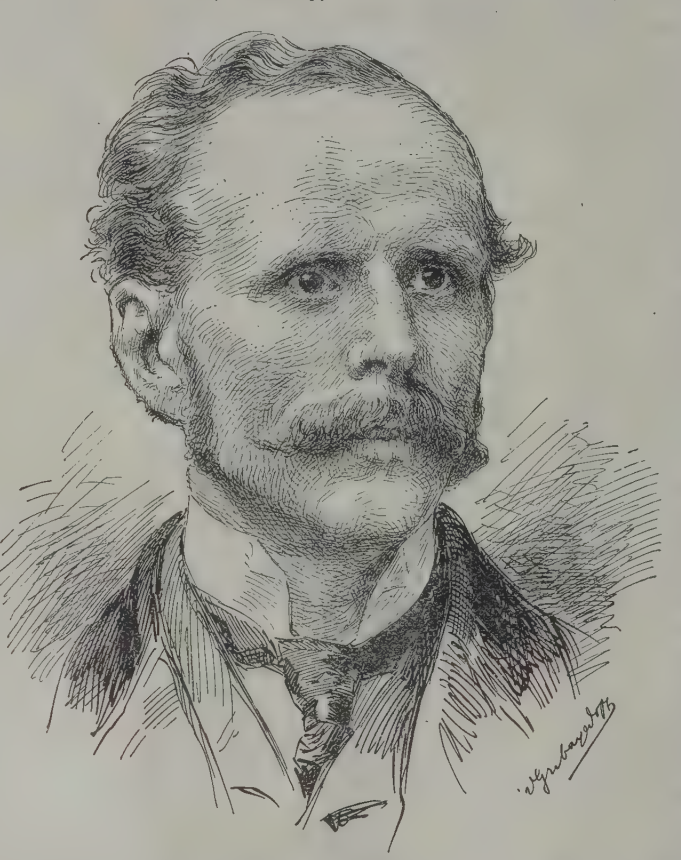
Professor Henry Drummond

Teacher, Author, Traveler, Christian

Beyond the bare announcement of the fact of Professor Drummond's death at Tunbridge Wells in the south of England, Thursday, March 11, the cable has, as yet, furnished no particulars and we are left to conjecture as to the special manner of his passing on. The latest reports by letter have been encouraging, and indeed the Scottish correspondent of The Congregationalist, from whom a communication appears elsewhere in this issue, had spoken in this very letter of cheering news respecting the invalid. His prostration and the serious character of his malady might, however, have prepared us for the result, even though it comes now as a shock to many hearts on both sides of the Atlantic.

Professor Drummond had been at Tunbridge Wells for over a year, having previously sought, for fully as long a period, at health resorts in Great Britain and on the Continent, restoration to health. He has made a brave fight for recovery and been aided in it by the skillful ministry of the best physicians and the unsparing devotion of his closest friends, whose presence and attention no doubt cheered him to the very end. His physical ailment, we understand, began in a form of rheumatism and the pain and weariness connected with it months ago whitened his hair and changed the outward aspect of the man. Yet his serene and sunny faith never faltered. Those who, having in mind the easy circumstances surrounding his life up to that time, predicted that "Drummond's rose water Christianity" would not be able to endure the test of month after month of intense pain, have not seen their prophecies verified. The faith in God and love for Christ and men which, when possessing abounding health, he witnessed to in the palaces of the nobility, in assemblages of scientific men, in places to which the gay and fashionable resort, and in the slums of Edinburgh and London as well, shone forth brightly and constantly from his sickroom.

But it is not the picture of the suffering, yet cheery, Drummond which we on this side of the water, at least, care to cherish most. We prefer to overlook, so far as we can, these later years of illness, and remember him as he was on his last visit here four years ago. His springing step, his glowing eyes, his tall, agile figure, his abounding vitality, his overflowing kindness, his interest in all things human, his profound sympathy with various forms of aggressive and practical Christianity in this country—these unite to form the image of one who was to us in his personal presence such a constant inspiration. It seemed to us when he sailed home in the autumn of 1893 that he was just in the prime of his powers and that the next twenty years would witness the accomplishment of still larger work than could then be credited to him. But God ordered otherwise. Instead of being smitten down in a night, as was Phillips Brooks, whom he resembled in so many ways, Professor Drummond was called to what must have been the greatest trial that could be imposed upon his ardent spirit—months of inactivity and helplessness. Hard as they have been for him, they have endeared him all the more to those who loved him, and have rounded out and made symmetrical a character already noble.



In reviewing his forty-six years on earth we think, naturally, first of the books he has written, which will carry his thought and spirit to the generations to come. His Natural Law in the Spiritual World, published in 1883, first brought him into prominence. The essays embodied in it were substantially talks given to audiences at Glasgow, made up largely of working men and of others who had difficulty in reconciling the discoveries of science with their traditional faith. The freshness and suggestiveness of the thought of the book and its charm of style gave it a speedy and wide popularity, and caused its translation into several other languages. Tropical Africa was the literary fruit of an extensive tour in the heart of the Dark Continent, in the course of which he made valuable additions to the stock of scientific knowledge touching the geology and botany of Central Africa. The Ascent of Man, embodying the Lowell lectures delivered in Boston in 1893, was his last, and perhaps his most finished, work of a scientific order, and being the production of a thoroughgoing evolutionist who at the same time held to the essentials of the Christian faith it received considerable criticism.

Professor Drummond's literary activity was not, however, confined to attempts to reconcile science and religion. His little books on practical religion have constituted a remarkable contribution to the distinctively Christian literature of this century. The Greatest Thing in the World, originally delivered as an address at Northfield, has been one of the most popular works of this generation, having attained a sale of over 200,000. In the same class should be enumerated similar pointed and helpful deliverances, each on some single vital principle of Christianity. Among them are First, particularly directed to members of Boys' Brigades, Pax Vobiscum, The Changed Life, Baxter's Second Innings, and The City without a Church.

But Henry Drummond was a worker as well as a thinker and an author. He believed in doing the things the Master said. His first impulse to practical service of his fellowmen was due, we believe, to Mr. Moody's stirring words when the evangelist, in his Edinburgh campaign twenty years ago, touched the heart of the young man, then a student at the university. He was drawn at once and heartily into evangelistic work, and was a great assistance to Messrs. Moody and Sankey in different parts of the kingdom, but it was in Edinburgh in particular, and some years afterwards, beginning in 1884, that he exerted himself most continuously and effectively. The "Drummond meetings," as they came to be called, represented evangelism of a new order, far from sensation and emotionalism, but widely influential in deepening the spiritual life of the hundreds of students at the university and in sending them out to minister to the needy and fallen.

When Professor Drummond came to this country in 1887 he visited nearly all our leading colleges in the East and started in many of them forward movements in Christian work, initiating in particular the sending of deputations of collegians to hold meetings in churches and missions. During the four or five months in which he was in this country that year he was in great demand at popular gatherings like those at Chautauqua and Northfield. Many will recall the series of addresses at Northfield, and particularly the Round Top gatherings, when in the freedom that characterized that summer assemblage the listeners literally sat at the feet of the professor and questioned him regarding the deep things of the spiritual life. Mr. Moody at that time did not share the distrust with which ultra conservative people were beginning to regard the author of Natural Law in the Spiritual World.

Another form of practical endeavor which received its initial impulse largely through Professor Drummond was the Boys' Brigade movement, and quite unlike it in character, but illustrating the range of Drummond's influence, was the series of drawing-room talks which Professor Drummond gave one season before the lords and ladies in the Duke of Westminster's London house, his theme then being, as we recall it, The Program of Christianity.

Professor Drummond's rich personality attracted men of all classes to him. His natural affiliations were with the upper classes, his father being a man of wealth and his uncle, Mr. Peter Drummond, being the originator of the well-known Sterling Tract enterprise. Henry Drummond's birthplace was in Sterling, close to the battlefield of Bannockburn. His educational opportunities were the best which Scotland afforded and were supplemented by courses in Germany. He was always a great traveler and found in Africa, Australia, the islands of the Pacific and the Rocky Mountains much to repay his scientific curiosity. The chair in the Free Church College at Glasgow which gave him his title was that of natural science, which he has held since 1884.

Though he never married he had a lovely home in one of the quiet streets in Glasgow. He entertained on a liberal scale and he was a welcome guest in scores of houses all over England and Scotland. His relations with the Earl of Aberdeen were especially intimate. But though he mingled freely with the aristocracy Professor Drummond was equally admired by humble people, and his quiet and persevering ministrations to those in need and sorrow and poverty are not all recorded in human annals. College men and women took to him with that whole-souled devotion which marks enthusiastic youth, and he was always the life of the companies of which he was a member. He will be sorely missed by that remarkable group of Edinburgh graduates, the Gaiety Club, so called because when in the university they held evangelistic services in the Gaiety Theater in Edinburgh. To it belonged such distinguished leaders as George Adam Smith, Robertson Nicoll, John Watson and James Stalker. They have been in the habit of meeting once a year, usually at some Highland resort, for conference and comradeship ever since they were at the university together. Last spring their rendezvous was around the sick man's couch at Tunbridge Wells.

Though a thorough believer in the modern conceptions of the universe, the Bible and the religious life, Professor Drummond was never dogmatic in his liberalism, never polemical in his methods. He once gave a young man who sought from him a subject on which to write a paper the topic The Narrowness of Breadth. He wanted most of all to preserve the Christian faith, though fully aware that it must reshape itself in new forms as the centuries come and go. Considering the freedom with which he spoke, it is almost strange that he was never brought to rein until two years ago. His wonderful personal popularity explained the holding back of conservative opposition. But it at last broke upon him in May, 1895, at the Assembly of the Free Church, where, however, he was triumphantly vindicated by a vote of 274 to 151. Principal Rainy and Dr. Stalker spoke in his favor and the latter's splendid plea in behalf of his friend deserves to rank with the great speeches which have helped to make ecclesiastical history. "It is one thing" he said "not to accept a certain view and quite another to declare it intolerable. It may be thought that I am prejudiced in Professor Drummond's favor. I am prejudiced by his prayers, by his Christlike character, by his unselfish and holy life. He has done a work for Christ and for this country, which no other man could have done."

It has been given to but few men of his generation to touch and uplift life for multitudes of people as Henry Drummond's words and personal influence have done. Beside that great fact how comparatively trifling seem his deviations from accredited theological standards, or even occasional slips in scientific statements, if perchance he made them. At the close of a fair May Sunday in 1893 he stood the center of a parlor group in a New England college town. He had been addressing two great audiences of students and meeting face to face for personal conference perplexed minds, imparting to each the inspiration and guidance which he or she needed. He straightened himself up of a sudden and with kindling eye said: "Was it only last night that we left Boston? It seems a week. Ah! that is the way in which we may expand life." To many souls in Great Britain and America has come this expansion of life as they have learned to look upon it through Henry Drummond's eyes. And enriched and fortified by this conception they can endure more bravely their loneliness and sorrow now that he has passed beyond their sight. H. A. B.

DEACON DUDLEY'S SUNDAYS IN BOSTON

VI.

BY ALDEN ENDECOTT

"What have you decided on for tomorrow?" asked Mrs. Dudley, as the deacon glanced up from the Saturday morning paper. "Haven't we nearly gone the rounds? I'm beginning to pine for a little old-fashioned religion such as they give us at Peaceville. We've done the Christian Science and the Higher Life and the Quakers and those high up Episcopalians and the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon, and last Sunday you traipsed off by yourself in the wet to those agitating labor fellows, and what more do you want? There must be an end to these religious curiosities, even in Boston."

"If you think we are anywhere near through," replied the deacon, "just take a look at this column of announcements. I've been studying them faithfully for the last two months and every Saturday I discover something new. There's a plenty of astonishing subjects advertised under the heading Congregational, Baptist, Methodist, and so on, but when I get down to the divisions headed Spiritualistic, Undenominational and Miscellaneous I see what a lot of ground we've got to get over if we are going to get back home in season for the spring house cleaning. It looks to me as if we better plan to take in two at least tomorrow. How would you like to begin with the Christadelphians?"

Hannah shook her head doubtfully. She had a vague feeling that a sect with such a long and unfamiliar name might be a distant relative of the Semi-Pelagians, whom she had been brought up to distrust.

"Well, then," continued her husband, "how will this do? 'Dr. Clara Elizabeth Choate will speak on the Health-giving Mission of Christ and the Science of Cross Bearing.'"

Hannah, who still cherished antiquated notions respecting the sphere and the career of woman, remained apathetic.

The deacon tried once more. "Arcade Hall, Rev. Herbert N. Casson on The Living Issues of the Day."

"There it is again," said Hannah, somewhat snappishly, "these Boston preachers when they are hard up for a subject seem to grasp at 'living issues' and 'grave problems.' I guess I've had my fill of Cuba and Strikes and Lessons from the Election. I'd like to hear a course of sermons for a change on Sin and Salvation."

"Well, my dear," remonstrated the deacon, mildly, "you seem pretty hard to suit this week, I'll give you just one more chance and if that doesn't please you I'll go off by myself as I did last Sunday. Now listen to this: 'Another glorious day tomorrow. The pastor will preach at 10.30 A. M. and at 7.30 P. M. The classic and vested choir will sing antiphonally and the vested choir processionally and recessionally. This feature gives fresh life and movement to the services already very lively and interesting. In the Forum for Good Citizenship at 2.30 P. M., there will be splendid patriotic singing and decoration and a great, good time is expected. All these services will be attended with such superb singing as is seldom heard. Bring Sacred Songs No. 1 and swell the great sea of praise.'"

"Where do they let off all those sky-rockets?" inquired Hannah, critically.

"At the People's Temple on Columbus Avenue, and the pastor's name is James Boyd Brady, Ph. D., D. D."

"Well, I've heard the Tech boys who take their meals here talk about 'Brady's,' but I always supposed by the way they talked that it was something like the Zoo or that place they call Keith's, but I'm with you, Jacob, if you want to go there in the afternoon. Let's keep the Fourth Commandment in the forenoon."

"But if we do that," said the deacon, "we ought to cover something else, too, in the same afternoon and I've heard so much about the Music Hall meetings that perhaps we can go there too for a little while."

"Anything in the paper about them?" asked Mrs. Dudley.

"O, just a modest little reference," answered her husband, with a note of sarcasm foreign to his usual manner, as he began to read:

> PATRIOTIC LECTURES by distinguished men in Music Hall—Every Sunday; tremendous crowds of resolute men and royal women are seen going to Music Hall; tomorrow, at 2.30 P. M., Dr. Fulton will speak upon "McKinley's Recognition of Rome—the Searchlight of the Republic's Future." Don't fail to hear the doctor on this occasion. It goes without saying that he has the true prophetic vision and the courage of an Elijah.

"Well, if we can hear Dr. Gordon or Dr. Barton in the morning, or some other good orthodox preacher, I guess we can stand two miscellaneous things in the afternoon," said Mrs. Dudley. And the worthy pair, having spent a considerable portion of an hour in deciding upon their Sabbath movements, put on their outer garments and went down to see as much of the débris connected with the subway explosion as could be observed from the safe distance of the Public Gardens.

That night Mrs. Dudley dreamed of two vested choirs marching in opposite directions and colliding with each other, while James Boyd Brady, Ph. D., D. D., hurled antiphonal adjectives right and left regardless of their white raiment. The dream whetted her appetite for the expedition to Columbus Avenue; and at the proper time the Dudleys might have been seen bearing down upon the edifice which stands opposite the Youth's Companion building, and which looks like a cross between a mosque and a hotel. The first thing they saw was a sign extending over the sidewalk saying, "People's Temple."

"Precisely like a theatre," murmured Hannah.

"What's the odds," said Jacob, who by this time had become tolerant as a Chicago parliament of religions, "so long as it draws people in?"

"Humph!" said the still conservative Hannah, "depends altogether on what it draws them to. But here are some more placards."

Upon a long billboard was set forth in large letters the various attractions of the week. The vested choir, alluded to in the newspaper notice, was still further exploited "as forming a uniformed ring of song around the heart of the congregation." Hannah recalled her dream, and grew uneasy lest she and Jacob should somehow or other get mixed up in the mêlée and possibly be hit by a stray adjective. They read on:

> Tuesday evening eight live classes.
> Friday evening a soul-saving prayer meeting.
> All the above services are the best beneath the stars. If you want the best blessings come.

So in the Dudleys went, and found themselves in one of the largest and best auditoriums in the city of Boston—its seats arranged in a semi-circular fashion and the large, overhanging galleries so constructed that not a seat of the more than 2,000 in the house could be considered as undesirable. Two big flags waved on each side of the platform and a map had a conspicuous place, on which, by the aid of different colors, the condition of the heathen and the Christian world was vividly, almost luridly, depicted. In its startling blotches of color it reminded the deacon of a chart of the interior of the human system which he had once seen in a medical school. There might have been four or five hundred people scattered about. Some of the young men had probably drifted down from Columbus Avenue boarding houses, and there were a few individuals of both sexes who seemed to belong to that forlorn and homeless contingent to whom Sunday afternoon in Boston is about the loneliest season in their lonely week. In the center of the platform was James Boyd Brady, Ph. D., D. D., a large, well-formed, good-looking man. Beside him sat the special speaker of the afternoon and near them a quartet, which now and then furnished excellent music.

The Dudleys inferred from the leaflet which the ushers placed in their hands that this Sunday afternoon People's Forum was designed to furnish a platform for the discussion of questions of the day or, to quote the circular, "It is proposed to make this forum the head center of light, from the view point of the Christ for Boston and vicinity, on all the leading questions of the day."

On that afternoon James Boyd Brady seemed especially anxious to impress upon the people present the fact that to maintain such a noble institution in the heart of Boston cost money, that such princely talent as was brought into requisition there every Sunday afternoon was not in the talent business out of motives of pure philanthropy, and that to secure in the future the "greatest orators and the most splendid musical geniuses" would require more generous gifts than the patrons of the forum had thus far seen fit to favor it with. He urged them to sign the pledge coupons attached to the circular, among other advantages of which was the reservation of seats for the signer and his friends. This argument would have been somewhat more effective if the ushers could have managed to cover the 1,200 or more empty seats visible on all sides, but nevertheless James Boyd Brady kept on cheerfully urging the people to sign.

When the contribution boxes went around, Deacon Dudley saw just two pencils in motion. The rest of the audience had evidently left their pencils at home. After the boxes had gone the rounds, Deacon Dudley stole out to the group of ushers gathered to inspect their various harvests. There was a tolerably good crop of pennies, but the cankerworm or some other pest seemed to have decimated the dimes and the quarters. The ushers were evidently not impressed with the benevolent impulses of the congregation, and the deacon overheard one say to another, "There's a millionaire sitting over there who didn't put in a cent."

"A millionaire," exclaimed the other, excitedly, "show him to me." The two tip toed off to the other side of the church and the deacon followed them.

"There he is," whispered usher number one, impressively, to usher number two, pointing to a respectable looking man, who exhibited, however, no outward signs of plutocracy. The deacon wondered, as he resumed his place by Hannah's side, if the ushers kept a Bradstreet handy in order to ascertain the exact financial status of the portly gentlemen who now and then honored the temple with a visit. The deacon mentally congratulated himself that he would never be taken for a Rockefeller and thus be embarrassed in his Sunday peregrinations.

The address that afternoon was by Dr. Daniel Dorchester on The Relation of the Epworth League to Christian Endeavor. The Dudleys, who had read his book on A Century of Religious Progress, and who knew his high standing in the Methodist church, as well as in other denominations, did not need James Boyd Brady's fulsome introduction in order to acquaint themselves with the speaker of the afternoon. He began upon what promised to be a scholarly and instructive review of the Wesleys and of the movements which they set on foot, but the deacon and his wife, having in mind their other engagement, and knowing that good Dr. Dorchester could be trusted to do the right and able thing, slipped out in the course of ten minutes—a thing which they had done only once or twice before in all their attendance upon religious meetings. The deacon, when they were once outside, said that he felt a little sheepish about it, but Hannah tried to reassure him by calling attention to the fact that the quartet had vanished at a side door a little while before, and that a good many persons, inferring that there was to be no more special music, had followed suit.

"Now for Music Hall," said the deacon, as they boarded a car. The service was well under way when they arrived, and the Dudleys found themselves facing an audience of perhaps 2,500 people. There happened to be just one vacant chair, into which Mrs. Dudley sank, but her husband had to stand for the rest of the service. The platform, too, was full of people, and every eye there and in the body of the house was fixed upon Justin D. Fulton, who was in the midst of a fiery, impassioned onslaught upon Roman Catholicism. His tall form and his white hair and beard made him not uncomely to look upon, and there was no denying that he possessed many of the gifts of an orator. Consumed with one conviction, he was exerting all his energies to imparting it to his auditors, most of whom probably had it in quite as virulent a form as he. The ostensible purpose of the address was to denounce President McKinley for appointing Judge McKenna, a Roman Catholic, to the attorney generalship. This was all the worse because, during the campaign, General McKinley had given the A. P. A. reason to believe that he was in sympathy with it, and thereby he gained his election. "Somebody," said Dr. Fulton, "ought to go to Washington, look McKinley square in the eye and tell him the truth."

But this was not the entire burden of the address. There was an occasional allusion to the "man of sin," to the "mother of harlots," to the "blasphemous prerogatives of the hierachy." The Protestants of Boston were blamed because they let the Standard die. Moody was scored because out of the desire to get money for his schools he kept silent on this great question. It was almost pathetic to hear Dr. Fulton recount his own devotion to this cause, which led him on a certain day in 1887 at two o'clock in the morning to renounce his four thousand dollar pastorate and give himself to his present mission. It meant a tremendous sacrifice financially, and he had a few of his books left which anybody could purchase after the service was over.

The interesting thing about the audience to Deacon Dudley, who by this time had become an expert student of audiences, was the avidity with which all the statements were swallowed. Hardly any eyebrow moved, for instance, when Dr. Fulton declared that there were 800,000 Roman Catholics in Boston on the road to destruction, and when at the close he read a letter to the President demanding the removal of Mr. McKenna the only person who kept her seat was his own Hannah.

As they moved out with the motley throng which composes this assembly, and which for a number of years has been maintaining these Sunday afternoon anti-Catholic meetings, the deacon said, "Why didn't you stand up with the rest?"

"Well, Jacob, I'm a simple soul and don't know much about all these matters, but I'm certain that our hired girl Bridget, who nursed me so faithfully when I had the pneumonia, isn't on the road to destruction. She's as good a Christian as I am."

"For my part," rejoined the deacon, "if I'd got to choose every Sunday afternoon I'd take James Boyd Brady, Ph. D., D. D., adjectives and all."

Turkey and Turkish Problems[*]

By Rev. Edwin Hallock Byington, Brooklyn

Part of my boyhood was spent in Turkey, and I was in Constantinople during the entire Russo-Turkish war. As the Turkish soldiers were driven from the Balkans toward that city fear was in every Christian household. We expected that, when the Turks were driven from their final stand behind the fortifications, which lay a few miles from Constantinople, they would break ranks, rush for the Bosporus and eagerly seek refuge on the Asiatic side. We knew that they would use this as a golden opportunity to avenge themselves on the miserable giaours, as they contemptuously call all Christians. The city would be fired, the Christian inhabitants butchered and plunder sought that their flight might not be empty-handed.

An American man-of-war was in the harbor, and planned that all Americans in Bebek and Hissar should fly to Robert College, where floated the stars and stripes and whither the Vandalia was to send a force of marines for our protection. All in Scutari (the Asiatic suburb of Constantinople, near the entrance to the Bosporus) were to seek and secure similar safety in the American college for girls situated in that locality, and those living in the city proper were to make their way to the Vandalia, which lay not far from the Golden Horn.

As far as I can remember each day father went to the Bible House in Stamboul and I to the college. Life went on as usual. But we expected that the emergency anticipated might at any moment become a terrible reality. However, it did not. England's determination that Russia should not enter Constantinople checked the advancing army within ten miles of the city. An armistice was proclaimed, pending negotiations.

During this armistice a party of us visited the Russian army. We found them tall, broad shouldered, powerful looking fellows; well armed, having fine uniforms, comfortable tents, prancing horses—a boy's ideal of soldiers. Yet the effect on us was curious. You remember the woman who said that the more she saw of men the better she liked dogs. The more we saw of the Russians the more we admired the fighting qualities of the Turkish army.

The Turkish soldiers we had seen drilling in the public gardens at Bebek had moved us to contempt—small of stature, round shouldered, shuffling along as they marched, often looking as spiritless and woe-begone as the dogs so plentiful in the streets of Constantinople. Of course the comparison between the two armies was unfair. We had seen the flower of the Russian army, the emperor's Life Guards, and the Turkish soldiers were the last reserves—the young, the old, the diseased, the puny, all pressed into service to meet the emergency.

Still we never had seen any Turkish soldiers whose appearance resembled in the slightest degree that of these magnificent looking Russians. How could there be any conflict at all between two such forces? How dared the Turks stand a moment against the Russians? Yet we knew they had. The Russians had anticipated a triumphal march from the Danube to Constantinople; the world expected it; any one looking at the two armies would have prophesied it without fear. But it was not so. Russia's advance was slow. Again and again her armies were checked. You remember Plevna, before whose fortifications thousands of Russians fell? What a struggle they had to pass the Balkans. The opinion afterward sprang up among us that had the Turkish army been properly officered the Russians never would have crossed the Balkans. It was said that sometimes, when the officers ordered a retreat and fled themselves, the soldiers kept on fighting, even victoriously. The stubborn resistance of the Turks was the more remarkable because they were fighting in what was practically a foreign country. They were in Bulgaria, a province of theirs, but the Bulgarians hated them and joyously welcomed and aided the Russians as their deliverers. So we wondered why these splendid Russian soldiers had such difficulty in thrashing these miserable little runts who marched under the star and crescent. What was the secret of their brave battling? The answer is fanaticism.

Christian countries know practically nothing of fanaticism. It is zeal without knowledge, which Christianity forbids. Fanaticism dethrones reason, imprisons judgment, banishes fear, silences mercy. For its war horse fanaticism chooses the whirlwind, it throws away bit and bridle, it sharpens the spurs, and rushes on with its destructive fury alike against an army with banners and the shrinking, unarmed village peasants. I myself have heard in the weird chant of the howling dervishes the slumber song of fanaticism, but the Russians heard its battle cry, as did Christian armies centuries ago. Where fanaticism has appeared in Christianity it has been a parasitic growth, but it is the flower and first fruits of Mohammedanism. Fanaticism is self-forgetful—perfectly so—but it is the self-forgetfulness of the madman. The Turks are fanatics and therefore fighters. Give them equal equipments, training and opportunity and I believe that a thousand Moslems will conquer a thousand Christians every time, and, all other things being equal, I think the chances would be that a thousand Moslems would put to flight 2,000 Christians.

The explanation is plain. The Turk fights like a maniac. We all know that if a man becomes violently insane it requires three or four men to hold him. It is not moral courage, it is not physical courage, it is madness. So is the Moslem with his unsheathed sword, knowing neither mercy nor fear.

It is this element of fanaticism which makes the Turkish question so difficult. It became visible in the Russo-Turkish war and in the Armenian massacres, but today, though less conspicuous, it is equally present as an energetic force and as the supreme factor in the problem. Close the escape valve and the rushing, roaring steam ceases to startle, but the pressure within the boiler is still tremendous; the fire is not out; something may happen at any time. Fanaticism is an unfamiliar element to the European statesman. It upsets all his calculations. It is a fourth dimension in space, and logic does not hold; cause and effect cannot be relied upon. Causes which would produce a given effect on a Christian sovereign may produce the opposite on the sultan. Motives influencing other nations are nothing to the Turk.

We all have been stirred, and justly, by the outrageous treatment the Armenians have suffered at the hands of the Turks. There is a cry, Why does not England act? Why does not some Christian nation rush to the rescue? Suppose England should send her warships through the Dardanelles to Constantinople. Let her take possession of that city. Would the problem be solved? Not in the slightest degree.

What would happen? Remember that Constantinople is not the heart of the Moslem power. It is on the extreme northwestern rim. It is the strategic point of eastern Europe, but is is not the strategic point of Asia. Armenia is many miles away. Let the sultan fly from Constantinople, where would he fly? Probably to Armenia. Armenia would be shut off from Europe. And it would take Europe a long, long time to conquer the sultan there—a task more difficult than Spain's in Cuba, than Russia's was in Bulgaria. The country is mountainous and inaccessible; the Moslems form a large portion of the population and are the only armed inhabitants. The Asiatics who fought for a bit of Europe would be terrible foes in fighting for their homes. Drive the sultan out of Constantinople, and the horror goes from the European Bosporus only to brood more fearfully over Armenia.

What if England, determined to accomplish her aim, press on to Armenia? Retreating armies burn food, cattle, buildings, that their pursuers may find no spoil for sustenance or triumph. What are the Armenians to the Turks but dogs, and gladly would they see to it that the European armies rushing to the rescue of the Armenian Christians should find nothing but dead bodies. The mountain Kurd, gloating over the piles of slain, might exultantly chant, "With the sultan at Constantinople I slew my thousands; with the queen of England at Constantinople I have slain my ten thousands." The seizure of Constantinople might be the signal for the extinction of the Armenians. I do not say this would be a certain outcome, not a probable outcome, but I do believe it is a possible outcome of the seizure of Constantinople by the Christian Powers.

Then there is the possibility of a religious war. Peter the Hermit today would be an utter impossibility among the followers of Christ, perhaps an impossibility among the followers of Buddha or of Confucius, but he is entirely a possibility among the followers of Mohammed. The Moslems are scattered in Africa, in western Asia, in India, still, were a man of Mohammed's ability or of Peter the Hermit's zeal and persuasiveness to arise, the fanatical spirit might be aroused. Before Europe's armies could be gathered millions might be slaughtered, lands devastated and the world undergo a shock, the effect of which would be felt for centuries. There are reasons why such a war is not probable, but let the Moslems feel that Christian armies are assailing them, and it might come.

People often talk as though the Armenian question were a mere trifle; that England could settle it if she only would. I think she might try if she was sure she could. I feel toward the Armenian question as many felt toward slavery in this land fifty years ago. Awful, it ought not to extend, it ought to cease—but how? A million flags floating on Decoration Day tell a little, only a very little, of the story. If a Christian Protestant country must needs so agonize to banish from its own hearthstone an accursed thing, it does not behoove us to wonder why England cannot in a day purify the robber's den on the distant mountains. How shall the problem be solved? The Bulgarian problem was solved, but that was child's play compared with the Armenian problem. Bulgaria is in Europe, Armenia is in Asia; Bulgaria is circled by Christian countries, Armenia is surrounded mainly by Moslem nations. Bulgaria is inhabited almost exclusively by Christians; in Armenia the followers of Mohammed are nearly or altogether in the majority. Bulgaria with clearly defined boundaries, Armenia with none such; Bulgaria is part of the great Slavic race, Armenia without brother or sister among the nations. Similarly the Cretan difficulty, though somewhat perplexing, is very simple compared with the Armenian problem.

Armenian national independency is an utter impossibility. Pressed by surrounding Moslem peoples, with a great Moslem population, the Armenians could not hold the reins of government very long.

---

[*] The substance of a paper read at a Brooklyn ministerial club.

I think that the seizure of Constantinople would be no solution of the Armenian problem whatsoever, and that England's control in Armenia similar to that in India, or even in Egypt, would be unnatural, expensive, profitless and short lived. The laying of her hand on Egypt was natural because of its relation to her route to India. Her political control in India and her other provinces has followed naturally the activity of her merchants and the enterprise of her colonists. Armenia is to her an out-of-the-way place, and when Britain assumes unnatural responsibilities she will fall to pieces.

There are two solutions to the Armenian problem. The first is the seizure of Armenia by Russia. This is the most natural, the simplest. Russia already has some Armenian subjects, she has adjoining territory, she could seize it without driving the sultan from Constantinople, without precipitating the so-called Eastern question. Remember that the Eastern question and the Armenian question are two different problems. The Eastern question, a problem which has long perplexed Europe, is, Shall the sultan control Constantinople and the adjoining waterways? If not, who shall? The Armenia question, of more recent origin, is, Shall the Christian Armenians be pillaged, massacred, annihilated? They are very different. The former is political, the latter humanitarian. If England tries to solve the Armenian problem she must solve the Eastern problem on the way. But Russia can settle the Armenian problem without precipitating a settlement of the Eastern question. It must be remembered that Russia will settle it in her way. She will protect their lives but lessen their liberties. The civilization of Western Europe would be debarred, Protestantism would come under the ban, missionary schools would be closed, missionary teachers and preachers probably would be banished. Russia has no use for the American Board nor any Yankee ideas. Spiritual Christianity and modern civilization would be farther from Armenia than they are today, but massacres would cease; that problem would be solved.

The other solution of the Armenian problem is that now being followed by the European Powers—protests against the massacres, pressure to secure reforms. Certainly the results have not been very satisfactory, but I doubt whether in the long run any other plan will bear more good fruit. Turkish promises in themselves are worth absolutely nothing. They must be followed up. If pacific pressure can terminate the massacres, secure some protection for the future and make possible emigration, as much will be gained as I dare anticipate; for the present at least.

Many complain that the pressure brought to bear on the sultan must be slight, or he would have yielded long ago. Such would be the legitimate inference were the pressure on one side alone, but there is pressure on the other side, which few realize. We see Scylla and wonder why the mariner is not more fearful of the rocks, but there is a Charybdis on the other side which he equally fears and shuns. The Turks are not Arabs, they are not Orientals; they came from the Caucasus, they were invaders like the Huns; they conquered Turkey, accepted the faith they found; masters they are, but converts and aliens. They still are proselytes under suspicion; they must show their faith by their works. Let them surrender to the Christians and millions of Moslems will account them cowards and traitors. The fanaticism which will rush to the sultan's rescue in a stand against Europe would rage against him if he became subservient. Europe with her armies and fleets insists on one side, Asia with her fanatical hordes clamors on the other side. The sultan seeks to satisfy the one with Christian blood, and to calm the other with promises. His aim has been to let neither know what he is doing for the other, that Europe should not believe in the Armenian massacres, that Asia should know nothing of treaties and promises.

I call attention to this fact, not in extenuation of the merciless tryant, who values equally the parchment whereon his pen has written promises, and the book of blood his sword has written in Armenia, but simply to indicate why he is so stubbornly and surprisingly irresponsive to Europe's demands.

Nor do I say the Powers have been sufficiently insistent. I think they could have gone much farther without precipitating the catastrophe so much dreaded, but I speak thus because some fail to recognize the real situation.

IN AND ABOUT CHICAGO

Western Interest in Mt. Holyoke

Judging from the reports of sermons preached in behalf of the Higher Education of Women, with special reference to the work of Mary Lyon, the interest in the college of which she laid the foundations is not less in the West than in the East. Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Colorado, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio, as well as Illinois and Michigan, joined with New England in commemorating the 100th anniversary of Miss Lyon's birth. Drs. Goodwin, Johnson and Hillis, and several others, represented the cause in Chicago. At Rockford Rev. W. W. Leete at the First Church preached a sermon which, besides its fitting allusions to Mt. Holyoke, referred especially to Rockford College, the students of which were in his audience. It is not surprising that Dr. Pearsons should be delighted over the success of his proposal that the birthday of the founder of Mt. Holyoke College be observed. Western graduates of the college have been made happy over Mr. Rockefeller's gift of $40,000 for a cottage, since it is an indication that his generosity is not limited to the University of Chicago or even to his own denomination. It certainly has been a great year for institutions of learning, and if Beloit can obtain the $200,000 she needs prior to Commencement in July the hearts of many will be made glad.

The Ministers

The last meeting was a field day rather than a day for set discussion. A good many of the brethren had the privilege of expressing their feelings in regard to the new Administration. Nearly all spoke hopefully, but all counseled patience rather than criticism. Some would like an immediate recognition of Cuba's independence, but the majority are in favor of leaving the matter with the authorities at Washington. Sympathies were expressed on all sides with Greece, and, as might be expected, considerable bitterness of feeling was manifested toward the Powers, whose representatives refused to do anything to prevent the massacres in Armenia, but are now ready to crush Greece in her attempts to secure liberty for the oppressed Cretans. Rev. Mr. Marsh of Philippopolis laid emphasis on the fact that the western Powers do not care to have Russia obtain naval power in the Mediterranean, or secure for herself the possession of Crete. It is possibly her desire to do this which adds complication to the present situation.

Novel Measures in the Present Campaign

The women are making themselves a factor in the present contest for the mayorship of Chicago. Two or three weeks ago they summoned Postmaster Hessing, an independent candidate, into their presence and plied him with questions as to his policy provided he were to be elected. He did not hesitate to say that he would not attempt to enforce the Sunday laws. Nor would he promise to close the saloons on that day. In fact, he said that the extravagance of the women has caused more crimes than even the habit of intemperance. He can hardly expect women to advocate his election with any great amount of enthusiasm. Last Monday Judge Sears was subjected to a similar examination. He is an honest man, and refuses to promise any more than he believes he can accomplish. He declared it impossible to enforce Sunday laws, or to clean all the streets, or to do for the city all that ought to be done. He simply said that if elected he should do his best for the sanitary, the financial and the moral welfare of the city. Mr. T. J. Morgan, the socialist, was also permitted to speak at this same meeting. He said that he was against "good men" wherever found. They "make him tired." They formerly put a collar around his father's neck and held slaves, and defended their conduct from the Word of God. He was bitter against men like Pullman, Marshall, Field and Rockefeller. "Property," he affirmed, "should be made subservient to the interest of the whole community, and not be held for the benefit of any private individual, or group of individuals. We must abolish the exclusive limited right of property and invest the nation with it."

To secure the social millennium it is necessary to put a Socialist into the mayor's chair. This will abolish intemperance and every other evil from which society is now suffering. Mr. Morgan spoke at considerable length and with perfect freedom. The campaign bids fair to be exciting. Carter H. Harrison, Jr., as the nominee of the Democrats, or rather of ex-Governor Altgeld, will appeal to the friends of free silver, and will fight over again the issues of the national campaign. With such independent candidates in the field as Mr. Hessing and Mr. Harlan it will be somewhat difficult for Judge Sears to obtain the votes required for his election, but it looks at present as if, with the proper interest on the part of the Republicans, he might be successful. He is worthy of the support of the best people in the city.

The University Congregational Church

Last Sunday morning Rev. Dr. N. I. Rubinkam celebrated the fourth anniversary of his pastorate. It has been successful and satisfactory. Hard times have delayed the completion of the new house of worship, but it has at length been made ready for occupancy to the great joy of the people. During the Lenten season Dr Rubinkam will speak Sunday mornings on the family. Easter Sunday, April 18, will be observed as the spring communion. A number of our churches are holding special services during Lent.

The Light of Truth

This was the subject of Col. Robert Ingersoll's lecture Sunday night, to which a large audience gave eager hearing. Report says that he spoke with all his old-time brilliancy and effect. Claiming to speak in the interests of truth and to be friendly to it, he spent most of his hour in bringing accusations against the church—Catholic and Protestant. To such a lecture as this more than a thousand intelligent persons, many of them women, listened with every manifestation of approval. It ought to be said that while this orator was defaming the churches earnest Christians in the Pacific Garden Mission near by were speaking of the love of Christ to hundreds of discouraged men, that a good congregation was gathered in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A. to listen to the gospel, that another was listening to it in the First Methodist Church, and that still another, which occupied every seat in Music Hall galleries as well as on the main floor, listened to Dr. Gunsaulus as he spoke of the evidence of a future life as given in literature. There was a heartiness in those who addressed these congregations and a satisfaction on the part of the hearers for which one looks in vain in such speakers as Colonel Ingersoll, or in the persons who listen to his caricatures and misrepresentations of the truth he professes to advocate.

Chicago, March 12. FRANKLIN.

Simplicity is making the journey of life with just baggage enough.—C. D. Warner.

The Home

THE TORCH BEARER

In splendor robed for some court revelry,
A monarch moves when eve is on the wane.
His faithful lieges flock their prince to see,
And strive to pierce the gathering shade in vain.
But, lo, a torch! And now the brilliant train
Is manifest. Who may the bearer be?
Not great himself he maketh greatness plain.
To him this praise at least. What more to me?
Mine is a lovely muse. She cannot sing
A pageant or a passion; cannot cry
With clamorous voice against an evil thing
And break its power; but seeks with single eye
To follow in the steps of Love, her king,
And hold a light for man to see him by.

—Edward Cracroft Lefroy.

The extraordinary achievements of young men, either with brain or muscle, often cost more than they are worth. The frequent early deaths of athletes from disease of the heart has many times been commented on. Those who have won the highest rank in study often exhaust their mental energies in the effort and are outstripped in after life by less brilliant but sturdier minds. Of the twenty-eight valedictorians and salutatorians of Yale during the last fourteen years, six have died, four of them within five years of graduation. If the mortality of college graduates averaged as high as this, twenty-one per cent. within fourteen years after completing their academic studies, few would care to take the risk. Parents or teachers who spur the most promising students to their utmost efforts may gain temporary satisfaction to their pride at far too great cost.

The seed, which is the Word of God, will surely grow and bring forth fruit. Christ's glad tidings, repeated out of a loving heart and with faith in him, will sometime, somewhere, find response. This is not often seen so clearly as when, two or three weeks ago in Tremont Temple, Mr. Moody asked Dr. Grenfell to speak at his closing meeting. Fourteen years ago Grenfell, a medical student, working in the East Side hospitals of London, was passing through Shadwell and dropped into a hall where the American evangelist was speaking to the common people. So kindly was the bearing of the speaker, as "he leaned like a ministering angel over the men," and so persuasive his message, from the passage, "Rejoice, and again I say, Rejoice," that a new revelation came to the hearer. Here, he thought, is some one who really cares for me. He soon heard of a still greater love and accepted it. That seed-thought changed the young man's mind and heart and life. The result was the consecration of mind and heart and life to the healing of the bodies and souls of a class of specially unprivileged men, and the unique and wonderfully successful work of the Deep Sea Mission among the fishermen of the North Sea and of Labrador. Yet neither of those men spoke to the other at the time, nor have ever met since until the missionary surgeon was introduced to the evangelist in Boston. What arithmetic can compute the multiplication of that one seed, as it has been sowed over and over again, beside all waters, on two continents, through these busy years! Of course, this is just what Christ promised as to the effect of his Word—but does he find faith on the earth to believe the promise or realize its fulfillment?

The Christian Endeavor prayer meeting topic, Seeing and Using Opportunities to Do Good, commented upon in a recent Congregationalist, had a striking illustration in one of Dr. Grenfell's numerous "opportunities" when in Boston. Coming into Mr. Murphy's Faneuil Hall temperance meetings late one noon, he took a back seat and began to talk to a young man sitting next him. It was the old story of the prodigal son—tempted, falling, disgraced, trying to reform. He was a Pennsylvania boy, who had lost his place through drink, but happening into a Murphy meeting resolved to "arise." Returning to his lodgings, which were shared by two or three other young men of similar experience, he found them preparing for a night's carousal. Not daring to risk the temptation of staying with them, he walked the streets all night long and so escaped. Is it any wonder that when, the next day, Dr. Grenfell related the incident in public he was constrained to say in substance, "And yet many hundreds of you Christian people of Boston were on the streets too, and no one lifted a hand to help your brother in his distress." Is it any wonder that from his burning heart of sympathy for such men—"the tempted and the tried"—he felt like comparing many church people to the icebergs in his northern cruises—"pure, grand, strong, beautiful to look at, going straight forward in their course, but giving no warmth or help to any troubled mariners near them?" It might not be amiss for all of us to query whether the criticism, as well as the compliment, may not belong to us.

SAINT CATHERINE

BY REV. WILLIAM W. JORDAN

"They're a long time coming," said a deacon, nervously, looking out on the gray November sky.

"It is a long way to come, you know," responded another. And then she appeared. Her Sunday school teacher was with her. Communion was near, and the committee was asked to a special convocation in the deacon's parlor to examine Saint Catherine.

Not that any of us called her Saint then. She was about sixteen, and had a fresh, pure face, like a flower newly bloomed. She was shy and had a habit of looking down, but not awkwardly. Catherine was a mountaineer. Her father was a small farmer on the lofty ridge of a neighboring mountain, overlooking a long valley, whose sweep and vista had been her vision always. They seemed, somehow, to have gotten into her soul. The Saint was very plainly dressed, but, from smooth brown hair to her heavy shoes, a picture of neatness.

Questioning began, and it was evident she was lacking in theology. She had lately come under instruction, was somewhat frightened, and almost the entire substance of her testimony was that she "wanted to be good." The deacons strove to elicit more, but without avail. She repeatedly returned to the affirmation that she "wanted to be good." The teacher explained her case, related her desire to unite with the church, vouched for her life, and they withdrew, leaving the deacons to discussion. "It is irregular," they agreed, "but her spirit is clear, if her theology is obscure; and who can contend with that desire 'to be good'? It includes everything."

Communion Sunday found her, therefore, before the pulpit, her face pale, her eyes shining, as they always did under feeling. She was composed, but with a still intensity that told she heard all and weighed the words. Out of the church she went, enrolled with the believers of all ages, because she "wanted to be good." Henceforth the Saint appeared constantly at service, oftentimes at night, walking the three miles of lonely road that led through a dark gorge, and up the steep, winding way to the crest. She was quiet in manner, but sang all the hymns in a peculiar, high-pitched voice, strangely at variance with her gentle face. Music was not among the harmonies of her nature, but she sang fervently, and, as a rule, off the key. None could forbid, however, who saw her enjoyment. One day she came with money earned by berry picking: "I want one of them hymn-books for my own. We have little meetin's at home, and I learn Jinnie and Joshua hymns by heart."

Then we began to hear oftener of the "little meetin's." Saint was household priest, and the family gathered round while she expounded Scripture in her own way. Not long after she said: "Maw wants to know if you'll come up?" In the little house overlooking the valley we found that "maw's" heart, deadened under years of hardship and neglect, was stirred with a sense of sin and need. The father had been of rough nature, somewhat given to drink and profanity, but several days before his wife united with the church Saint came to say, "Paw's feelin' mighty bad and wants to see ye." The man was under deep conviction of sin. He had fought it for days, but his wife's conversion doubled his distress. On the previous evening, as usual, Saint held a religious service about the kitchen fire, and later he could not sleep. Tossing in trouble, he asked her to pray and in the morning "called for the elders of the church." "Is it too late to jine?" he asked anxiously. The next day saw the father and mother standing humbly before the pulpit.

The grown brother followed in time, and the younger children, industriously taught, were prepared for the same step. Then she began to work in her quiet, earnest way among other relatives and friends. The love of souls, whether she recognized it or not, burned clearly on her heart's altar. One after another were led into the love of God, and her own life visibly deepened. One day, when the spring air was full of earth scents and sunshine floated down the valley, we called at the mountain home with some white flowers. Looking at them affectionately, she said, "I often wish we was as pure as the flowers."

She became a power in the little Sunday school near her home. Marvelous were her labors in its behalf. New members were enlisted; in storm or sunshine she taught a class of devoted little admirers, singing with such unction that none could correct her, though occasionally disconcerted. On festal days the mountain was scoured for flowers or firs for decoration, and both herself and her scholars spoke "pieces" of innumerable verses, to the admiring wonder of all. "Our school," as she always proudly called it, was near her heart.

The fineness of the life within now and then stole out in words and deeds to our infinite delight. Rude environment and its influence she could not wholly escape, but all the sweeter by contrast were those bits of vision and feeling which told of the soul within. Often, with the thought of service for others, there came to her face that rapt and lifted look one sees on the face of Joan of Arc in the pictures of the Panthèon. But afterwards she would look down.

One day, when she was eighteen, there came the particular mission of Saint Catherine's life. Up through the gorge, where ragged rocks in places hung over the narrow road that followed the foaming water, came a neighbor to ask that she would stay for a time in his home and care for a sick wife and child. "She'll go," said her mother; and, indeed, her heart leaped at the call. Into her care passed the young wife, wasting in consumption, and the little one soon to be motherless. How she watched above them with tender faithfulness none but they could tell. The invalid's weary glance followed her quiet footsteps with a shadowy remembrance of One "who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." At length death drew near, and with her soul in her eyes the young mother placed her child in the Saint's arms, saying, "Promise me you will care for him." A solemn, glad sense of duty filled Saint Catherine's soul, and, with only a fainter sigh, the mother passed on.

The little one became the charge of this young life and, with that mother instinct which was ever strong in her, she watched its every need. The child grew strong but not so the Saint. She had breathed too long the air of that sick-room and bent too constantly above the wasting form. Seeds of disease found place in a constitution never firm, and keen mountain winds helped their growth. The same feverish flush came to her cheek and told its story. Slowly, reluctantly, her weakening strength laid down the tasks of love, committing them to others. Ever less frequently she left the home, and at last the day came when she went no more out of the bare, clean, little room which was her own and in its spotlessness seemed like her. She was fading away.

It was beautiful to see the love she had given so fully come back to her in those days. Far and near they spoke of her and flowers stole into her room and grateful words. "Folks is so good," the Saint said, simply. She never thought of it as a response to her own life. One day in winter, not long before the end, I saw her last. Curtains, bed, everything in the little room shone with cleanliness. The Saint leaned back against the high-piled pillows, her face turned to the window, through which snowy woods and mountain showed near by, and beyond the great cleft of valley under its winter mantle. We talked quietly of the past; of that meeting in the deacon's parlor when she first told that she "wanted to be good"; of the brief years since and their experience of service; then of the eternal and blessed life of God's children beyond.

"There's lots to be done," said she, "but he's callin' me." And then the glory of the setting sun fell on the fields without, and on the snow-crowned pines of the distant hill-top, as with the light of another world.

"I wonder if it's like that up there, all white an' glory shinin' on it, and if he'll know me when I come?" Then in fainter tone, as if to herself, "Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty; they shall behold the land that is very far off."

A few days later the minister ended the funeral service, amid a hushed and tearful assemblage, with these words: "Friends and brethren, our Lord has been with us again in the person of his disciple. Let us pray."

PLEASANT TO LIVE WITH

BY MARY F. BUTTS

"Jane is a very pleasant person to live with," said Mrs. Horton, speaking of her sister-in-law.

I listened to this information believingly, for I knew something of Jane myself. But at the same time, I felt sure that if she were really pleasant to live with it was because she exercised good sense and sound reason in her efforts to live agreeably with others.

I had noticed that Jane seldom omitted her daily walk. These outings, doubtless, had great power in keeping her temper serene and her feelings fresh and happy. A happy person is generally a pleasant person to live with. But one cannot be happy who is weary, bored, exhausted In such a state the tendency is to be "difficult," jealous, easily injured. Sometimes Jane went by my house in the morning with a little satchel on her arm. Once I went out to give her a bunch of sweet peas. She told me that she was going for a little excursion.

"I didn't really feel much like it," she said, "but I find that if I do not break up the monotony of life by frequent changes, I get cross."

Wise Miss Jane! As she went gayly down the street sniffing at her flowers, I resolved to follow her example.

I more than half guessed at another of Jane's ways. I felt sure that she conscientiously refrained from criticising her housemates. They were not perfect, but they were the persons with whom she spent her days, bound up with her in one social body. One would not purposely injure one's own hand or foot, yet in the body of the family the injury of one is the injury of all. An unkind remark is sure to react upon him who makes it, while at the same time it involves all in the pain that follows.

I have no doubt whatever that one reason of Jane's pleasantness was her good health. But in order to have good health at her age one must not overtax one's nervous energies. Though the road might be enticing, I was sure that Jane did not walk so far as to tire herself out. I believed that she did not read at night till her eyes gave out, that she did not sacrifice a week's pleasantness in order that some piece of work might be done at the exact minute determined upon.

Happening once to be in Jane's room, I saw that she had a shelf full of small, helpful books. As I looked at them she told me that she called them her wing strengtheners. When, like a tired bird, her spirit came falling to earth, a glance at some radiant sentence would set her soaring again. Ah, if Jane was pleasant to live with there was reason for it! The flowers of human nature do not grow without cultivation.

One especial and fragrant pleasantness I must not omit. Jane was given to praising her friends—not unduly, not flatteringly, but their kindness or their cleverness was sure of appreciation from her. Life has many clouds at the best. Deserved praise is natural and necessary sunshine. Would that there were more Janes!

MOTHER'S HYMNS

Hushed are those lips, their earthly song is ended;
The singer sleeps at last;
While I sit gazing at her armchair vacant,
And think of days long past.

The room still echoes with the old-time music,
A singing soft and low,
Those grand, sweet hymns, the Christian's consolation,
She rocks her to and fro.

Some that can stir the heart like shouts of triumph,
Or loud-toned trumpet's call,
Bidding the people prostrate fall before him,
"And crown him Lord of All."

And tender notes, filled with melodious rapture,
That leaned upon his word,
Rose in those strains of solemn, deep affection,
"I love thy kingdom, Lord."

Safe hidden in the wondrous "Rock of Ages,"
She bade farewell to fear;
Sure that her Lord would always gently lead her,
She read her "title clear."

Joyful she saw "from Greenland's icy mountains,"
The gospel flag unfurled,
And knew by faith "the morning light was breaking"
Over a sinful world.

"There is a fountain," how the tones triumphant
Rose in victorious strains!
Filled with that precious blood for all the ransomed,
"Drawn from Immanuel's veins."

Dear saint, in heavenly mansions long since folded,
Safe in God's fostering love,
She joins with rapture in the blissful chorus
Of those bright choirs above.

There where no tears are known, no pain or sorrow,
Safe beyond Jordan's roll,
She lives forever with her blessed Jesus,
The lover of her soul

—Anonymous.

MONEY-MAKING FOR COUNTRY BOYS

BY JAMES BUCKHAM

Most country boys have an idea that in order to make money for themselves they must get to the city, or at least to some large town, where there is more or less commercial activity. But, as a matter of fact, the city boy cannot command one-half the money-making opportunity of the country boy. Cities and large towns are very poor markets for anything but skilled labor, as everybody knows who has ever tried to find lucrative employment of a general character in them. Even if a boy has had some special industrial or mechanical training, so that he is entitled to be called an expert in his specialty, not one employer in a hundred will engage him, on account of his youth, as anything but an apprentice at a very low wage. The city is a poor place for a boy who has to make his own living; and it is an equally poor place for a boy who, though not obliged to make his living, desires to use his spare time in earning a little money which he can call his own.

To boys of the latter class the country, however, offers unbounded resources; and it is a constant surprise and perplexity to me that lads with all these money making opportunities at hand so seldom take advantage of them in any way. The country boy, as a rule, is always waiting and wishing for a chance to earn a penny, but he looks so far away for his chance that he walks right over a dozen without seeing them at all.

Let me give an instance in point. On one of my vacations I fell in with a country boy who was always, as his people said, "fooling with tools." He really had become quite expert at all kinds of small carpentering and tinkering, but no one supposed that it amounted to anything, practically—not even the boy himself. One day I heard this boy complaining that he never had a cent of his own, and didn't see as he ever should have one so long as he had to remain on a farm. This set me to thinking. I put myself in the boy's place and asked myself what I should do in like circumstances, and the result was that I hit on a plan by which that boy made $25 before the close of the summer. It was this: I persuaded him to become the neighborhood tinker. Old Mrs. R., I remember, had said to me once that she did wish she could avoid the expense of having to send to the city for a carpenter, a glazier, a paper-hanger or a plumber every time she needed a "little fixin' done." Yet there really seemed to be no person in the vicinity who knew enough about tools to mend a broken window sash or fix a pump that wouldn't draw. Here was my boy's grand opportunity—but he never saw it or supposed such a chance for making money was lying about, until I had the good luck to discover it and point it out to him. The last I heard from him he was in demand for miles around among the farmers and their wives, and was making so much money out of his "tinkering" that he hopes to lay by enough to take him to college by and by.

This is only one instance, but it is a pretty good one to show what I mean by the large, free resources and opportunities of the country as compared with the city. The country is comparatively free from that curse of the city—intense and ruinous competition. If a boy is "handy" in any way there are a hundred chances more for making money out of his talent in the country than in the city. His dexterity is in demand; he finds a ready market for his skill; whereas in the city there would be thousands who could do the same things better than he, and therefore would get all the patronage.

But suppose the boy has no special gift or knack, what chance is there for him in the country then? A far better chance, I claim, than the city boy has or can have. Any country boy who really wants to earn money can do it, only, of course, he must put energy and perseverance into his enterprise, whatever it is. The city boy may do all this, yet get no reward, because his chance of demand is so much more slender. But I never knew a country boy to expend honest effort without due reward.

Suppose the country boy wishes to make money by selling something. Let us see what he has at his command. In the first place he has all the resources of the soil. No farmer is so land-poor, or, I trust, so stingy, that he will not allow his boy a piece of ground to cultivate, if the boy asks for it. Garden produce is always in demand and always brings good prices, and in these days of quick and cheap transportation no country boy is too far away from a commission merchant to make "truck farming" profitable.

Then there is stock-raising on a small scale. The cosset lamb or calf, which the patient farmer's boy brings up by hand, almost always turns out to be an animal of superior condition that brings a good, round price in market. Poultry always yields a large profit, also, and requires a small investment.

The innumerable wild products of the country—the berries and fruits, the fish and game, the roots and herbs used in making medicine—all these have a market value and afford a ready means of revenue to the active and determined country boy. There are very few localities where the country storekeeper will not be glad to take all these products at a fair price and sell them again to the city merchant. But if the boy is a real financier he will ship his own goods to the city and keep the middleman's profit. There is a country boy in New Jersey who has a contract with a New York hotel to supply the latter with so many dozen frogs' legs a week. He hunts the frogs in the marshes, using a piece of red flannel for bait, and I am afraid I might spoil his business if I told how many dollars a year he makes out of it.

Another boy that I know of has a private trout pond on his father's land. He made the pond by damming up a trout brook where it crossed a little basin in the woods. The State Hatchery gives him 10,000 trout eggs a year, and by artificially hatching these he keeps his pond well stocked and sells about four hundred dollars' worth of trout annually.

No country boy need complain that his resources for making money are not ample. Indeed, they are so abundant that if he sees them at all it must be a perplexity to him to know which to choose. Unceasing demand, unfailing resource—what two conditions could be more favorable to money-making than these? Yet if any producer or any laborer in the world enjoys these ideal economic conditions to the full, it is the average country boy.

IN THE FURROW

The dark-brown mold's upturned
By the sharp-pointed plow—
And I've a lesson learned.

My life is but a field,
Stretched out beneath God's sky,
Some harvest rich to yield.

Where grows the golden grain?
Where faith? Where sympathy?
In a furrow cut by pain.

—Rev. M. D. Babcock.

QUEENS OF SERVICE

Most European sovereigns take an active part in founding and maintaining institutions for the good of their subjects, work on behalf of the sick and suffering receiving special thought and devotion. The queen of Portugal holds a physician's diploma, whilst the Empress Frederick of Germany and the queen of Greece are both skilled nurses. It is said that every charitable institute in the Hellenic kingdom owes its foundation to the latter lady, whilst she manages in person the great Evangelismos Hospital at Athens. It will be remembered that Queen Olga was a Russian princess, and as an instance of her kindness it is worth mentioning that she invariably keeps a supply of Russian earth beside her for the purpose of sprinkling on the coffins of any of her compatriots who may end their days in her hospital.

The Empress Frederick has likewise a direct interest in many charitable institutions, and devotes special attention to the children's hospitals in memory of her husband. The late Emperor Frederick kept a very warm place in his heart for the children, and at Düsseldorf is to be seen an example of the sculptor's art which commemorates an incident in connection with the opening of a new ward of a home for cripples. One of the youngsters had been attracted by the insignia of the orders which adorned the emperor's breast. Noticing this, he took the little fellow up in his arms so that he could examine and handle the orders to his heart's content, speaking kindly to him the while. The sculptor has portrayed the emperor in one of his happiest employments, the result being a sweet and lifelike portrait, one of the best recorded of the late monarch.—Sunday Magazine.

Closet and Altar

If we leave our doors wide open to God he enters in and makes a heaven of our souls.

Let us imitate him who sought the mountain tops as his refreshment after toil, but never left duties undone or sufferers unrelieved in pain. Let us imitate him who turned from the joys of contemplation to the joys of service without a murmur when his disciples broke in on his solitude with "All men seek thee," but never suffered the outward work to blunt his desire for, nor to encroach on, the hour of still communion with his Father. Lord, teach us to work; Lord, teach us to pray.—A. Maclaren.

So, whether on the hilltops high and fair
I dwell, or in the sunless valleys where
The shadows lie—what matter? He is there.

And more than this: where'er the pathway lead,
He gives to me no helpless, broken reed,
But his own hand, sufficient for my need.

So, where he leads me I can safely go,
And in the blest hereafter I shall know
Why in his wisdom he hath led me so.

Down into serious contemplation of sacred and eternal things we must go to get the help our brothers need, down into the darkness of those thoughts where man comes close to God to learn what we may teach in the light. O, that we could understand how deep Christ went for all the help and teaching that he gave! O fathers, mothers, friends, ministers, teachers, scholars, men! in all our darkness we must give each other light. To love the truth on one hand and our brethren on the other, to love God and God's children, that will make our human nature transparent so that God can shine through it. For this one thing we are sure of—that no man ever yet loved Christ and loved his brother that Christ did not find his own way through him into his brother, and so help and enlighten both the humble teacher and learner with himself.—Phillips Brooks.

O God, help us to live our little life wisely, nobly, usefully to others. We shall so live if we live in thy Son, if we die in thy Son, if we rise again in thy Son; then shall our life be an evangel, our breath shall be a gospel amongst men. If any have heavy burdens to carry, give strength that they may be borne bravely; if any have to turn aside sometimes to shed tears in darkness, may they hear a voice in the cloud promising comfort; if any are called to new experience of adversity, who have only seen poverty at a distance before, the Lord give them strength; if any are of aching heart, wondering how it is with the old man, with the gentle gray-haired mother, with the wandering child, the Lord heal such heartache, the Lord's balm be plentifully dispensed in the hour of need. The Lord knoweth us altogether: herein is our joy, and herein is sometimes our fear; yet we will not fear; thou knowest our frame, thou rememberest that we are dust. The Lord be with us in all time of suffering and of anxious thoughtfulness, and especially be with us when we are drinking copiously of the wine of joy, lest in our momentary intoxication we forget that Jesus alone can turn our water into wine. Amen.

Mothers in Council

O Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us. Give us courage and wisdom for the duties of another day. Help us so to order our lives that all whom we cherish with family affection may take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. We bless thee for this supreme friendship which thou dost grant us with thyself, O God, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. Suffer us not, in the enjoyment of thy dear love, to forget those who may make no prayer for themselves. Bless all mothers who do not know the comfort of thy daily guidance. Remember them, thou God of compassion, however much they may seem to forget thee. Bless children in homes where there is no daily recognition of thee, the Father of us all. O, thou, whom we delight to call our Shepherd, tenderly gather into thine arms of infinite love all motherless children, and bear them safely through the perils of childhood and youth. Hear our prayers for homes, for parenthood, for childhood, and accept us for Jesus' sake.

TRAINING THE SENSES

Since the advent of the kindergarten much more attention is being paid to sense training, and mothers as well as teachers are awakening to a realization of its importance. The gifts, occupations and, indeed, all the exercises of the kindergarten tend to develop the different senses. All children cannot have the benefit of these blessed child gardens, therefore much important work devolves upon the mother, for to her are given the most impressionable years of her child's life.

As each new life is given to the world,
The senses, like a door that swings two ways,
Stand ever 'twixt its inner waiting self
And that environment with which its lot
Awhile is cast.

Mother love and instinct have devised many ways to help the baby as he becomes acquainted with the outside world by means of his senses. Froebel spent much time in watching mothers at play with their children, and his Mother Play is a collection of the games that he felt had an educational value. This book has a message to all who are interested in childhood.

The kindergarten games afford many opportunities for developing the different senses. For example, the child closes his eyes and tries to distinguish by sound which one of his playmates reproduces the song or musical notes he has given. It is marvelous with what accuracy they can learn to detect voices, even when several of the children are singing in unison. He listens to different sounds and tries to tell what objects have been struck to produce them. Flowers are given him to distinguish by their odor.

There are many games for quick sight perception which can easily be adapted to the home. For instance, while the little ones run out of the room remove articles from the table or from the mantel, or change the position of different articles in the room. See whose eyes will be quickest to discover the changes. Send them to the window to find how many things they can see in a given time. While walking with the children, if in the country, ask them who can find the greatest variety of leaves; if in the city, who can see the most articles in a certain shop window. The true mother, if she really "lives with her children" and realizes something of the educative value of play, will find numberless ways to develop, as well as to amuse, her little ones.

The wise mother will always seek to train the heart as well as the intellect. What can be more valuable for this than a reverent study of nature with her children? Let them read together Gibson's Sharp Eyes and Burroughs's Signs and Seasons. As their eyes are opened to behold the wonders in the world around them their avenues of happiness will be greatly increased, and they will acquire the habit, that will be such a blessing to them all through life, to look for the beautiful wherever placed. Better still, they will learn to see a loving Father's hand in all his works. Froebel says: "The things of nature form a more beautiful ladder between earth and heaven than that seen by Jacob, and angels with children's eyes beckon us towards it."

How many older persons today are suffering from defective sound training in youth! The best authorities now affirm that no child whose organs of hearing are normally constructed is absolutely unmusical. Doubtless children favored by heredity possess in a larger degree a gift for music, but because they do not early manifest an especial talent in this direction it by no means follows that a musical ear cannot be cultivated. But if the opportunity is lacking in earliest youth for this discrimination of tones the loss can never be fully made up. The public schools are doing a great work in music for children, and many stubborn cases of deafness to musical tones have yielded to their persistent and systematic treatment. Here again the greatest opportunity is with the mother, because it is in the very early years that the child is most susceptible to training. The mother who patiently tries to develop discrimination in musical tones in her little ones is doing more than can be done by the best teacher later in life. MARY L. GAYLORD.

ANOTHER LITTLE GIRL'S ROOM

Seeing in a recent number of The Congregationalist an article on A Little Girl's Room has reminded me of the room of a little friend of mine when we were children together, years ago. It was the room where we all loved to play, but as I look back at it now the picture seems rather funny to me. It was thoroughly a child's room, for Alice was allowed to decorate and arrange it exactly as she pleased.

It was a rather small chamber, opening out of mamma's, having pretty furniture and carpet, but it was its decorations that pleased us children. It was at that time when there was a great run on Christmas, Easter and advertising cards, some of them remarkably pretty. Alice had more than usual fondness for these cards, and had adorned her walls with all that she could collect. Large bunches of them were tacked on the doors and between and around the framed pictures, so that the light, inconspicuous paper was almost hidden. A pretty Japanese napkin formed a centerpiece for the ceiling. Souvenirs of childish good times were fastened here, there and everywhere; the bureau and little bookcase were covered with ornaments dear to Alice's heart, while the big, flaxen-haired doll, that we all admired, sat in her own tiny chair by the window. Alice spent a good deal of time "fixing" her room, and one day her heart was filled with joy when an aunt said to her: "If I am ever sick I would like to be in this room, for there is so much here to look at."

As I recall the place now it looks rather too much like a curiosity shop, but as a child I thought it was beautiful. The best part of it all was that everything belonged to Alice; there was nothing that must not be touched, and the little room was very dear to her playmates as well as to herself. Just the other day she said to me: "I wish I had had a photograph taken of my dear little room. I should like it to remind me of my happy childhood." The picture is photographed in memory, if not on the camera's glass.

E. P. TAPLEY.

◆

If I were asked to name one product of vice and crime that would soonest touch the hearts of all good people, I would say a neglected child. Give me the child and the State shall have the man. Every case of vagabondage has its root in some neglected child.—Hon. W. T. Harris.

◆

THE INAUGURATION BIBLE

A writer in the Washington Post has collected some interesting facts concerning the Bible on which the President of the United States takes his oath of office. It seems that when Washington was first inaugurated, in the Federal Building in New York, April 30, 1789, no copy of the Scriptures could be found in the edifice, and the ceremonial was delayed until Chancellor Livingston, who was a Free Mason, happened to remember that there was a Bible in the lodge-room. A messenger was quickly sent to bring the book, and it is preserved to the present day among the relics of the lodge.

The custom has been for the U. S. Supreme Court to furnish the Bible on which the President takes his official oath, and this tradition has been carried out by the clerk of the court ever since that tribunal was established, except on two occasions. Once was in the case of Mr. Cleveland, who asked the privilege of using a little red Bible which had been given him by his mother in his boyhood, when he first left the family roof tree. He took the oath at the beginning of both of his presidential terms on this book, which he treasures fondly.

Mr. McKenny, clerk of the Supreme Court, who has held the Bible on which Garfield was sworn, and every President after him, has always marked the verse which the President touched with his lips, and after the inaugural has presented the book, made historic by this event, to the President or to his wife. When Mr. McKenny presented to Mrs. Hayes the volume on which her husband had been sworn, she inquired what passage he had kissed. The verse recited, in substance, that his enemies encompassed him like bees, but he would not destroy them. Mrs. Hayes remarked that President Hayes would destroy no one.

At the second inauguration of President Grant the clerk opened the Bible and handed it to Chief-Justice Chase, who held it to the lips of the President. They rested upon these verses, from Isa. 11:

> And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him; the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord.
>
> And shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears.

The Bible which was used by Chief-Justice Fuller in administering the oath of office to Mr. McKinley opened to 2 Chron. 1, and the verse upon which his lips seemed to rest was the 10th, which reads:

> Give me now wisdom and knowledge, that I may go out and come in before this people: for who can judge this thy people, that is so great?

Hot griddle cakes are delicious when made with

Cleveland's
Baking Powder

The Conversation Corner

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: My Pomiuk pile of letters is growing large, and I will put in a few specimens of them to start this Corner.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Dear Mr. Martin: Our Sunday school teacher told us about a little Eskimo who has been at the World's Fair. He has got hurt and was put in the hospital. Our Sunday school class has saved up its pennies for him. Will you please send us word and tell us how he is getting along? Please write soon as we are all anxious to know. ANNIE C.

WILKINSBURG, PA.

Dear Mr. Martin: I would like to be in the Corner. I am eight years old. I am in the second reader. I will send eleven cents in the letter for Pomiuk. WILLIAM H.

CASSELTON, N. D.

Dear Cornerers: I am a little boy four years old. My mamma reads me about Pomiuk and I will send a —— from my silver bank for the Corner Cot. I am sorry for Pomiuk and wish he could get well. LUCIEN Y.

CANDOR, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Martin: Our Juniors enjoy the Conversation Corner, especially any items regarding the little Eskimo, whom some of us saw at the World's Fair. About three months ago they pledged their birthday pennies for the Corner Cot. Every offering was dedicated by that little prayer: "Dear Jesus, give these pennies something sweet to do." MRS. D.

WORCESTER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I read the Conversation Corner every week and like it very much. I inclose —— for Gabriel and the Corner Cot. I hope Gabriel is happy. Could you please send me a Corner certificate? [I could.] If so, please do. [Done!] LEROY B.

EASTPORT, ME.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have been sick. And papa has paid me a cent a day to take medicine. I have saved the money for Pomiuk. Our minister has gone to Boston. And we are afraid he isn't coming back to stay with us.
EDNA R.

I saw him in Boston—and I was afraid too!

A lady writes from a Western city about Pomiuk, whom she saw every day for six months in 1893, her husband having a business connection with the "Eskimo Village" at the World's Fair:

> . . . When the Fair opened Pomiuk was one of the healthiest, brightest and happiest of the children. The man with whom he lived was called "Koopah," and that family, with another at the other end of the long line of board and bark huts, was the nearest approach to the heathen Eskimo of northern Labrador. Koopah was the most repulsive of any of the men. In the dead of the night he would often sing and dance and beat himself to frighten away the evil spirits that brought so much sickness to his family. Pomiuk earned a good deal of money, and every day found him in the "trading post," exchanging his pennies and five and ten cent pieces for a shining dollar. I can never forget Pomiuk's broad grin and his "Nakumeek" when the dollar was put in his hand. It was quite impossible to puzzle him as to the change.
>
> In the other family lived the brightest girl in the village—Pomiuk's sister—and a boy who had the consumption. He coughed so terribly that they would not allow him to stay in the house. Sometimes when we came home at night from the Fair we would find the sick boy and the lame Pomiuk stretched side by side upon the narrow park benches under the trees, wrapped in old bed blankets and fast asleep. When the nights grew cold they begged to lie on the floor of the trading post porch, and there passed their miserable nights together. But one day the poor little consumptive found his last sleep in the lake.
>
> You will easily guess that there has seemed much to tell the Corner since the first news came of finding poor Pomiuk in Labrador. We are glad that he has fallen into loving hands.

That is something new and interesting about our boy. We must find out what has become of the sister!

HALLOWELL, ME.

Please look at the picture on page 94 of the Century World's Fair Book, "A Group of Eskimo," and tell the children if the little fellow on the left, at the end of the front row, is not "our Pomiuk." We envy those who are to hear Dr. Grenfell in Boston, but have sent a substitute to hear and report to us.
S. B. G.

Yes, that boy on the ground must be our little friend—that is surely his smile! I hope the Hallowell "substitute" heard Dr. Grenfell tell of his interesting work in Labrador, and wish all the Cornerers could have had the same privilege. Now that the good doctor is fairly "off soundings" on his voyage to England, I will tell you a little of his visit. The editors anticipated me by their full notice in The Congregationalist of March 4; they also used his picture which I was intending to use! But I will put in place of it one representing him with his crew on the Sir Donald—I know it would please him better to be in company with his "old tars" on board his vessel. (I am sorry I do not know his dog's name.)

He addressed many audiences during his ten days' stay in Massachusetts, but I think none in which he was more interested than that which gathered in the fishermen's "every-day church" in Gloucester (the same, I suppose, as that of Mrs. Ward's story of "The Singular Life"—and its present chaplain is named Emanuel!), or that to which he spoke so feelingly from Mr. Murphy's platform in Faneuil Hall. The latter audience contained many sailors and others just reformed from drunkenness or wanting to be reformed. How those men listened as he told them of hope and help! An hour later I met in another part of the city a friend and told him of Dr. Grenfell's talk at Murphy's meeting. A rough man, standing near us, smoking, broke in with: "Yes, that was a good talk; that came right home to us fellows, and we would like to have got down and kissed his feet for what he said to us!"

I must tell you another Faneuil Hall incident. I happened to sit beside Dr. Little—that's his real name, it is not because of his small size—on the corner of the platform, and he said, "See that boy's face!" He pointed to a bright boy who was intently listening to every speaker. Dr. L. told me who was with the boy and then I felt sure that boy was one of our Cornerers, whom I had never seen but who had just written me to ask when he could come into town to hear Dr. Grenfell. And here he was (by accident) hearing him now! (I watched him when Dr. G. spoke and knew then it was he.) I managed to get my card down to him, telling him to wait and speak with Pomiuk's benefactor—which of course he did. Wasn't it strange that the only boy in the audience should be a Cornerer?

One afternoon the doctor went over to Cambridge and talked to the "Captains of Ten," whom we pictured in the Corner last summer, and I learn that the Faneuil Hall boy was there. One of the members wrote me about it:

> He began by saying, "I am a Captain, too!" He then drew on the blackboard a map of Labrador, and all through his talk drew pictures of ships, tents, Eskimos, seals and walruses. He told us all about the finding of Pomiuk and drew a picture of the interior of the tent in which he was found. He was lying on the cold stones, with only a blanket [reindeer skin] over him. The boys of the club enjoyed the talk very greatly and showed the speaker as much by their hearty clapping.
> RALPH C.

I must not forget to say that Dr. Grenfell told me many things about Gabriel, but nothing of importance later than what you know. He says that he will always be a cripple, that he may live several years and, best of all, that he is a true and happy Christian.

Dr. Grenfell is a happy Christian too! Why should he not be? That struck me more than anything else about his work. Though leaving professional prospects, his loved athletics, society and family—a family connected with Kingsley and Max Müller and Froude and Wolverton (I learned this only by diligent use of our ? sign!)—his Master has evidently fulfilled his own word, "That my joy might remain in you!" Some of the older Cornerers will be interested, as I was, to know that a member of his family in another generation was the Cornwall lady ("Lydia G——") who was engaged to Henry Martyn of sacred memory, and who could not accompany him to his missionary work in India. But I think he is proudest to be a descendant of Sir Richard Grenville, because he was "an old sea-dog, who fought Spain on the seas," something, he said, as he himself is "now trying to fight the devil and his works!" There can be heroism in Christ's service as well as the king's, but it is a service of peace, of love, of kindness, instead of war and enmity and cruelty.

The doctor quoted these lines about Christ's way of doing good, which he said were posted up in the Sir Donald where all the crew could read them:

He did kind things so kindly;
It seemed His heart's delight
To make poor people happy,
From morning until night.

He always seemed at leisure
For every one who came;
However tired or busy,
They found HIM just the same!

And why should not Dr. Grenfell and his crew—and all the rest of us—"follow His steps"? Why should not every disciple be as his Lord?

P. S. Just as the proof of this page is being read comes a last word from our missionary captain and surgeon:

> I send a "fare-bye" line. The "Peter" is up on the S. S. Majestic, and soon it will be, "Slack away the hawsers!" and away for "Auld England"! W. T. G.

Mr. Martin

The Sunday School

Lesson for March 28 Review

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The lessons we have studied include the first decade of the Christian Church. We have considered the most important events in laying its foundations, as they appeared to the author of the Acts, perhaps about thirty years after this period had closed. How did these events affect those who were organizing churches and preaching the gospel in the beginning, and how do they affect the church today?

1. The ascension of Christ was an abiding motive to holy living and to preaching the gospel. So it is now. Some one has said that Luke is the only witness to the ascension. Let the student examine the New Testament and see how far this is from being true. Even if it is conceded that Mark 16: 19 is an addition to that gospel, see how its statement that "Jesus was received up into heaven and sat down at the right hand of God" is repeated almost as a refrain in the addresses and letters of the apostles. Peter declared it in his first sermon [Acts 2: 33]. Stephen saw Jesus there [7: 55]. Paul wrote to the Romans that Christians would be glorified with Christ, because he is at the right hand of God interceding for them. We ought to fix our affections on things in heaven, because Christ has ascended there [Col. 3: 1. See also Eph. 1: 20; 4: 10; 1 Tim. 3: 16; Heb. 1: 3; 4: 14; 8: 1; 1 Pet. 3: 22; and many other passages]. We must live the Christ-life because he has ascended to heaven and will receive his own into that eternal rest.

2. The gift of the Holy Spirit was the consequence of Christ's ascension into heaven, and now abides in the church. Christ promised that gift through his ascension [John 16: 7]. The power which wrought so mighty changes in men at Pentecost was shed forth by Christ, who had been exalted to the right hand of God [Acts 2: 33]. Through the gift of the Holy Spirit the church began [2: 38]. Men preach and teach with power only as they are filled with the Holy Spirit. Such men were Stephen [6: 5] and Barnabas [11: 24] and the disciples [13: 52]. The Holy Spirit inspires love [Rom. 5: 5] and prayer [Rom. 8: 26] and hope [Rom. 15: 13] and eloquence [1 Cor. 2: 4]. The New Testament abounds with evidence of the working of the Holy Spirit in building up and guiding the church.

3. The conversion of the multitude at Pentecost and their beautiful lives in fellowship with one another, which commended Christianity to all the people, were the fruits of the Holy Spirit.

4. The healing of the lame man was an act which showed that the power of Christ still dwelt in his disciples through the Holy Spirit. It was an assertion, at the temple gate, that the new sect of Jews had something to give which the temple, where God was believed to dwell, could not furnish. Already the new temple had begun to rise, of disciples as spiritual stones builded together. The evidence of it is the power which goes forth from it to save and bless men.

5. It was inevitable that between this new temple and the defenders of the old temple a conflict should arise. The old order was being undermined. The priests who guarded it sought to silence by law the representatives of the new order. They did not deny the divine power, but sought to prevent its exercise. Peter and John, conscious that they had wrought a good deed in the name of Christ, were ready to face any authority, civil or ecclesiastical. Men filled with the Holy Spirit and working in the name of Christ need not fear any kind of opposition.

6. The first great peril to the new church arose from within itself. The disciples could successfully resist the authorities of the Jewish Church. But its only remedy for hypocrites within the fold was expulsion, and that was sanctioned by the power of God, which smote Ananias and Sapphira, two persons who had been highly esteemed, but who had lied to the Holy Spirit. At all cost, the church which would prosper must cleanse itself from wickedness, wearing the garb of discipleship.

7. The church took another long step forward in independence of men and dependence on God when the apostles defied the unlawful acts of the appointed administrators of the law and declared that they must obey God rather than men. Therefore they would witness that Jesus, whom these false administrators of law had crucified, was risen and exalted to the right hand of God, to be a Saviour for forgiveness of sins. To that end God opened the prison, whose doors had been shut on the apostles by those who claimed to be interpreters of God's will. The church is bound to listen with caution to men who proclaim new doctrines. But if she refuses to listen at all, or tries to silence them, instead of weighing their message, she can make no progress. She will be left behind.

8. In trying to stifle such witnesses, by false witnesses and force and cruelty, they succeeded in silencing Stephen, the most eloquent pleader for the new faith who had yet arisen. God does not always open prison doors for his own. That he lets his witnesses die is no more an evidence that they are not witnesses than the crucifixion of Jesus was evidence that God had forsaken him, as for the moment he believed.

9. The first effect of Stephen's death was to bring about what Stephen most desired, but could not accomplish while living. It was to spread the knowledge of the gospel far and wide. Jerusalem was blessed by Stephen's life. But Samaria was blessed by his death and, later, Antioch, Asia Minor, Rome and the world. He was used, as consecrated Christians wish to be used, to do the largest service for Christ.

10. One specified effect of Stephen's death was to bring the gospel, through his fellow-deacon, Philip, to one of the most influential men in a great African kingdom. Stephen and Philip together preached through the Ethiopian convert. God's ways of extending the church are wiser than ours.

11. Stephen's death roused into activity as a persecutor the ablest man in all the history of the church. If any one could have led in crushing it Saul was the man. But the memory of his cruelties to Christians emphasized all his tenderness toward them in the long life he spent in making known Christ to them after he had learned to know Christ.

12. Saul, after he had become an apostle, revealed his own character to the converts made under his preaching in his letters to them. One of these revelations is before us in this extract from his first epistle to the Corinthians. He mastered himself so that he might most effectively use all his strength and opportunity to win men to Christ. That is the ideal of Christian service.

So in these ten years we see the wonderful progress of the new church under the leading of the Holy Spirit, whom Christ sent when he ascended. The Holy Spirit was given to the disciples, convicted their hearers, brought a multitude into the church, gave the apostles power to heal the sick, filled them with courage to defend themselves against rulers and elders, purged the church of evil doers, made the apostles effective witnesses of the resurrection of Christ, sustained the first Christian martyr, guided those who went forth into the world to preach Christ and came on those converted through their preaching, revealed the truth to the Ethiopian traveler, arrested the persecuting Saul and changed him into the chief apostle to the Gentiles. The same Holy Spirit God is willing to give to his people now when they ask for this greatest gift.

◆

One advantage of being rich is not having to appear so.—E. Scott O'Connor.

Styles correct,
Prices right!
Only four words but what a world of meaning!

Macullar Parker Company,
Clothiers and Outfitters for
Men, Youths and Boys.

400 Washington St., Boston.
166 Westminster Street,
Providence.

Science says that the coming man (also the "coming woman") will depend for food supply more on the chemist and the laboratory than on the products of the field and farm. However that may be, it is sure that intelligent people everywhere now depend upon

Liebig
COMPANY'S Extract of Beef

as a palatable, concentrated food product, indispensable as a stock for soups, sauces and made dishes, and as beef tea, nourishing and refreshing.

There's only one Liebig COMPANY'S that has the signature of the great chemist Liebig on the jar:

J. v. Liebig

GIVES
Vigor and Health.

Somatose is a Perfect Food, Tonic and Restorative. It contains the nourishing elements of meat. Prepared for invalids and dyspeptics and those needing nourishment and a restored appetite. May be taken dry, or in water, milk, &c.

At druggists, in 2 oz., ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.

Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate—each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

Quick as Thought

No time lost with
WHITMAN'S
INSTANTANEOUS
CHOCOLATE.
Taste, flavor and quality the best. Put up in pound and half-pound tins.
Stephen F. Whitman & Son,
Sole Mfrs. Philadelphia.

GRANULA packages 25 cents.
"THE PERFECT HEALTH FOOD"
Specially suitable for invalids and children. Sample Book of Recipes FREE.
GRANULA CO., DANSVILLE, N. Y.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM

OUR OWN WORK

Six Months' Record. One-half of the fiscal year of the American Board has already elapsed, with what result the tables below indicate. The gleam of hope caused by the increase of contributions in January has been quenched by the February statistics, which record a decrease in every item, making a total falling off of over $15,000. Still more disheartening is the total decrease for six months, which amounts to no less than $34,283.

	Feb., 1896.	Feb., 1897.
Regular Donations,	$34,735.80	$31,138.26
Donations for special objects,	2,787.12	2,372.16
Legacies,	19,632.25	8,617.95
	$57,155.17	$42,128.37

	6 mos. last year.	6 mos. this year.
Regular donations,	$200,620.11	$178,502 06
Donations for special objects,	21,957.57	36,967.54
Legacies,	55,522.95	28,347.45
	$278,100.63	$243,817.05

Good News from Micronesia. The Honolulu Friend publishes a letter from Henry Nanpei showing a change of policy on the part of the Spanish Government relative to our missionary work on the island of Ponape. Last October the Morning Star entered one of the harbors and the missionaries on board were allowed to land for the first time since 1890. Crowds of their old friends met Mrs. Logan and Miss Foss at the wharf. "You cannot imagine," writes the native evangelist, "how delighted our poor people were to shake hands with and be embraced by those good people whom they never expected to see again on Ponape." Captain Garland and his associates paid a visit to the governor, who has shown such kind consideration for the Christians on the island, and they were received and entertained with the utmost courtesy. The governor visited the Morning Star in company with Henry Nanpei and brought ashore three cases of New Testaments in the Ponape language. It is a notable fact that many of these books were purchased by Spanish officers. The Mantalanim and Mants tribes are eager for a larger supply of Scriptures, as their books were burned by the Spanish soldierly during an outbreak. These natives have two able Christian teachers known as William and Joseph. The general spiritual condition of the Ponapean Christians is hopeful. A new Protestant church has recently been dedicated and day and Sunday schools as well as prayer meetings are well attended. The work suffers, however, for want of an ordained minister.

Self-Support in China. It was in January, 1847, that Rev. Stephen Johnson arrived at the mouth of the Nim River and opened the Foochow Mission in China, which is now celebrating its jubilee. No portion of the report for 1895–96, just published, is more significant of the progress of Christianity in this mission than what Rev. W. L. Beard writes of self-support. He says: "Gen-Cio-Dong, the oldest church in Foochow, is already supporting its pastor and is also paying all expenses of lighting the church, etc. Ha-Puo-Ga has raised its native subscription, and another suburban congregation is talking of forming a church, paying the pastor and helping to purchase land and build a new church. Nearly every call from outlying villages is accompanied by the promise from the people to meet part of the expenses of teacher or preacher. It is unwarrantable to build too much on these promises; but the fact that the Chinese, whose fists close so tightly and so naturally over every copper, have already in one instance given up the help of foreigners in supporting their pastor, and the fact that so many are talking seriously about so doing, makes it warrantable to hope for great progress in this direction during the next few years."

Among the Dakotas. Miss M. C. Collins of Fort Yates, N. D., pleads for medical work among the Indians in the current American Missionary. The transition from the old, wild, free habits of the Dakotas to the reservation life has made sad changes in the physical condition of the red man, and his sufferings in illness are pitiful. Fortunately, the little hospital at Fort Yates now stands open to receive patients and sends out a doctor to visit the sick in all parts of the reservation. One of the old men said: "The doctor and the hospital are the best things that Christians have given to the Indians, because they are for all of us. They have given schools to the children and churches to those who can change their lives and their belief, but the hospital is for all of us, even we old ones who have lived Indians and who desire to die Indians." Miss Collins's earnest request for the needed $1,600 a year to carry on this hospital work is followed by a letter from another self-sacrificing woman missionary among the Dakotas, showing the burdens and anxieties borne by these workers in the Indian field. After speaking of the difficulties of traveling in the winter, she writes: "But I will not burden you with all my tale of woe. Suffice it to say I still live! And it is not likely that I shall either starve or freeze to death. And there is still a small haystack in the barnyard, though the grain which Frank and Daisy (my horses) so well earn, they whinny for in vain; just now I cannot get it. I am learning the lesson slowly, but surely, not to undertake impossible things. I am learning a part of it, now, trying to carry two places at once and failing, almost failing, in both."

THE WORLD AROUND.

A Roman Catholic Missionary Appeal. The Church of Rome is alive to the needs of home missionary work among the Negroes and Indians. Notwithstanding the financial depression, contributions for this purpose during 1896 exceeded those of the three preceding years. The Pilot publishes an urgent plea, signed by prominent church dignitaries, for still more vigorous efforts. It closes with this paragraph: "The amount gathered for the mission during the past five years has fallen considerably below the figure reached during the five years from 1887–91. At the same time the number of churches and schools for Negroes and Indians, of missionaries and sisters working among them, has considerably increased. Above all, the appropriations formerly made for our Indian schools are being reduced, till some of the bishops say that they will be obliged to abandon this work. You will not allow this to occur. You will gratify the longings of the Sacred Heart of Jesus for the welfare of these souls whom he shed his blood to save, and whom he has left it in your power to befriend."

A Mission to African Pigmies. The American Presbyterians have been led in a providential manner to open evangelistic work among the Pigmies in equatorial Africa. It seems that a Glasgow woman, Miss Margaret MacLean, had her interest roused in these curious people by Mr. Stanley's reference to them in his book, In Darkest Africa. She wrote at once to him asking what could be done for the Dwarfs, but his reply was not encouraging. She appealed to several societies working in Africa, but none was able to take up this new work. At last a friend sent her a copy of The Church at Home and Abroad containing an article by Dr. Good, entitled a Curious Fragment of African Humanity, in which he described a visit to a Dwarf village and told of other meetings with the Pigmies among the Mabeya tribes. Miss MacLean and the Presbyterian Board were thus brought into communication, and she has agreed to furnish funds for the purpose of beginning and sustaining efforts among the Dwarfs in connection with the Gaboon and Corisco Mission. One missionary has already been sent out and another will probably follow soon.

He who tampers with the currency robs labor of its bread. He panders, indeed, to greedy capital, which is keen-sighted and may shift for itself, but he beggars labor, which is honest, unsuspecting and too busy with the present to calculate for the future. The prosperity of the working classes lives, moves and has its being in established credit and a steady medium of payment. All sudden changes destroy it. Honest industry never comes in for any part of the spoils in that scramble which takes place when the currency of a country is disordered. Did wild schemes and projects ever benefit the industrious? Did violent fluctuations ever do good to him who depends on his daily labor for his daily bread? Certainly never. All these things may gratify greediness for sudden gain, or the rashness of daring speculation, but they can bring nothing but injury and distress to the homes of patient industry and honest labor.—Daniel Webster.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN

Topic, March 28–April 3. What Christian Heroism Is and Does. Luke 9: 18–26; 51–62.

Any kind of heroism is better than cowardice, but the highest kind is associated with Christ, prompted by love to him, modeled upon his practice of it. The poets and historians have enshrined the memory of men and women who were heedless of life as they committed themselves to great undertakings. We admire a fireman who rescues a child from a burning building, or a policeman who contends single-handed against a mob, but we reserve the best tribute of our hearts for the persons who display moral heroism, who stand for truth and righteousness in spite of popular odium. St. Paul and Luther are the world's real heroes, not Agamemnon or Napoleon. A New England college president delivers, occasionally, a stirring address entitled, Who Is Your Great Man? The answer to the question measures the mental and moral caliber of him who gives it.

The field in which Christian heroism is exercised is broader than we sometimes think. It is very evident when we see it on the hot sands of India, or up among the icebergs of Labrador, but the life cast in conventional surroundings is never devoid of opportunities for playing the hero's part. Some of us need not look further away for our heroes and our heroines than our fathers and mothers, our companions in daily work. The man who is courageous when it would be easier to be cowardly, patient when it would be easier to be rebellious, forgiving when it would be easier to be resentful, loving when it would be easier to be selfish, is a hero as well as he who gives his life to the more daring enterprises of our Christian faith.

We cannot get rid of this heroic element if we would be true followers of Christ. His own words make plain what he expects of us, and if we find life getting too soft and too easy we would better ask ourselves if we are following Christ to the extent and with the spirit which he commended. I cannot better end these few suggestions than by quoting an extract from a private letter just received from Dr. Grenfell, the Labrador missionary, as he was on the point of sailing from New York for England: "I say to myself sometimes, 'Grenfell, old friend, no opposition, no internal struggles, no sacrifices, what does your Christ-following mean?' Depend upon it, it must be. We must be swindled, imposed on, stared at, watched and sneered at if we are as earnest and not wiser and better than our Master."

Parallel verses: Acts 9: 23–27; 2 Cor. 11: 23–27; 2 Tim. 2: 12; 1 Peter 4: 14–16; Rev. 7: 14.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic, March 21–27. The Christian's Resources. Zech. 4: 1–10; 2 Kings 6: 8–17; Matt. 26: 47–54.

Whence do they come? In what measure are they available? How shall we turn them to the best advantage?

(See prayer meeting editorial.)

Literature

SOME IMPORTANT WESLEY PAPERS

The Methodist Times announces the discovery in the conference office, London, of a number of most interesting papers relating to the Wesley family, which have been lost for a considerable period. Apparently they have been out of sight so long that they have been forgotten, although now it is remembered that they have been known before. They include letters by Mrs. Susannah Wesley, Rev. John Wesley to Mrs. Bosanquet and Rev. John Fletcher, John Wesley's manuscript letters and journals from 1738 to 1790, 150 of Charles Wesley's letters and journals, other letters by Charles Wesley between 1747 and 1759, written during his courtship and relating to marriage settlements, his marriage, congratulations, etc. There are also the Gwynne letters of the same period, one or two original manuscript sermons by Charles Wesley, one of them preached before the University of Oxford, April 4, 1742, on the text, "Awake, thou that sleepest," etc., and the other preached by him in Georgia, March 14, 1736, the text being, "The light of the body is the eye."

There are also six copies of poems by Charles Wesley, some national and some religious, a number of manuscript psalms by him and a copy of a manuscript hymn composed by him and sung by the society at Bristol on Dec. 5, 1779. Furthermore, there are the articles of agreement between Rev. John Wesley and Mrs. Vazeille, who afterward became his wife, several portions of his journal, a number of letters by him to Rev. Adam Clarke, one letter from John Wesley to William Pitt, the prime minister, five letters by Whitefield, thirteen by Lady Huntingdon, several from William Wilberforce to Mrs. Charles Wesley and many others by various persons. In addition to these there is the original parchment certificate of Charles Wesley's ordination as deacon and preacher, bearing the signatures of the Bishop of Oxford and of London.

Various other valuable papers also have been secured by Rev. Charles H. Kelley, who has been instrumental in rediscovering these Wesley manuscripts, and the whole form a very valuable addition to the literature of Methodism. It is also material which many in other branches of the church will desire from time to time to consult, and therefore it may fairly be regarded as a cause of congratulation to all Christian people that these documents have come to light. It is said to be probable that additional papers of the same general character also may be discovered.

BOOK REVIEWS

THE INTERNATIONAL CRITICAL COMMENTARY ON LUKE

The latest addition to this series of standard commentaries is from the hand of Rev. Alfred Plummer, D. D., the English editor for the New Testament. The preface announces that all discussion of the synoptic problem is left for the special volume to be prepared by Dr. Sanday. Dr. Plummer decides that the author of the third gospel was the author of the Acts, a companion of Paul, and that he was Luke, "the beloved physician." Few will question these conclusions. He thinks that Luke used both oral and written material, some of which he possessed in common with other synoptists and some which was his own peculiar property. Much of it was probably in Aramaic. For the date he prefers A. D. 75–80, with Dr. Sanday and Professors Ramsay and Weiss, although he is careful to give due consideration to the views and arguments of others. There is a very careful and elaborate study of the characteristics, style and language of Luke, with valuable tables. These include lists of expressions peculiar to Luke or to Luke and Paul, Hebraisms and a discussion of medical terms. A rather brief discussion of the integrity of the gospel and an account of the manuscript authorities also are included in the introduction.

The body of the work is distinguished by careful and thorough exegesis. The notes in small type form a valuable feature and give us the results of wide research. The Greek text is quoted without the English equivalent, contrary to the plan followed in the commentary on Mark. It is to be feared and regretted that this fact may hinder its use with many would be readers. Too many ministers, even, find themselves unable to read the Scriptures entirely in the ancient tongues. Homiletics do not occupy the prominent place which they hold in older commentaries, but are accorded all the consideration consistent with the plan of the work. Fanciful and untenable theories and interpretations have been rigorously excluded. Dr. Plummer has done well in making his book almost a concordance, and he has further enriched it by many references to the Septuagint, Vulgate, the early Latin versions and the pseudepigraphical writings of the Jews and the early Christians. The "infancy" passages are accepted as historical with but a brief discussion. The passage 9: 51–18: 14, which is sometimes called the "great interpolation" or "Peræan section," is peculiar to Luke. Dr. Plummer thinks that we have here material not used by Mark and Matthew and that its source is unknown to us. A large part of it is to be regarded as derived from stereotyped oral tradition, and probably in the Aramaic language.

In this volume we have a difficult book of the New Testament considered in the manner required by modern standards of scholarship. The author's treatment of the opinions of those differing from him is always just and courteous. Wherever he feels sure of his position he is clear, simple and decided. Where this assurance is lacking he is cautious and hesitating, and at times one wishes for a more definite expression of opinion. The arrangement and typography deserve especial commendation. The book sustains the reputation attained by the preceding volumes of the series. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00.]

THE SENSE OF BEAUTY

It is no light task to read The Sense of Beauty, by George Santayana of Harvard University, which is a study of the outlines of æsthetic theory. The author is a lecturer on the theory and history of æsthetics at Harvard University, and he has endeavored to form a system of æsthetics under the inspiration of a naturalistic psychology. His discussion is divided into four parts, treating of the nature of beauty, its materials, its form and its expression. The book is an example of the most penetrating analysis and the closest reasoning, dealing with abstract philosophy as well as concrete, and pursuing a clearly defined train of thought which, nevertheless, from its very nature, must prove obscure to most minds which are not specially trained in abstract thinking.

The author's definition of beauty is "value, positive, intrinsic and objectified," or, in less technical language, "pleasure regarded as the quality of a thing." All human functions, he holds, may contribute to the sense of beauty, and this is illustrated by a consideration of the passion of love, the social instincts, sound, color, etc. Beauty of form is found not merely in figures and shapes, but also in the uniformity of manifold objects like the stars, in types, to a certain extent in the fitness of things, in ornamentation, in words, etc. Expression makes beautiful by suggestion things in themselves indifferent, or it may highten the beauty which they possess. It involves the object presented to the mind and the additional emotion or image which the mind conceives of the object. One of the elements of expression, therefore, is that of the imagination, and a further element of it is some degree of interest or emotion.

The author's course of thought in this part of the book leads up to the relations of his subject to the field of ethics and to the ideal of moral perfection, and he holds that nothing but the good of life enters into the texture of the beautiful. He emphasizes the stability before the human mind of ideal perfection and its influences upon life. We must ever recognize our immanent ideal, the realizing of which would constitute perfection for us. Beauty is the appreciation of sensible material, abstract form and associated values. Although it is indescribable, we can use experiment and memory to show how the feeling of beauty varies, and can determine in a degree the contribution to it of the different objects which cause it to vary. Yet more than this is true. It is an experience, and an experience which partially satisfies reason and imagination. That it cannot wholly satisfy them is the clearest manifestation of perfection and the best evidence of its possibility. Beauty, as the author remarks in closing, is "a pledge of the possible conformity between the soul and nature, and consequently a ground of faith in the supremacy of the good."

We should like to see the substance of this work rewritten in a style popularly readable, even if less scholarly. There is much in the book of large value but too hard to be grasped and mastered, excepting by experts. We have some doubt about a position taken here or there—e. g., that "there is no value apart from some appreciation of it"—but the author has done difficult work conscientiously and very ably. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.]

STORIES

The Coming of Chloe [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25] is by the late Mrs. Hungerford, "The Duchess," and is bright and amusing, but not profound. It is an English story of country society. The heroine certainly must be acknowledged a coquette, but is not without many attractive qualities, besides being entertaining. The characters are well drawn and the book will afford entertainment to the admirers of the author. ——A Woman's Courier [Stone & Kimball. $1.25] by W. J. Yeoman, is another English story, but the period is the England of the close of the seventeenth century and the outline deals with the conspiracy against King William. It is a graphic and exciting story of intrigue and counter intrigue with love-making, adventures and fighting sprinkled in thickly and described with spirit and success.

Grip [Stone & Kimball. $1.25] is by John Strange Winter. Its hero is jilted, undertakes to revenge himself on his successful rival, but is accidentally arrested by mistake and imprisoned for a long term of years, a considerable number of which he is compelled to serve. After being pardoned out, however, owing to the efforts of his unconscious rival, who by a strange fortune has become his prison mate, but who is released first, he continues to cherish his bloodthirsty aims until the god of love intervenes by substituting the sister of his early love for that lady herself, to the mutual satisfaction of all concerned. Those familiar with the author's skill easily will understand how entertaining a story she makes out of this outline.——A Writer of Fiction [Copeland & Day. $1 00] by Clive Holland, is a sad story. The tale is of an English novelist, who gradually loses his hold on the public, finds his powers failing and at last condescends to cater to a depraved popular taste in literature in order to keep the wolf from the door. The heroism of his wife, the expedient by which she saves his reputation, and the painful climax we will not relate. Suffice it to say that, in spite of its sadness, the story is one of considerable power and interest besides impressing a wholesome moral lesson.

Mrs. H. Lovett Cameron is the author of A Bachelor's Bridal [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1 50]. It is a decidedly improbable story but rather entertaining. It will serve to pass away the time in traveling, and the character drawing is fairly good and more to be commended than the plot.——The strain upon the reader is noticeable in Glamour, by Meta Orred [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25], but nothing to the strain which must have been upon the author while writing. To keep up such a show of gloom and supernatural uneasiness for so many pages is a considerable task, and such a strain almost justifies inviting belief in pictures which split themselves and unroll and then roll up again. We can believe in ghosts if forced to do so, but we find it difficult to believe in pictures of that sort. The book, nevertheless, is not without ability, and, although it hardly can be called engrossing, its almost uniformly depressed and unhappy characters wend their sorrowful way through its course of unpleasant occurrences with a consciousness of forlornness which we did not expect to see so well sustained to the end.

To turn to Mr. Edgar Fawcett's A Romance of Old New York [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00], which is light literature indeed, affords relief. The sun shines in the book and the people are those of this world rather than of the borderland. The daring scheme which is introduced into the plot in order to save the life of one of the heroines is sufficiently reckless to command admiration for its audacity, but of course the outcome is successful. The principal interest of the book lies in the delineation of the social and friendly side of the character of Aaron Burr.——Things that Matter [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50 cents], by Francis Gribble, describes a marriage of friendship rather than of love and its consequences. The author might just as well have made it turn out happily. The principal features of the story are its attempt to portray the "new woman" as she exists in London society and the implied, if not avowed, condemnation of that type of womanhood.

Miss Armstrong's and Other Circumstances [Stone & Kimball. $1.25] is the title of a volume of nearly a dozen short stories by John Davidson. Two or three of them are so good that it is surprising to find two or three of the others so dull. They are British stories and one of them takes the form of a fairy tale. There is enough ability in the book to justify good hope of the author's future work. But he is very uneven in his endeavors.——Three Boys in the Wild Northland [Eaton & Mains. $1.25] is a story of travel and adventure, which is exciting in a high degree and which the boys will relish.

EDUCATIONAL

The third volume of the series of American Orations [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25] covers a part of the anti-slavery struggle and the secession period. Among the orators represented are Chase, Everett, Douglass, Sumner, Lincoln, Seward and Wade. Their speeches are a part of our national history, and it is an excellent idea to make them more available as features of the common knowledge in this way.——The fourth and last volume of this series deals with the Civil War and with reconstruction, free trade and protection, finance and civil service reform. Edited originally by the late Prof. Alexander Johnson, it has been re-edited with notes by Prof. J. A. Woodburn. Speeches by Lincoln, Jefferson Davis, Henry Winter Davis, Thaddeus Stevens, Henry Clay, James G. Blaine, George W. Curtis, Carl Shurz and others are included. We question the propriety of introducing the speech of such a man as Mr. Vallandigham, whose conspicuousness was not to his credit and who should be allowed to be forgotten, but we have no objection to the policy of permitting both sides of our great national struggle to be represented in a book of this character. Mr. Beecher's famous address at Liverpool in October, 1863, is introduced, and it deserves to be thus popularized. It was one of the greatest victories which he ever won upon the platform. The book has more than the ordinary educational value, and will take a good place among books of its class.

Three more volumes of the Riverside Literature series, issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. at 25 cents each, are Macaulay's Essays on Johnson and Goldsmith, on Milton and on Addison, edited by W. P. Treat. They are admirably adapted to the purpose of the series, and are tasteful publications. ——Mr. E. H. Cutler has edited the IXth Book of Virgil's Æneid [Ginn & Co. 45 cents] for the School Classics series. If anything can make the road to learning easy it is the use of such comprehensive and complete text-books as this, which also is highly attractive to the eye and is a worthy member of the series.——The Happy Method in Number for Little People [C. W. Bardeen. 75 cents] is by Emily E. Benton, and is a manual intended for teachers and mothers. It makes a specialty of the law of strong contrasts. The application of the law seems to us a little overworked, but it may be used advantageously to facilitate the purpose of the work.

MISCELLANEOUS

Beauty and Hygiene [Harper & Bros. 75 cents] by an unnamed author, is for women. It opens with a chapter on the beauty of the women of Spain, and the claim that Spanish women are more beautiful than others hardly can be maintained, although we concede the author's right to his or her opinion. The book is largely technical, deals with the care of the complexion and the various features, makes suggestions in regard to thinness and corpulence, gives advice as to a graceful carriage and is generally practical and sensible without containing very much which is novel. It is, perhaps, open to the criticism of treating some minor matters as if they were of great importance, nevertheless the well-bred woman does not fail to pay careful attention to such particulars as are suggested in these pages.

Legends of the Virgin and Christ [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50], by H. A. Guerber, is a pleasant collection of the miscellaneous legends relating to our Lord and to his mother which have sprung up from time to time in Christian history and have attained more or less acceptance, especially in Roman Catholic countries. They are interesting as indications of the fantastic notions of some types of mind and many of them have probably had more or less of a spiritual influence, but they are pure fancies and not to be mistaken for fact. The author has put his material together in a graceful and enjoyable form and there are some pleasant illustrations.——The Cambridge edition of James Russell Lowell's Poetical Works [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00] is beautifully printed and has a fine portrait of Mr. Lowell and a vignette of Elmwood, a biographical sketch and useful notes and tables. It is not too large to be easily held, while the type is clear and the paper of good quality. It is an admirable edition of the great poet's productions in verse.

John Gabriel Borkman [Stone & Kimball. $1.50] is a play by Henrik Ibsen, translated by William Archer and is a volume of the Green Tree Library. One must be an Ibsenite indeed to admire such a play as this. It is dull from beginning to end. The characters are unvaryingly uninteresting. They do nothing in particular and the chief feature of the play is the despair of most of the characters, due to the guilt of one of them and the morbidness of the others. Healthy-minded people do not care for such productions. It would have been much better to have let John Gabriel Borkman remain a fancy of the author's mind.——Messrs. Harper & Bros. have brought out in a pretty form Mr. Howells's comedy, A Previous Engagement [50 cents], and Six Cups of Chocolate [25 cents], translated by Edith V. B. Matthews from the German of E. Schmitthof. They are bright and amusing and will serve well either to be read or for private theatricals.——George Meredith's Essay on Comedy and the Uses of the Comic Spirit [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1 25] was delivered as a lecture in London twenty years ago and was afterward published in one of the magazines. It is a discriminating and suggestive study, often amusing and always prompting reflection, and less abrupt and fragmentary in style than the author's more important writings.

Messrs. Stone & Kimball also send us With the Band [$1.25], by R. W. Chambers, a volume of short poems which might have been written if Kipling never had published his poetry but which hardly would have been what it is in that event. The poems have a merry jingle for the most part, and are generally military or Bohemian in sentiment. Without being poetry of a high order these verses are of a type which a considerable class of readers enjoy.——In his Literary Landmarks of Florence [Harper & Bros. $1.00] Mr. Lawrence Hutton has given a delightful abstract of many of the distinguishing literary features of Florence connected with the past rather than the present. The different houses or streets connected with famous authors, the scenes of important events in their personal history, descriptions of the places of their burial, and many incidents in their careers are grouped into a pleasant narrative illustrated by a number of portraits and other pictures and the whole serving as a charming aid to intelligent appreciation of the city, which thousands here at home also will prize highly.

The Harper's various publications for 1896 are issued in their usual substantial and tasteful form. Harper's Bazar [$7.00] is pre eminently for the ladies. Yet there is a great deal in it which any man can appreciate and enjoy. Its successive issues make a very handsome and sumptuous volume.——In the same language we may describe Harper's Weekly [$7.00], the general interest of which is greater than that of the Bazar, because it devotes less attention to matters specially interesting to women alone and more to general topics, literary, political or other, the interest in which both sexes share. The political cartoons were a conspicuous feature last year, somewhat as in the days of Thomas Nast. The volume is a wonderfully comprehensive and delightful résumé of the main events of the year, as well as one rich in literary and artistic excellence.——The Monthly Magazine is bound in two substantial and handsome volumes [Each $3.00] and they make valuable and most commendable additions to the library in which they belong. When one realizes that they are volumes 92 and 93 the size of this library becomes impressive.——Harper's Round Table, the juvenile publication, certainly is the equal in its own way of either of the others. It is a beautiful volume, and would be a most appropriate birthday present for the boys and girls who do not know it. It appeals to the graver as well as the lighter side of the boy and girl nature and is truly admirable throughout.

Mr. Herbert Small has compiled and Messrs. Curtis & Cameron have issued in a tasteful pamphlet A Hand-Book of the New Library of Congress [30 cents], which all visitors to Washington, as well as thousands of others, will find of much interest and value. It affords a good idea of a building which probably is unsurpassed in this country for dignity and beauty, which has few peers anywhere, which is admirably adapted to its great work. The book includes essays on the Architecture, Sculpture and Painting of the Library, by Charles Coffin, and on The Function of a National Library, by Mr. A. R. Spofford, the librarian. It is illustrated freely.

NOTES

—— Mr. Barrie's Margaret Ogilvy has proved one of his most popular books and is selling very fast.

—— Mr. C. G. D. Roberts, the poet and novelist, is to be coeditor of the Illustrated American with Mr. Francis Bellamy.

—— Prof. Brander Matthews's Introduction to American Literature is to be printed in raised letters for the use of the blind.

—— The Old Wayside Inn at Sudbury, famous in literature but long a merely private residence, is to be reopened to the public.

—— It is announced authoritatively that Dr. Watson, "Ian Maclaren," will not leave his church in Liverpool either to settle abroad or elsewhere in Great Britain.

—— Mr. Andrew Lang calls Browning and Tennyson the glories of the Victorian Age. He thinks it doubtful—and with good reason —if George Eliot's writings are to be admired permanently by posterity.

—— Capt. Charles King, Prof. A. S. Hardy, John Brisben Walker and Richard Henry Savage, all in one or another way eminent in literature, roomed together in 1865 at the West Point U. S. Military Academy—a noteworthy fact.

—— Our authority proves to have been mistaken in regard to the statement which we made March 11 that the publication of Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton's In Childhood's Country would be deferred until next fall. The book, issued by Messrs. Copeland & Day, already is in the market, and we regret our error.

—— Mr. Laurence Hutton has given his valuable collection of death masks to Princeton University. Among them are those of Mary, Queen of Scots, Queen Elizabeth, Luther, Cromwell, Walter Scott, Frederick the Great, Edmund Burke, Burns, Keats, Napoleon, Thackeray, Lincoln, Washington, Clay, Calhoun, and other famous persons. Some are the only ones in existence of their respective subjects.

—— A very interesting address has come into our hands delivered by Rev. Frank T. Lee of Chicago at the Lee family reunion, held at Farmington, Ct., Aug. 12, 13, 1896. It is entitled Characteristic Traits of the Lee Family. The ancestors of the family evidently had the characteristics of the men of their time in addition to others which have been peculiar to their descendants and are prominent now. Among these are their sturdy devotion to education and religion, their patriotism, their love of business and almost uniform success in it. They have not been politicians or seemed to care for office.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Roberts Brothers. Boston.

Trooper Peter Halket of Mashonaland. By Olive Schreiner. pp. 133. $1 25.

Silver, Burdett & Co. Boston.

Elements of Descriptive Astronomy. By Herbert A. Howe, Sc. D. pp. 340. $1 36.

F. H. Revell Co. New York.

Autobiography of Charles Force Deems, D.D., LL D pp 365. $1 50.

The Epistle to the Romans. By J. M. Stifler, D.D. pp 275. $1.25.

Did the Pardon Come Too Late? By Maud B. Booth pp. 48 30 cents.

G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.

A Dictionary of the Targumim, the Talmud Babli and Yerushalmi, and the Midrashic Literature. Part IX. Compiled by M. Jastrow, Ph D. $1.25

Robert the Bruce, By Sir Herbert Maxwell. pp. 387. $1 50.

E. P. Dutton & Co. New York.

Herald Sermons. By Geo. H. Hepworth. pp. 232. $1.00.

Seven Glad Days. By Irene E. Jerome. $1.25.

Thomas Whittaker. New York.

How to Read the Bible. By W. F. Adeney. pp. 135. 50 cents.

The Open Secret. By A Priest. pp. 61. 50 cents.

James Pott & Co. New York.

The Divine Library. By J. Paterson Smyth, B. D., LL. D. pp. 128. 50 cents.

D. Appleton & Co. New York.

Memoirs of Marshal Oudinot, Duc de Reggio. By Gaston Stiegler. Translated by Alexander T. de Mattos. pp. 474. $2.00.

Longmans, Green & Co. New York.

The Will to Believe. By William James. pp. 332. $2 00.

PAPER COVERS

E. P. Dutton & Co. New York.

Hiram Golf's Religion. By Geo. H. Hepworth. pp. 127. 25 cents.

A Pinchbeck Goddess. By Mrs. J. M. Fleming (Alice M. Kipling). pp. 291. 50 cents.

G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.

Harriet Martineau: Little Journeys to the Homes of Famous Women. By Elbert Hubbard. 10 cents.

MAGAZINES

February. Pulpit.—Writer.

March. Treasury.—Young Man.—Temple.—Art Amateur —American Kitchen.—North American Review.—New England.—Forum.—Educational Review.—Book News.—Phrenological Journal.—Expositor.—Chap-Book.—Unitarian.—New World.—Good Words.—Month.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM SCOTLAND

Theological Lectures

Professor Story, the able occupant of the church history chair in Glasgow University, is Baird lecturer for this year, and has turned for his subject to the early founders and preachers of the Scottish church. Unfortunately, the audience has been small. This is not due to any want of ecclesiastical learning or controversial ability on the part of Dr. Story, who holds also the office of principal clerk of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, but is probably accounted for by the dry and remote nature of the subject. The course of free lectures given by the university authorities and inaugurated by Lord Kelvin has been well attended and shows how popular interest tends. At the same time a short series on Pastoral Theology, delivered to divinity students here by Dr. McAdam Muir, now the minister of Glasgow Cathedral, has roused some interest and suggested the importance of having that subject dealt with by a separate chair. A preacher of promise in the United Presbyterian Church, Rev. D. W. Forrest, has been appointed to the Ker lectureship, and is now delivering a series in the hall of that church in Edinburgh on The Christ of History and Experience.

But the course of greatest public interest and theological importance is undoubtedly that being delivered by Professor Bruce of the Free Church College, in the Bute Hall of the university, in connection with his holding for two winters of the Gifford lectureship. Dr. Bruce has chosen as his theme, The Providential Order of the Universe, and his utterances are being followed with much interest by large audiences on the Sunday afternoon. In particular, Dr. Bruce's tolerant and sympathetic view of the theory of evolution in its application to man has given rise to discussion, and more will likely be heard of his admissions on this subject. With his accustomed candor Dr. Bruce asserts that evolution does not degrade man, while man confers honor on evolution. It is simply the method of the Creator, as he guides the evolutionary process till it arrives at man, who crowns all that went before. It is generally felt that this course of Gifford lectures will supply thoughtful minds with fresh material and prove a worthy discussion of a large and attractive theme. Among Dr. Bruce's hearers the other Sunday was Dr. Edward Caird, the master of Balliol, Oxford.

The lecture delivered at the opening of the session by Prof. G. A. Smith, and pleading for a closer union between ministers and their former alma mater, is not being unheeded. It is probable that something in the nature of an annual reunion of those now separated from their theological college and from each other will be formed. The benefits of this union would be both social and intellectual. At all events the scheme is being talked of and matured, and its realization will be one fruit of Professor Smith's visit to America and his admiration of what he saw at work there.

Union of Churches

The formal union of the Congregational and Evangelical Union churches was consummated on the opening day of the year, and was celebrated in this city by a joint communion service. Later on a social meeting was held in Aberdeen to give expression to the delight with which this union was regarded by the members of the churches in the north of Scotland. Mr. John Leith, an energetic and well-known layman, presided on the occasion and the gathering of ministers and others was large and representative. The union, as the chairman remarked, may prove a good object lesson and lead to other and larger unions. The veteran Congregational minister, Dr. John Duncan of Aberdeen, was present and expressed his sympathy with the successful termination of the negotiations. As was natural, there are a few who persist in keeping outside this union. A meeting was recently convened at Glasgow and expressed dissatisfaction, on the part of some ministers and members of the Evangelical Union church, at being merged in a new and larger body. A letter in sympathy with the policy of isolation and of keeping up an independent organization was read from the widow of Dr. James Morison, the founder and leader of the Evangelical Union. Happily the colleague of the late Dr. Morison, Rev. George Gladstone, is in favor of union and has contributed largely to the result brought about by his vigorous personality. It is unlikely that much will come of this reactionary policy. The minority of the Evangelical Union church need not be alarmed that their way of preaching the gospel will be forgotten in the new union, and that in particular the temperance flag, which they have made a distinctive banner, will be unduly lowered. Meantime, the union of the Free and United Presbyterian churches is being ripened by friendly conference and discussion, and it is hoped that the Established Church will consent to the joint Presbyterian Hymnal at next assembly.

Dr. Stalker's Sermons to Young Men

The special program drawn up by Dr. Stalker for young men this winter, in Free St. Matthew's Church, embraces a course of nine lectures on Conversion. The subject is illustrated from the lives of St. Augustine, St. Francis of Assisi, Martin Luther, Bunyan, Tholuck and others. The church is crowded on the occasion, the second Sabbath of the month, when these lectures are delivered, and testifies to the exceptional influence wielded by Dr. Stalker as a preacher in this city. Indeed the attendance at St. Matthew's, as in the case of Trinity Congregational Church (Dr. Hunter's), is limited only by the accommodation available. Dr. Stalker devotes himself to preaching as closely as Mr. Chamberlain does to statesmanship, but he has this winter, as formerly, taken his share in advancing social and public questions. I found him lately among his books, and keenly interested in the publications that reach him from America. He was warm in his praise of your Book of the Pilgrimage and of the excellence of its illustrations, and mentioned that he values highly your yearly Handbook.

Dr. Hunter's Semi-jubilee

The popular minister of Trinity Congregational Church has reached this interesting period in his career, and the occasion was duly celebrated by his attached congregation at the annual social meeting held last month. An illuminated address was presented along with a purse of sovereigns to Dr. Hunter, and bore grateful testimony to the benefits derived by the congregation from his earnest and powerful preaching, the hopeful and helpful spirit of his message to young men and women more particularly, and not least to the value of his beautiful devotional services. Dr. Hunter in acknowledgment gave an interesting review of his ministry in England and for the last ten years in Glasgow, and expressed the encouragement and stimulus given him by this cordial recognition of his work. The large and attentive congregations drawn to Trinity Church are evidence that Dr. Hunter is not mistaken in thinking himself still young and but beginning his ministry. I saw him the week before he left for his holiday and found him looking as fresh as many ministers do after their vacation. But notwithstanding, Dr. Hunter confessed that he has felt the strain of a city congregation, and will eagerly welcome the bodily rest and the mental stimulus and refreshment afforded by a three months' tour in the East. It is his intention to spend a month both in Palestine and Egypt and to visit Athens, and the social meeting I have referred to wished him Godspeed in his journey.

The membership of Trinity Congregational Church, exclusive of those who belong to the mission church and those who are seat holders only, stands at 939. This is the result of Dr. Hunter's concentration and devotion to the work of preaching, in which he has claimed, and been willingly accorded by his people, a large amount of theological freedom. He rather shuns the public platform and ecclesiastical debates. His volume of Devotional Services is beautifully arranged and shows the importance assigned by this preacher to the worship of the church. During his absence Dr. Hunter's pulpit will be supplied by Rev. James Bell, who succeeded him at Hull.

Personal and Miscellaneous

The new moderator of the Free Church of Scotland in May next will be Rev. Hugh Macmillan, D. D , LL. D., of Greenock. Dr. Macmillan made a fresh speech at one of the recent Burns celebrations, and he is one of our most charming and widely read religious writers. He has an unrivaled knowledge of nature in the illustration of his subjects.

The "threefold option" has been discussed at temperance meetings in Glasgow and Edinburgh. Professor Calderwood of Edinburgh and Dr. G. A. Smith favor this plan of providing for the decision of the people in regulating the drink traffic. Professor Calderwood remarked at another meeting that R. L. Stevenson was one of his students but never attended except on a wet day!

Glasgow. W. M. R.

AN UNNOTICED PHASE OF COLLEGE LIFE

If one were to judge by the daily newspaper alone, the inference might be drawn that athletic contests constituted the main, and even the sole, interest of intercollegiate life. That there is another field for such contests is brought to mind by the great interest which centers in the coming intercollegiate debate between Yale and Harvard at Cambridge March 26.

The training is arduous. To be a member of one of these debating teams means from four to eight weeks of the hardest kind of work. The questions discussed are often large and involved. There is a great difference between these debates and the older college oratorical contests, which are still held in Western colleges. Here, it is not a set speech, a memorized oration that will answer. A complete knowledge of the subject must be gained and the speakers must do much of their thinking on their feet.

The coming debate between Yale and Harvard is of more than usual interest, for two reasons: first, because of the subject, which is "Resolved, That the United States should definitely adopt the single gold standard and should decline to enter a Bimetallic League even if Great Britain, Germany and France should be willing to enter such a league." Second, because, after a half-dozen successive defeats, Yale won her first victory over Harvard last year.

The meeting in Sander's Theater between Messrs. F. Dobyns of Ohio, G. H. Dorr of New Jersey and S. R. Wrightington of Massachusetts, representing Harvard, and Messrs. C. S. Macfarland of Massachusetts, C. H. Studinski of Colorado and C. U. Clark of New York, representing Yale, will be a contest well worthy of public interest. M.

BE SOMEBODY IN PARTICULAR

Here is a telling extract from the first address which Dr. Alexander Mackenzie gave at Tremont Temple in the Monday noon gatherings succeeding those held by Mr. Moody.

A great many good men's lives come to nothing because there is nothing in them. There is a kind of form, a sort of goodness, what we call innocence. You know what a child is when it is called innocent. Many are very good when they cannot possibly stay in this world any longer; they consent to take heaven as a second chance. But as long as they are here they are good for nothing. They are a torment to their families, a bad example to their children and a burden to the church. We describe them sometimes as colorless men, as men without character. There is nothing of them.

Now St. Paul described men in the opposite way. He says, in writing to the church at Corinth, there are a great many men and women in the church that are "members" of the church. That is nothing. Anybody can be a member of some church or other. What is the word? My brethren, the difference between one Christian and another is the word that follows brethren. You are a member of the church? I am glad you are. St. Paul said, "Members in particular"—a particular member.

I come into your town tomorrow and walk along the street, and I see a good-looking man and I say, Who is that man? Who is he? Well, I don't know; his name is—he is nobody in particular. But he is a man, isn't he? O, yes. Find his name in the directory? Yes. Got him in the census? Yes. What do you mean? I mean he is "nobody in particular." He might live anywhere else, do anything else; there is nothing of the man.

Who is that man? That man, that little man, sir? Rather a shabby hat, shabby coat? Yes, that man, who is he? Sir, that man is the finest lawyer in this town. But I mean the next man. That man is the deacon of our church. We have had seven ministers in seventeen years, and this man has gone through and held the thing. There's not a man in town worth so much as that poor, insignificant man. He is a member of the church. I dare say he is, and he is a member "in particular." What we want, my friend, to be "members in particular." "Be somebody." Be somebody in particular. . . .

I beg this morning in the name of all truth and honesty add to your membership in the churches one new word. You might have two catalogues. In my old First Church in Cambridge we have members in full communion and members who join the church and have children baptized, and then I have a private catalogue of another sort, members in particular. There are not so many of them, but every man of them counts a hundred, and we run up into thousands in that way in our church membership.

In and About Boston

Rev. I. J. Lansing Resigns

After a pastorate of somewhat more than four years, Rev. I. J. Lansing's resignation was read at Park Street Church yesterday. Early in 1896 he was surprised by the information conveyed to him from the society that his salary was to be reduced from $7,000 to $4,500. He proposed that the salary should remain at the former figure, which he had received from the beginning of his pastorate, and offered to contribute his share of the deficiency. Other sums were pledged, sufficient to provide for it. But the majority of the society insisted on the reduction, which Mr. Lansing declined to accept. Frequent and sometimes excited meetings have since been held and various votes passed, with the intention of bringing the pastorate to a close.

But Mr. Lansing has steadily adhered to his position that it was neither legal nor right for the society, under the circumstances, to reduce his salary. He has offered to consider any proposition it might make to him, looking to an equitable ending of their mutual relations. Some months ago the society rescinded the votes it had taken, with which he was concerned, and later, Jan. 9, a committee of the society made to him the proposal to pay his salary in full, at the rate of $7,000 per annum, to a date to be agreed upon and for six months thereafter. This proposal he accepted Jan. 14, and it was ratified Jan. 19. Some difficulties arose over the form of the receipt to be signed by Mr. Lansing, but the society has finally accepted the one written by himself. Thus the pastorate will end April 1, to the relief of both parties, for the dissension has for some time been such as to make satisfactory work impossible either on the part of the church or the pastor.

Mr. Lansing is a minister of earnest, able and upright character, and a very effective public speaker. Park Street has long been one of the strong and honored churches of Boston, with a noble and most interesting history. It has a very important site and a valuable property, and it is hoped that it may regain its prosperity and continue to hold the position of influence which it has long maintained in our denomination.

The Cecilia Concert for Wage-Earners

Boston is indeed a Mecca for music-lovers, with its free organ recitals and many other opportunities where all, irrespective of rank or wealth, may have their souls uplifted on wings of song. The "wage-earners' concerts," provided by the thoughtful generosity of the Cecilia Club, brings the best music within the reach of all working people for a sum so small that they not only can attend personally, but are enabled to share the pleasure with their parents or with the younger children. Hence the audience has a distinctly family appearance, the silver hair often coming next the gold.

The Cecilia, whose membership includes both men and women, is one of Boston's most famous musical organizations and its recent concert marked an epoch in the history of music. The program consisted of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, which, on account of its extreme difficulty, had never before been given in Boston entire. Strength and beauty are its characteristics—a majestic conception worked out with surpassing sweetness and grace. A peculiarity of the construction is that, instead of being divided arbitrarily into solos and choruses, most of the time orchestra, chorus and quartet are heard simultaneously, but with an exquisite balancing and interblending reached only by this master of harmony. It produces the effect of the whole universe joining in a service of worship, and so impressive is this devotional atmosphere that applause seems out of place. We have space to touch upon two or three features only—the marvelous tone-painting in that portion of the Apostles' Creed which describes the life of Christ; Kneisel's rendering of the exquisite violin obligato in the Benedictus, whose pleading, thrilling tones seemed to penetrate even to heaven itself and bring the benediction down; and the prayer which brings to a fitting close a work of rare sublimity. Few in that vast audience could go away without having been purified and ennobled. If there be such a thing as immortal music, we expect to hear the Missa Solemnis sung by the hosts of the redeemed around the great white throne.

The Union Meetings

Dr. McKenzie had another large audience at Tremont Temple last Monday noon and preached a searching sermon of a decidedly evangelistic order from the text, "God commended his love to us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." In the course of the discourse he laid particularly strong emphasis on the divinity of Christ, bringing out the point that the religion which did not include Him thus was little better than a pagan religion and lacked the vital element.

Dr. A. T. Pierson is conducting meetings at Park Street Church every evening this week, beginning with Tuesday. Mr. Moody's committee, of which Mr. H. M. Moore is the leading member, is making every effort to perpetuate the good results of the recent evangelistic campaign and a good portion of the religious public is showing a marked appreciation of these supplementary services.

Another English Visitor

Close upon the visits to Boston of Mr. Meyer and Dr. Grenfell comes that of Rev. Archibald G. Brown, who preached twice at the Clarendon Street Baptist Church last Sunday. The large congregations included some who had known of Mr. Brown's thirty years' faithful and fruitful labor in the East London Tabernacle, which is one of the few great centers of evangelistic influence in the dreary and degraded East London district. His intimate friendship with Spurgeon, whose funeral sermon he preached, and his love for the late Dr. A. J. Gordon constituted another tie between him and his hearers. His sermons were simple, direct and evangelical.

It is not every man who would have worked steadily and laboriously in this unattractive field for thirty years. Mr. Brown comes of good stock. On his mother's side he belongs to the Heath family, a name well known in Nonconformist history during the last two centuries, whilst among his cousins are Dr. Cunningham Geikie, author of a well-known Life of Christ; Sir Archibald Geikie, the geologist; the late John Geikie, Scotch etcher. A happier pastorate no one could have had than "the East End Spurgeon," but at fifty-four he feels that the strain must be relaxed. He conducted the services in the Tabernacle on Sunday, Feb 21, all the next day he sat in the vestry receiving the people's thank offerings, which amounted to £430, and on the 24th he sailed for America. He has engaged to preach at Denver, Col., for a month, commencing April 4. Invitations have come from all parts. While perfectly willing to do what he can during this trip, he must have a season of rest.

The Growth of Y. M. C. Associations

No organization for Christian work presents more cheering results today than this one in behalf of young men. It is the result of faithful study of their conditions and surroundings by men of large business experience. It takes young men where it finds them, offers to them what they already realize that they need, and seeks to lift them to higher levels.

The annual banquet of the Executive Committee of the Associations of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, given at the Brunswick Hotel, Boston, last week, showed the esteem in which this work is held by men of affairs. It was attended by about 150 men from various sections of the two States, prominent in business and public life. It was addressed by Cephas Brainard, Esq., of New York, President Tuttle of the Boston & Maine Railroad, and General Superintendent Platt of the New Haven division of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. These gentlemen spoke eloquently and earnestly of the value of the association in helping young men, especially railroad employés, to understand and to make the most of themselves. They need society and will seek it, of one kind or another. The association helps them to upright and inspiring social life. They have ambition to improve their bodies and minds. The association gives them opportunities to do both, and invites them to pure and useful spiritual life. It makes them more reliable workmen, more intelligent citizens, more just and honorable in their relations with their employers; and it leads many of them to become earnest Christians. In these times, when so large a proportion of young men are away from home or without homes, engaged in exciting and exacting business, no other institution can do for them what is being done by Y. M. C. Associations.

The growth of this organization in Massachusetts and Rhode Island indicates not only its usefulness, but the character and energy of those who have it in charge. During the last ten years the number of associations has increased from forty-two to ninety-three, the members from 14,722 to 33,250, the buildings from eight to twenty-eight, the gymnasiums from fourteen to fifty-eight, the Bible classes from twenty-one to sixty-three and the property from $385,000 to $1,852,000. During the last year the State Committee has taken possession of its fine, five-story building at 167 Tremont Street, which is intended to be headquarters for members of the association. The figures above given show in a measure the interest taken in this work by business Christian men. Many of them are convinced of its increasing necessity and that it is nobly accomplishing its aim. They are giving to it their enthusiastic support. With such an army of young men as this association represents, and such fruits of their organization as are already exhibited, there is no occasion to lose faith in the Christian character and zeal of the coming generation.

Tidings have just reached the officials of the American Board of the death, at Harpoot, on Feb. 22, after a three days' illness with inflammation of the brain, of Rev. Egbert Smythe Ellis. He was born in Kittery, Me., thirty years ago, and was graduated from Williams College in 1890 and from Andover in 1894, sailing for Turkey the same autumn. He has been fearless and indefatigable in his work at Harpoot during the horrors of the past two years. He has traveled over the stricken district distributing relief and reorganizing the scattered work, covering hundreds of miles on horseback and living with the people. He returned from one of his long trips only a few days before his death. He was rapidly winning the confidence, esteem and affection of the people.

It is a disputed question whether the present and past occupants of the Congregational House, or outsiders who occasionally use the elevator, will be most pleased by the startling news that the work of demolition of the houses on the site of the future new building has begun.

It will be Ministers' Day at the Zoo next Monday, and every minister at the Boston Ministers' Meeting that morning may procure a free ticket. The big orang-outang will receive at the Zoo.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come

Boston Ministers' Meeting, Pilgrim Hall, March 22, 10 A. M. Speaker, Rev. D. L. Furber, D. D. Subject, The Missionary, John Eliot.

Foreign Missionary Prayer Meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 A. M.

Benevolent Societies

The Congregational Home Missionary Society is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

Woman's Home Missionary Association, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership. $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

Woman's Board of Missions, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

The American Missionary Association, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

The Congregational Church Building Society—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

Congregational Education Society (Including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

Cong. Sunday School & Publishing Society.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

Massachusetts Board of Ministerial Aid.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House. Boston.

Ministerial Relief.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

The Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

The Boston Seaman's Friend Society, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary. Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS

A few such lessons as Worcester Sabbath breakers have learned as a result of the activity of some loyal young Christians have sufficed to establish among the tradesmen of that city a proper respect for the first day of the week.

The welcome given the new members of a Connecticut church is the spirit of fellowship which will encourage other accessions.

An Interior church has planned wisely to attract a congregation of real worshipers at its second Sunday service.

To pastors and laywomen desirous of helping the little ones and binding them to the church, we commend the Children's Social Hour as arranged in St. Louis and described in our article on institutional features of that city.

One good result of the hard times will be the consolidation of small neighboring churches which otherwise would have struggled to maintain separate organizations.

That small Nebraska church which has furnished pastors for four others and a leader for a fifth has not lived in vain.

Perhaps that New Jersey church which has lightened its burdens by removing an old debt learned how to do it through generous attention first to its benevolences.

A Maine church showed its interest in the meaning of Inauguration Day.

Of Special Note

Increased power through concentration in Wichita, Kan.

Solution of the "second service" problem in several places.

A rare tribute to humble, upright living in a Michigan city.

Added strength to our denomination in Indiana.

PROGRESS IN RHODE ISLAND

Our churches in Providence and vicinity have been doing their work during the winter in a spirit of consecrated expectancy. Most of them have received at each communion new members on confession, a circumstance which has been as a silver lining to our business clouds, reminding us of God's way in the past when business reverses have worked together for good. The United Church in Newport, under the leadership of its new pastor, Dr. T C. McClelland, is in good heart and reaching vigorously towards things that are before. Rev. Mahlon Van Horne, many years the pastor of the Union (colored) Church in that city, has recently resigned and been dismissed by council.

Our churches in Pawtucket and Central Falls, six in all, are prospering and becoming increasingly centers of influence. The Weeden Street, Rev. George Bloomfield, pastor, finds its present seating room too small and proposes soon to arise and build. The Park Place Church and the Central Falls Church are veritable industrial institutes doing a noble work, while the parent church, with its pastor, Rev. Alexander McGregor, reports at its recent annual meeting the reception of thirty-one new members during the year, eighteen on confession, and benevolences of $4,254.

We note with no little satisfaction that representatives from our churches in every section of the State are prominent in movements for the betterment of the dependent, defective and delinquent classes of society. Christian Citizenship Leagues with kindred organizations are keeping their faithful watch and pressing towards much needed political and other general local reforms.

A few weeks ago Dr. Kneeland, representing the New England Sabbath League, occupied several pulpits, and is booked for the closing week in April in Providence and Pawtucket. May his coming be in the fullness of the blessing, for among us, with shore resort temptations in summer, much need of vigorous, intelligent and united action looking toward the better observance of the Sabbath is felt.

Our Episcopal friends held a denominational club rally a few weeks ago in Providence, at which representatives of ability from near and far discussed broadly questions of common interest to the Church of Christ generally. How great the need today, in all our denominations, of men like "the children of Issachar, that had understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do."

A.

SUCCESS IN DEBT RAISING

The debt of $7,500 on the beautiful new edifice dedicated last autumn in Wellington, O., gave little hope of removal while the town was suffering as now from even more than its share of the hard times. Depressing talk for two years, since the former house was destroyed by fire, added no cheer, and there was general discomfiture. Missionary contributions were sadly reduced, and there was utter inability to meet the estimated expenses of the current year.

At such a crisis the congregation was called together, and under a sudden inspiration voted "that the debt shall now be raised." The Ladies' Benevolent Society, always in the lead, had already assumed $1,000. Then ten individuals came to the front, promising $300 each if the debt should be wholly paid. There we stuck fast—no more $300 men in sight, but the balance of the debt full in view.

A letter was prepared stating our urgent case, requesting a subscription and bearing at the bottom a blank form of pledge. Due notice having been given on a Sunday, the next day a volunteer force of twenty young ladies addressed personally 750 of these letters—one to every man, woman and child in the parish—and carried them to all the homes. The notes were left till Friday, when the same messengers called, gathered them up in sealed envelopes and brought them that evening to the church. A large congregation was assembled eager to learn the result. Meanwhile a committee of twelve men and women had been doing faithful work with individuals. The people had become thoroughly aroused. In one corner of the town six families challenged one another to give $100 each, and it was done.

The meeting opened with devotions and praise. Then the pastor, Rev. A. F. Skeele, drew on the blackboard the outline of a mountain peak representing the debt. At the base was cut off the $1,000 of the ladies, then the great section of $3,000 pledged by the ten, then the $600 of the "north end syndicate." The committee proceeded to open the envelopes, and as fast as the pledges footed $100 the sum, without names, was announced by the pastor and another slice cut from the mountain. So we crept up the peak. However glorious climbing the Matterhorn may be, it must surely yield to the exhilaration of this ascent.

What applause as $100 after another ate away the face of the mountain! But every dollar was pledged on condition of securing the whole. When all the envelopes were opened we found ourselves within $400 of the summit. "Keep a-going," was the word. Indeed, no one could stop it now, and in a few minutes the last dollar was pledged and our mountain of debt was removed. With a fervent "Praise God" and an all-round hand-shaking the protracted meeting dispersed. Analysis of the letters showed more than 300 subscribers to the debt, in sums ranging from five cents to $100. There were seventy-five pledges of less than a dollar each, sixty-one of $1, forty of $5, only eight of over $50.

This letter plan has marked advantages. It interests more people, appeals to higher motives, avoids publicity and gets more money. But the letter was only one of several forces which united to win. The advance pledges of the ladies and of the "big ten" and a strong co-operating committee made a combination hard to defeat. Most of the pledges were in cash, and so, at the end of a week, more than $6,000 were actually in hand, either in cash or in interest-bearing notes. With the debt removed, it is not strange that the current expenses seemed to adjust themselves. We begin to live again. It has worked out into nothing short of a revival of religion. The identity of the financial and the spiritual welfare is already apparent in new decisions for Christ and a number of persons uniting with the church.

"When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream. The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

A. F. S.

INSTITUTIONAL FEATURES IN ST. LOUIS

Some of the churches in the city are emphasizing a line of social and educational work. Immanuel has just become a distributing station of the St. Louis Public Library. Fountain Park has on its shelves a stock of the Public Library books, which it changes once a month; and now the Sunday school of First Church is making a similar arrangement to re-enforce its library. Compton Hill has opened a reading-room with a stock of periodicals valued at $60. In connection with this it has added to the Sunday services a social hour for the children at 3 P. M. Bible stories are told, a 10-minute sermon is preached and some time is spent over the magazines and papers under the care of the pastor and ladies of the church. Webster Groves has had a free library and reading-room in operation since the opening of the new edifice. The room is supplied with books, papers and magazines, and is open, under the care of a librarian, from one to six and seven to 10 o'clock every week day, except during the Wednesday prayer meeting. The library contains 807 volumes, of which 119 were added last year. During 1896 the rooms were open 311 days, and 7,706 visits were made to them, an average of 25 per day. This was also an average of over three visits each for the entire population of Webster. During the year 2,638 volumes were issued. Pilgrim has maintained for many years a parish library, which has been open during the S. S. hour and on Wednesday evening. Plymouth and Redeemer continue their Chautauqua circles. First, Central and Hyde Park carry on Boys' Brigades, and various others conduct clubs for social, civil or educational purposes. These churches are not institutional, nor are they known as such, but something of the spirit and activity of this idea is entering in without the name.

CONCENTRATION IN WICHITA

Efforts to combine Congregational forces in this city of Kansas have proved singularly successful. In 1894 Rev. Messrs. J. S. Gould and F. G. Ward became co-pastors of the four existing churches, whose aggregate membership was then 120. Under their guidance Olivet and Mayflower were disbanded and their working elements were merged in Plymouth and Fairmount. Under the new régime Plymouth has become self-supporting, increased its annual home expenditure from $800 to $1,560, received 126 members, paid $500 of a debt of $700, and provided for the remainder. It has increased its benevolences in a year from $37 to $505. In 1895 Mr. Ward went to Germany for study, and Mr. Gould has continued as the successful pastor of Plymouth, which is now the only Congregational church in the center of the city. Meanwhile, Fairmount Church, located near Fairmount College, has increased in membership and vigor and is now able to pay the larger portion of its pastor's salary. It has removed the building of the disbanded Mayflower Church to its own locality to use as a house of worship. The edifice of the other disbanded church (Olivet), was removed in 1895 to Alva, Okl., for the use of the church there.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES

Bangor

Dr. F. F. Emerson recently delivered two interesting and carefully prepared lectures on Theology as a Science and Nature and God. Dr. Emerson is temporarily residing in Bangor and is considered a valuable addition to the Congregational circles of the city. He was formerly a pastor in Amherst, Mass , and Newport, R. I., and more recently supplied the Union Church in Worcester.——Rev. Messrs. R. T. Hack, C. P. Cleaves, G. K. Goodwin of the board of visitors spent several days here last week.——The semi-annual meeting of the Students' Association took place at First Parish Church, March 8. Addresses were made by the students on The Social Value of the Church, The Worth of Undeveloped Talent, and Henry Ward Beecher.——The following members of the Senior Class have been appointed Commencement speakers: F. H. Baker, K. E. Evans, M. A. Farren, William Ganley, T. H. Kinney, B. A. Lucas, E. H. Newcomb, G. H. Woodward.——The Middle Class is taking optional work in ethics.——The Bond lectures will be given in the Hammond Street Church and will be open to the public.

Andover

Stanton H. King and Rev. Daniel Merriman, D. D., have lectured recently before the Society of Inquiry on Ministerial Qualifications.——At the annual meeting of the Boston Inter-Seminary Missionary Alliance last week E. M. Bartlett read a paper on The Problem of the Country Church, and a discussion followed.——The meetings of the Literary Seminar were completed for the winter with an essay by B. E. Ray on Hawthorne's Scarlet Letter.

Hartford

Professor Genung of Amherst has just given an interesting lecture on the Minister in His Relation to Literature.——At the missionary meeting last Wednesday Rev. A. E. Dunning, D. D., spoke of Some Impressions of Foreign Mission Work which he received while visiting Egypt, Syria, Asia Minor and Turkey two years ago. To many it put the work in an entirely new light.——Last Thursday a large number of the students visited the State Prison with Professor Merriam. The warden personally conducted the party through the institution and explained its government.——The second semi-annual banquet of the seminary has just occurred ——Mr. H. E. Krehbiel gave a lecture this week, under the auspices of the Hartford School of Music, on How to Listen to Music.——The spring vacation began March 13 and ends on the 22d.

Yale

Among the lectures last week were: The Modern Novel by Prof. W. L. Phelps, The Influence of the Greek Games on Sculpture by Prof. J. M. Hoppin, and The Battle of Gettysburg by Mr H. G. Beuhler. ——The papers read before the Biblical Club were on Wisdom Literature.——Austin Rice of the Senior Class gave a lecture on Debating before the Freshman Union of the college.——The Leonard Bacon Club debated, Resolved, That vivisection should be prohibited by law.——Dr. Arthur Fairbanks is giving a course of illustrated lectures on Greek Religion.——Last week Wednesday afternoon H. F. Rall of the Senior Class gave an able address on The Theory of Evolution in its Bearing on the Christian Doctrine of Sin.——Professor Fisher's class in the history of Christian doctrine is having an interesting discussion of Jonathan Edwards and the New England Theology.——The Senior Class have presented a petition to the faculty for a change in the Commencement program which shall make it less academic.——The preacher before the class last Saturday morning was S. Knapp, Jr.

Oberlin

Ex-President Fairchild is this week closing for the year his work in systematic theology. The review of the subject has been by means of papers prepared and read by members of the class.——Dr. H. M. Tenney of the Second Church begins at once a course of 12 lectures on The Positive Institutions of the Church. The course is given in alternate years and this is the third time Dr Tenney gives it. ——The graduating class has arranged as an additional feature of Commencement this year a baccalaureate sermon, to be preached May 2.

Chicago

The monthly conference of faculty and students last week was led for the first time by Prof. Fridolf Risberg of the Swedish department, who took as his subject What We Can Learn from a Heathen Woman. The attendance was large, and for the first time there were prayers in four languages—English, German, Norwegian and Swedish.——Last Friday Dr. N. H. Whittlesey was present at prayers and made a plea in behalf of the Society for Ministerial Relief.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS

N. J.—The Northern Conference met March 9 with the church at Bound Brook. The attendance was large. In the morning Rev. J. A. Chamberlin read a somewhat advanced paper on Sociology's Call to Men of the Church. In the afternoon the new Congregational Union of New Jersey—an organization for forwarding church extension and missionary enterprises within the State—was brought into permanent form, after which the conference listened with great interest, though doubtless not with universal assent, to Dr. Lyman Abbott's address on The Scientific Conception of Revelation. It appeared that Dr. Abbott was more conservative than the newspapers have represented him. Dr. W. H. Ward followed him with a short address which was not less radical.

CLUBS

IND.—Indianapolis Club met March 9 in Mayflower Church with an attendance of about 50. Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, D. D , gave the leading address on The Present-Day Message of Our Ministry. This message had three elements: The necessity for intellectuality of spiritual life, social democracy and fervid evangelism. The address was received with delight, since it was vigorous and practical.

NEW ENGLAND

Boston

[For other Boston news see page 390.]

Berkeley Temple will recognize its 70th anniversary Sunday, April 4. All past and present members of the church and congregation are asked to share in this observance.

Eliot. The resignation of Rev. Dr. B. F. Hamilton last Sunday came as a surprise to his congregation. But the pastor has for some time felt that the burden of carrying on the work amid changed conditions was too great for him, and that the church needed to undertake new methods which a new pastor could better inaugurate. The relations between pastor and people have been most cordial during all the 25 years of this pastorate, and the work done has been a noble one.

Massachusetts

SOMERVILLE.—Prospect Hill. A large and enthusiastic sociable of the men connected with this church was held March 10. The supper was followed by addresses on current topics by Messrs. E. L. Tead, J. M. Woods and G. A. Kimball. This was the first attempt to bring together the large number of men of the congregation, and it met with such success as to encourage a repetition. Instead of the usual missionary meeting of the Woman's Union a "Converzatione on Spain" was held. Interesting papers were interspersed by solos and duets. The parlors were crowded. Rev. E. S. Tead is pastor.

MEDFORD.—Mystic The financial condition of the society as reported at the annual meeting held last Wednesday is the most satisfactory that has been shown for years. All bills are paid and a good balance remains in the treasury. The benevolences also were the largest for many years. It was unanimously voted to add $300 to the salary of the pastor, Rev. John Barstow.

HYDE PARK has made all the efforts in its power to keep its pastor, Rev. Dr. A. W. Archibald. But as he feels that duty calls him to accept his call to Brockton, his people have sorrowfully but generously passed resolutions commending him to the love, confidence and united support of the congregation to which he is going.

SAUGUS.—A quiet interest has been felt in church and Sunday school all winter. Evening meetings have been crowded since November. Several cases of hopeful conversion have occurred. Rev. J. C. Labaree is pastor.

NORTH READING.—Union. Among the four additions to membership on confession this month was a man 87 years of age. The others were a mother and twin daughters. The young people have lately held an interesting entertainment under the direction of the pastor, Rev. E. E. Colburn, which will net about $25 for a new organ fund.

NORTH CHELMSFORD.—Plymouth, organized last summer, has built a house seating 200 or more, which will be finished about May. Rev. P. A. Bradford is pastor and S. S. superintendent. No help from any missionary society was received, and not a large debt has been incurred.

FITCHBURG.—Rollstone. March 7 was an inspiring day to the church and its new pastor, Rev. W. O. Conrad. Twelve persons were added on confession and 11 by letter.

SAXONVILLE.—Edwards. At the March communion seven new members joined the church, five on confession, making the total additions for the five years of the present pastorate 59. At the annual meeting of the parish, March 7, the treasurer's report for the fifth consecutive time showed a balance. Accordingly it was voted to make the pastor a gift of $100 in recognition of this continued prosperity. Every department of the church is flourishing, especially the Sunday school and the C. E. Society. The outlook for conversions is hopeful. Rev. G. A. Brock is pastor.

PLYMOUTH.—Church of the Pilgrimage received 20 new members last week Sunday, 16 on confession, the partial result of special union meetings recently held without the aid of an evangelist. About as many more have declared themselves for the Christian life. The roll of membership now numbers above 400, the largest in the history of the church The pastor, Rev. E. W. Shurtleff, is entering upon the seventh year of his work.

WORCESTER.—At the Ministers' Meeting, March 8, Rev. W. A. Busch of the Advent Church read a paper on The Hope of the World's Conversion.——Several city pastors have united in spending an afternoon once a fortnight in prayer and a quiet time with a desire for a deeper spiritual life.——Union. At the March communion 30 persons were received into the church, seven on confession, among them a man 86 years old and his granddaughter. During Lent Dr. J. E. Tuttle, the pastor, will take for his Sunday evening themes The Words from the Cross, and for the midweek prayer meeting The Last Teachings of the Master. Holy Week will be observed with services every evening.——Belmont. Rev. W. B. Oleson, who has been sick for several weeks, has so far recovered as to occupy his pulpit again.——The recent movement, initiated by the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League Unions, for the better enforcement of the Sunday laws, has resulted in a better order of things on the Lord's Day. Two weeks ago five grocers and a druggist were brought into court and fined $20 each for violating the Sunday laws

NORTH BROOKFIELD.—First. The services previous to April will be in special preparation for a series of evangelistic meetings. At the recent birthday party of the Ladies' Benevolent Society $115 were cleared.

Charlton mourns greatly the loss of Mr. D. R. Dodge, whose death occurred March 7, in his 69th year. He had been deacon of the church for many years and a member of the church for 46 years.

Springfield.—First. The adoption of a new creed is being considered. A service in the interests of Berea College, Kentucky, was held recently, North and South Churches uniting. Rev. W. G. Frost, president of the college, and Rev. W. E. Barton were the speakers. An afternoon reception was tendered these two gentlemen later, and Dr. Barton read selections from his sketches of life in the hills of Kentucky.——Hope. The Boys' Brigade held sway on a recent Sunday evening, the local organization having invited the other brigades of the city and vicinity to attend in a body. The front part of the church was well filled by the boys and young men, and the pastor, Rev. R. W. Brokaw, preached an appropriate sermon. Mr. E. F. Talmadge also spoke.——Park. A S. S. class of boys hired the city hall for an illustrated lecture on the beauties of the Adirondacks lately, and secured financial help for the church.

Pittsfield.—The organization of the new memorial church was practically completed last Sunday and several new members were received. The entire membership is 80. The outlook for the church is good, owing to the district which it accommodates. The enterprise is the outgrowth of a Sunday school and C. E. Society of several years' growth.

Maine

Portland.—The Young Ladies' City Mission Band, for many years a prominent factor in local missionary work, has disbanded in order to give way to The Daughters of the Covenant, a new organization covering the same ground but intended to enlist the interest and co-operation of a younger grade of members. An auxiliary in each church has been formed.——Several of the churches devoted the first week of Lent to special services.——Williston. At the quarterly review of the S. S. lessons Rev. R. T. Hack of Second Parish Church gave an illustrated stereopticon lecture on the subjects covered.——Second Parish. The Sunday evening services have been greatly stimulated by similar lectures. The pastor follows these with an after meeting in the vestry, often with marked spiritual results.

Sanford.—Through the influence of the pulpit an anti-tobacco movement is extending over the town. Men are attending church who for years have been absentees and opposers of the work. Large congregations, increasing spiritual power and an increased membership of nearly 80 are noticed. The pastor is Rev. C. L. Woodbury. A device is used in the preservation of prayer-meeting hymnals which has kept nearly 200 copies in their places for more than two years. The cover on one side was painted a flaming red, and now the books remain at the church.

Bucksport.—Elm Street. The expense of renewing the interior of the meeting house was assumed by the ladies, who have by persistence and energy raised all but $70 of the $2,000 needed.

Gray is holding a series of special meetings, Rev. S. D. Towne assisting, and Pavilion Church, Biddeford, is assisted likewise by Rev. D. T. Call.——A union prayer service for the new Administration of the Government was held in Farmington.——After a long absence from illness Mr. E. B. Wood has resumed his pastoral duties in Lovell.

New Hampshire

Marlboro.—Beginning March 2 and closing March 14 Evangelists Gillam and Estey have held daily services in the Congregational and Methodist churches. In spite of inclement weather and a bad condition of the roads the attendance was uniformly large. About 100 persons signed cards indicating a desire to begin a Christian life, and church members were greatly quickened. There was no excitement, but a deep spiritual impression was made by the judicious methods of these two workers. They began a campaign at South Braintree, Mass., this week.

Hillsboro Bridge.—At the last communion eight persons were received to the church on confession as a result of recent special meetings. Eight had previously been received, and more are expected. The Young Men's Evening Service Club has done much to arouse interest and make effective and profitable the Sunday evening services, which give increasing promise of good results.

Rye.—Thirteen new members were received March 8, on confession. Eight were baptized. These were part of the fruits of the extra meetings held in January. More will follow at the next communion. The church is in a flourishing condition, having one of the largest congregations in southern New Hampshire. Rev. A. W. Mills, the pastor, came from Brooklyn, N. Y., about a year ago.

Hollis.—Since the beginning of the year the S. S. attendance has increased, and the contributions have maintained the usual good record. On a recent Sunday over $5 were collected for the suffering Armenians.

Newport.—Rev. James Alexander is giving Sunday evenings interesting and instructive lectures on different books of the Bible.

Vermont

Rev. C. H. Williams of Hartford, Ct., has supplied the pulpit in St. Albans acceptably for the past 10 weeks.——Evangelistic services are being held in Sheldon assisted by Rev. Hollis Jordan.

Rhode Island

Providence.—Central. A course of five illustrated lectures is in progress by the Young People's Society, to increase their pledge for the church debt.——Free Evangelical. The Christian Alliance held a three days' convention with this people recently. This church has had free sittings for over 50 years. Its covenant contains a strong temperance pledge, inserted at the time it was formed.——Highland. Rev. L. S. Woodworth's Bible class recently surprised its teacher with an evening visit to the parsonage. The morning congregations have nearly doubled in numbers during the last six months.

Riverpoint.—An awakened interest has been shown by means of Bible readings, led by Miss Deborah Knox of Pawtucket, and other services in which Rev. F. H. Adams was assisted by Rev. L. S Woodworth. Quite a number have accepted Christ and begun the Christian life.

Connecticut

New Britain.—First. Rev. J. H. Denison, who is supplying the pulpit, is at the chapel Saturday forenoon for conversation and in the afternoon holds a special Bible reading.——South. Hamilton W. Mabie of the Outlook lectured in the parish house last week on Literature as a Personal Resource. The last of the talk nights of the season was held last week Wednesday night, about 60 being present, of whom the majority took part in the discussion, the subject being, Newspapers and Newspaper Reading.

Hartford.—Fourth. Rev. H. H. Kelsey gave a week ago Sunday evening the first of a series of five special sermons to extend through Lent.——Asylum Hill. At the annual meeting of the society the committee was authorized to make arrangements for enlarging the S. S. room.——Mr. R. H. Smith, editor of the Religious Herald, has become proprietor of that weekly and will act as its manager after April 1. The paper will continue along the same lines practically as in the past.

Suffield.—First. Repairs and alteration to cost over $4,000 are contemplated. They include the removal and rebuilding of the organ, putting in a water motor, furnishing the building with electric lights, laying a new carpet and redecorating the interior. Half the required sum is already subscribed.

Old Lyme.—The number of new members received within a year is 14, of whom 12 came on confession. The pastor, Rev. Arthur Shirley, completes a pastorate of seven years with the last Sunday in April and ends his labors with this church at that time.

Bristol.—March 7 was a great day for the churches of this place. Besides the 39 already noted as joining the Congregational church, 45 were baptized at other churches and 75 admitted to the Methodist church. This increase is due to the recent revival meetings.

Kent.—The engagement of Rev. Howard Mudie having expired, the society has voted to retain him six months longer, thus concurring with a previous vote of the church. Large congregations attend the Sunday services and a new Junior Society is at work.

Ekonk.—No services have been held in the Voluntown church since the resignation of Rev. John Elderkin after 15 years' labor. The church numbered 34 members last year with no additions or removals. The parish expenses were $611.

Southington.—First. A week ago Sunday Rev. Joseph Danielson preached his farewell sermon as pastor. His resignation does not take effect until April 1, but he will not occupy the pulpit longer.

After the weekly prayer meeting last week an informal reception was tendered the members who joined the church at Glastonbury, March 7.——The local church missionary society at Essex has contributed $25 for famine suffers in India.——The church at Higganum receives $1,000 as a bequest from the late Mrs. Daniel Scoville of Meriden.——An interesting memorial service in recognition of the new windows lately placed in the Putnam meeting house was held last Sunday morning.——Milford is holding helpful union revival meetings.

MIDDLE STATES

New York

Schroon Lake reports a successful year. The annual records show a gain in membership of 26, of whom 22 came on confession. The outstanding obligations were all covered. During the year the church building has been reshingled and repainted. The work of the Sunday school showed special prosperity in its library improvements. Many of the S. S. members were among those who have united with the church on confession. Rev. Henry Lewis is pastor.

Middletown.—North Street, in December, had a "barrel social" which brought $80. Following the Week of Prayer meetings were continued for six weeks, as a result of which 30 members have been received to the church, 18 on confession. The church members were blessed and many were revived. At a church fair later, lasting three days, the church cleared $409. Rev. J. W. Norris is pastor.

West Groton has had a remarkable work of grace. The pastor, Rev. John Cunningham, has been assisted by pastors in active service. About 20 have been added to the Y. P. S. C. E., and all departments are enlarged and full of enthusiasm. A large number of converts are young married persons. Cottage prayer meetings are now taking the place of special meetings.

Black Creek, like other churches in the State, has had a gracious awakening, about 28 having expressed a desire to lead new lives. The converts are mostly young people. The earnest pastor, Rev. C. T. Cooley, not satisfied with the demands of his own parish, goes out to neighboring churches. His labors at Strykersville have been helpful to a number of persons.

Olean has received a strong impulse to larger things as the result of the recent labors of Rev. H. E. Gurney, evangelist. Rev. J. H. McKee is pastor. Many families have recently identified themselves with this organization, and the sittings are becoming scarce in the house of worship.

Jamestown.—Dr. A. L. Smalley, pastor of the First Church, will conduct a party of 10 persons of this city on a European tour, sailing about April 10.

New Jersey

Upper Montclair.—A pastor's class has been instituted to meet half an hour after the Sunday school. It is designed to make clear to all interested what it means to be a Christian and to join the church. The pastor is conducting weekly Lenten readings, using Tullock's Development of Christian Thought in England in the Nineteenth Century.

Elizabeth.—The debt has recently by a payment of $700 been reduced to $400. The church is growing in every department, and congregations have increased largely. The pastor, Rev. C. C. Clark, and his wife and the S.S. superintendent have been remembered with handsome gifts.

East Orange.—The pastor, Dr. F. W. Baldwin, has decided to continue his Tuesday evening talks on Genesis, so many requests for them have been received. Questions are solicited from the audiences and helpful discussions result.

Hoboken.—Fifteen persons have been added to the membership of this young church within a twelvemonth. The Sunday school is flourishing, and progress in general is marked.

Glen Ridge, in spite of the times, increased its beneficence last year nearly $400 and paid off an old debt of $1,000. It is thriving in all ways and a larger building is needed.

Chester has recently paid off a debt.

THE INTERIOR

[For Chicago news see page 378.]

Ohio

Springfield.—First. Rev. E. A. Steiner and his people are much encouraged by the improved spiritual condition. Nine persons were received at the recent communion, five on confession. The attendance at Sunday services and prayer meeting has greatly increased. The new Men's Club has a large membership, including nearly all men in the congregation. A series of addresses and discussions on Congregational history and principles will form the principal feature of the club.——Lagonda Avenue. Rev. A. E. Woodruff has entered on the second year of his work with this church with an improved outlook.

Saybrook observed its 50th anniversary last month, a day being devoted to the occasion. Dr. D. L. Leonard gave an address on The World in 1847, Deacon C. L. Johnson read a historical paper, "Father" Barber, a former pastor, spoke, and also Secretary Fraser. Rev. C. W. Grupe is the pastor. During the 50 years about 260 have united with the church, and its average membership has risen from 33 in the first decade to 93 in the last. One member has been an S. S. teacher 36 consecutive years.

Illinois

Mattoon recently observed its quarter-centennial. Historical papers were read on the Sunday School, the Ladies' Society, the Y. P. S. C. E. and the Junior C. E. Society. A general historical address was also given by the pastor, Rev. R. W. Newlands. In connection with the anniversary exercises a social reunion was held at the home of one of the charter members, 11 of whom are still here. The occasion was of interest, and will prove a stimulus to larger services in years to come.

Creal Springs.—Rev. C. F. Van Auken, aided by Mr. J. R. Bursk, closed a series of meetings March 7, when 24 persons united with the church. The interest and attendance grew until the standing room was hardly sufficient to accommodate the people. Mr. Van Auken, under direction of the H. M. S., is now visiting a number of the churches in southern Illinois, and in every instance there has been a gratifying response.

Roberts.—The Congregationalist Eventide Services are used with marked success. At the March communion an addition of eight was made to the membership; two others unable to be present will be received later. There have been 12 additions since Jan. 1. Rev. J. H. Runalls is pastor.

Braceville, recently recognized, of which Rev. James Rowe is pastor, welcomed four new members March 7. A fair and supper held by the ladies of the church netted $125. Pastor and people are confident of growth and progress along all lines.

Indiana

Elkhart.—Riverside. This new church is the outgrowth of a series of meetings conducted by Rev. M. J. Duryea, who had been assisting a pastor in another portion of the city, and was called to conduct noon meetings at the extensive Pratt shops. The meetings were afterwards transferred to a fire department building. The idea of a church for this section of the city had been broached for years. The meetings increased in power, and the result is a hopeful organization. A canvass of the neighborhood resulted in the votes of 140 families for a Congregational church with some scattering votes. A Sunday school has been started and regular services are maintained. A lot has been given by Mr. Bucklen, and large contributions have been made for the erection of a suitable house. Elkhart is built at the confluence of three rivers, and Riverside is a district lying north of the St. Joe River. It is a favorite residence section lately built and contains 1,500 people. This is the first church erected within its bounds.

Terre Haute.—First. By way of solution of the evening service the pastor, Rev. J. H. Crum, has recently introduced a vesper service at 5 P. M. lasting an hour. Programs containing readings and music are distributed, and it is understood that visiting pastors will not be invited to participate, so that there may be a worshipful hour for all in this central down-town church each Sunday, and even ministers may have opportunity for worship free from care. The meetings are largely attended, and after a short intermission the Y. P. S. C. E. meets in the vestry.

Michigan

Detroit.—People's celebrated the sixth anniversary of Rev. Morgan Wood's pastorate. Mr. Wood preached the anniversary sermon in the morning and received 37 new members, 35 on confession. The communion service was held in the afternoon, at which all the Congregational pastors of the city were present and took part. In the evening the anniversary of the people's service was observed.

Grand Rapids.—Park. Dr. D. F. Bradley draws Sunday afternoon congregations to his lectures on the Religion of the Poets. His morning congregation is always large and the second service has, until now, been a problem.——South feels revived and strengthened under the leadership of Rev. F. E. York.

Howard City.—The largest funeral ever held in this village of 1,400 people was conducted by the Congregational pastor, and was that of a washerwoman whose character commanded the highest respect of all.

Chelsea.—Last week Sunday was a red letter day, when 23 persons were received to membership, 21 on confession. The service in the evening was the 15th anniversary of the Young People's Society and Prof. W. E. C. Wright, D. D., gave an address.

Olivet.—The spiritual interest continues deep. Prayer meetings are held in different parts of the village and all are well attended. Six united with the church at morning service last Sunday.

Grandville.—A Young People's Club has been called into existence to help in securing larger congregations and to work directly for conversions.

Almont.—Seventeen persons were lately received to fellowship on confession; nine were girls from one S. S. class.

Coral and Breckenridge have had revival services with good results.——Ypsilanti is working hard in all departments to raise its home missionary apportionment.

Wisconsin

Madison.—Last week Sunday 24 members were received. The annual report just printed shows that $15,095 have been collected during the year. A debt of $3,800 has been paid. Benevolences aggregated $2,434.——Pilgrim Chapel. District Missionary F. N. Dexter has been working here, and March 10 occurred the preliminary organization of a Congregational church in the rapidly growing Sixth Ward. A council will soon be called.

De Pere, with the Methodist and Presbyterian churches, has been holding union meetings, which resulted in strengthening the members and uniting the several churches.——Emerald Grove. An account of the 50th anniversary is issued in pamphlet form, with fine engravings of the church buildings, pastors and leading members.

Manning acknowledges gratefully the gift of a cabinet organ from Sparta.——Special meetings in Arena resulted in 25 conversions.——Platte and Leeds have benefited by extra revival services.

THE WEST

Missouri

St. Louis.—First. A training class, composed of leading C. E. workers of various denominations in the city, has been organized under the leadership of Miss Barnes, the parish visitor, and meets on Saturday evening of each week in the pastor's study, with the object of securing better equipment for active work in winning souls.——Pilgrim gives an entertainment each year for the benefit of its parish library. This year it was a concert which was largely attended and successful.——Immanuel. A series of evangelistic services, under the auspices of the Y. P. S. C. E., were held in the church during the last week of February and the first in March. Various city pastors and C. E. workers assisted.

Kansas City.—Clyde has greatly prospered this winter under the leadership of Dr. Wolcott Calkins of Boston. There have been frequent accessions to the church and the congregations have largely increased. A troublesome floating debt has been paid, Dr. Calkins giving a course of lectures in aid of this object. He is to repeat these lectures before the Kidder Institute.

Iowa

Doon.—Evangelist D. M. Hartsough has been holding union meetings in the Congregational edifice for a little more than a week. Already 151 persons have signed cards, while scores have risen for prayers. Among the converts are many prominent business men. Mr. Hartsough goes next to Lake City.

Bondurant.—Rev. H H. Long, pastor, reports revival meetings, 12 accessions, a new organ purchased and funds raised to paint the edifice.

Following union meetings at Anamosa conducted by Evangelist Cordner, the pastor, Rev. S. F. Milliken, received 13 persons to membership.——At Gowrie the parsonage loan is practically paid. The evening congregations crowd the house. Rev. Mandus Barrett is pastor.——Since the revival meetings at Hiteman a few weeks ago 40 persons have united. Rev. Owen Thomas is pastor.

Minnesota

St. Paul.—Pacific rejoices in steady growth, receiving substantial additions to its membership at each communion. Ten united March 7, six on confession. Over 50 have united during the last six months, a large Junior C. E. has been organized, and all branches of work are flourishing.——Milton Street is to be incorporated under the name of University Avenue. A large number of accessions have been received into the little church, which six months ago numbered only eight members. A permanent pastor has been secured, who has commenced work and will move his family soon to the city.

Granada.—During the pastorate of Mr. S. R. Van Luven, who leaves to complete a course of study, the church has been greatly strengthened, lots have been secured for a parsonage, which will be erected at once, and a minister has been engaged to succeed him.

Granite Falls has been pastorless for six months, but has now been visited by two neighboring ministers, and arrangements have been made to resume services. The membership has been depleted by removals.

Nebraska

Harvard.—The ordination of Mr. J. W. Larkin was of special interest. He had been engaged for some time in S. S. and evangelistic work in Colorado, but was obliged to surrender it on account of impaired health. Spending a few months with a sister in Omaha, he found his health so far restored that he accepted the invitation of this church to serve them, with the understanding that he was to be free to omit the evening service if necessary. The work has been growing in interest, and the stronger elements of church and congregation have rallied around him. His examination was sustained by a hearty and unanimous vote. Rev. S. W. Butler, D. D., preached the sermon.

Dodge celebrated its 10th anniversary lately with great interest. It was organized in a railroad depot, with a small membership, and among those on the roll during the 10 years four have become settled pastors. One member, who moved to Petersburg, was the leading spirit in organization at that point. The present membership is 28. The first pastor, Rev. Samuel Pearson, now of West Point, was present at the anniversary. Rev. Edmund Cressman, the present pastor, also has charge of Howells and Fairview. He has been conducting special meetings at the former point, with increasing interest and promise of large results.

Pleasant Ridge.—This country church, a few miles from Cowles, has been in charge of Rev. Samuel Deakin of the latter place. Having become weakened through removals, it has decided to disband. Most of the members will unite with the Cowles church. The Sunday school and the preaching appointment will be continued as heretofore.

Burwell, long pastorless, has been gladdened by the coming of Rev. J. E. McKenney, who entered upon service March 1. A council will soon be called for his installation. He has been preaching the past year to the Methodist Church at Kimball, but is in hearty accord with Congregationalism.

Ainsworth.—Special meetings are continued, with good interest. Since Rev. J. H. Andress of Long Pine was obliged to return to his own work the services have been in charge of the pastor, Rev. Samuel Eveland, and 33 persons have signed cards.

PACIFIC COAST

California

San Francisco.—Cooper Memorial. The last Sunday in February, after addresses by Dr. G. C. Adams and Sec. H. H. Wikoff, $700 were pledged for a new edifice. The late Mrs. Cooper's two sisters, then visiting the city, were present.——Plymouth in its life of nearly 35 years has had five pastors, the longest term being that of Rev. T. K. Noble, who served from 1872 to 1886. Dr. W. D. Williams has just closed a six years' pastorate, during which 305 members have been received, and in addition to current expenses more than $10,000 have been raised for the purchase of an adjoining lot. Prof. C. S. Nash is to supply for a few Sundays.——Bethany has just celebrated, with its pastor,

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Celebrated for its great leavening strength and healthfulness. Assures the food against alum and all forms of adulteration common to the cheap brands.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Rev. W. C. Pond, D. D., the 24th anniversary of their united labors.

San Diego recently held its annual meeting, with an attendance of several hundred. Reports showed 56 accessions, making the membership 378, and $4,000 raised, of which $1,316 were for benevolence. In addition $12,000 were paid and $18,000 subscribed for a new edifice.

Santa Cruz.—The Chinese Congregational Mission holds a street meeting in Chinatown every Sunday and also on Friday evening. An organ, presented by Dr. W. C. Pond, is a valued help.

Santa Rosa.—The wheelmen attended in a body on a recent Sunday, Rev. L. D. Rathbone preaching on The Well-Rounded Man. They were greatly pleased at the courtesy shown them.

Washington

Hillyard.—A 500 pound bell is now ringing from the tower. Congregations are increasing. The new meeting house at Pleasant Prairie was opened March 8, the pastor, Rev. Jonathan Edwards, preaching the sermon. This is the third church building erected in Mr. Edwards's parish within two years.

Vancouver.—Union evangelistic services in care of Evangelist Holdridge have resulted in accessions to all the churches. Over 100 conversions have thus far been reported, 12 of whom have joined the Congregational church. Rev. T. W. Butler is pastor.

Walla Walla has closed one of the most successful years in its history. The membership has reached 200. The benevolences of the last two years aggregate $30,000, including subscriptions to Whitman College. Rev. E. L. Smith is pastor.

Spokane.—Second. Rev. George E Rawlins, recently of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has united with this church and is seeking work in the denomination.

Evangelist Ried has closed a series of very successful meetings in Port Angeles and began work in Kalama with Rev. A. R. Johnson March 7.

Four German churches in Oregon and eight in Washington have just organized an association which they hope to have recognized by each of the two State associations as a part of those bodies. Seven pastors are now in service in these churches. The plan is that both the ministers and laymen shall attend the State association within the bounds of which they are located. Rev. M. E. Eversz, D. D., superintendent of the German department of the C. H. M. S., was moderator and rendered great assistance. His visit to the churches has greatly strengthened and encouraged them.

WEEKLY REGISTER

Calls

ARCHIBALD, Andrew W., Hyde Park, Mass., accepts call to Porter Ch., Brockton, to begin Apr. 18.

BALE, Albert G., Melrose, Mass., to Presb ch., Asbury Park, N. J. Accepts, and has begun work.

BROWN, Sterling N., recently of Plymouth Ch., Washington, D. C., to new University Park Temple, same city. Accepts.

DUNSMORE, H. Chas., late of Garnett, Kan., to Moville, Io. Accepts.

DURYEA, M. J., evangelist, to new Riverside Ch., Elkhart, Ind. Accepts.

EVELAND, Sam'l, to permanent pastorate at Ainsworth, Neb., where he has supplied six months.

GILMAN, Burton S., W. Colchester, Vt., accepts call to Gardner, Mass.

HITCHCOCK, Lyman P., Ellington, Ct., to Schenectady, N. Y.

HOFFMAN, J. A., to Granada, Minn. Accepts.

HOLLARS, John A., White Oaks, N. M., to Littleton and Manchester, Col. Accepts.

HUELSTER, Wm. (Presb.), Ontario, Cal., to Payson, Ill. Accepts.

HYDE, Albert M., Greenville, Mich, declines call to First Ch., Kalamazoo.

KLEIN, Marion A., to permanent pastorate at Wyanet, Ill. Accepts.

KNODELL, Jas. R., recently of San Bernardino, Cal., to Tabor, Io. Accepts.

McKENNEY, Jas. E., Meth. Ch., Kimball, Neb., to Burwell. Accepts, and has begun work.

ONSTOTT, Frank A., Edmond, Okl., to Perkins and Olivet. Accepts

OTIS, Jona. T., New Haven, Ct., to Mulliken, Mich. Accepts.

PALMER, Frank H., to his fifth year of service at Union Ch., E. Bridgewater, Mass. Accepts.

PARKER, Chas. O., to remain a third year at Acworth, N. H. Declines.

PETERSON, Mathias, Seattle, Wn., to Bear Creek Ch. (Swedish), near Volmer, Ida.

PLATT, Dwight H., Goodland, Kan., to Smith Center. Accepts, to begin May 15.

ROYCE, LeRoy, Payson, Ill., to acting pastorate of E. Main St. Ch., Galesburg, Ill., for one year. Accepts.

SIMS, Thos., Toronto, Can., to Melrose, Mass.

UPSHAW, Wm. L., First Ch., Enid, Okl., to Newkirk.

WILLIAMS, Horace R., recently of Richmond, Mich., to associate pastorate of First Ch., Port Huron. Accepts.

YOUNG, Robt. J. (Presb.), Pittsburg, Pa., to Ypsilanti, Mich. Declines.

Ordinations and Installations

BRYANT, Seelye, i. Scituate, Mass., Mch. 9. Sermon, Rev. Albert Bryant; other parts, Rev. Messrs. F. J. Marsh, E. W. Shurtleff, E. N. Hardy, A. W. Ide, Hon. S. H. Quincy.

LARKIN, J. Wallace, o. Harvard, Neb., Mch. —. Sermon, Rev. S. W. Butler, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. S. I Hanford, G. D. Tangemann, F. D. Jackson, B. O. Snow, R. T. Cross, L. P. Rose, Harmon Bross, D. D.

Resignations

BURNAP, Irving A., Monterey, Mass.

GOULD, J. Sidney, Plymouth Ch., Wichita, Kan.

HAIGH, Jeffrey G., Milbank, S. D., to take effect May 31.

HAMILTON, B. Frank, Eliot Ch., Roxbury, Mass., after a pastorate of more than 25 years.

HITCHCOCK, Lyman P., Ellington, Ct., to take effect June 1.

HOUGH, Joel J., Berkshire, N. Y.

JAMES, D. Melancthon, Fair Haven, Ct.

JONES, Wm. L., Cloverdale, Cal.

KENT Lawrence G., First Ch., Muscatine, Io.

LANSING, Isaac J., Park St., Boston.

MARHOFF, Jesse, Nashville, Mich.

MULLENIX, Mrs. Hannah M., Grand Meadow, Minn.

SCHOFIELD, Wm., Harrisville and Nelson, N. H., to take effect May 1.

SHIRLEY, Arthur, Old Lyme, Ct., after a pastorate of seven years.

SPRAGUE, Fred'k P., Bradley and Wayland, Mich., to take effect May 30.

SLADE, Wm., First Ch., Williamstown, Mass., renews resignation, to take effect May 1.

VAN OMMEREN, Hendrik, Grass Lake, Mich.

Dismissions

DE PEU, John, Norfolk, Ct., Mch. 12.

PROVOST, Joseph, French Ch., Springfield, Mass., Mch. 1.

Churches Organized

DEEP RIVER, Standish P. O., Mich., — Feb., 33 members.

EDMOND, Okl. (near), 2 Mch., 17 members.

ELKHART, Ind., Riverside, 5 Mch., 26 members.

MARBLE, Wis., 2 Feb., 13 members.

NORTH CHELMSFORD, Mass., Plymouth, — July, 1896. Park A. Bradford, pastor.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Memorial, 14 Mch., about 80 members.

Miscellaneous

CURRY, David, appreciates the liberality and affection of his parishioners in Whittaker, Mich., as shown in a recent donation party. Twenty-two dollars did not come amiss.

FROST, Wilfred B., has accepted an invitation to remain three months at Pillsbury, Minn.

IDE, Geo. H., occupied his pulpit at Grand Ave. Ch., Milwaukee, Feb. 14, for the first time since his illness.

MUDIE, Howard, has been re-engaged to supply the pulpit at Kent, Ct., for six months.

SPENCE, J. M. A., and family, were recently given a housewarming by their friends in Clark, S. D., who left many useful gifts.

For accessions see page 399.

BIOGRAPHICAL

REV. FRANK S. ADAMS

Mr. Adams, who died suddenly at his home in Reading, Mass., Tuesday, March 9, was a graduate of Amherst College in the class of 1877, and of Andover Seminary in 1880 He was called immediately to assume the important pastorate of the church in Reading, which he has filled with marked fidelity and ability until the present time, a continuous pastorate of nearly seventeen years. To few men is it given to do so clearly defined a life work, all in one place and touching so intimately the lives of all classes of citizens, by whom the pastor and the man was so truly loved and honored that all the stores were closed at the hour of his funeral, and hardly a family failed to be represented by one or more members at the impressive services. Rev. C. L. Noyes of Somerville, an intimate friend and classmate, had charge of the exercises at the church He bore loving testimony to the peculiar simplicity and unselfishness of Mr. Adams's character. He was unsparing of himself in the service of others and faithful in the discharge of every duty, reproducing in his life the spirit of the Master. Prayer was offered by Rev. W. H. Bolster, D.D. Many local clergymen were present and with the multitudes of saddened parishioners mourned the early death of this loved and useful pastor. Mr. Adams was in his forty second year, and leaves a widow and one son, the latter fifteen years of age.

Teachers and Students should Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It supplies just the material that is most wasted by brain work and nervous exertion—the phosphates.

Attractive Spring Tours.—There can be no better time selected for visiting California and the Pacific coast than the spring and early summer. Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb, the enterprising and successful firm of tourist managers, make their annual announcement of spring tours to California. The date of leaving Boston is Tuesday, April 20, and the three parties leaving at that time will be personally escorted from Boston back to Boston. One of them will include Colorado, California, picturesque Alaska and the marvelous Yellowstone Park. The second will follow the same round of travel, omitting Alaska, while the third covers California and the grand mountain and cañon scenery of Colorado. Persons who desire to know further details of these delightful trips can obtain a circular at the office of the firm, 296 Washington Street, Boston.

Spring

Is the time to purify your blood and fortify your system against the debilitating effects of warmer weather, and the dangers which threaten the health because of impurities accumulated in the blood. Now is the time to take a thorough course of Hood's Sarsaparilla which is unequaled as a spring medicine, because it is unapproachable as a blood purifier and strength builder. It is the very best medicine to make and keep the blood pure and expel the germs of scrofula, salt rheum and other poisons which cause so much suffering, and sooner or later undermine the general health. No other medicine can be compared with Hood's Sarsaparilla,

Medicine

Means

because its peculiar combination, proportion and process give it peculiar and unequaled curative powers. Thousands testify to remarkable cures of blood diseases by Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is what the millions take for pure blood. Remember

Hood's

Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.
Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Hood's Pills are tasteless, mild, effective. All druggists. 25 cents.

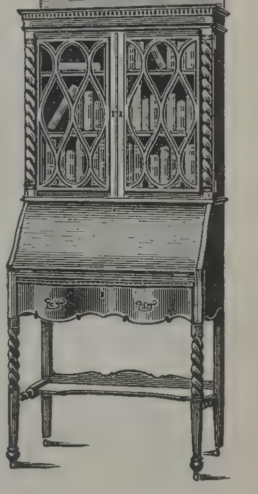
INEXPENSIVE.

Quite a number of our customers have wanted to own a piece of Colonial furniture, but could not afford the prices which the genuine reproductions command.

We resolved last year to spare no pains to meet this need by one or two inexpensive reproductions of genuine Colonial pieces, which could be worked down to a basis where a ready sale might be assured.

We offer here the first of these. It is a Colonial Secretary Book Cabinet, with serpentine lid and latticed-glass door. Old fashioned spiral fluted pillars frame the corners of the Cabinet. There is book storage for a dozen large volumes on the galleried top, for 75 inside the doors, and for an added fifteen on the lower shelf.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.



THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

If there has been any doubt about a steady increase in the movement of general merchandise such doubts have been dissipated this week. There is no longer any question that business is improving. The growth may be slow, but it is sure, and lacks, very fortunately, those speculative and unsound characteristics so apt to accompany periods of revival. Business interests are gratified at future prospects, and preparations are making for considerable activity.

During the past week or so more industries have started up or increased their force than at any time since November. This is what is needed, for industrial activity furnishes employment to the masses, and, of course, increases their buying power and consequently the consumption of all kinds of goods. The great activity in wool and woolen manufacture continues. Purchases of wool are being made, as previously noted, in anticipation of the new tariff. But outside of this the woolen mills are extremely busy, and, for the first time in four years, nearly every mill in New England is running on full time.

In boots and shoes there is a stronger feeling. Prices have advanced and jobbers hesitate to pay the advance, but as indications point to still higher prices it is probable that the reaction which they expect will not put in an appearance. In iron and steel the situation is acquiring more steadiness, and several furnaces have recently gone into blast. With the advent of warmer weather a better demand for iron products is sure to come. In conclusion, it can be stated that the spring demand has begun to show itself in all branches of trade, and a good business is expected from now on.

In the stock market prices of securities have lately been showing greater strength. Dividend paying stocks are in demand, but as the supply is considered light this buying will soon overflow into the cheaper securities. The stock market looks like advancing several points.

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY

A STATEMENT FROM THE OFFICERS

The seventy-first year of the Congregational Home Missionary Society closes March 31 next. It is due to all the friends of the work that a statement of the present financial condition of the society be made.

The receipts of the society for the eleven months ending with February were $76,308 less than for the same period last year. But for the debt brought over from the previous year the society, with the receipts of the last year for these eleven months, would have met its dues within about $8,000. There remain, however, of the debt of 1895-96, $34,505, and to meet current expenses $84,494 have been borrowed, making present bank obligations $119,000. To close the year without debt the $119,000 due the banks and the estimated March expenses of about $50,000—a total of about $169,000—are necessary.

The volume of work for which the society has assumed responsibility is well within the bounds of ordinary receipts. Such continued shrinkage of income could not have been foreseen. But, recognizing the financial condition of the country, the executive committee on the first of January reduced the appropriations for the year beginning April 1 next by $74,000. Of this amount seventeen per cent. falls upon the field and more than twenty-two per cent. upon the operating expenses. To meet the missionaries' dues and the bank obligations the society must look to the friends of the great cause. The entire Stickney legacy, which came so providentially for a time of need, has been devoted to the work. Two weeks of the year remain. The exigency is great, the time is short.

March 15, 1897.

BUSINESS HOUSES
making remittances abroad in moderate amounts can buy Books of Cheque Bank Cheques, from £10 upwards, which they can fill out and sign themselves, to any order, and for remittances to any country. Write for particulars to
Agency of the U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
Frederick W. Perry, Manager,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

CURED, AFTER GIVING UP HOPE.—After giving up all hope of relief, thousands have been completely cured by taking Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam. No one need suffer with any form of throat or lung trouble if he will simply take this priceless remedy. Sold by all druggists

MARCH, APRIL, MAY, are the months in which to give especial attention to the condition of your physical health. If you pass safely through these months and find yourself strong and vigorous, on the arrival of warmer weather, you may reasonably expect that you will be well in summer. Now is the time to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, because now is the time when the blood must be purified, enriched and vitalized, and because Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only true blood purifier prominently in the public eye today. Hood's Sarsaparilla has power to make you healthy and guard your system against disease.

The Newest Styles
—IN—
Ladies' and Misses'
Trimmed Hats
—AND—
Untrimmed Straw Hats
Are ready here for your inspection. Also an unsurpassed collection of fine French Flowers, Straw Braids, Ribbons, Laces and Ornaments.
Best Millinery at moderate cost.
COME TO OUR SPRING OPENING,
MONDAY, MARCH 22.
WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

SINGER SEWING MACHINES
Are so simple that the youngest can understand them.
So easy that the oldest can work them.

106 years old. (Taken from Life.) 5 years old.
Such easy terms that anybody can purchase one.
THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.
OFFICES IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York.
Mutual Life Building,
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.
CAPITAL, - - - - - $2,000,000
SURPLUS, - - - - - $2,000,000
ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.
INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS
subject to check or on certificate.
WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.
DIRECTORS.
Samuel D. Babcock, Charles R. Henderson,
George F. Baker, Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
George S. Bowdoin, Augustus D. Juilliard,
August Belmont, James N. Jarvie,
Frederic Cromwell, Richard A. McCurdy,
Walter R Gillette, Alexander E. Orr,
Robert Goelet, Walter G. Oakman,
G. G. Haven, Henry H. Rogers,
Oliver Harriman, H. McK. Twombly,
R. Somers Hayes, Frederick W. Vanderbilt,
William C. Whitney.

8% Municipal Warrants Safe as bonds and pay much better. Write for details. ROBT. E. STRAHORN & Co., Equitable Building, Boston.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK.
OFFICE: NO. 119 BROADWAY.
Eighty-Seventh Semi-Annual Statement, Jan., 1897.
SUMMARY OF ASSETS.

Cash in Banks	$306,032.86
Real Estate	1,748,857.41
United States Stocks	1,497,762.50
State Bonds	25,000.00
City Bonds	821,974.81
Rail Road Bonds	1,624,495.00
Water Bonds	83,500.00
Gas Stocks and Bonds	115,925.00
Rail Road Stocks	2,476,595.00
Bank Stocks	311,500.00
Trust Co. Stocks	85,150.00
Bonds and Mortgages, being 1st lien on Real Estate	423,786.71
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	183,100.00
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	602,866.76
Interest due and accrued on 1st January, 1897,	55,678.34
	$10,362,224.39

LIABILITIES.

Cash Capital	$3,000,000.00
Reserve Premium Fund	4,280,827.00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims,	735,128.68
Net Surplus	2,346,268.71
	$10,362,224.39

D. A. HEALD, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, E. G. SNOW, Vice-Presidents.
W. L. BIGELOW, T. B. GREENE, Secretaries.
H. J. FERRIS, A. M. BURTIS, Ass't Secretaries.
NEW YORK, January 12, 1897.

IT WILL SERVE THE INTERESTS of all concerned if, in correspondence suggested by announcements in our ADVERTISING COLUMNS, mention is made of the fact that the advertisement was seen in The Congregationalist.

CONCERNING OUR BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES

A correspondent sends us several inquiries which have been some time in his mind and which he thinks others have also raised. We will try to answer them after stating them.

1. Is it right for the American Congregational Association to solicit funds to build such a building as is contemplated, and on such an expensive spot as Beacon Street? Would it not be more appropriate to purchase a much less expensive site in a humbler quarter of the city, and build a plain, substantial structure, finished in the plainest manner consistent with durability, convenience and comfort?

2. Should not the churches be furnished with a list of all the officers, clerks and employés of each of our societies, and the salaries and hours of occupation of each?

3. Each of our societies has its own treasurer or treasurers, presumably at a fair salary. Is not one treasurer quite sufficient for them all, keeping account of the funds of each society and doing all the clerical work as economically as it is done in an insurance office or any like business? Why should not the Congregational Church have one treasurer, who should have charge of all the funds of its different benevolent societies?

4. Would it not be practicable, perhaps through State and county associations, to have a list of all members and regular attendants of each Congregational church in the county, with the financial worth of each one, or the amount of tax paid by each, and from this list assess a poll and property tax, notice to be conveyed to each individual through his church, with an invitation to pay the same? It would be entirely voluntary with each one whether he paid or not, but when the amount he ought to pay, when his share, was set before him, would not many pay who do not now? Would not some such plan bring the churches into closer and more interested touch with the different societies?

E. A.

1. That it is not the opinion of some of the best business men of Boston who are administering the affairs of the association and have given generously to it. It is not the opinion of those who have Tremont Temple in charge, and the Unitarian Building, opposite to the new lot of the Congregational Association. The directors of that body have carefully considered several less expensive lots in humbler quarters of the city, but have concluded that they would prove in the end more expensive and lead to failure in securing the objects of the association. A similar proposition was made concerning the State House a few years ago, but met with little favor. If the Congregational societies are to do business they must be in a locality where business is done.

2. Such lists are published annually by the societies, including all their officers. It is not thought of importance to print the names of all the subordinates or their salaries. Each society is ready to furnish information concerning them on request. Their hours are usually the same as those of business houses engaged in similar work.

3. Each society is an independent organization, and as now administered they could no more succeed with one treasurer for all than half a dozen commission houses in different cities, with daily receipts and payments extending all over the country, could have their finances in the hands of a single treasurer. But one treasurer ought to be able to do the work for one society.

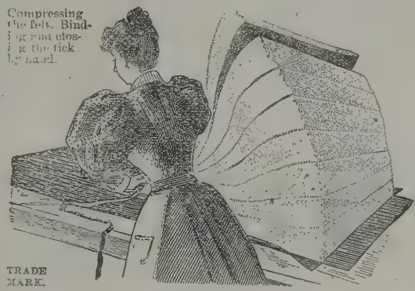
4. We suggest that our correspondent try this plan in his own church, and then in the local association to which it belongs. If the plan should succeed we should be pleased to print an account of its working.

Perhaps our correspondent means by some of these questions to suggest the inadequacy of the Congregational way of managing the affairs of the churches. Otherwise the questions would indicate an imperfect comprehension of Congregationalism.

If it is in order, permit one of your subscribers to say that in his judgment Congregational Work is thus far a first-class failure, so far as meeting the real wants of the churches is concerned, and only adds to the difficulties of those pastors who before it appeared were burdened with the numberless publications of our various missionary organizations. The writer of these lines had a copy of the new paper sent to every family in his parish, with the hope and expectation that most of the other magazines would soon be discontinued as an unnecessary expenditure of money. It seems that nothing of the kind is intended. Rather this last venture is another illustration of the tendency in all our societies, so forcibly illustrated in the tables published in The Congregationalist, to increase the machinery and the cost of missionary administration. Pastors are finding it harder and harder to persuade their congregations to give generously to the regular societies. They are met with criticisms which they cannot answer. Something is radically wrong, and that wrong is not to be righted by denying its existence. The wrong is in the system rather than in individuals, and no official should think himself attacked because the system of which he is a part is being criticised.

B.

Sleep on it Thirty Nights



Compressing the felt. Binding and closing the tick by hand.
TRADE MARK.

and if you are not completely satisfied—if it is not the equal of a $50.00 hair mattress in cleanliness, durability and comfort, return it and your money will be immediately refunded. We pay express charges anywhere and offer

The Ostermoor Patent Elastic Felt Mattress, $15.

314 Clinton Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., February 7, 1894.
Messrs. Ostermoor & Co., Elizabeth Street, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:—I have used your Patent Elastic Felt Mattresses in my house for over twenty years, and have seen them for that length of time in use in St. Mary's Hospital, and I do not hesitate to state that they are equal, and in many respects superior, to those made from the best quality of curled horse hair.

For cleanliness and durability, I doubt if the Patent Elastic Felt has any equal.

Very respectfully, JOHN BYRNE, M. D.

Patent Elastic Felt consists of airy, interlacing, fibrous sheets, of snowy whiteness and great elasticity; closed in the tick by hand, and never mats, loses shape, or gets lumpy. Is perfectly dry, non-absorbent, and is guaranteed absolutely vermin proof. Tick may be removed for washing without trouble. Softer and purer than hair can be; no repicking or restuffing necessary.

Showing Patent Elastic Felt Layers in Mattress; tick ready to be closed.

How to Order. State exact size mattress desired (size 6 ft. 2 in. x 4 ft. 6 in. will be sent unless otherwise specified) and give address plainly. Remit by check, money order, express order, or New York draft, and mattress will be shipped same day.

NOT FOR SALE AT STORES.

If you are skeptical, or don't need one now, send for our handsome pamphlet, "The Test of Time," mailed free for the asking. It gives full particulars and prices.

Also write for book, "Church Cushions." We refer to 25,000 Churches we have furnished.

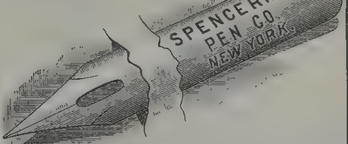
References: Bradstreet or Dun's Commercial Agencies.

OSTERMOOR & CO., 118 Elizabeth St., New York.

SPENCERIAN PENS

WRITE WELL ONCE TRIED
WEAR LONG ALWAYS USED

Samples sent on receipt of return postage — 2 cents.



SPENCERIAN PEN CO. NEW YORK

ESTABLISHED 1860

Subscribers' Wants.

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Housemother wanted for the Young Women's Christian Association of New Haven, Ct. A refined Christian woman under 45, must be an experienced housekeeper; average family 40. References requested Address (Miss) A. H. Gilbert, 1427 Chapel Street, New Haven, Ct.

BUY . . .
your paint direct from the manufacturer.
"FERINITE"
COTTAGE COLORS
are the best in the world and guaranteed. The most durable and beautiful. Send for sample card and price list to THE TAYLOR PAINT & OIL CO., 38 Burling Slip, N. Y.

EASTER DAY.

The Congregationalist's Service No. 10 is perfectly adapted for the use of churches proposing to hold an Easter service in which it is desired that the congregation should participate. This Service has been used very widely and has been a most pronounced success.

100 copies, with music, 8 pp., 60 cents, postpaid.

Less than 100 copies of one number 1 cent each.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST, Boston.

Deaths

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

AVERY—In Hampton, Io., March 8, Olive Huntington, widow of Rev. W. P. Avery, first pastor of the church in Hampton, aged 80 yrs.

BOYD—In Somerville, Feb. 27, Mary Boyd, aged 81 yrs.

CONDE—In Beloit, Wis., March 8, Rev. Daniel T. Conde, a missionary at the Sandwich Islands from 1836 to 1856, aged 90 yrs. He was the last of the company of 30 missionaries sent to the islands by the American Board at that time.

HANCHETT—In Leominster, March 8, Nancy S. Hanchett, mother of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, aged 92 yrs. An extended account of Mrs. Hanchett's life will appear next week.

LANDON—In Waterford, Vt., Feb. 28, Mrs. Caroline Roe Landon, aged 37 yrs. She has been for about a year connected with the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society.

LEGGETT—In West New Brighton, N.Y., March 10, of scarlet fever, Theodora Augusta, beloved daughter of Rev. Theodore Augustus and Anna Dwight Leggett, aged 13 yrs.

McEWEN—In New London, Ct., March 13, Mrs. Betsey Peck Learned, widow of the late Rev. Robert McEwen, D. D., in the 88th year of her age.

PENDLETON—In Detroit, Mich., March 9, Mary L., wife of Edward W. Pendleton.

WEBSTER—In Brookline, March 11, Stephen Oscar Webster, father of Mrs. J. H. Tewksbury, aged 78 yrs., 6 mos.

MRS. MARY JOANNA COGSWELL JAMESON,

The wife of Rev. E. O. Jameson, died on Saturday morning, March 6, in Boston, Mass. Mrs. Jameson was born June 6, 1832, in Boston. Her father was Rev. William Cogswell, D. D., at that time secretary of the American Education Society, later professor in Dartmouth College and a well-known writer on historical subjects. Her mother was the daughter of Rev. Jonathan Strong, D. D., of Randolph, Mass. She was blessed with a pious ancestry and a Christian nurture. Her mental endowments were superior, her disposition sweet and the fruitage of her life rare.

She married, Sept. 20, 1858, Rev. E. O. Jameson, and for thirty-five years was the devoted wife of a pastor and rendered valuable service in the churches where her life was cast. Always kind, discreet and sympathetic, she was a trusted adviser and a valued friend among the people.

Mrs. Jameson had an abiding confidence in God that "His way is perfect," and in bereavement her serenity and fortitude were a surprise and an example. Her sweet face told, even the stranger, of suffering and patience and hope. Her self-sacrificing thoughtfulness for others characterized her to the last. The few closing days of her life were made wearisome by intense physical pain. She was aware that the end drew near and said a loving good-by to friends at her bedside, in calm assurance of the rest that remaineth.

To those who saw her placid face in its repose, when all was over the favorite epitaph of Christian martyrs, found in the Catacombs of Rome, had a wonderful appropriateness:

"A sweet soul who sleeps in peace."

The funeral service was at the house of her oldest daughter, Mrs. Edward M. Greene of Boston, on Tuesday morning, March 9, and on the afternoon of the same day her body was laid to rest in Blossom Hill Cemetery, Concord, N. H., in a beautiful spot overlooking the valley of the Merrimac, with the rural church in view across the river, where her husband commenced his ministry about the time of their marriage, and in which her first born, Arthur, was baptized, whose early and lamented death, soon after graduation from Harvard with the highest honors in 1881, brought crushing sorrow to loving hearts. And now the mother lies beside her son in the hallowed spot, while the husband and three daughters survive to mourn their unspeakable loss. R. K. H.

MRS. A. N. S. SMITH

At Grand Junction, Col., Feb. 27, died Annie Noyes Sinclair, aged thirty years, the wife of Prof. Frank W. Smith, daughter of Prof. John E. Sinclair and granddaughter of Hon. John W. Noyes of Chester, N. H. Nearly two years of declining health and a painless death close a life of unusual beauty.

The public schools and the Normal Art School of Massachusetts gave her her education. She returned to the State seven years of faithful and inspiring service as teacher of drawing in the high schools of Worcester, Holden, the schools of Spencer and the Westfield Normal School. In the last months of her life she gave great help to her husband in his work as superintendent of schools in Colorado.

MRS. MARGARET MANN RICE

Passed away suddenly, Jan. 31, in Washington, D. C. at the age of eighty-one years, Mrs. Margaret Mann Rice, widow of the late Rev. Thomas O. Rice.

Mrs. Rice had an unusually varied life. She was born in Boston and began her education in the Franklin School and continued it in Mr. Abbott's school for young ladies. For a time she taught in the Franklin School, then became a pupil at the seminary in Ipswich under Miss Grant. When the seminary at South Hadley, founded by Miss Mary Lyon, was opened, thither she went and there graduated. She was a beloved and honored teacher in that institution from 1844 to 1848, when she was called to Wheaton Seminary at Norton, of which she became principal. There she was sought out by Rev. Thomas O. Rice and became the pastor's wife at Killingly, Ct. Here she spent many happy and useful years. Some changes occurred when Mr Rice was induced to accept a call to the only Congregational church in the South, at Charleston, S. C. It was unfortunate he did so, for the country was becoming very much excited on the subject of slavery, and culminated, as we all know, in the bloody Civil War in a few years, that shut them up in that city to personal deprivation and secession. The city was bombarded and their church was burned. In addition to all their other troubles yellow fever broke out in the family. I have seen shoes Mrs. Rice helped to make, coarse things, that cost $40, gloves that she knit, and pies that I did not see made, of which the pastry was of Indian meal for lack of flour.

They were Unionists, but of course their environment made it needful to be so secretly, though they had the privilege of assisting quite a number of our Northern prisoners of war. The war progressed and was drawing to its close, though they hardly knew it, when Mr. Rice succeeded in running the blockade and reached New York, looking old-fashioned enough to have just landed from the Mayflower. This escapade, on the whole, proved an unfortunate thing for him, for the city was taken very soon by Sherman's army, and had Mr. Rice been there he, like a number of others, would have been recognized as a Unionist. As it was, here at the North he was looked upon with suspicion, and found it very hard to get any position in his profession. Mrs. Rice remained in Charleston until she saw the Union flag raised again on Fort Sumter, and then turned her face northward, where she was warmly welcomed by her old friends.

In 1866 Mr. Rice had a call to Des Moines, Io., and they remained in the West ten years. In 1878 they returned to Massachusetts, where Mr. Rice filled pastorates in Plymouth, Templeton and West Granville. Since the death of her husband, in 1888, Mrs. Rice has lived with her sister in Washington, spending her summers in Cambridge, Mass., with relatives who were very dear to her. In all these changes she never complained, her troubles she met cheerfully, and with a bright face and trustful heart. We do not mourn for her. For ourselves, how we shall miss that clear brain, that loyalty to friends, that cheerful, trusting heart that never seemed to fail her. H. S. T. H.,

An associate in the Franklin School.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

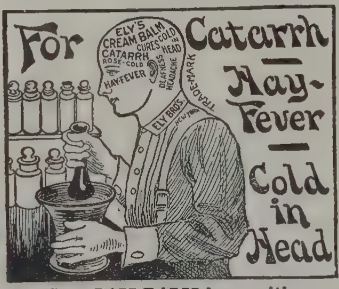
"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" will quickly relieve bronchitis, asthma, catarrh and throat diseases. Sold only in boxes.

OLD COLONIAL FURNITURE.—Hundreds of persons in this city have wanted some of the reproductions of old colonial furniture which have been exhibited in the swell cabinet shops in recent years, but thus far few persons have had the money to gratify their wish. The chance, however, has now come by which the wish may be gratified, and in another column the Paine Furniture Co. tell an interesting story in regard to their efforts to meet this demand for an inexpensive reproduction.

THOUGHTS of the new Easter hat or bonnet already occupy a prominent place in the minds of all women who admire artistic headwear. It is only four weeks to Easter (April 18), the date which fashion designates as proper for donning new spring attire. Hundreds of ladies, anxiously waiting for the opening display by the famous millinery house of Wm. S. Butler & Co , Boston, will be glad to learn that the event is near at hand—Monday, March 22. In the exhibition will be charming trimmed hats of French, English and American design and make, all the newest shapes in ladies' and misses' untrimmed straw hats, and a vast collection of fine French flowers, straw braids, ribbons, laces and ornaments. In extent, beauty and interest the display will surpass all exhibitions of millinery that have been made in Boston.

DORCHESTER, MASS., FEB. 13, 1897.—I was all run down in health and had no appetite. I was advised to get a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I did so. Since I have begun taking it my appetite has returned and I feel stronger and better. When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I weighed 135 pounds, but after taking a few bottles my weight increased to 200 pounds. Nelson J. Kilcup, 2231 Dorchester Ave.

HOOD'S PILLS act harmoniously with Hood's Sarsaparilla. 25 cents.



For
ELY'S CREAM BALM CURES CATARRH COLD IN HEAD ROSE-COLD HAY-FEVER DEAFNESS HEADACHE
TRADE-MARK
ELY BRO'S. NEW YORK
Catarrh
Hay-Fever
Cold in Head

ELY'S CREAM BALM is a positive cure. Apply into the nostrils. It is quickly absorbed. 50 cents at Druggists or by mail ; samples 10c. by mail. ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren St., New York City.

HAIR HUMORS

Itching, irritated, scaly, crusted Scalps, dry, thin, and falling Hair, cleansed, purified, and beautified by warm shampoos with CUTICURA SOAP, and occasional dressings with CUTICURA, greatest of emollients and skin cures.

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. ☞ "How to Cure Hair Humors," free.

SKINS ON FIRE with Eczema instantly relieved by CUTICURA REMEDIES.

Of all the nerve-tonics—bromos, celeries or nervines—your doctor will tell you that the Hypophosphites are best understood. So thoroughly related is the nervous system to disease that some physicians prescribe Hypophosphites alone in the early stages of Consumption. Scott's Emulsion is Cod-liver Oil, emulsified, with the Hypophosphites, happily blended. The result of its use is greater strength and activity of the brain, the spinal cord and the nerves.

Let us send you a book all about it. Sent free.
SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, New York.

Needs no disguise,

because it is free from all disagreeable taste and odor.

Peter Möller's Cod Liver Oil, always of the highest standard of quality, is now prepared by a new process, whereby the Oil is kept from atmospheric contact from the beginning of the process of manufacture until it is safely corked up in bottles, thus preventing contamination of any kind and excluding all impurities.

Give this new Oil a trial. Ask for Peter Moller's Oil and see that the bottle -- a flat, oval one -- bears our name as agents. Notice the date in perforated letters at bottom of the label.

Schieffelin & Co., New York.

Here's Hope! BRIGHT'S DISEASE AND DIABETES

CAN BE CURED.

SEND for History of Cures and all details. We invite inquiry as to what we have done and are doing. We guarantee no misrepresentation. Investigation will compel belief.

CONSULTATION FREE.

The Tompkins-Corbin Co.

1300 Broadway, New York City.

ESTABLISHED 1890.

J. W. CORBIN, Gen'l Manager. | A. W. TOMPKINS, M.D. Consulting Physician.

Grand National Prize of 16,600 francs at Paris

Quina-Laroche

Possesses in the highest degree the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark. Endorsed by the medical faculty as the best remedy for Fever and Ague, Malaria, Poorness of the Blood, General Debility and Wasting Diseases; Increases the Appetite, Strengthens the Nerves and builds up the entire system.

Paris: 22 Rue Drouot
New York: E. FOUGERA & CO.
26-30 N. William St.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THAT THE ANNOUNCEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, MARCH 12

Miss Monroe presided, and from a variety of Scripture selections showed by way of precept, promise and illustration that, in spite of individual weakness, devotion to duty and working with God secure strength for every demand and emergency.

The Prayer Calendar is so familiar in many homes that the thought of the hour seemed naturally to turn to the missionary parents and to their children, whether together in foreign lands or separated by continents and oceans. The two missionary homes in Auburndale and Oberlin were designated as the subject for prayer on Friday.

Miss Adams, in charge of the Auburndale Home, spoke of her present family representing Turkey, Japan and South Africa, of the responsibility involved in caring for the missionary boys and girls, of the wisdom, courage and patience needed, and of the effort to make the home self-supporting. Mrs. Strong, in behalf of the trustees, spoke of the spirit of love and the genial atmosphere which prevail in the "home with a small h." Mrs. J. K. Browne, who with three of her children makes a part of the family, testified to the "pleasantest associations" and to the comfort which missionary parents find in knowing that there is such a place open to their children, adding, "If I ever go back to Turkey I expect to leave five in this country."

Mrs. Davis of Newton spoke for the Oberlin Home, and touched all hearts as she related an experience connected with the death of her own little boy two years ago. The $5 left in his purse and a little sum which he had in the bank were supplemented by friends in their church in Detroit, and as the result $200 were sent to the Oberlin Home, where a room is to be his memorial. The new home, greatly favored in receiving a legacy from the Tank estate, is nearing completion. Miss Mary Porter has given whatever she has received from the life of her mother which she wrote, and Mrs. Jewett has contributed the proceeds from her life of her father, Rev. Luther Halsey Gulick.

Mrs. Kellogg, referring to her own associations with missionary children, spoke of the indebtedness to them and of the influence which many of them have exerted in schools, colleges and communities, and of the prominent positions which some of them have attained, such as Chief Justice Brewer and President Goodale, of well-known missionary parentage.

Miss Monroe read an extract from a letter from Mrs. Ireland of Amanzimtote, and Mrs. Bates of Crete, Neb., reported letters just received from her son in Gazaland. A church of twenty-five members has been organized; the missionary families were all well and the great need seemed to be for men, money and a mill.

Miss Day spoke of Saturday's topic, Junior Work, of the efficient secretaries in this department in the various branches, of present encouragements and of the desire of the committee that constant prayer shall be offered in behalf of this work among the young people.

Mrs. Pratt, Mrs. Phelps, Mrs. Woodbury and Mrs. Cole added to the interest of the brief hour.

* * *

The choice of Rev. S. V. Cole of the Broadway Church, Taunton, to be principal of Wheaton Female Seminary at Norton signifies new plans and prospects for that institution. It has a good history and a good property. It will fall heir to more money after a time. Mr. Cole has had experience as an educator, and leaves a united church at the earnest solicitation of the trustees and friends of Wheaton, who are confident that he is peculiarly gifted for the place.

* * *

To put our lips to our neighbor's chalice is to taste the sweet in our own.—E. Scott O'Connor.

ACCESSIONS TO THE CHURCHES

	Conf.	Tot.
CALIFORNIA
Pomona, Pilgrim,	6	10
Santa Barbara,	10	13
Sierraville,	—	7
CONNECTICUT
Ansonia,	1	4
Bethel,	6	8
Bristol,	9	9
Chester,	—	6
Falls Village,	5	5
Franklin,	9	9
Glastonbury,	28	29
Hartford, Asylum Hill,	—	8
Park,	2	4
Pearl St.,	—	4
Zion (Swedish),	5	7
Harwinton,	7	7
Middletown, First,	—	4
South,	—	8
New Britain, South,	2	10
New Haven, Grand Ave.,	—	7
Howard Ave.,	—	3
Norfolk,	5	5
Old Lyme,	3	3
Portland,	4	4
Terryville,	25	25
Wilton,	8	8
Woodstock, First,	2	5
ILLINOIS
Braceville,	—	4
Creal Springs,	—	24
INDIANA
Elkhart, First,	—	6
Riverside,	22	26
Portland, Liber Memorial,	3	3
IOWA
Anamosa,	—	13
Bondurant,	—	12
Hiteman,	—	8
MAINE
Bangor, First,	2	3
Central,	3	3
Kennebunk,	—	8
MASSACHUSETTS
Chelsea, Central,	15	22
Easton,	6	6
Fall River, Central,	3	6
Fitchburg, Rollstone,	12	23
Newburyport,	4	5
North Brookfield, First,	—	4
North Reading, Union,	4	4
Orange,	11	12
Palmer, Second,	4	7
Pittsfield, Memorial,	—	80
Springfield, St. John's,	24	26
Webster,	3	4
Worcester, Central,	1	3
Covenant,	1	3
Hope,	7	9
Old South,	3	8
Park,	2	3
Piedmont,	7	12
Pilgrim,	7	12
Union,	7	32
MICHIGAN
Almont,	17	17
Chelsea,	21	23
Detroit, Brewster,	—	4
First,	—	8
Fort St.,	—	9
Mt. Hope,	5	5
People's,	35	37
Grand Rapids, Second,	20	22
South,	—	5
Olivet,	—	6
Saginaw,	4	4
MINNESOTA
Minneapolis, Lyndale,	—	8
St. Paul, Pacific,	6	10
MISSOURI
St. Louis, Central,	—	5
Hope,	3	3
Hyde Park,	8	12
Pilgrim,	1	13
Tabernacle,	1	3
NEW HAMPSHIRE
Claremont,	—	3
Dover, First,	—	3
Franklin,	2	3
Hillsboro Bridge,	8	8
Nashua, Pilgrim,	3	4
Rye,	13	13
Tilton,	4	5
NEW YORK
Binghamton, First,	10	13
Buffalo, Pilgrim,	1	6
Cortland,	9	14
Middletown, North St.,	18	30
New York, Pilgrim,	8	15
Norwich,	—	5
Saugerties,	4	4
Syracuse, Good Will,	2	4
West Groton,	30	34
Westmoreland,	11	14
OHIO
Cleveland, Pilgrim,	10	13
Springfield, First,	5	9
Toledo, Plymouth,	13	30
OKLAHOMA
Deep River,	—	33
Edmond,	—	17
VERMONT
Barre,	—	11
Barton Landing,	4	5
Brandon,	12	15
Chelsea,	2	3
Newport,	4	4
Pittsford,	—	3
Rutland,	1	8
St. Johnsbury, North,	2	4
South,	—	4
Vergennes	4	4
WASHINGTON
Seattle, Plymouth,	5	16
Vancouver,	12	12
WISCONSIN
Hartland,	—	10
Marble,	—	13
Milwaukee, Hanover St.,	2	9
Necedah,	6	14
OTHER CHURCHES
Crary, N. D.,	—	7
Churches with less than three,	16	35

Conf., 630; Tot., 1,254.

Total Conf., since Jan. 1, 3,799; Tot., 8,036.

EXPERIENCE PROVES.

You Can Prove That Lost Health Can Be Regained.

Recoveries That Seem Almost Beyond Belief.

Dr. Greene's Nervura Has Saved Thousands Upon Thousands of People.

Experience is the test that proves everything. If you are ailing and have tried remedies which give you no relief you must not despair. If you are suffering it shows that your blood is poor and thin, and your nerves weak and exhausted. You need to purify and increase the life-giving stream and strengthen and reinvigorate the nerves. How? By using Dr. Greene's

Nervura, the great blood purifying and nerve strengthening tonic. Those who have used it have recovered. This is the test of experience. It is a very life-boat of hope to the weak and nervous. Do not lose any more time. Do not suffer any longer. Take Dr. Greene's Nervura today and be a well man or woman. It is the best spring medicine you can possibly take. A well-known physician stands behind it, which guarantees that it is specially adapted to cure. Dr. Greene's Cathartic Pills are the perfect pills for biliousness and constipation. Dr. Greene, 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful physician in curing diseases, can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

SEEDS FOR AN ENTIRE FLOWER GARDEN FREE

Our grand flower seed offer of 1896 proved so popular that we have decided to make the greatest offer for 1897 ever put out by any publishing house. We must gain 200,000 new subscribers to our Popular Literary Success, The Columbian this spring, and so have had put up for us by a leading seed house several hundred thousand packages of choice flower seeds, comprised in attractive collections, each kind of seed in separate packages, which we shall send FREE, solely to introduce our magazine. Here are the varieties, all of which we send in separate packages, sixteen in all, with cultural instructions on each on receipt of only one dime, or 11 one cent stamps to pay for a three months' trial subscription:

Pansies, sweet scented, very large, lovely, 30 col.
Pinks, finest double bedding sorts in mixtures, 14 col.
Asters, new sorts, finest double varieties mixed, 20 col.
Poppies, giant flowered, double, very showy, 20 col.
Petunias, finest single mixed, profuse blooming, 30 col.
Zinnias, rich and showy, immense double flowers, 10 col.
Sweet Alyssum, very pretty for edgings, bright, 12 col.
Sweet Mignonette, large flowers, superb scented, 2 col.
Marigold, French striped, dwarf stocky plants, mixed, 10 col.
Larkspur, dwarf double rocket, very showy, hardy, 10 col.
Sweet Peas, large flowered, all newer shades, robust, 10 col.
Nasturtiums, flowers last until frost, full bloomers, 5 col.
Portulacas, single mixed, charming dwarf plants, 20 col.
Candytuft, free flowering annuals, beds or borders, 15 col.
Drummond Phlox, grandiflora, fine, large flowering, 20 col.
Morning Glory, sturdy, well marked rich flower, 40 col.

Remember, you must send us only 10 cts. in silver or 11 one cent stamps and get all. We prefer to introduce our Magazine in this way than to spend thousands of dollars in advertising as many publishers do. After you have received our Surprise Collection and Magazine as above you will become a regular patron. Add. at once, THE COLUMBIAN, 13, 15, 17 Otis St., Boston, Mass.

WHY WE SELL Superior Phætons at much lower prices than any other firm in the world is explained in our Art Catalogue. Send for it!

The above cut illustrates "The Colombo," one of our popular styles. A low priced Phæton, with beauty, grace and strength. Can be fitted (if desired) with ball-bearing axles and rubber tires.

Columbus PHÆTON CO., Columbus, O.

One-Half Off the price on Buggies, Carriages and Harness. Highest quality. Fully guaranteed. Freight paid. Illus. Buyers' Guide mailed free. 8th year in business. MIAMI MFG. CO., 104 West 4th Street. CINCINNATI, OHIO.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

BARLEY CRYSTALS

New Diuretic, Renovating Tonic Cereal. Endorsed by physicians in cases of weak and irritable Digestive Organs, and Kidney troubles. Emollient, attractive, palatable. Unsurpassed in the whole range of cereals.

PAMPHLET AND COOKING SAMPLE FREE.

Unrivalled in America or Europe. Ask Dealers, or Write to Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

"DON'T HIDE YOUR LIGHT UNDER A BUSHEL." THAT'S JUST WHY WE TALK ABOUT SAPOLIO

AN EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION OF THE HIGHEST ORDER.

Old Public
Library Building.
Boston.

The ZOO

CHARLES F. ATKINSON,
FRANK C. BOSTOCK,
Proprietors and Managers.

An established New England Enterprise offering practical opportunities for Zoological research in one of the most complete animal collections of the world.

"Man is not descended from the Orang, but the Orang and Man had a common ancestor. One child of this ancestor went to the plains and learned to run, the other to the trees to climb. Evolution did the rest."—DARWIN.

Enormous Collection of Priceless WILD BEASTS

The Largest and Most Instructive Zoological Exhibit Ever Seen.

A Visit to the Zoo is equal to a trip Around the World.

JOE AT BREAKFAST.

JOE THE FAMOUS ORANG-OUTANG, THE HAIRY WILD MAN OF THE WOODS FROM BORNEO, UNQUESTIONABLY THE MOST INTELLIGENT ANIMAL EVER EXHIBITED. HIS EXTRAORDINARY ACCOMPLISHMENTS STAMP HIM AT A GLANCE THE MOST REMARKABLE EXHIBIT THAT THE WORLD HAS EVER SEEN.

SIXTH AND LAST MONTH
—OF—
CHIQUITA
THE CUBAN ATOM.

The Most Diminutive Woman in the World.

Age, 27 Years.
Height, 26 Inches.

Beautiful, Fascinating, Charming, Intelligent.

Holds Receptions at Frequent Intervals.

For Face, Hands and Complexion

HINDS' HONEY AND ALMOND CREAM

Insures a fair, clear skin, soft and healthy, free from ANY irritation. Is especially valuable for Chapped Hands, Face, or Lips, and all Irritations or Eruptions.

As a Toilet Requisite is invaluable because of its purifying and healing properties and cleanliness. It contains no oils, grease, chemicals—leaves no visible trace of its use—is perfectly harmless.

MR. A. S. HINDS, Portland, Me.; LEBANON, N. H., Nov. 22, 1889.

Dear Sir: It affords me great pleasure to testify unsolicited to the real worth of "HINDS' HONEY AND ALMOND CREAM." For two years I have used it in my family and in private practice. For the toilet and the nursery it is both a luxury and a necessity. It is a cooling and healing balm for all manner of chafes and eruptions, and as a remedy for inflamed surfaces of every description it is simply indispensable. In conclusion, permit me as a physician to heartily indorse and recommend your invaluable compound.
C. A. KNIGHT, M. D.

VIRGINIA STATION, VA., Jan. 30, 1897.
MR. A. S. HINDS;
Dear Sir: I have used your Honey and Almond Cream and find it to be just what it is recommended to be, in fact, I am more than pleased with it.
Yours truly, R. B. TWONER.

MR. A. S. HINDS; BOSTON, Feb. 2., 1897.
Dear Sir: We have long known that your Honey and Almond Cream has a high reputation. Several of our staff have had it in their families for years. It is certainly a wonderful preparation and fully deserves the splendid success it has already won.
Yours sincerely, THE GOLDEN RULE.

SAMPLE BOTTLE, with Book descriptive and testimonial, SENT FOR SIX CENTS, by mentioning THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

For sale at all Druggists, or sent, charges prepaid, 50 cents per Bottle.

A. S. HINDS, Portland, Me.

Volume LXXXII Number 12

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 25 March 1897

In connection with PARABLES IN PICTURES, Part III.

Who-is-my-neighbor

Hotels and Travel.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'S TOURS.

ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED.

Parties will leave Boston April 20 for Grand and Comprehensive Tours (personally escorted throughout) to

COLORADO, CALIFORNIA, THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST, ALASKA AND THE YELLOWSTONE PARK, The Wonderland of America.

Alaska (omitting California), May 27.
Yellowstone National Park Tours, June 3, July 15 and 29.
Washington Tours, March 26, April 5 and May 11.
European Tours, March 27, May 4, 15 19, June 9 and 26.

Independent Railroad Tickets via the Boston & Albany, Boston & Maine, and Other Lines; also Steamship Tickets to all points.

☞ Send for descriptive book, mentioning the particular trip desired.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB,
296 Washington Street, opposite School St., Boston.

Going To . . . EUROPE?

H. GAZE & SONS (L'd),

The Universal Tourist Agts. (Est. 1844), will send out

30 ESCORTED PARTIES

Of the highest class. Programme free. INDEPENDENT TICKETS issued for any desired tour. Estimates furnished. Choicest berths on all steamship lines to and from EUROPE secured. TOURIST GAZETTE–POST FREE, gives details.

W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.

ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,

BY THE

AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"

Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.

Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to

International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

TO NORWAY AND SWEDEN.—Special Private Excursion to England (with coaching), Norway, Sweden. etc., 62 days (June 30-Aug. 31); moderate cost. Address for circular,
HONEYMAN, Box F., Plainfield, N. J.

EUROPE, HOLY LAND, ROUND THE WORLD.—Parties leave April 24, May 8 June 5, 12, July 3, 7, for Europe; $260 and up; Sept. 11, Round the World. CLARK'S AMERICAN TOURIST AGENCY, 111 Broadway, New York.

ANNUAL EUROPEAN TOURS

Limited party, personally conducted by Prof. CAMILLE THURWANGER, now forming, 31 Pierce Bldg., Boston.

KIMBALL'S TOURS

in Europe (9th season). Limited party sails June 23. Moderate price, comprehensive route. Address
EDWIN C. KIMBALL, 56 Summer St., Boston.

Ideal The 8th TOUR in Europe. with 250 miles Coaching. Limited Private Party. Also Shorter Tours, at very low cost.
REV. HENRY A. TODD, A. M., Corona (L. I.), N. Y.

PASSACONAWAY INN,

YORK CLIFFS, MAINE. Opens June 1st.
ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

WHEATON SEMINARY

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley, outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.

62d year. Summer term, April 8, 1897. Illustrated prospectus. Address
MISS A. E. STANTON, Principal, Norton, Mass.

PRESIDENT DIAZ

SOLDIER AND STATESMAN

By CHARLES F. LUMMIS

This article gives a graphic account of the career of the distinguished President of Mexico, whose patriotism and grasp of affairs have made such a vivid impression upon the recent history and fortunes of that Republic. With many illustrations.

WASHINGTON AND THE FRENCH CRAZE OF '93

Professor JOHN BACH MCMASTER describes the enthusiasm for ostentatious republicanism aroused by the first successes of the French Republic, and especially by "Citizen" Genet, the French ambassador. The illustrations, including the frontispiece in color, are by HOWARD PYLE.

Paleontological Progress of the Century

By HENRY SMITH WILLIAMS, M.D. Illustrated.

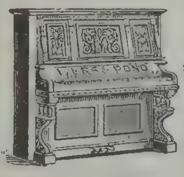
White Man's Africa, By POULTNEY BIGELOW

Illustrated by R. CATON WOODVILLE

The fiction of the number is especially noteworthy, including "The Martian," by George du Maurier, and short stories by Brander Matthews and Margaret Deland.

APRIL ISSUE

HARPER'S MAGAZINE



A Piano By Mail

You can buy an IVERS & POND Piano just as cheaply, as safely, and as satisfactorily of us by mail as in person at our warerooms. How? Write and we'll tell you.

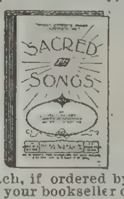
We send our pianos on trial at our expense to any part of the United States where they are not sold by a local dealer. Send us a postal card and receive FREE our CATALOGUE and prices for cash and on EASY PAYMENTS.

If you want a Piano, a postal card may save you $75 to $100. Send it today.

IVERS & POND PIANO CO.,
114 Boylston Street, Boston.

Sacred Songs No. 1.

By Ira D. Sankey, Jas. McGranahan, Geo. C. Stebbins.



This exceptionally fine collection is used by Mr. MOODY and Mr. SANKEY in all their meetings. Mr. Moody says it is the best book he ever used.

SACRED SONGS NO. 1

has won its way to popular favor more rapidly than any song book ever issued.

Over 100,000 Copies Sold in Three Months!

$25 per 100, in boards; add 5 cts. each, if ordered by mail. Get a copy and try it. If your bookseller cannot furnish it, send to Publishers.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
Chicago House, 215 Wabash Ave. 76 E. 9th St., N. Y.

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100 paged Agency Manual free EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

MAINE, BANGOR.

BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Choice between two courses of study, Classical and English Biblical, in Junior year; one course in Middle and Senior years. Optionals in Hebrew and Cognates, and in Greek. Entrance examination on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 9 A. M. Apply to Prof. C. A. Beckwith, or Prof. G. W. Gilmore, Bangor, Me.

MINISTERS' LIBRARIES

On the Installment Plan.

Every minister needs fresh new books. They are his intellectual food. Without their stimulus he gets rusty, monotonous and dull. We have the books he wants, and are receiving, week by week, the best works from all the leading publishers.

Our catalogue gives net prices on several thousand of the most popular religious, theological and standard books. We send it free. We sell at low wholesale rates $50.00 worth of books for $5.00 down and $5.00 a month; or $100.00 worth for $10.00 down and $10.00 a month, to any pastor in good standing.

The Congregational Bookstore,
Beacon and Somerset Sts., Boston.

MSS. WANTED Last month we issued a call for a religious story for young people, offering ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS in cash for the best MS. received and FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS for the next best MS. Owing to the wording of our advertisement and a reference therein made to "Titus" and "The Wrestler of Philippi," some have been led to suppose that we desire A MISTAKE CORRECTED a story with Bible characters and embracing New Testament History. This is a mistake. It should be a modern religious story. The widest liberty is allowed writers as to plot. It must be a book that boys and girls will read, and one that will help them to understand and enter a life of companionship with Jesus.

Circular giving full particulars mailed free on application. Address:

DAVID C. COOK PUBLISHING CO.
BOOK DEPARTMENT,
36 WASHINGTON ST., CHICAGO.

$125.00 PROFIT IN 4 WEEKS;" "300 orders in 3 weeks"; "$5.00 to $10.00 profit every day." Outfit, 30 cents. JAS. H. EARLE, Publisher, Boston, Mass.

FURNISHED HOUSE to Rent for Summer. Nine large rooms. Terms reasonable. Pleasant surroundings; nice fruit of all kinds. In the historical town of Woodstock. Address Box 107, So. Woodstock, Ct.

Thrifty Phyllis goes to town,
Leaves her gallant sighing:
Phyllis maketh o'er a gown,
That is why she goeth down;
She would be a-buying
Ivory Soap, to cleanse it sweetly,
Ribbons, that shall deck it neatly;
Back she'll soon be flying.

Copyright, 1896, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 25 March 1897 Number 12

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 403
The Breaking Strain of Faith 404
Reassurance from Many Sources 404
The Blot on the Escutcheon 405
Acceptance of Common Opportunities the Judgment Test 405
Current History 405
In Brief 407

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

New York 408
London 409

CONTRIBUTIONS:

Two Middle State University Cities. G. P. M. 409
Parables in Pictures. III. Estelle M. Hurll 410
Some Responses to Dr. Behrends's Question—a symposium 412

THE HOME:

The Cup of Tears—a poem. May Riley Smith 415
Art and Religion 415
Diet in Old Age. Mary E. Green, M. D. 415
Queen Victoria. Janet Sanderson 416
Closet and Altar 417
Tangles 417
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 418
Corner Scrap-Book 418
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for April 4 419
Notes 435
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for April 4-10 433
Notes 433
LITERATURE 420

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:

An Institutional Enterprise in Washington 424
The Gospel in Lectures 424
Weekly Register 432

MISCELLANEOUS:

In and About Chicago 414
In and About Boston 423
Notices 424
Business Outlook 428
Canada 428
Rev. George H. Wells, D. D. 429
Biographical 429
Deaths 429
Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 431
Our Armenian Orphans' Fund 432
Sunday School Lessons for the Twentieth Century 435

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.
On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.
DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.
READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd

A MISTAKE which ought to be immediately and generally corrected is the statement that the total gain in the membership of our Massachusetts churches in 1896 was only six. We made this assertion a fortnight ago, basing it on statistics which Secretary Hazen furnished us. It seemed surprising at the time, but we had no facilities for going behind the returns. The statement, as we expected, was commented on far and wide, and from it unfavorable deductions were drawn with reference to the virility of the denomination in this old commonwealth where it has so long led the evangelical hosts. Dr. Hazen himself, awake to the sensation produced by these figures, has, during the last two weeks, been retraversing the statistical ground over which he went and has discovered an error in copying. Because of it, returns from an important group of churches were omitted. These being included the net gain for 1896 throughout the State amounts to 970, or twenty-five per cent. more than in 1895. Now then, let everybody hasten to spread this good news, which is, undoubtedly, the authentic information. There is considerable difference between six and 970, and we all ought to be thankful that the earlier statement was the wrong one.

So rapidly are conditions changing in our great cities that we do not realize until brought to our attention in a forcible way what new problems are forced upon the church by these shifting phases of urban life. Much has been said in the past few years concerning the slums, and much good work has been undertaken in their behalf. But equally serious is the question how to reach with Christian influences the well-to-do and wealthy classes taking up their abode in apartment houses in the more fashionable sections of our large cities. We realized this problem as we walked about in upper New York a few days ago in the vicinity of Dr. Stimson's new enterprise on the West Side. There is a region which is being rapidly covered by great apartment houses, some of which contain from 1,500 to 2,000 persons. When under one roof are gathered as many persons as make up the population of a good sized town, it is readily seen that one church would have nearly enough to do if two or three such houses comprised its parish. How to get churches enough of the right sort to minister unto these large aggregations of men and women, and how to adapt the ministrations of the church to them, furnishes a problem requiring an extraordinary amount of Christian wisdom and perseverance.

The well-intended endeavor to bring about further fellowship, so far as co-operation is concerned, between Congregationalists and Christians has met with a check, at least so far as New Jersey is concerned. The Herald of Gospel Liberty in a long editorial last week, largely in reply to a letter by Dr. Gladden, calls a halt. Its spirit is brotherly but it misunderstands both Dr. Gladden and Congregationalism, and to us, at least, its alarm seems needless. But the complete union of the two Christian bodies, or even their affiliation in closer co-operative fellowship, is not to be hurried. Let us wait and learn more about one another until on each side the desire to draw closer shall have become not only earnest but controlling. The suggestion made in our issue of Jan. 28 still seems to us reasonable—that churches of both names might unite in local conferences and associations, and that, where two churches, one of each kind, desire to coalesce, the name might be determined by the majority of the combined membership. But we would not press the suggestion, if our Christian friends dislike it. To us there seem to be signs of a growing desire for union on each side. If this be true, and matters be allowed to work themselves out in quietness and love, the result will come of itself in its own time and way. It cannot safely be hastened.

We are glad to see that steps are being taken both at Amherst and Williams to secure Y. M. C. A. headquarters. Alumni and friends of these institutions can invest money in no better way than by helping to erect special structures or to provide attractive rooms around which shall gather the religious interests of the students. At Yale Dwight Hall for the past ten years has been a powerful influence for good. Standing in a central place on the campus, it compares in architecture favorably with the other magnificent new buildings. The fact that ten out of eleven of the Yale under graduates are now connected with the Y. M. C. A. of the college, either as active or associate members, is probably largely due to the influence of Dwight Hall, while from it has come a powerful impetus toward systematizing the Bible study and the Christian activities of the university. We believe the religious development at each of our New England institutions would be greatly fostered by buildings devoted to the religious needs of the students.

The extent to which the supply of ministers in certain sections of the country outruns the demand for them is shown by the fact that there is not a single self-supporting parish in Maine which is now without a supply. The home missionary churches, which pay from $300 to $700 a year, are not all manned, to be sure, though not a few of them are, by men whose ability and consecration deserve a more remunerative, though perhaps not a more useful, field. Throughout all the New England States the situation as respects desirable openings for worthy men is not much better than in Maine. One source of relief in this ministerial problem must come from greater discrimination on the part of the seminaries. We are not prepared to go to the extent of saying, as did one of the State home mission secretaries in our office the other day, that all our seminaries ought next autumn to refuse to take any new men, but we think the lines are not drawn sharply enough at present. The desire to have large classes sometimes leads to the admission of men who would better be doing something else than preparing for the Christian ministry. Our seminaries surely have their share of responsibility in helping to abate the distress now arising from an overcrowded ministry. Some of them, we rejoice to say, have recently raised the standard for admission and are holding up severe intellectual ideals before the men already under their tuition.

THE BREAKING STRAIN OF FAITH

Prophets of unbelief have arisen one after another to declare that the end of Christianity is near at hand. That end, it is true, has always hitherto outstayed its prophets, but their successors of today do not appear on that account to be discouraged. In the name of history, of the discoveries and conclusions of physical science and literary criticism of the Christian record books, they proclaim that no intelligent man can be a Christian unless he is dishonest and no honest man unless he is unintelligent. So self confident and persistent are these oracles of distrust, that they win belief among the unlearned and unthinking and even disturb the equanimity of Christians.

It may be well to ask ourselves, therefore, what kind and amount of proof would bring a breaking strain to bear upon our faith. That there must be a pressure upon faith arising out of our own ignorance, the mystery of the divine nature and the incomplete development of the divine purpose, all must agree. Otherwise it would not be faith, but sight. "For now we see in a mirror, in a riddle," is the word of the apostle. There can be no question that there is a strain upon our faith, but what would constitute a breaking strain?

Our faith would undoubtedly break down if it could be shown that the man Christ Jesus never lived. Christianity rests on facts, not imaginations. The prophecies of his coming are sometimes in verse, but the gospel story is plain prose. The cornerstone of faith is not what man desired or invented, but whom God sent. Incidents of the gospel story have been called in question and the whole record has been sifted, tested, taken apart and put together again, by friendly or by hostile critics, but the result has been that the life and crucifixion of our Lord remain among the best attested facts of ancient history. Not one of the miracles which affront the materialist in the gospels is more a miracle than conclusive evidence of the non existence of Jesus of Nazareth would be.

The same may be said of the existence and work of the Holy Spirit, disproof of which would prove a breaking strain on Christian faith. It is not doubt, but conclusive negative evidence, which would be dangerous here. The existence of doubt is one of the minor evidences of the Christian's faith. When the promise of the Paraclete was given, he was called the "Spirit of truth whom the world cannot receive; for it beholdeth him not, neither knoweth him," and by way of contrast it was said to the disciples, "Ye know him; for he abideth with you and shall be in you." The Spirit's presence becomes for the Christian a matter of personal experience—of personal acquaintance. Nothing can disprove the existence of a person whom we know. Shall the friendless man persuade us that we have no friends? If we have received of His fullness, the emptiness of other men moves us to pity, but is not a reason for mistrust.

It is just here, indeed, that the opportunity offers of making the defenses of our faith impregnable. To examine for ourselves the wide range of knowledge which has relations to the Christian faith is beyond our power, but to deepen the intensity of our Christian life by prayer and obedience is possible to every one, and brings its own reward of certitude as well as joy. Christ has declared God's willingness to give. "If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." The experiment is worth trying, surely, when God invites us to the proof. If it succeeds, there can be no more question of a breaking strain on faith.

Historic Christianity, again, is a phenomenon of which men have given many explanations, but no one has ever succeeded in explaining it away. To say that it has adapted itself to its environment and made use of its opportunities is only to tell us that it is alive. To insist that it has failed in an ideal moral attainment is only to echo what its founder prophesied of tares among the wheat and the virgins with their empty lamps. The very moralists who condemn it have been learners in its school and show ingratitude in their own finding fault. Christianity is a training school from which its pupils are removed as they make progress. Its results are in heaven, and nothing which can be said against its earthly failures and corruptions involves a breaking strain on faith. For that it would be necessary to show that the sum of evil from the influence of Jesus has been greater than the sum of good, both to the world and to our own spirits.

These are the fundamentals. Other questions have arisen and will arise regarding the origin and destiny of man and the scope and authority of the Bible. These questions, important as they are and deep as is our interest in their correct solution, can never be withdrawn from investigation and debate. But a breaking strain for faith can never come from these investigations until it is clearly shown that man (however related to the beasts) is in no wise better than a beast, without responsibility and without opportunity of spiritual knowledge and growth in holiness; and that the Bible is the record of a series of accidents and not of the development of a divine purpose. The sense of guilt is a stubborn fact with which the anthropologist must deal. The satisfaction brought into a multitude of souls by Christian faith, and working itself out in transformations of character, cannot be ignored. Out of man's spiritual experience comes the disproof of materialism.

We may expect modifications of knowledge and opinion, therefore, in many departments of Christian thought. The whole history of the church, on one side, has been a history of such minor changes and we have no cause to dread them. Our interest in these matters of research and generalization is the interest of all honest men with an added joy of larger knowledge of our Father's thought and work. There is nothing to discourage or alarm us in the advance of science. It is only partial glimpses of the truth which seem to put a strain on faith. When the whole truth is known the faith that rested in God's promise while it welcomed knowledge will be vindicated.

REASSURANCE FROM MANY SOURCES

The question raised by Dr. Behrends in our columns a fortnight ago regarding theological tendencies at work within our denomination was a serious one. It was similar in character to the issue raised in England, recently, when certain high Anglican authorities were thought to be impugning the orthodoxy of our Congregational churches there. How vigorously Nonconformist leaders like Dr. Guinness Rogers and Dr. Robertson Nicoll resented the charge has already been noted by us. But when on this side of the Atlantic the same implication is put forth by an honored pastor and leader, who, although not bred in our ranks, has never, we presume, regretted his step from the Baptist to the Congregational fellowship, the issue thus raised becomes a grave and vital one, affecting the peace, the usefulness and the honor of the denomination. We therefore, in the same number in which we printed the article, invited replies. These have come in even larger numbers than we anticipated, and a generous installment of them we print on other pages. Others are still arriving up to the very moment of going to press, and these we regret to be unable to include in the broadside.

A study of these letters will show that the great majority of their writers are not disposed to share Dr. Behrends's alarm. Coming as the replies do from men in the active ministry, or in missionary service in different sections of the country, they represent a wide range of observation. These men in the thick of pastoral work have felt the pulse of the denomination at many points. No one center—not even such a watch tower as Brooklyn with its own peculiar theological eddies and currents—can command the country. The question simply is one of accuracy and completeness of observation. We are therefore all the more glad to have so many spontaneous responses, and we believe a large measure of reliance may be placed upon them.

For ourselves we need only add what we intimated two weeks ago, that we are unshaken in our belief that our churches are as loyal to Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of the world, as they ever have been, as loyal as those of any denomination under the sun. That modern views of the Scripture, that newer forms of thought and of expression, are not finding a welcome to some extent among us, we would not wish to affirm. As the home missionary superintendent of Indiana points out in the broadside this week, there are some religious conditions far more deplorable than a state of intellectual unrest and transition. But the glory of Congregationalism is that it can assimilate what is best in the onward movement of the world's thought, and, holding fast on the one hand to freedom and on the other to unchanging truth, serve the present age first of all by understanding it and then by ministering the everlasting gospel to it.

We have a somewhat wide acquaintance with Congregational ministers, including many of the younger men, and we know no one among them who is anxious to leave the denomination in the hope of securing a more satisfying theological and ecclesiastical habitat. We know none who has lost his faith or his hope. We know scores who draw their religious inheritance from Plymouth and Saybrook and New Haven and East Windsor, and who still consider the denomination of their fathers worthy of their love and their devotion.

THE BLOT ON THE ESCUTCHEON

With the technical details or result of the prize fight in Carson City, Nev., last week, we have naught to do. But certain facts connected with it deserve the serious consideration of all patriots. It was tolerated, yes, more, invited, by the legislature and governor of a sovereign State of the republic, which, in the Senate of the United States, counts—not weighs—as much as Massachusetts. The governor of the State witnessed the fight, reported it for a syndicate of daily newspapers—as did that former Senator from Kansas, Mr. Ingalls, who began his downward career by scoffing at the Decalogue and the Golden Rule—and now unblushingly avers that he hopes Nevada will persist in encouraging such contests. The newspapers of the country, with very few honorable exceptions, reported the contest with a "ponderosity of particularity" which was lacking when Mr. McKinley was recently inaugurated president, and which will not obtain should thrones totter and empires fade away in modern Europe. Millions of dollars changed hands as the result of wagers won and lost, and larger crowds gathered around the bulletin boards than were found there on the eve of November 3, when the destiny of the Republic was being decided.

Such facts provoke thoughts. The Constitution provides no way of ejecting a State from the Union. If it did, its power might well be invoked for this and sundry other failings of which Nevada is guilty. But possibly that which cannot be effected by elimination may be brought to pass by addition and subtraction, that is, by enlarging the area and population of Nevada at the expense of some of its neighboring States. Such "journalism" as disgraced the profession last week will surely breed restrictive legislation similar to the Aldrich bill, forbidding the transmission of reports of prize fights, which came before the Fifty-fourth Congress, and to the Elsworth bill, now before the New York legislature, which forbids the use of portraits unless permission has been granted. "Liberty of the press" has degenerated into "license of the press" since the evil day when Joseph Pulitzer became owner of the New York World, and the public now seems to be awakening to the fact and arousing itself for the battle.

Applied science is the servant of the devil as well as of God, and the kinetoscope record of the Carson City fight will be reproduced and displayed the world over, adding large sums to the purses of the pugilists and satisfying the baser instincts of those who for various reasons could not attend the fight. Friends of decency have already moved to secure from the Massachusetts and Illinois legislatures a law which will prohibit such displays in those States. They have failed in Massachusetts. May the citizens of other States move in a similar way and be more successful!

◆

It is noteworthy that, while bequests to the missionary societies in nearly all denominations have fallen much below those of recent years, bequests to colleges and other benevolent institutions have been unusually large. As an instance in point, the aggregate of sums left to the Home for Aged Women in Boston last year was $71,240.

ACCEPTANCE OF COMMON OPPORTUNITIES THE JUDGMENT TEST

This is because our habit and manner of accepting them reveal character as nothing else does. The power to seize an exceptional occasion and, by nerving one's self temporarily for a tremendous effort, to do something brilliant and conspicuous, which wins wide admiration, is not to be underestimated. It is to be honored and desired. But it is only one of the elements which unite to compose one's character. From its nature it can only be exhibited now and then. The final inquiries concerning each of us are not to be—What has he done, what can he do, but what is he? The difference is plain.

It is the acceptance of common opportunities of service, when the ordinary wear and tear of life is being felt, when the romance of existence has given place, at any rate for a time, to prosaic duties and commonplace experiences, that shows our underlying character. We are not on dress parade then. We forget or do not care to pretend. If we are quick-tempered, fretful, suspicious, indolent or careless, we show it then. If we are cheery, patient, energetic, spiritually-minded, then it is that those who know us best thank God for us. The apostle has bidden us "Whether therefore ye eat or drink or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." He might have added, "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink or whatsoever ye do, ye cannot help showing whether ye do it to the glory of God or not."

This is fair to everybody. Nothing could be fairer. Most of us cannot do brilliant things. Few can accomplish acts of heroism often, if ever. But everybody can use common opportunities faithfully. And sometimes, in divine providence, the most uninviting openings prove to afford occasion for the most heartily recognized heroism. But the judgment test will not be whether we succeeded in being appreciated but whether we tried to be faithful.

CURRENT HISTORY

Congress in Action

From the moment when the gavels of the president of the Senate and clerk of the House fell at noon on March 15, calling the members of the Fifty fifth Congress to order, up to the present time there has not been an act or a word which could fail to give the impression that a new era had begun, and that, whatever its failings in other respects may be, the Republican party is still one whose rank and file are loyal to the decisions of the party leaders, and capable of formulating constructive legislation and rushing it on its way. Up to date a tariff bill has been introduced in the House and reported favorably by the Ways and Means Committee. Rules limiting its discussion have been passed, and the day and hour of voting on the measure definitely decided. Neither the rank and file of the majority nor the minority will have power to amend it unless by the will of the Ways and Means Committee, and it probably will go to the Senate in substantially its present form by April 1. Under the pressure of the same forces that have brought all this to pass the House also has passed, "jobs" and all, without debate, the four appropriation bills which fell by the way at the close of the last Congress, and it is hoped that the Senate will discuss and pass these before April 1, so that when the tariff bill comes to it the way will be clear for its consideration.

In another paragraph we refer to the tariff bill and its reception by the country. It is apparent even now that in the Senate it must undergo discussion and modification which will and should, as we believe, change it in some respects. It will there be subjected to the criticism of those who will represent the consumers of the country, as well as those who avowedly are the tools of the great monopolies. And while it probably will not be delayed by any such obstructive tactics as made the consideration of the Wilson-Gorman Bill by the Senate so discreditable, it nevertheless will not emerge in anything like the form in which it arrived at the Senate, be the pressure from the Administration or the country what it may. Still, if the division in the ranks of the minority which has been revealed already in the House also is revealed in the Senate, the way may be opened for the disciplined Republican forces to carry the measure through more quickly than now seems probable.

Two facts concerning Congress during the past week deserve special attention. First, the outcropping of protectionism in the ranks of the younger Southern Democrats, carrying with it a repudiation of the free trade, free raw material policy which Mr. Cleveland outlined for the party while he was dominating its counsels, and, second, the evidence of a return of an era of pleasant personal relations between executive officials and legislators. Thus several of the members of the Cabinet have been seen within the halls of legislation, meeting old and new members and discussing matters of state and party. Secretary of State Sherman last week met the Foreign Relations Committee and also visited the floor of the Senate, where he conferred with his former colleagues. It is needless to point out that, if the Democratic ranks are to be divided along the line of the tariff as well as of monetary standards, the outlook for the party is more problematical than ever, while few will deny that a policy of state or party which has behind it executive and legislative officials working in harmony and with a thorough understanding is far more likely to become a reality in legislation.

The New Tariff Bill

No law affecting so many diverse interests—sectional, industrial or personal—or so implicit in its adherence to a definite economic theory, as the bill introduced by Chairman Dingley for the Republican majority of the Ways and Means Committee of the House last week, could fail to call forth adverse criticism. All men recognized that a protective measure was sure to be reported and enacted, but many hoped that it would involve a moderate degree of protection, calculated to encourage revenue as well as industries, and duly mindful of the interests of the consumer as well as the producer. No authoritative comparison of the rates imposed by the present tariff and those of the proposed tariff is yet before the public, and until it is perhaps criticism should be withheld. But the fact remains that already individuals and journals of unimpeachable Republicanism have dared to assert that the new measure as reported is unsatisfactory, that if enacted it will be disappointing as a revenue producing act, and that it favors capital at the expense of manhood, the manufacturer at the expense of the consumer. If debate proves the truth of these charges it might be expected that a reform would be wrought in the House, but that body under its present rules has ceased to be a deliberative body, and a five minutes' talk in a hotel lobby with Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee will accomplish more than hours of debate on the floor of the House or pages of editorial criticism.

As for the clause of the bill which puts "a tariff on ideas," as the New York Tribune expresses it, which compels all our educational institutions and people of intelligence to pay duty on books and works of art from abroad, it is reactionary, barbarous, mediæval and disgraceful. Already the authorities of Yale, Cornell, Michigan University and other of our educational institutions have raised their voices in protest, as have men like G. H. Putnam for the bookmakers of the country and Henry G. Marquand for those who foster art. The reasons which Mr. Dingley gives for the reimposition of this tax are puerile.

The Arbitration Treaty

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has reported the Arbitration Treaty between Great Britain and the United States to the Senate, and debate upon it in executive session has begun, Senators Morgan and Stewart opposing its ratification in any form, and Senators Davis of Minnesota, Frye of Maine and Turpie of Indiana urging its prompt ratification as amended by the committee of which Senator Davis is chairman. These amendments modify the treaty in its administrative features, but they are not as emasculating in their effect as some which found friends in the Senate of the last Congress. King Oscar of Sweden will not serve as umpire. Justices of the Supreme Court are to be relieved from service as arbitrators and "jurists of repute" substituted. Lastly, and most important, the Senate's coordinate power as a treaty-making, treaty-confirming power is to be insisted upon by a proviso that all questions which are thought by the Executive to be proper for consideration by the arbitration tribunal must first be approved by the Senate as proper for adjudication by such a court. Whether friends for the treaty in its original form will be raised up in the Senate time will tell, but such an outcome is doubtful, and it probably will pass in substantially the form urged by the Foreign Relations Committee. The exclusion of King Oscar seems a needless insult. Our Supreme Court justices are overworked now, and their permanent retention on such a tribunal would impose grievous burdens, and might complicate their service on the tribunal which justice to their oaths and the constitution demands they should ever keep foremost. The proviso respecting the Senate's co-ordinate authority will embarrass this and all other administrations as they attempt to cope with European diplomats who have a free hand, but it is the natural action of a body which, ground recently between the upper millstone of executive contempt and the nether millstone of public wrath, has improved the first hours of a new Administration to fortify itself against new assaults. Unfortunately the Senate's record respecting the award of the Bering Sea arbitration tribunal has not conduced to better our record for national honor, nor justified the belief that the average senator is quite as competent to determine our foreign policy as the average President or Secretary of State. Still, on the whole, the treaty emerges from the committee-room in far better shape than we expected it would, owing chiefly, we believe, to the unmistakable friendly attitude of the President.

Our Representatives Abroad

Certain of the appointments made by President McKinley last week and confirmed by the Senate can be heartily commended. Others must be tolerated as only passable, and the fruit of our foolish policy which permits party debts to be paid by the bestowal of offices which beyond all others call for men with proper training and equipment. Mr. John Hay, the author and trained diplomat, will worthily represent us as ambassador to Great Britain, and so will Gen. Horace Porter of New York as ambassador to France; and Mr. Powell Clayton of Arkansas is quite as worthy to be our minister to Mexico as most of our representatives there have been, but no one can reasonably claim that his qualifications for the place approach the ideal, while as for Mr. Gowdy of Indiana, who is to be our consul general in Paris, he knows no French, and will soon be the butt of the ridicule of the Parisian press. As for Mr. W. M. Osborne, Mr. McKinley's cousin, who will be our consul general in London, his appointment is a personal one and recognized as such by all concerned.

It is gratifying to know that forces are already at work which promise to secure an exceptionally able and fit man as our minister to Greece, and it is freely stated now in Washington that Hon. John W. Foster stands ready to go to Constantinople as our representative there, if certain important details, over which Congress, as a court of last resort, has charge, are satisfactorily arranged. Athens and Constantinople are to be scenes of mighty changes within four years and it is imperative that we be properly represented there.

Mr. Gladstone's Letter

When discussing Armenia's wrongs Mr. Gladstone once said: "To describe guilt beyond all bounds, language ought to go beyond all bounds." But Mr. Gladstone's great letter, written in Cannes, France, and sent last week to the Duke of Westminster, in which letter he summons to opposition to the Powers all the liberty loving men of Christendom, is, on the whole, written in a restrained spirit, remorselessly logical and judicial in temper, and hence all the more effective and crushing. Yet it glows with superb moral indignation, and now and then an epigram, which will live forever, illumines the path with additional splendor. Neither Russian czar nor German kaiser escape from personal references full of wrath and scorn, and the diplomacy of Europe for a century is shown to have justly incurred William Watson's appraisal:

> Of ceremonious embassies that hold
> Parley with hell in fine and silken phrase,
> How weary is our heart these many days!

Mr. Gladstone is quite willing to concede that Great Britain must bear its share of odium, but he denies that her share is greatest, and imperiously demands that she once for all realize that "every extreme of wickedness is sacrosanct when it passes in Turkish garb"; that it is time for Britons to have done "with the gross and palpable delusion" that they only can do their duty in the East by acting in concert with the other Powers; that "the integrity of the Ottoman empire" is but "a rent and rugged catchword," and that Turkey has no title "to retain its sanguinary and ineffectual dominion" on European soil a moment longer. As for Greece and the change wrought in the situation by her recent conduct, he contrasts her action with that of the Powers thus:

> Greece, whom some seem disposed to treat as a criminal and disturber, has by her bold action conferred a great service upon Europe. She has made it impossible to palter with this question as we paltered with the blood-stained question of Armenia. She has extricated it from the meshes of diplomacy and placed it on the order of the day for definitive solution. I can remember no case in which so small a state has conferred so great a benefit.
>
> As to the notion that Greece is to be coerced and punished, I hardly like to sully the page on which I write by the mention of an alternative so detestable. It would be about as rational to transport the Greek nation, who are in this as one man, to Siberia by what, I believe, is called an administrative order. If any one has such a scheme of policy to propose, I advise his proposing it anywhere rather than in England.
>
> Let it be borne in mind that in this unhappy business all along, under the cover of the "concert of Europe," power and speech have been the monopoly of the governments and their organs, while the people have been shut out. Give us at length both light and air.

Such a man, speaking such a message, reassures men everywhere that God still reigns and still has human oracles.

Cretan Ports Blockaded

At 8 A. M. on last Lord's Day the six great Christian Powers of Europe began the "pacific blockade" of the ports of Crete. Truly it was a timely and most appropriate moment to begin so Christlike a deed! Russia, Austria and Germany would have preferred a joint blockade of Greek as well as Cretan ports, but to this Great Britain would not assent, neither will she listen to joint action against the Greek troops in Crete. Thus much of concession to popular feeling in Great Britain Lord Salisbury has made, but he still clings to the absurd notion that "a concert of the Powers" does or can exist and that the penalty of its rupture is a general European war, and this view he has set forth in the House of Lords during the past week, and so has Mr. Balfour in the House of Commons. To a different conclusion, however, the masses and the Liberal leaders have come, and, inspired by Mr. Gladstone's superb letter to the Duke of Westminster, Sir Vernon Harcourt's bold speech at Norwich, and the Earl of Kimberly's open avowal in the House of Lords that the Liberal party is forever done with the fiction that the preservation of "the integrity of the Ottoman empire" is necessary to the peace of Europe, the foreign policy of Great Britain again becomes a matter of party dispute, Lord Rosebery at one sweep is forever made impossible as a Liberal leader again, and the Greeks are informed that they have the sympathy of the British people in anything they may do to shake off Turkish rule over Crete.

With Turkey playing Russia's game by her present policy of comparative inaction, and yet chafing; with Austria ground between jealousy of Russia and fear of Greek expansion on the Mediterranean coasts; with Italy bound by treaty to act with Germany and Austria, yet seething with popular sympathy for Crete and Greece; with Germany playing Russia's game solely to prove herself more servile to Russia than France and hence more valuable as an ally; with France officially eager to retain Russia's favor and yet, popularly speaking, heart and soul with Greece, how refreshing it would be to see one Power stand free—mistress of the seas and arbiter of the fate of Christian peoples. If Great Britain seizes her royal opportunity now and invites the dreaded cataclysm, she stands to win more than all her diplomats have recently lost, whether general war proves to be a myth or a fact. Mr. Gladstone believes it is a myth. The "concert of the Powers" as a promoter of peace certainly is. As for us, we as a people are in duty bound to give moral and financial support to the Greeks, and already Boston's citizens have organized in obedience to this feeling of obligation; and our Department of State should carefully consider whether the Powers in declaring the blockade have any standing in international law, and if not, then refuse to accept it as binding on us as a fact or precedent. Phillimore, the great English authority on international law, denies its power to exclude legally British vessels conveying aid to the Cretans, and certainly until war is declared there the vessels of neutrals cannot be debarred, or searched even.

NOTES

By use of clôture Mr. Balfour has forced the Education Bill through the House of Commons, and the debt of the Tories to the Roman and Anglican Church bids fair to be paid.

Germany's Reichstag refuses to make such appropriations for the national navy as Kaiser Wilhelm urged. He is so peculiar in his acts and words now that plans for his successor's selection are being discussed and formulated.

Should war between Turkey and Greece be declared, watch for tumult in Constantinople. The Greeks there are armed, and will not submit supinely, as did the Armenians. Renewed outbreaks against the latter in the vicinity of Sivas are reported.

The floods in the Mississippi Valley, using that term in its widest sense, are unprecedented in extent and destruction wrought. From the headquarters of the Missouri, as far east as Wisconsin and as far south as Mississippi and Texas, there is the same tale of raging rivers overflowing their banks, breaking down levees, submerging farm lands and lowland villages and city suburbs.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court, in a majority opinion, Justices Field, Gray, Shiras and White dissenting, declaring the agreement of the Trans-Missouri Freight Association to maintain rates within its territory a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law of 1890, is one of greatest significance, coming as it does at a time when it was generally supposed that the law was ineffective in dealing with trusts and combinations.

The death of the heir-apparent to the throne of Japan, though not officially declared, is known. The rejection of some recent Japanese emigrants to Hawaii has strained the relations of those countries somewhat, and called attention in Hawaii and this country to the peril which the islands face by reason of Japanese inundation, which cannot be stopped as the treaties now stand. This will accelerate and strengthen the effort to bring about annexation to the United States. Mrs. Domines, the former queen, is in Washington, trying to secure recognition from the Administration, but she fails to do aught but provoke the smiles of the knowing and the flattery of the "tuft-hunters."

Mayor Strong's removal of Police Commissioner Parker, whether or not indorsed by Governor Black, will hasten the settlement of the controversy which, more than any other, has militated against the honor and credit of the reform administration of New York city, a controversy too which furnishes the most unanswerable argument against perpetuating a system of bi-partisan control of the Police Board of the Greater New York which is to be, evidence, however, which those who framed that charter of that new municipality spurned. Latest news from Albany indicates that Governor Black is insubordinate and refuses to follow the Platt program of aiding in "jamming" the Greater New York charter and other similar legislation through.

IN BRIEF

"The firing on the Christians of Crete is another proof of the un-Christian government of Christendom," is the striking diagnosis of the situation by a New York minister.

To Anxious Inquirer. No, the concert of the great Powers of Europe is not anything like the missionary concert which, we are glad to hear, you still maintain in your rural church.

We started to make a white list of daily papers that did not spread the disgusting details of the prize fight before their readers. The list was hardly begun before it was ended, but in it appeared to their everlasting credit the Boston Advertiser, Boston Transcript and the New York Evening Post.

One of the best compliments which the new occupant of the White House has received was paid by a Western congressman the other day, who said that the President can deny a request so pleasantly that you are glad he did not grant it. O, that people would feel that way when, with great sorrow of heart, we send them back their unavailable manuscripts!

How many of the ministers in and about Boston realize that at 53 Mt. Vernon Street is a library of not less than 14,000 volumes designed particularly for them. The death last week of their custodian, Rev. Luther Farnham, who has been such a well-known figure among us for so many years, calls fresh attention to this library, which constitutes a special reason for gratitude for those whose lot is cast in its vicinity.

Mrs. Annie Besant is such a talented woman that we wish she could find some other errand in this country than to exploit theosophy. Judging by her utterances in New York last Sunday, she has become more infatuated than ever before with this occult fad. We notice, by the way, that even Theosophists have a falling out with each other now and then, and that rival factions are already in evidence in this country.

"I have lived nearly thirty-seven years and I have known only one wicked person, and she had abscesses on the brain. People want to be good, but they don't know how." So spoke a radical woman at the recent national convention of women seeking suffrage. And she has lived in California and traveled in Europe. How guileless she must be! It is true that many people do evil through ignorance, and do aspire to be better than they are, but it is also just as true that thousands sin against light and deliberately do evil.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has decided that Williams College must pay taxes on residences occupied by its professors. The college claimed exemption on the ground that the property was used for the purpose for which the college was incorporated. The Court held that the property itself was used for strictly private purposes, and that the fact that the income was used for the college did not constitute a reason for exemption. Brown University, through its charter, is better off in this respect than Williams College.

If it has seemed to take a long time to bring about the actual beginning of effort looking toward a new Congregational House, the activity now evident at 14 Beacon Street augurs well for a rapid prosecution of the work of destruction and reconstruction. It is possible to see, at various hours of the day, prominent Congregational laymen connected with the association watching the progress of the workmen, who have already made considerable headway in the fortnight since operations began. The design for the new structure has not yet been selected. The competition among the architects indicates that they consider success a prize worth striving for.

The trustees of the School of Christian Workers voted last week to change the name of that institution to Bible Normal College. This move is due to a conviction that the new title will best represent the actual work of the school, which is now laying great stress upon a comprehensive knowledge of the Bible and the best modern methods of teaching it. The physical department will be dropped in order to concentrate effort upon Sunday school and missionary departments. A new instructor, George E. Dawson, a graduate of Michigan University who has studied at Leipzig, will be on the ground next September. His special field will be psychology, pedagogy and sociology.

The death of Dr. R. W. Dale of Birmingham, Eng., which occurred two years ago, has just been followed by that of his wife, who died at Bath, whither she had gone for her health, from burns received while reading by a candle in bed. Mrs. Dale bore an active part in co-operation with her husband during his long ministry in Birmingham, and was a most estimable woman. After the accident she survived two days in pain and passed away March 11. She leaves three children, Mr. A. W. W. Dale, tutor of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, pleasantly known to many American Congregationalists, Miss Gertrude Dale and a married daughter in Australia. Mrs. Dale was sixty-seven years of age.

It is the easiest thing in the world to hinder a good cause by a superfluity of zeal in its behalf. There was a meeting, not long ago, at which, in the presence of a brilliant company of men high in legislative and judicial circles, the question of International Arbitration was brought to the front by the leading speaker of the evening. The audience was heartily in sympathy with his able and ardent support of the proposed treaty between Great Britain and America, but the good man talked on and on until in the judgment of one who was present, "If he had gone on much longer his zeal in promoting international peace would have resulted in war to the knife." Be warned, those of you who have a point to gain in public debates.

It is announced that Dr. John Watson (Ian Maclaren) is soon to be tried for heresy by the English Presbyterians. If the statement be true, Dr. Watson hardly will prove to be on trial so much as his accusers. In an interview in London, Monday, Dr. Watson said:

> I have ignored the charge of heresy brought against me, as it is simply vexatious. I shall not notice it in any way, unless the matter is referred to in the synod, who will undoubtedly reject the charge. If it is sent to the presbytery, I shall, of course, defend myself to the bitter end, and with counsel and otherwise. I wish you would thank my many friends in America for their kindness. Say to them that they need not be alarmed about my orthodoxy.

It is proposed that telegrams from Crete be submitted to censorship by the admirals of the fleet of the united Powers, who are supposed to be blockading the island. And a graver attempt in the same line is the bill just offered in the New York legislature providing for a censorship of the press in that State. It is too late for any such mediæval folly. There may be some excuse for the supervision of dispatches from any seat of war. But to try to restrict thus the freedom of the press in any part of this country in time of peace is childish. Correction of the undeniable faults of our newspapers must begin at the other end. Let nobody buy or advertise in journals which publish objectionable matter and reform will soon come to pass. It cannot be accomplished wisely or permanently in any other manner.

It is significant what a deep sense of personal loss has been caused in many hearts by the death of Professor Drummond. Even those who never met him face to face felt through his writings the spell of his rare personality. The religious press speaks in high praise of him, and even the decidedly conservative journals seem little disposed to magnify what they used to consider his serious departures from orthodoxy. Commenting on what appears to her his untimely death a friend writes: "Sometimes it makes one believe that after all the main work of some lives is to be done elsewhere, and when workmen are needed here or there they are shifted about accordingly, with little reference to our view of things." There seems to be good authority for the statement that Professor Drummond never fully recovered from a fever contracted during his African journeys a dozen years or more ago.

The Congregational Church Union of Boston and vicinity has acted wisely in issuing for general circulation the first annual report of its transactions, which was read by Rev. W. E. Barton, D. D., at the annual meeting at the Old South Church in January. It embodies careful investigations made by a special committee of four ministers, and never has a more accurate diagnosis of the Congregationalism of Boston and vicinity been made. The union will justify its existence if it does nothing more than put forth such telling documents as this. It utters notes of warning, but it carries much inspiration as well. We trust it will be widely read among the 100 churches of metropolitan Boston. As one of our prominent laymen says, "If it does not stir the denomination neither will it be persuaded though one rose from the dead." Copies may be had from the secretary of the union, J. Howard Field, 98 Summer Street.

The recent union evangelistic meetings in South Boston, in which three Episcopal rectors participated, may bring forth unexpected fruit. The fact that Methodist ministers, in the course of these services, were permitted to speak from Episcopal pulpits and to wear surplices is resented by members of the Church Union, a ritualistic organization. While no official action has yet been taken, the interviews with various persons concerned make clear the line of cleavage between the High Church and the Broad Church party. Representatives of the former, like Rector Frisbee of the Church of the Advent, stigmatize the action of the South Boston men as lawlessness, while one of them, Mr. George of St. Matthew's Church, stands up boldly for his course, and says he wants to realize something of church unity before he reaches heaven. Upon such an issue as this one does not have to think twice to surmise where Phillips Brooks would have stood.

Not altogether confined to reminiscence are the efforts which used to be made to inveigle generous givers at a distance to support boom movements in Western towns. The Chicago Times Herald, describing these experiences as connected with Wichita, Kan., says:

> The sudden awakening to the crying need of educational institutions of a high order was a unique feature of that period. Eleven colleges and "universities" were soon under way. Men with no more knowledge of theology than a Kansas grasshopper had of astronomy suddenly developed uncontrollable zeal in the founding of theological seminaries. The buildings for most of these institutions never got above the ground. One large structure was partially completed and duly mortgaged to a Boston capitalist, who is today the happy possessor of a first-class "university" unincumbered by either students or professors. How so many institutions were to be supported nobody stopped to inquire.

It might be added that if inquiries had been pressed then, the cause of education would have suffered less and there would be more money for institutions that really need it.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM NEW YORK

For Arbitration

The National Arbitration Committee, of which Mr. William E. Dodge is chairman and Rev. Dr. L. T. Chamberlain is vice-chairman, has published a terse and pithy pamphlet of about a hundred pages, giving the result of the committee's canvass (gathered within the last month) of the opinions of prominent men in all professions in all the States. Of 1,002 replies received, 932 expressed their desire for the adoption of the treaty unamended; twenty-two believed it might be improved by amendment; only twelve opposed its enactment. The committee has appended these 1,000 names, in many cases with brief statement of the signers' opinions, to a memorial to the United States Senate, prefacing the document with written sentiments favoring arbitration from Washington, Grant, Sheridan and McKinley, and appending to it copies of petitions, resolutions, memorials, etc., from public bodies and official dignitaries throughout the Union. It can hardly fail to have great weight with the Senate.

Trusts and No Trust

The question before the March meeting of the Congregational Club, Are Trusts and Great Combinations of Capital a Menace to the Public Welfare? was argued in the affirmative by Prof. J. W. Jenks of Cornell and in the negative by Mr. F. B. Thurber, a retired grocer of this city, whose business experience had converted him to that side from its opposite. The professor denied that either competition or monopoly is today the normal condition of business life. Competition cannot give low prices, he said, because it is wasteful in advertising, in added cost of transportation, expense of management and in inventive ability. He discriminated between legal, natural and competitive monopoly. He called the trust a monopoly when it has power to put up prices and control the market. Monopolies always put prices up. He dwelt upon the great political influence of trusts and their use of wealth so as to injure the community, which has a right to protect itself. Trusts, he held, threaten the freedom of our people, and if they controlled should be stopped by letting the people know what trusts are doing.

Mr. Thurber took just the opposite view, claiming that trusts, except temporarily, have lowered prices and helped the people. Their intelligent self-interest has led them to buy or produce cheaply and then to sell cheaply. These results he called an evolution of industry consequent upon the great forces of steam and electricity. The more people know of trusts the less they will fear them, as the horse shies at an umbrella till you let him smell of it, when he goes on without trouble.

A Shameful Sight

Humiliation over Nevada's degradation in inviting to her borders the disgusting prize fight with its vile and dangerous accompaniments was not greatly relieved for our own citizens who had to be in the streets on the afternoon of that day. The vicinity of newspaper offices and several open squares elsewhere were so thronged by thousands of people—not all evidently rowdies and ruffians either—as to seriously impede the passing of decent people on their own business. The crowds were watching extemporized bulletins giving every few minutes telegraphic news as to the progress of the fight. One paper of the "yellow" variety, more enterprising than most, had a pair of manikins representing the combatants, which were so manipulated as to reproduce before the spectators' eyes every blow given, with its effect on the receiver, as these were reported by the telegraph wires. The applause or oaths of the spectators indicated upon which bruiser each had staked his money. The amount gained and lost here on the result, with that spent in going to the fight, is set by those who profess to know at figures running up to millions in the aggregate. And these are "hard times," with thousands of honest workers' families in want. Henceforth it will hardly be in good taste for Americans to rail against the brutalities of the Spanish bull fight, lest they hear, "Physician, heal thyself!"

The Police Muddle

Whether or not the resolutions of the ministers affected the mayor's mind, he so far met their wishes as to remove one of the offending police commissioners, the most pliant tool of the political Machine, the chief cause of the long standing deadlock in that board and the heaviest obstacle to the transaction of its official business. His dismissal requires the governor's concurrence, which is not sure to be gained, and if it is there is likely to be long, vexatious and costly litigation before the board is fairly rid of the obstinate obstructionist. "Machine politics" is the notorious curse of every department of our New York life and government—even our schools not being exempt from it—but there are few where this baleful influence does more injury than in the police administration, giving so many vile rascals a "pull" which serves them in tight places that should be crushing.

The Sportsmen's Show

We are having this annual entertainment in which is shown the yearly advance made in the construction of firearms, ammunition, boats, yachts, fishing tackle and all that, besides trophies of every kind won by extra skill, specimens of living and dead game from land, water and air, with all manner of structures and appurtenances for making life in the woods, the mountains and by the streams healthful and helpful. A fresh addition this year has been the provision of shooting galleries for revolver practice, and artificial ponds for the fly-casters, in the latter of which "contemplative" trouters, professional and amateur, have taken great delight. One revolver shooter made twelve consecutive "bull's-eye" hits, another eleven, and a third ten. One fly-caster threw his trout fly one hundred feet and three and a half inches, switch cast, and another made the same distance with an overhand throw, a degree of skill which betokens early depletion of the trout streams and ponds of our country. HUNTINGTON.

FROM LONDON

Sixty Years Queen

The spirit in which the nation is entering into the preparations for the celebration in June of the diamond jubilee of Queen Victoria shows how strong is the hold our sovereign lady has on the affection and loyalty of her subjects. It is not too much to say that throughout her Majesty's long reign her popularity has steadily increased. We love her because she has proved herself at once a great queen and a good woman. Any disappointment or irritation that may have been occasioned by the seclusion in which she has chosen to live since becoming a widow has long been far outweighed by our growing appreciation of her qualities of mind and heart. Her influence has ever been rightly directed and wisely exerted, whilst from time to time the heart of the nation has been deeply stirred by her tender, womanly messages to the afflicted and the bereaved. Victoria is no mere figurehead; she has always kept her fingers closely on the springs of government; she still devotes hours daily to the affairs of state, and is intimately acquainted with the course of events. Her ready acceptance from the proprietors of The Congregationalist of The Book of the Pilgrimage is an indication of her sympathetic interest in any movement to promote good feeling between the English and American people. The adoption of the suggestion, which has emanated from the American colony in London, that the United States Government send a special embassy to England to congratulate the queen on the completion of the sixtieth year of her reign would have a very happy effect. The decision that the national commemoration of the record reign shall take the form of financial aid to the hospitals shows the humanitarian instincts of the royal family, and has won universal approbation. Although the sovereignty of the queen-empress is not quite the figment it is often supposed to be, we venture to think that in reality the government of this country is not less democratic than that of the United States. Nobody of any account now advocates the abolition of the monarchy. The familiar resolution that the time has now come when a republican form of government should be substituted for a monarchy has even dropped out of debating society programs. God save the queen!

Farewell

The banquet to Mr. Bayard, on March 2, to which the Lord Mayor of London kindly invited the representative of The Congregationalist, was a most brilliant and impressive function. A more notable gathering has rarely assembled within the hospitable walls of the Mansion House. The 300 guests included some of the most distinguished representatives of the state, the aristocracy, law, diplomacy, science, literature, art, etc. The entire assembly was unmistakably animated by the warmest possible feeling towards the departing ambassador, and reciprocated to the full all that he said respecting the relations between the American and British people. The lord mayor's eulogy of Mr. Bayard—"the distinguished jurist, the polished diplomat, the charming scholar, the accomplished orator"—was throughout most heartily indorsed. When the guest of the evening rose to respond he was met with a roar of welcome. There were cries of "hurrah!" and "bravo!" and handkerchiefs were waved. Then followed a dead silence that became painful. No one who saw the ambassador at that moment—his handsome figure at its full hight, his face pale, his profile sharply outlined in the strong light—striving to gain the mastery of his feelings, while a wave of emotion passed through the assembly, can never forget the scene. Gradually recovering himself, Mr. Bayard spoke for forty-five minutes with an animation and a fervor, and revealing a loftiness of aim and singleness of purpose that made an indelible impression. The two most loudly applauded passages were the declaration that there is not a question between the people of the United States and the people of the British empire that justifies a serious controversy of any kind, and the suggestion that there should be between them not only good will, but, "if need be" (this with marked emphasis), "mutual support." Lord Salisbury's remark, "I believe that there is not, I doubt if there ever has been, any subject which would seriously separate them," likewise gave great pleasure. All classes of the community are loath to part from Mr. Bayard. As the lord mayor well put it, he is taking with him the heart of the people of Great Britain.

F. B. Meyer on His Visit to America

Mr. Meyer has returned home greatly gratified and inspired by his visit to America. His fortnight's severe work (he spoke thirty-four times) seems to have agreed with him physically as well as spiritually. He seems to have been specially impressed by the gatherings in Boston. He says he never realized so much of God's power as at the Tremont Temple meetings, and describes the ministers' gathering in Philadelphia on the Monday before his departure as the most wonderful meeting of all, the deepest and most powerful he had ever attended. Speaking of his visit to the late Dr. Gordon's home, he said: "I sat in his chair, I lay on his sofa, I used his Greek Testament, I blessed the children, and then I went to preach in the church." Mr. Meyer brings word that New York ministers have determined more than ever to put aside sensational preaching and the mere dealing with passing topics, which had been too much the program of their ministry, and to come back to the simple preaching and exposition of the Word of God, and specially the doctrine of the Holy Ghost. He gave the Christ Church congregation a message of thanks from 3,500 American Christians for releasing him to go to them. In addition to the petition for a blessing on the United States offered at Christ Church every Sunday, Mr. Meyer in his free prayer specially remembered the ministers and churches of America. As Mr. Meyer grows older he becomes more and more evangelistic and spiritually-minded. He is anxious to infuse his own congregation with the spiritual power manifested at the meetings he addressed on your side. He mentioned that he received more than one offer to remain, but that his heart was at Christ Church. London cannot spare Mr. Meyer.

Dr. Pentecost's Farewell

The church at Yonkers (wherever that may be; on this side geographical experts have had to be consulted) would better be cautious. "If the people I am going to don't treat me well," said Dr. Pentecost, more or less seriously, at the large and remarkable farewell gathering, presided over by Lord Kinnaird in Marylebone Church, March 4, "I shall come back again." No remark throughout a long and demonstrative meeting was so much applauded. Until he began to pull them up Dr. Pentecost did not know how deeply he had struck his roots in British hearts. "From the laboring man and the servant girl, from even the widow with a family dependent upon her, have come touching, loving words and humble gifts, and the stream continues to flow." So spake one of the church officers when making the presentation. It was impressive to see venerable laymen, many of them belonging to the best Scottish types, one after another paying the highest possible tribute to Dr. Pentecost's ministry. He must be at once proud and humbled. One of the elders seemed disposed to rebel, and confessed that the pastor's removal was staggering to his faith. When Dr. Pentecost entered the Presbyterian Church of England he had to contend with some opposition and much prejudice. He has overcome all that and leaves a congregation that is literally weeping with grief and hoping against hope that he may yet return. Dr. Pentecost leaves a son an officer in the Marylebone Church, and as the doctor humorously put it, with a son on one side of the Atlantic and a daughter on the other, they will be playing battledoor and shuttlecock with him. He was glad to go home again, to his country and his people, but it was a profound sorrow to leave these English, Scotch, Irish and Welsh hearts. The presentation included a silver tea and coffee service, an illuminated address, an album of signatures and photographs and a gold repeater watch and chain. These gifts represent £250, from over 300 contributors, none of whom were allowed to give more than ten guineas. In addition the doctor was handed a check for £50 for books, to enable him to keep abreast of the times. It is now thirty-four years since Dr. Pentecost entered the ministry; he has spent about half that time on this side, having crossed the Atlantic thirty-one times, and he expects to continue to be "that peripatetic, restless, moving man" he has always been. ALBION.

TWO MIDDLE STATE UNIVERSITY CITIES

BY G. P. M.

The traveler, open to impressions, as he rides through the outskirts of Philadelphia and Baltimore, can scarcely fail to note the multitude of small houses wherein reside those classes which in too many other cities are forced to inhabit tenement and apartment houses. Philadelphia is credited with an average increase of 10,000 small houses per year during the last five years. How much this means in the conservation of the personal purity, family integrity and social welfare of Philadelphians and Baltimoreans it is unnecessary to point out here.

Conservative as both cities are, one cannot return to them after an absence of several years without seeing signs on every hand of material prosperity and higher standards of life. Such elegant and large buildings as the Presbyterians and Baptists are building for their future denominational headquarters in Philadelphia; such new buildings as McCoy Hall at Johns Hopkins University, and the new library at the University of Pennsylvania; such a wonderful institution as the Drexel Institute in Philadelphia and the many splendid church edifices and mansions of the latest and best type to be seen on the old as well as new streets of both cities, all indicate that these cities have a vitality and ambition with which neither is usually credited.

The Drexel Institute has few rivals and no peer in this country in its work of giving to the young of both sexes a technical, practical education in the fine and industrial arts, and domestic sciences, and as a Bostonian, it was with pleasure that we inspected there the loan collection of 116 plates made by Louis Prang to illustrate the catalogue of the collection of Oriental porcelains made by the late William T. Walters of Baltimore, known to be the finest in existence. Our Boston lithographer has produced results which defy the competition of Europe.

Philadelphia has given heartier welcome to the university extension movement than any other city in this country, and conversation with the executive officials of the central body there indicates that they believe thoroughly in its future growth throughout the country, though they frankly admit that it has not taken root as quickly as they hoped it would; that we have no trained young lecturers equal to those that the English universities produce; and that it is difficult to get the American student to do the thorough work in connection with the lectures that the English student does, nor have we succeeded in attracting those who perhaps need the stimulus of such courses most.

Thus, at a lecture on the French Revolution, especially Jean Jacques Rousseau's share in preparing for it, which we heard Hilaire Belloc, a clever young Frenchman educated at Oxford, give before a Wilmington university extension class, those present were the élite matrons and maids of the city, and not its artisans; and the plaintive way in which the lecturer asked for essays on the theme which he had discussed was both pathetic and amusing and conclusive proof that there at least the lecturer was engaged in the process of sponge-filling.

Congregational authors like Principal Fairbairn and R. F. Horton, and Prof. George P. Fisher and Lyman Abbott are doing much to shape the thought of the young men of both these university cities. Principal Fairbairn, as we happen to know from personal observation, is constantly quoted and consulted in the systematic theology work of the Protestant Episcopal Divinity School, and the books of the men just named are to be found in the libraries of many of the students of that Episcopal institution. Dr. Abbott has just been lecturing in Philadelphia, invited there by the Hicksite Quakers, and the town has been stirred somewhat by his views on the Bible, What It Is, How to Study It, etc. Last week he gave a course of three at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, addressed to the students and faculty, his theme being the Christian in the Commonwealth, a topic less likely to provoke dissent than his lectures on the Bible, which originally were scheduled but withdrawn for prudential reasons.

Congregational Work is printed in Philadelphia on the presses and with the type of the Sunday School Times, whose editor, Dr. Trumbull, cordially welcomed the representative of a journal whose former managing editor, Mr. Richardson, he says, first encouraged and stimulated him to take up the line of authorship in which he has won fame. He speaks enthusiastically of the pleasure of dealing with the editors of Congregational Work, and though a Presbygationalist now, he confesses that the people of "the ancient faith," in which Horace Bushnell instructed him, are as satisfactory business clients as man need desire.

Dr. Trumbull is typical of a class, also found in Baltimore among the Johns Hopkins professors, who, though trained in the Congregational faith, now worship in Presbyterian churches for reasons satisfactory to their own consciences. Every step forward which Congregationalism in Philadelphia and Baltimore has taken since the pioneers dared to face and defy the old tradition that Congregationalism had no place west of the Hudson and south of New York has been won despite the social ostracism and misunderstanding of the dominant sects—Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodists—and to this day in Baltimore it requires tact and assiduity to secure the insertion of a notice of a Congregational church service among those of other denominations, and not among the nondescripts, spiritualists and the like; while in the same city men of the Puritan stock and faith of the last generation, who joined the First Church, are dying and passing away, and their places are not being filled by those who naturally would be expected to take their places. But while growth among the laity and from within is not rapid, we are informed that were there sufficient churches and pulpits a half a dozen immediately could be manned by a fine grade of pastors born and bred in the Methodist Episcopal and Methodist Protestant churches, who are chafing under the rule of the presiding elders and the itinerant system and are eager to become Congregationalists.

Judging from impressions gained at a pleasant conference with four of the five Congregational pastors of Philadelphia and with Superintendent Jones of the C. H. M. S., the denomination has much reason to be satisfied with the outlook there, while the record of the last ten years is inspiring. Dr. Richards of the First Church, who, by reason of his seniority, exercises the functions but none of the powers of a "bishop," has sent off family after family to found new churches, and yet the old church is strong and healthy, and he is respected and admired by men of all faiths. The newer churches at Germantown, Kensington and the Snyder Avenue and the Park Churches are growing rapidly, winning the artisans in the Kensington mills, the substantial residents of the fine new residential districts of west Philadelphia and Germantown, most of whom have to learn the polity and history of the denomination after they enter it, attracted by the freedom and catholicity of the churches and the ability of their pastors.

Nothing but lack of funds seems to stand in the way of great expansion of churches of our order. Given the money to build the churches, Dr. Richards instantly would plant outposts in districts growing rapidly but now uncared for by any church. Harmony rules among our clergy. They are too busy about practical problems to give much thought to the problems of higher criticism, and they assure me they do not intend to be drawn into controversy about it. Yet it is plain that they are liberal, and in no mood to prosecute for heresy men who may be radical, as far as we can learn.

Philadelphia's leading literary club, the Contemporary, opened the lists the other evening to a discussion of the Cretan-Greco problem and it is doubtful whether an abler treatment of the subject has been heard anywhere. Professors B. I. Wheeler of Cornell and E. A. Grosvenor of Amherst and ex-United States minister to Greece, A. L. Snowden, are a trio of speakers difficult to surpass.

One of the worthiest sons of A. B. C. F. M. missionaries resident in this country is Talcott Williams of the Philadelphia Press, whose versatility as a man of letters and devotion to public welfare is remarkable. We found him preparing for a trip to North Africa, where he will rest by studying inscriptions on the mosques, or by investigating the laws of the tribes of interior Morocco and ascertaining their likeness to the Levitical code, the fruit of which research will appear in a monograph read before some learned society next winter.

PARABLES IN PICTURES

III. THE GOOD SAMARITAN

BY ESTELLE M. HURLL

We cherish the parable of the Good Samaritan as our Lord's definition of a neighbor. His meaning is so clear that he who runs may read. Any fellow-being in need of our help has a neighbor's claim upon us. The priest, Levite and Samaritan, alike ignorant of the name of the wounded stranger, were each in turn in a position to treat him as a neighbor. In passing by on the other side two neglected their opportunity, while the third by his helpful service proved that he loved his neighbor as himself. The climax of the story is reached when the Samaritan comes to the stranger's relief. This is the moment chosen most frequently in Italian art for an illustration of the parable. There are numerous examples by Bassano, Veronese, Domenico Feti and others. By some Dutch masters of the seventeenth century, as Van der Velde and Rembrandt, the subject selected is The Arrival at the Inn. The most notable picture of this class is by Rembrandt in the Louvre Gallery at Paris. A typical Italian example is given us by our miniature painter, Liberale da Verona, in the set of miniatures in the Siena Cathedral library.

The two principal figures fill the foreground of the great O for which the picture is an illumination. In the landscape background the priest and the Levite pursue their way along a winding road which leads to a turreted city on a distant hillside. They cast no backward glances at the poor traveler to whom aid has at last come. The Good Samaritan is quaintly depicted as a mediæval knight. His homely, honest features are surmounted by a helmet which he has pushed back. As he kneels in front of the stranger he touches the wound in the chest lightly with the air of a connoisseur. The wounded man lies with his head thrown back, with an expression as agonized as the gentle painter knew how to make it. One is constantly reminded of Fra Angelico in the work of Liberale. Like the gentle Florentine monk he seems to be ill at ease in portraying sin or suffering. His figures are more vigorous here than usual, the grouping showing a good deal of character. Altogether the whole story is admirably told in a tiny compass.

Some Responses to Dr. Behrends's Question

The article in our issue of March 11 by Dr. Behrends of Brooklyn, entitled Is It Only an Eddy, or Is It More? has called forth a number of replies from a wide extent of territory and from men of differing opinions. We publish some of these replies below, though limits of space have obliged us to condense several of them. Dr. Behrends's article, it will be remembered, deprecated certain theological drifts which he judged to be gathering force within the denomination. The characteristics of this drift, he said, are as follows: "The doctrine of the Trinity is reduced to a form of logic. The incarnation is so formulated as to reduce it to the pantheistic statement of a universal indwelling of God in all men. Inspiration is reduced to intuition. Atonement dwindles down into a rhetorical expression. Expiation and propitiation have become figures of speech. Our ranks seem to be honeycombed with universalism and annihilationism. The reality of the fall is boldly denied, and the most extreme doctrines of natural evolution are openly advocated in our pulpits. Sin is declared to be only the remnant of our animal ancestry, which we are gradually sloughing off. The revolutionary theories of Wellhausen are invested with infallible authority, and the narratives of the Old Testament are reduced to a mass of fables and forgeries." We comment elsewhere editorially on these replies.

NEITHER EDDY NOR DRIFT, BUT CURRENT

Dr. Behrends's query doubtless does duty for other minds than his own, and will evoke many responses. Among them there should be an affirmation of the positive value resident in the changed views. Some men are speaking in these new ways because they are firmly persuaded that the truths they seek to utter have a savor of life. Men holding views differing from the traditions of the past can hold them in a constructive spirit and in a form that seems to them spiritually fruitful.

The doctrine of the trinity, instead of being reduced to a form of logic, is having its truth delivered from the chain of formal logic that so long has bound it and is being historically interpreted. The focal point of its truth is the personal life of God. The incarnation, instead of being "so formulated as to reduce it to the pantheistic statement of a universal in-dwelling of God in all men," discerns in Jesus Christ the clear consciousness of God's personal indwelling, and on the basis of that demonstrated spiritual reality affirms the Christ life to be divinely proffered to all men.

Regarding inspiration the present emphasis is placed upon its inner nature. God directly accredits himself to the human soul. Truth authenticated by his spirit is revelation. There is no sufficient canon of inspiration apart from spiritual intuition. The hope of a wider and more pervasive inspiration in no way impugns the integrity of the inspirations already given, nor is the truth of the past strengthened by secluding it from the truth of the present. While believing that the "good old Book" will survive, we would have it survive on its merits and in the light of all the facts. A narrative may pass from the range of literal history into that of spiritual imagery and yet lose nothing of its moral import. Even fables are not necessarily lies. Æsop's cunningly devised tale of the fox and grapes has been an enduring vehicle of truth.

Atonement, instead of "dwindling down into a rhetorical expression," is forfeiting, we believe, some tinges of Hebrew rhetoric and is yielding the spiritual image of that primal soul who first calmly dared to deem himself at one with God, who knew himself a son of God, who knew God to be his father, who knew life to be divine, and who hence knew this, his own life, to be the life. Christ reveals an absolute congruity between the human and divine. We deem him really representative of life, and we summon our souls to verify his vital doctrine of spiritual sonship.

"Expiation and propitiation" have always been "figures of speech." These terms have been deeply dyed in the blood of bulls and of goats, and they carry in their train the entire Levitical law of sacrifice. Some dismiss them from ordinary usage as inadequate to convey the more personal truth of God's relation to us in his sorrow at our sin and his yearning to forgive. The higher law of sacrifice is written in the heart. We emphasize the passage from formal Judaism to vital Christianity. We do not dismiss the historic connection or violate the earlier truth, for we see the truth of primitive sacrifice and of external oblation taken up into the warmer, ultimate truth of a heart lovingly devoted to the will of God, and, since Christ stands for what is spiritually ultimate, no figures of speech can do more than hint the immediate relationship into which every soul must at length come who would verify the truth that is in him. We are striving to translate the figurative into its spiritual equivalent.

"The reality of the fall is boldly denied." To read a fact of human nature against a background other than the customary one is not to deny it. The Hebrews were oppressed with the immediate fact of sin; they drew its outlines baldly against a pale blue sky of innocence. It was a child's sketch, but no one could mistake the fact it stood for. It was a picture of dramatic situation. Today the picture is a portrait and the lines are those of character in the making. The contrast is within the man himself; every act casts its shadow or radiates its light; the possibilities of good and evil are inherent, and the enormity of sin increases with the light. Exceeding sinfulness we impute less to Adam than to the man who latest stood out for self against God. For a spiritual being to remain in animalism is sin. To say that sin is abnormal is to say that holiness is normal, and that man will not be fully man until he is Christlike; and to say that holiness is normal is to affirm that God is normal and spirituality constructive in his world.

Nor is the doctrine of evolution destitute of spiritual significance. Evolution is not a metaphysical theory; it is a science of processes. Metaphysically it is dumb. It conditions one's thought of God, but it does not determine it. It necessitates neither materialism, agnosticism nor pantheism. It is not only compatible with spiritual theism, but is peculiarly suggestive of the mode of existence of an infinite personality.

The good old gospel is showing its vitality in its hospitality and fitness to the modern Gentile world of scientific thought. There are those who believe that the changes in question are conducive to a revival of evangelical doctrine, as it lay in the mind of the founder of Christianity. Christianity spoke its truth in the fourth century in the language of that century, and it was the language of philosophy; today it must speak its truth in the tongue of the nineteenth century. We can keep faith with the historic past only by permitting the present to become historic. The form of truth must change with the expanding mind of man.

Lexington. CHARLES F. CARTER.

THE REAL QUESTION

In the article in which the minister of our second largest Congregational church comes forward to defend the faith, and by implication to attack Congregationalism, it will be noted that he announces his disapproval of "elaborate creeds," since they afford no security to "sound doctrine," and because they are "provocative of dissent." These statements, which would have grieved, if not alarmed, some of the men who in recent years have been most concerned for sound doctrine, may possibly suggest an answer to the question, Is It Only an Eddy, or Is It More? For evidently we are all being borne along out of the region of the religion of dogma into that of the religion of spirit. New attitudes of mind toward the matters of our faith, as well as new statements concerning them, are evidence of this. Progress is inevitable wherever there is life, and we are heartily glad to think that the Congregational churches form a part of the current for whose flow the spirit of God furnishes the dynamic. De Quincey has said that "Time must be given for the intellect to eddy about a truth and to appropriate its bearings." From this point of view, it is possible that what Dr. Behrends beholds is only the Congregational churches circling about and appropriating important truth. Certainly we may hope that they are not stranded in the stream where, with much bubbling and seething, belated things are in furious motion, but are making no advancement.

But the real question asked in the article is not the one stated in the title. The real question may be thus stated. Are not the Congregational churches disloyal to Jesus Christ, and are they not therefore doomed to an early and inglorious grave? This is a serious question. Some persons will feel that it should be propounded only in view of weighty and undoubted reasons. We feel sure that such reasons do not exist. We know many of the younger Congregational ministers, and we believe that they are loyal to the Master. Their religious experience has been quickened and sustained through fellowship with Jesus, and his personality is of paramount importance to them. Their structure of faith rests primarily upon Christ, and not upon the Scripture or any creed. Such souls, secure in realized fellowship with God through Christ, can view without alarm the restatement of matters of religious experience, and are enabled to meet the results of criticism always with equanimity and sometimes with thanksgiving. It is certainly a principle, if not the principle, of Congregationalism that the Spirit of Christ abides in the churches to give guidance, not only in matters of discipline, but also in matters of doctrine. Good Congregationalists should not too readily abandon that position.

We may be blinded by an inherited faith that harks back to four Puritan settlements, but we do not look for the sudden demise of Congregationalism. We are chagrined that there has been in our generation a recurring anxiety about the grave, but we would not have bands of mourners, either from our own or other denominations, go about the streets, lest their sorrow be premature. The principle of Congregationalism working in its history has constrained many persons to believe that our churches are peculiarly fitted to meet the difficulties and dangers of times of transition, and that our churches may well hope to be loyal both to a "Lord of Life" and a "Prince of Peace."

Some words taken from Dr. Dexter's monumental work will clarify our intelligence, compose our hearts and fortify our wills:

> There are no outside legislations fencing Congregationalism absolutely in; no platforms holding it absolutely up to the exact level at which they were builded when built, no less, no more; no judicatories pledged to keep the tree trimmed to the exact pattern of the old time by forever lopping off all new growth; there is no strength of this kind in our system, none whatever, and the sooner we make up our minds to that fact, and govern ourselves accordingly, the better. No, our > government is not strong in externals. It just has God's indwelling to shape it, and God's interworking to control it. . . . Our danger then as Congregationalists is that, instead of trusting our system, thoroughly familiarizing ourselves with it, and faithfully and fearlessly carrying it out, we shall be afraid of that which is high and fears shall be in the way, and the keepers of the house tremble, and the strong men bow themselves, and so the evil days come, and the years draw nigh when every man will say, "I have no pleasure in them."

Some of us are grieved and mortified that Dr. Behrends's question should be propounded. We would fain believe that it is due to a mood of disturbed temper, such as once came upon Elijah. We trust that the answer from the churches will be such as to convince Dr. Behrends that his perturbed spirit has been the victim of "hallucination," and also such as to renew his confidence in his brethren and his faith in the future of Congregationalism.

Portsmouth, N. H. Lucius H. Thayer.

THE "HISTORIC" FAITH CAPABLE OF ENLARGEMENT

To me Dr. Behrends's article seems a somewhat extreme, but very discriminating, statement of a movement to which no Congregationalist can close his eyes. It is, however, greatly to be regretted that so representative a man should wholly ignore the fact that underneath this very movement may lie some valuable truth, some more perfect adjustment between our theology and God's self-revelation in nature and history. It is to be regretted that he writes of "the historic faith" as if it were something fixed and definite, from which there could be no departure without loss. Is it true of Congregationalism, in any such sense as this, that "its past history is associated with the most vigorous defense of the historic faith"? Is it not rather true that, as today, so for many decades, no church in America has been more keenly alive to, or more conscientiously honest in, the discussion of the great questions of the faith? It is a serious charge that is made in Dr. Behrends's article; but, while watching eagerly and speaking frankly, are we not bound to feel that our beloved Congregationalism may still be called to enlarge and adjust as well as to conserve "the historic faith," and that even a radical movement may rest upon or at least involve some thought of God for which the world is waiting?

Burlington, Vt. P. M. Snyder.

NOT A RISING FLOOD

I venture to give my opinion of the situation. In addition to my Congregational pastorate in Nashua, I have had intimate and sympathetic acquaintance with many Congregational ministers and laymen in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Colorado, Minnesota and Canada, and can fairly claim to speak from personal knowledge.

The opinion which Dr. Behrends expresses with regard to the inefficiency of creeds, ecclesiastical censures, church courts and councils may be passed by with the single remark that he seems to advocate a return to that independency from which American Congregationalism emerged, and upon which, our English Congregational brethren being judges, it is an improvement. He believes "in throwing the responsibility for ministerial doctrinal soundness upon the churches." This throwing of responsibility upon the churches does not seem to mean much in the case of some prominent churches that need not be named, and in the case of many small and isolated congregations it is simply impracticable. One cannot but regret that a man of such "light and leading" as Dr. Behrends undoubtedly is should put himself on record as determined not to sit as a member in any council, "no matter how serious the charge of heresy may be," but so long as he does not believe in ecclesiastical censure he is certainly consistent in declining to become a member of a council in a heresy case. But when he asserts, "There is not a drop of ecclesiasticism in me," we can only guess at his meaning.

The all important matter is as to whether or not Dr. Behrends is correct in his estimate of the doctrinal position of Congregationalism. His is a terrible indictment, and unfortunately Dr. Behrends recognizes no cure but "free and frank discussion" and the action of individual churches. It is evident from the nature of the case that there is no machinery which can supply statistical replies to these questions, but we can fall back on observation, experience and personal intercourse and acquaintance. It is also quite legitimate to take into consideration the tone of our religious press, our literature of the last ten years and the well-known character of the teaching in our colleges and seminaries. I think Dr. Behrends's fears are groundless. There is no evidence of "a rising and destructive flood." Congregationalism is sound at the core. With all respect for Dr. Behrends's earnestness, his slightly pessimistic article is to be regretted. It may stir up some needed fervor and some useful questionings, but is there not a danger that the pessimism of such a trusted leader as Dr. Behrends is may do more harm than the heresy of his neighbor, who is a free lance and not a leader?

Halifax, N. S. J. S. Black.

HOSPITABLE TO THE NEW THOUGHT

I do not agree that even the thought of the most advanced critic belittles or makes meaningless the old truths historically held by our churches. We need a grand stirring up in some of our ways of thinking and teaching. Take the Trinity, for instance; ask any Bible class to give their idea of the Trinity and you will find that they think God to be a supreme man sitting on a throne somewhere, that Christ is another man beside God and that the Holy Spirit is a man of all work going and coming at the command of his superiors. I have often questioned classes in that way, always to find that, reduced to everyday language, that was how they thought of the Trinity. Neither do I find "universalism" or "annihilationism" in the new thought, rather richness, grandeur, truth. I find a faith living, growing—a faith I can live and love and rejoice to preach to a world that has sinned and come short of the glory of God, yet with such marvelous possibilities by its very birthright.

I know Dr. Behrends sounded his note of warning in love. I know there is a need of constructive teaching, of broad, upbuilding preaching, preaching that covers the whole of life, not plying the scalpel of anatomy or riding some hobby of single tax or socialism or prohibitionism or anything else to the exclusion of the widest, best use of the preacher's opportunity. We need a revival of evangelical doctrine—make it high as the exalted character of Jesus Christ, as wide as the infinite possibilities inherent in the souls of men and as deep as the needs of any penitent soul, and let us not worry about the phraseology.

Middleton, N. Y. J. A. Norris.

THE WEST IS SOUND

Speaking for Wisconsin, I answer, most emphatically, it is only an eddy. It is true that a few of our ministers are ultra-liberal. But the great majority are conservative men, preaching evangelical doctrines and laboring earnestly for conversions. I do not mean to affirm that most of us believe just as men did one hundred years ago. Our ministers are not wholly ignorant of the work of the higher critics. There are many features of the new theology that are attractive to us. Most of the ultra-liberals among us are thoroughly imbued with the evangelical spirit. Even they reveal a disposition to be more conservative in their expressions than formerly. The West, as a whole, is conservative in its theological views and loyal to evangelical doctrines. I say this from a wide acquaintance with the region north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi. Experience shows that the old faith is effective in the work of converting men and building them up in Christian character, whereas the ultra-liberal views are not serviceable in the practical work of the minister of the gospel. In my opinion, we shall do well to push steadily forward with perfect confidence that evangelical religion is to characterize us as a denomination in the future as in the past. It will only do harm to persecute our ultra-liberal brethren. Some of them ultimately will be reclaimed; some will leave us for the ranks of the more liberal denominations.

Platteville, Wis. C. A. Wight.

A DISHEARTENED CONNECTICUT PASTOR

I wish I could feel that unbelief in evangelical doctrine is only an eddy in our body. For ten years I have painfully noticed the drift. A lady recently was speaking to me about it. She belonged to an old Congregational family, but was compelled to go to the Methodist church to get evangelical preaching. Our seminaries are largely to blame. We have made the Old Testament a book of cunningly devised fables. Our scholars and teachers spread the dangerous error. To stand on plain evangelical ground is to be considered unprogressive. I find my own association largely against the personality of evil. I find fellow-ministers who are annihilationists, universalists. The fall is denied. There is no Biblical doctrine of sin and so no redemption. The tendency far and near is to substitute ethical teaching for Christian doctrine, reformation for regeneration. If Congregationalism comes to stand for unevangelical views our mission boards will run shorter yet of funds. The eddy is a drift. It does not seem right to hold on to evangelical terms when we deny their truth. For years I have noted the down grade. The pews are not to blame; it is the pulpit. Much of our trouble comes from admitting the improved hypothesis of evolution conceding so much. When the next generation get the logical outcome of these new revolutionary views it will be a case of Ichabod for us. Already in every place and church where I go I meet people who say they have lost their faith. I agree with Dr. Behrends that "our most imperative need is a revival of evangelical doctrine." D.

A PENNSYLVANIAN OPINION

Working on a hard home missionary field I have not that time to devote to such Biblical research as I would like, but I have read Dr. Behrends's article with relish. Coming as it does from such a ripe and scholarly mind and a heart so filled with love for the Master's kingdom, I appreciate it the more. Yet I must confess that I cannot coincide with its pessimistic side. Much is true relative to the trend of modern thought. There is also a fearful possibility that the scholars devote more time to the cold dissection of the Scriptures than to the heart life of its truths. Less of the modern scholasticism in our pulpits and more of the Puritanic fire would be a healthy improvement to the life of our churches. People do not come for a cold, logical dissection of the Scriptures, but for warm life truths to help them live better. I know that a whole system can be revolutionized by one man, but even then it may be a signal failure. We need all the learning we can have in this advanced age, but we also need a warm gospel—not a vagueness, but a reality. I judge that I stand in with the rank and file of the Congregational ministry when I say, Fear not, Brother Behrends, it's only an eddy! Mac.

TIRED OF NEGATIVES

Dr. Behrends voices the prevailing sentiment of the pastors and churches in Pennsylvania, as far as I can see. It is full time to get out of the fog and preach a clear, positive gospel. There is no objection to a revision or rearrangement of theological doctrines, and new methods of their presentation and any changes in accent and emphasis upon them. But there is a mighty uprising against a "new gospel" which is an old falsehood. We are tired of negations and efforts to do away with the offense of the cross, and to eliminate the supernatural from the Bible. We are but feeble folk and therefore the high hills are our refuge.

Forest City, Pa. J. G. EVANS.

AN UNTERRIFIED HOME MISSIONARY SUPERINTENDENT

In the central West, south of the parallels of New England Congregational immigration, we have Christianity—the old Book and the old gospel—without much Congregationalism. It has never been "swamped," because it has never been a large element to be counted with. We have therefore unqualified belief in the Trinity without the form of logic. We have belief in the incarnation not troubled by the "pantheistic statement of a universal indwelling of God in all men." We have downright belief in inspiration, without reference to "intuition." The atonement remains un-"dwindled" by rhetorical expression. Expiation and propitiation are believed in though little is known about "figures of speech." There are no believers in "universalism" and "annihilationism," but the old-fashioned opposite views are preached with pungency. Here the reality of "the fall" is insisted upon and lived up to, and evolution is "openly" denied. Sin has no relation to animal ancestry; we are not "gradually sloughing it off." "Wellhausen's" theories have no authority, and the narratives of the Old Testament are believed explicitly and implicitly.

Happy people! No Brooklyn eddies to disturb our homes of faith. In reply to the old question, "What lack we yet?" Dr. Behrends would reply from submerged Brooklyn, "Nothing." Yet a few important facts have been noticed by the Congregationalists able to observe and judge of the actual relative superiority of this ideal state of things, as compared to those communities where Congregationalism is floundering around yet.

First, there is an undue and noxious growth of small sects, divided and subdivided on literal interpretations of the Bible. Second, these competitive and warring sects often put a premium on ignorance and in manifold ways disintegrate the natural and acquired social bonds. Third, the suppression of the ideal of "the intelligence of the faith" causes an almost universal resort to "emotionalism" to gain adherents, which in its development combines with prejudices which are bitter and both general and local, and always divisive and demoralizing. Fourth, there is too much in evidence a divorce between religion and morality, between creed and life, and there is apparent to a considerable degree a lack of the supremacy of conscience in the moral life of men. Society as a rule does not approach in ethical power and purity the New England ideal, and the average of personality and character is not high.

Despite the fact that we quite measure doctrinally up to the lofty "historic ideals" in our non-Congregational community, we Congregationalists continue to believe in our mission. We make bold strenuously to introduce a very virile Congregationalism into this paradise of orthodoxy, and we have based our efforts on three great elements of Congregationalism, the possession of which is to our minds the chief distinguishing glory of our denomination and its chief call to larger service.

First and foremost we contend for the intelligence of the faith, for the alliance of the intellect with the truth. We hold that the real enemy of a living Christianity is the traditionalist, who would stagnate around dead forms—ritual, emotional or intellectual. We are confident of the power of the Congregational spirit to break down sectarian rivalries and walls of cleavage between Christians. We really hope it will not be finally "swamped" until it has taught the lesson which always accompanies its introduction of the intelligence of the spiritual life, that "the essential things of the Spirit" are not sectarian shibboleths and crass Biblical interpretations. Congregationalism destroys the caste principle which flourishes under the formal and traditional faiths and the ignorance and pride which these faiths engender, and it gives the opportunity for the movement of mind in all directions.

Indianapolis. E. D. CURTIS.

TO WHOM SHALL WE LOOK

I write from the standpoint of a young man just entering the ministry. Less than a year ago I graduated from one of our well-known seminaries. While in the seminary I looked to my instructors for guidance in matters of doctrine and criticism. Now I am far from the seminary's instruction, and actively engaged in preaching, as near as I know how, the gospel. Like every honest student I seek not only to discover for myself the truth contained in "God's Word," but try also to discern the signs of the times.

I have watched carefully the tendency of present day preaching, especially in Congregational pulpits, and so far as I have been able to discover the tendency is toward destruction, rather than construction, in matters of criticism and of doctrine. Those who would deal with these questions from the conservative and constructive side seem to follow, as Dr. Behrends says, the "Let alone policy." Now what I wish to know is, to whom shall we who are just entering the ministry and wish to know and preach the truth look, if not to the scholars of our own denomination? And if we find all, or nearly all, of those who have anything to say upon these difficult questions speak from a liberal standpoint, and if we find that their conclusions are not challenged, shall we not conclude that "silence gives consent"?

I am persuaded that the leaders of our denomination have a great responsibility resting upon them. Dr. Lyman Abbott is read far and wide, but no one reads with more enthusiasm his writings than our theological students. If his theories are not correct, why, for the sake of truth, does not some scholar explode them? Dr. Harper of Chicago University has overturned many preconceived opinions, especially among the young men; if he is not right in his conclusions, why does not some scholar of equal prominence reply to him?

To whom shall we look? I hear some one reply: "Look to Jesus. He is 'the author and finisher of our faith.'" Yes! But what am I to preach concerning him? And how am I to interpret his teachings? "Preach Christ and him crucified." Yes! But how am I to view "the incarnation," "atonement," "expiation"? And what am I to say about "sin," "the fall," "the Scriptures"?

To one who wishes to know and preach the truth and nothing but the truth these are perplexing times. No one would advise us to disregard these questions altogether. We cannot let them alone, they must be met and settled in our own minds at least.

We preach "Christ and him crucified," but we must also be ready to give to every man that asketh us a reason for the faith within us. We are not in great danger of losing our own personal faith, but we are in great danger of losing our power as preachers of righteousness. Unless we can have a positive gospel to proclaim we shall become powerless. If our learned doctors, some by positive statements, some by silence, reduce the Scriptures "to a mass of fables and forgeries," where is our message? To whom shall we look but to the leaders in our own denomination?

East Fairfield, Vt. C. E. HAYWARD.

A LAYMAN'S VIEW OF IT

See how slow the church was to accept the teachings of astronomy and geology, and how many men were considered infidels because they did not accept the real or apparent teachings of Scripture on certain points. Now those who believe in evolution are looked upon suspiciously, and the results of Biblical criticism are rejected by many because they seem to conflict with Christ's teachings or inferences which may be drawn from his words.

Why not trust the common sense of the people? They are intelligent enough in New England to be told what scholars discover. Take the accounts of creation in Genesis and compare them with each other and with the teachings of geology, and although the story of creation is grandly told and would seem to have come from an inspired mind, is there not mixed with it some things that seem highly improbable?—such as the making of Eve from one of Adam's ribs, and the naming of all the beasts and birds as the Lord brought them to Adam for him to name. And then to come down to New Testament times, is it not a fact that where two or three of the evangelists report the same incident that they do it in different language and that it varies a good deal, as it would if they had not been inspired?

I believe in inspiration in the sense of an influence from God which gave those men a greater spiritual insight than they would otherwise have had, but I judge from the Scriptures that the Holy Spirit was with them as a constant presence and that when they were speaking, either about spiritual or ordinary matters, they were as really under divine guidance as when writing. Is not the phrase, "the Scriptures contain the Word of God," really more appropriate than to say the Scriptures are the word of God? If that phrase were more in use would it not tend to keep before the minds of men the fact that the Bible is a mixture of the human and the divine?

How foolish to insist on it that ministers must not express their own opinions. If they are not allowed to people will think they do not believe what they preach, and are preaching as they do because they think they ought to and not because it is a matter of personal conviction. If the churches would only admit that very likely the scholars are correct in their conclusions and let it go as not of supreme importance, it seems to me it would be wiser than to wait until they are made to appear ridiculous by endeavoring to hold ground which they long ago lost all title to.

Why not insist only on faith in the divinity and authority of Christ and preach repentance and a holy life of obedience to his moral teachings, and let each one have great liberty of opinion?

Derby, Ct. W. S. B.

The claim of scientific Bible study to a place in the college curriculum is recognized at Wells College at Aurora, N. Y., in the institution of a department of Biblical literature, now in its second year, under the care of a specialist, Prof. Dean A. Walker, a graduate of Yale Divinity School and of the Semitic department of the University of Chicago, and for three years a resident of Syria. Four courses are offered this year—for Freshmen on The Life of Christ; for Sophomores on Hebrew History; for Juniors on Old Testament Prophecy and for Seniors on The Founding of the Christian Church. This Bible study is required in Freshman and Sophomore years. In each course one hour a week throughout the year is given to recitations or lectures, for which the same amount and quality of preparation is required of the student as in any other study. The department library numbers over 250 well-selected volumes. The lecture-room is equipped with a fine copy of the large raised map of Palestine of the Palestine Exploration Fund and a set of fifteen wall maps; and the studies are further illustrated by 100 of Bon Fils's and Dumas's photographs of Syrian scenes and by Palestinian specimens.

In and About Chicago

A New Declaration of Independence

Sunday is the time for the proclamation of "new departures" in Chicago. Last Sunday several hundred unemployed people met in a West Side hall and, after discussing the wrongs from which they are suffering, drew up an indictment against "King Plutocracy," and then declared their purpose of shaking off his yoke. Some of the specific charges against the king are: "He has substituted government by injunction for trial by jury." "He has subordinated natural to vested rights and makes property of more account than human life." "He has imposed taxes without our consent—viz., the coal tax, the sugar tax, the coal-oil tax, the flour tax and a hundred others." "He has monopolized all the channels of labor and made machinery a competitor of men." "He has maintained standing armies for the protection of himself and his favorites and the oppression of the people." Resolutions were passed disapproving the proposal that the poor should till vacant city lots, and affirming that all these "panaceas are unworthy American free men and an insult to the civilization of the nineteenth century." They therefore call upon the unemployed of the country to organize for such a change as will overturn completely the political and industrial conditions "that have fostered and made possible millionaires and paupers, palaces and prisons, churches and poorhouses." But the resolution which indicates most clearly the spirit of the meeting was one which, during the struggle for the overthrow of the present social organization, demands that "all laws for the collection of debts of any kind be repealed, as this alone can save the mortgaged victim from the rapacious clutch of the usurer, the manufacturer from his moneyed master, the tradesman from his commercial owner and the tenant from his landlord."

A meeting like this is of importance only as a sign of the times. It shows what sort of people those are among whom we are living, the kind of thoughts they are cherishing and the plans they are forming for the overthrow of society. It is out of such crowds as these that the commune comes, and with a reckless and able leader it may suddenly reappear. Some leaders of the movements against the present social order are boldly asserting their belief in "the collective ownership of property," and in the consequent abolition of the right of private property, and are thus encouraging the needy classes, who will always exist, no matter what be the social conditions in which one may live, in the bitter feeling they cherish against those whose industry, foresight and economy have made them wealthy, and in the plans they are forming to set at naught present laws and relieve themselves of financial obligation toward those who are better off than they are.

Another sign of the times may be seen very clearly in the position taken by Mr. Carter Harrison, one of the candidates for mayor. He appeals to the discontented classes, promises to set aside all civil service laws, to turn out of office every man who is not a Democrat, to find places for the so-called "ward heelers," to overthrow all Puritanic legislation—in short, to introduce an era of municipal reform during which every one may be a law unto himself. The only persons whose rights are not to be respected are those who wish to see our city government conducted on a basis of righteousness. With three candidates against him in the field, Mr. Harrison's chances of election are far better than the real friends of the city wish they were. Mr. Hessing's resignation as postmaster in order that he may give his whole time to the canvass for an election adds to the complication of the problem, and clouds somewhat the prospect of Judge Sears's triumph.

Pessimism to the Front

Those who are wont to look on the "dark side" of things are encouraged in their habit by the condition of the present canvass for the control of the city, by the arguments which some of the candidates for office are putting forth, as well as by the large number of persons who approve them. They are encouraged in their belief that the world is rapidly becoming worse by attempts to secure legislation which will perpetuate the power of holders of valuable franchises for half a century, by the concentration of great lines of business in a few hands, and by what they are pleased to call the general indifference of the public to these wrongs.

The Brighter Side

Pessimists forget that the Common Council has just passed an order requiring the elevation of railroad tracks at a point where it has been next to impossible to secure such harmony of interests as to bring this about; that a magnificent building for a public library, whose daily circulation is larger than that of any other library in the world, is approaching completion; that in a few days the Crerar Scientific Library will be open to all, whether rich or poor; that such institutions as the Newberry Library, the Historical Society, the Academy of Sciences, the Art Institute, the Lewis Institute, and a fine system of public schools are furnishing all our people with opportunities for education and personal improvement which, a few years since, were enjoyed nowhere in the world. It is also forgotten, notwithstanding the attacks which are made on the churches, and the assertion of a growing cleavage between them and the working men, that these churches have never been better attended than they are now, that our smaller churches, which depend for their support almost entirely upon working men, were never so prosperous as they have been the past winter, and that on the whole the church has never been more anxious than she now is to give the gospel to all who are willing to hear it.

Plans for Revival Work

A building called The Ark was put up in Ravenswood last Saturday, for the use of the Rev. W. B. Williams, an evangelist, who has been successful in the South. He is a member of the United Presbyterian Church. The site was selected Friday, the contracts let and the first loads of timber drawn early Saturday, By midnight the structure was ready for occupation. It will seat three thousand people. It has no floor. The roof is made of boards and tarred paper. Building paper has been hung up at the sides to keep out the cold, and the interior has been decorated with flags and flowers. There was a good attendance at the dedication Sunday, in which most of the ministers in Ravenswood participated. The meetings have begun well.

The Auditorium has been secured for Mr. Moody March 30 and 31 and April 1 and 2. He will hold two services each day. His purpose is to rouse the churches rather than to reach those who seldom attend church. There is a reasonable fear lest ministers and busy laymen find it difficult to attend these meetings, held, as these are to be, during the day, or be able to do much more than indicate their interest in them by having meetings in their own churches in the evening. Mr. Moody has always been a favorite in Chicago and will no doubt attract large audiences. Of his sincerity no one can doubt, however much one may regret his recent return to his old habit of criticising the ministers, some of them his oldest and best friends.

Calls

Rev. George H. Kemp, recently of Maywood, one of our suburbs, has been invited to the pastorate of the Green Street Church and will probably accept, although he had previously been called to the Rhinelander church in Wisconsin. The Green Street Church requires hard and persistent work, but in time will undoubtedly become strong and flourishing. The many friends of Dr. J. H. Barrows will be glad to learn that, while giving no answer to the call of the Kenwood Presbyterian Church, he has written the session that he will supply its pulpit for a time, and thus contribute his influence to secure its rapid growth. Dr. Barrows, it will be remembered, holds a professorship in the University of Chicago. His first appearance in the city will be Sunday evening, May 23, in the university, where he will give the students some account of his experiences in India.

John Fiske in Chicago

Tuesday evening this eminent historian gave one of his characteristic and instructive lectures to a picked audience gathered in the hospitable rooms of the Historical Society. It was on social life and customs in the Old Dominion. Mr. Fiske has given several lectures during his stay in the city. He is always a welcome visitor, and no matter when he comes, or upon what particular period of American history he chooses to speak, he is sure of an appreciative hearing.

Ministers' Meeting

The meeting Monday morning was a sad one, for the report was brought to it of the death of Dr. Wells. The paper was upon theological education in Oxford, and was read by Rev. W. H. Day of Aurora. It was full of personal reminiscences and deeply interesting. The next meeting is to be devoted to missions. Several persons outside the denomination have been invited to speak.

The Co-operating Committee of the Interior

In common with other friends of the American Board the members of this committee are very much pained over the continued shrinkage in the receipts from month to month. They are studying the problem of the possible increase in the gifts from the Interior, and are doing all they can to aid Secretary Hitchcock in his appeals. They view almost with consternation the multiplication of the number of objects which are presented to our churches, and the consequent weakening of interest in the work of the Board. In addition to reaching non-contributing churches the question is pressing upon the committee as to the means it may use to enable stronger churches to look at the problem in its true light, and while giving generously to objects at home refuse to diminish in any way the necessary gifts to immense work which they have been carrying on in foreign lands. At a recent session our committee was exceedingly glad to welcome Mr. Cobb of Newton, a member of the Boston committee, and avail itself of his experience and advice. While the difficulty of the problem is fully realized, it is yet the feeling here that in some way it will be satisfactorily solved and the needed funds obtained.

Chicago, March 20. FRANKLIN.

In a section of Missouri not far from one hundred miles square, where many of the public schools are closed for six months of the year, Iberia Academy is the only institution of its kind doing effective work. The principal, G. Byron Smith, is also pastor of the Congregational church. There are now sixty-five pupils in attendance. This number will be increased in the spring term by twenty or more teachers from the public schools in the surrounding territory. The graduates of this academy, which was established in 1890, are already giving a good account of themselves at Drury, at the State medical college and elsewhere.

The Home

THE CUP OF TEARS

BY MAY RILEY SMITH

"The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?"

No letter lay beside it, no messenger did say
Who sent the somber token that on my threshold lay.
A cypress wreath drooped from it, my soul grew sick with fears,
For well I knew its meaning, it was the cup of tears.

I gazed into the chalice and saw, with lips of snow,
As in a prophet's vision, the sad years come and go;
I felt the thirst and longing, and the burning pain that sears
The eyelids of those mortals who drink the cup of tears.

I stooped and read each symbol etched on its heavy brim;
I scanned the thorny pattern that wreathed the cruel rim;
There was the torch inverted, and there the lonely years
Were carved in gloomy pictures upon my cup of tears.

I pushed the goblet from me, and in my anguish said,
"I cannot drink the potion, O, give me back my dead!
Thou who art all compassion, whose name my soul reveres,
Give back the eyes I long for, and take this cup of tears!"

Then spake a voice beside me, "My child! it may not be.
Canst thou not trust thy Father to pour a draught for thee?
Believe that all is wisdom which mystery appears,
And drink with lifted forehead thy sacred cup of tears."

And then the Presence vanished, without adieu or sign,
To carry cups of sorrow to other lives like mine.
O God, be very pitiful to whom this Presence nears!
And help us to be loving who drink the cup of tears.

ART AND RELIGION

To those to whom, as they read the articles by Miss Hurll, there comes the haunting thought, so often cherished by the Puritans of old, "Can a love of the sensuous and beautiful in nature be harbored and fed by one who is called to be spiritually-minded?" perhaps the following narrative, taken from the memoir of Elizabeth Stuart Phelps by her husband, Prof. Austin Phelps, may prove helpful.

The daughter of Prof. Moses Stuart of Andover Theological Seminary, and reared in a faith so simple and august that she could say, "If he has not saved me, then this too I know is just, and God's decree I would not change," she early developed a passionate attachment for art and literature, a passion which lasted until she lay on her dying bed, for even there she requested that her daughter, since so famous, should be instructed in the fine arts.

But when she passed through the testing process of invalidism quite early in life, she faced and settled some of the problems of life and thought which sooner or later every intelligent being must face, and among them was the question formulated above.

The first "rude instinct" of her nature denied any place to the æsthetic or the gratification of the senses. "Life . . . was a passage through a great emergency." "It should leave no heart for the enjoyment of images of beauty or sounds of sweet melody." She thought she had no right to employ her time or talents in anything that was not useful. But let her tell her own story, as revealed in a letter written many years afterward to a young friend facing the same problem and enduring the same affliction:

> What good did painting do? or music? or poetry? or a thousand things I loved? None, that I could see. So I condemned them all. I took up philosophy and studied and wrote prose and sewed and what not. My days were all given up to the "solid and useful," as the world would say. I felt, as every one feels, a sort of happiness in making a sacrifice with a good motive. This sustained me at times; and the regularity of my employments did more. Yet I was not happy. My soul did thirst for the beautiful and the true. Suppressed longings and unsatisfied tastes and despised capacities at length took their revenge. They fretted and chafed and wore upon the delicate framework that inclosed them until it gave way. Then followed four long, dreary years. . . . If I was a Christian then, I certainly was not a happy one. I was a burden to myself and others. My mind became morbid. . . . It was a long process and a troubled one; but I learned at last to be happy as God would have me be. I found out that he who made me knew better than I what he made me for, and that he had not given me tastes and inclinations and talents, all in themselves innocent, to be suppressed and to have others substituted for them. I "turned over a new leaf"; I did it with trembling, but I did it. And now I follow all my natural tastes, so far as they are in themselves harmless. I do not hesitate to gratify them, so far as I can, aiming only at a right regulation of them by the principles of the gospel, and trying to feel that they and I belong to him who gave them. If the bringing to perfection the nature which he gave me does not sooner or later fit me for my highest usefulness to others, it must be because I am not sincere in my entire consecration of it to him. Well, what is the result? Why, from the very first half hour in which I broke down the barriers of my old system and took up my pencil I said, "Good-by to doctors." I have been happier, I have been better every way. I can now often bring to the altar—O, how much oftener than in days of yore—the offering of a grateful, cheerful, satisfied heart. I do not find in the Scriptures any jarring with my present view of my duties in life. And I am taught by the beauty of morning and evening clouds, by the sunshine and the rainbow, and the singing of birds, and the sweet breath of flowers, that a cultivation of our tastes for the beautiful in his works and ways sweetens life and refines the heart and makes it easier for us to be holy. You will find some goodness in the hovel where there are flower vines at the window. . . . But it is time my strain was over.

It is most interesting to learn that once she came to see the compatibility of piety and the love of beauty, the reasonableness of devoutness wedded to taste, she set to work studying the Bible as never before, particularly noting and dwelling upon all those scenes which seemed to her worthy subjects of the artist's skill in reproducing. Thus, to quote Professor Phelps, "she associated her taste for the arts with her love of God's Word, and rendered each in turn the handmaid of the other." And this is precisely what Miss Hurll and so many others are doing today, with a wealth of apparatus at their disposal which Mrs. Phelps dreamed not of.

DIET IN OLD AGE

BY MARY E. GREEN, M. D.

"He who would pass the latter part of his life with honor and decency must, when he is young, consider that he shall one day be old and remember, when he is old, that he has once been young." From childhood to manhood we mature and develop in strength and mental activity; from manhood to old age we decline. Whether this latter stage be slow or rapid depends largely upon the early life—what it has been and how the system has been nourished. Every organized body depends upon food for its maintenance and for the successive change of its tissues. In youth the food is especially required to build up and repair waste tissues. This continues until the prime of life, after which the powers become enfeebled through the destructive process which is constantly going on, and finally comes the diminution of muscular power, owing to the inability of the cells to renew muscular tissue.

This degeneration takes place in all organs of the body and throughout the entire system—the eye loses its power, the teeth become poor, the heart's action is enfeebled, the arteries lose their power of resistance—hence the circulation is poor, digestion is imperfect, the excretory organs are no longer able to do their accustomed work. It is plain, therefore, that no one thing is of more importance than the diet for elderly people. All food must be easy of digestion—enough to support life without overtaxing the system in the process of assimilation.

There is in the majority of people a tendency to obesity after middle life, and all food which has a tendency to increase fat, such as those containing a large amount of starch and sugar, should be sparingly used. Likewise an excess of food containing a large quantity of protein or nitrogenous matter should be avoided, as it is too stimulating and, if persisted in, endangers the blood vessels, a danger which increases with declining years. It is thus that high living in old age so frequently results in apoplexy.

Both the quality and quantity of food must be guarded. It is not the quantity which nourishes the body, only that which is digested. An insufficient supply is less dangerous than an over-supply. No definite rule can be laid down as to the amount to be eaten; it is unfortunate perhaps that the human family is not controlled by the instinct which guides the animal creation, which rarely leads them astray. Man, however, is the victim of morbid appetite, which often craves more than the system can assimilate. There is an old maxim, "If health be your object, rise from the table before your appetite is sated."

The following rules are to be observed:

1. Remember that old age is the second childhood, and that all food should be plain and taken at regular intervals.
2. Eat with moderation, masticating all food well.
3. Avoid food which has stimulating properties.
4. Abstain from the use of all liquor and strong tea and coffee.

The following may serve to show what the diet should consist of for the twenty-four hours. Of course this may be varied from day to day, by taking from and adding to it other things of equal nutritive value.

Breakfast: fruit, some cooked cereal, toast, a cup of hot milk—if tea or coffee are used they should be weak, with plenty of milk.

Dinner: some light soup—if meat is taken it should be such as mutton, chicken, or prime beef, the white-meated fish—bread and butter, a vegetable salad, with fruit or some light pudding.

Supper: milk, with bread and butter, or toast, custard, blanc-mange or tapioca pudding cooked with fruit.

In two instances friends of mine who lived to be over ninety years of age reduced their diet the last fifteen years of their life to milk, bread and butter, and fruit, usually apples, which were always cooked. They retained their powers, both physically and mentally to a remarkable degree, and one of them used to tell me that if he had adapted his food to the requirements of his system as carefully in early life he could have passed the century mark with the vigor of middle life.

QUEEN VICTORIA

FROM THE CRADLE TO THE CROWN

BY JANET SANDERSON

"England's little Mayflower," Victoria was called, for she was born in the month of May, 1819. The mother and baby were always together. As soon as the child could sit alone she took her dinners on a small table by her mother's side, and she slept in a little bed by her mother's all the years of her childhood.

"Dear Boppy," the nurse, was also assiduous in the care of her royal charge who, at five years of age, is described as a fair, lovely child with soft hair, frank blue eyes and a countenance which bespeaks perfect health and good temper. Many were the romps Victoria and "dear Boppy" had about her palace home in the Kensington Gardens, and here she used to ride a donkey gayly decked out with blue ribbons, calling out to the passers-by a cheery "Good morning." At Malvern she is remembered as a youthful romp who delighted in climbing trees and walls, and at Tunbridge Wells the old people still tell of how Victoria rode her donkey at a free canter along the lanes and over the downs.

Lord Albermarle, in his autobiography, gives a pretty picture in telling how he watched the movements of the bright, pretty child, dressed in a white cotton suit and a large straw hat, engaged in watering the plants under the window of the palace, from which he looked down upon her. "It was amusing," he says, "to see how impartially she divided the contents of the watering pot between the flowers and her own little feet." A year later Walter Scott wrote in his diary, "Dined with the Duchess of Kent and presented to the little Victoria, heir apparent to the crown. This little lady is educated with much care and watched so closely that no busy maid has a moment to whisper 'You are heir of England.' I suspect if we could dissect the little heart we should find some bird of the air had carried the matter." One day, as she was reading how Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi, introduced her sons to the first of Roman ladies with the words, "These are my jewels," she amused her teacher by pausing, then said, "She should have said, 'These are my cornelians.'"

Like other girls Victoria had her dolls, which she liked best of all her toys, and many were the hours that this royal child spent in dressing them to represent prominent persons; and like other girls, she too sometimes found the study hours long and practicing tedious. Once she was so careless during a music lesson that she provoked her teacher to saying there was no royal road by which she could become mistress of the piano. Then the future queen slipped from her seat, closed and locked the piano, skipped away with the key in her hand, saying, "You see there is a royal road by which I can make myself mistress of the piano."

She must have been a clever child, for her grandmother wrote, just after Victoria had visited her uncle, George IV., who was delighted with her charming manners: "The little monkey must have pleased and amused him, she is such a pretty, clever child."

Her education went steadily on. Great attention was paid to faithfulness in the little duties of life and rectitude in the smallest details was enforced. She was drilled in economy and had her allowance money, and she was expected to make it suffice. Many a time we find she had the moral courage to say, "No, I can't afford it."

The best of teachers and the constant companionship of a noble mother developed the mind and formed the character of the future queen. She was taught all that befitted her station, and had a wide knowledge of history and the Bible, law, politics, modern languages, classics, painting and music. She excelled in archery, and to all these were added a natural courage, modesty, simplicity and candor.

It would seem that a special providence watched over this royal child, for we so often read of the many dangers from which her life had been almost miraculously preserved. When she was thirteen years old a magnificent ball was given in her honor to which all the children of the nobility were invited, and it is said that she charmed everybody by her sweet, childish dignity.

THE PRINCESS VICTORIA
Painted by W. Nicholas

It must have been an especially eventful day in her life when her confirmation took place at sixteen years of age, for she knew and realized the great destiny before her, and during the archbishop's tender and solemn address in which he spoke of duties attaching to a princess of her high degree, and only by the help of the Almighty Ruler of the universe could she hope to discharge them, she was so deeply moved that she laid her head upon her mother's breast and sobbed aloud.

There were many suitors for the hand of the royal maiden, but her heart went out to none till her destined prince appeared when she was seventeen years old, when the two, Prince Albert and Princess Victoria, who were to be eternally united, met for the first time.

Victoria's eighteenth birthday was celebrated in London and throughout the country with great enthusiasm. She was awakened at seven o'clock by a serenade under her window.

Spring renews its golden dreams,
Sweet birds carol 'neath each spray;
Shed, O sun! thy milder beams
On the fairest flower of May.

Lightly o'er our early rose,
Angels pure, your wings display;
When the storm of sorrow blows,
Shield the fairest flower of May.

From morn till evening the great world moved towards Kensington Palace. Birthday gifts were countless. Fêtes, illuminations and all sorts of holiday doings were indulged in; the king gave a ball at which for the first time Victoria took precedence of her mother and sat in the chair of state.

But happy girlhood was taking leave of the princess. She was to be taken from the carefully guarded home and thrown into the great world of rule and politics. On June 30, 1837, at five o'clock in the morning, a carriage and four dashed up the great central avenue to Kensington Palace. The two grave men in the carriage, the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Lord Chamberlain, came to call a queen to the throne of her ancestors. After waiting a few moments the door of the apartment opened and the princess came in, wrapped in a loose morning robe with slippers on her bare feet. On being told of the king's death she looked towards the archbishop and said in touching tones, "I ask your prayers on my behalf."

At eleven o'clock the council met, and Victoria took her seat at the head of the table. She wore a plain mourning robe, her hair dressed in close bands about her forehead and in a tight coil at the back of her head, and in this simple style this girl of eighteen, "who," as Carlyle puts it, "at an age when in ordinary circumstances she would hardly be trusted to choose a bonnet for herself, was called upon to discharge responsibilities from which an archangel might have shrunk," assumed the government of an empire.

Nothing in her aspect and demeanor caused more astonishment than her self-possession. She conducted herself with the dignity which proceeds from self-possession and deliberation. After her accession followed the proclamation, and then came the dissolution of Parliament, when Victoria as queen appeared in a crimson velvet robe trimmed with gold and ermine, a stomacher ablaze with diamonds. On her arms were diamond bracelets and on the left arm the badge of the Order of the Garter. Concerning the Garter, it is told that the young sovereign asked the Duke of Norfolk with an expression of perplexity, "But, my Lord Duke, where am I to wear the Garter?" No one could see a way out of the difficulty until the duke remembered a picture of Queen Anne in which the Garter is on the left arm. On this occasion the queen made her first speech, of which Charles Sumner wrote: "I was astonished and delighted. Her voice is sweet and finely modulated, and she pronounced every word distinctly and with a just regard to the meaning. I think I never heard anything better in my life than her speech."

The coronation at Westminster Abbey took place a year later, and henceforth the girlhood of the queen was a beautiful memory of the past.

American Little Girl to Her Mamma: "What is a dead letter, please?"

Mamma: "One that has been given to your father to post."—London News.

Just as a mother would not love a child the better for its being turned into a model of perfection by one stroke of magic, but does love it the more deeply every time it tries to be good, so I do hope and believe our great Father does not wait for us to be good and wise to love us, but loves us and loves to help us in the very thick of our struggle with sin and folly.—Mrs Ewing.

Closet and Altar

If we leave our doors wide open to God he enters in and makes a heaven of our souls.

He who climbs above the cares of this world and turns his face to his God has found the sunny side of life. The world's side of the hill is chill and freezing to a spiritual mind, but the Lord's presence gives a warmth of joy which turns winter into summer.—Spurgeon.

Thought answereth alone to thought,
And Soul with soul hath kin;
The outward God he findeth not,
Who finds not God within.
—F. L. Hosmer.

Pray and read and read and pray, for a little from God is better than a great deal from men. . . . There is nothing that so abides with us as what we receive from God; and the reason why Christians at this day are at such a loss as to some things is because they are content with what comes from men's mouths, without searching and kneeling before God to know of him the truth of things.—John Bunyan.

Lord, teach us so to live with the Father that his love may be to us nearer, clearer, dearer than the love of any earthly father. And let the assurance of his hearing our prayers be as much greater than the confidence in an earthly parent as the heavens are higher than the earth, as God is infinitely greater than man. Lord, show us that it is only our unchildlike distance from the Father that hinders the answer to prayer and lead us on to the true life of God's children.—Andrew Murray.

Ah, let me make no idols, Lord,
To stand between my love and thee!
But if I do, then by thy word
Of power break them utterly;
And grant that in their empty place
I see the glory of thy face.
—W. M. Jay.

Blessedness lieth not in much and many, but in one and oneness. In one word blessedness lieth not in any creature or work of the creatures, but it lieth alone in God and in his works. Therefore I must wait only on God and leave on one side all creatures with their works, and first of all myself. In like manner, all the great works and wonders that God has ever wrought, or even God himself with all his goodness, so far as these things exist or are done outside of me, can ever make me blessed, but only in so far as they exist and are done and loved, known, tasted and felt within me.—Theologia Germanica.

Father, I thank thee that thy wisdom has heeded, not my desires, but my wants. I bless thee that thou art thyself and hast hindered me from being myself. As often as I have proved myself weak to care for myself thou hast proved thyself wise and strong and loving for me. And shall I not trust thee for the future who hast rescued from sin and folly all my past? Father, be thou my future! Not that I would lose myself in thee, but that in thee I would find myself. Be thou my future, the strength and peace of my coming years, my praise, my happiness, my work, my love, my today and my tomorrow be thou, who art my only worthy yesterday. And the song of my mouth and the love of my soul shall be thine forever and ever. Amen.

Tangles

[For the leisure hour recreation of old and young. Any reader who can contribute odd and curious enigmas, etc., of a novel and interesting kind is invited to do so, addressing the Puzzle Editor of The Congregationalist.]

26. A CONCEALED PUZZLE

How can I truly call thee fair
In tempting me to play such part!
Doomed naught but vain regrets to share;
Decoyed by thy beguiling heart!

E'en when, as oft, I held thee near,
No pledge sincere "made one of two";
'Twas mere coquetry, all, I fear,
And promise, such as ne'er comes true.

No more I'll trust to time or place;
Gone are my hopes of happy home!
Left now to run a doubtful race,
E'en though o'er all the world I roam!
NILLOR.

27. MAY DAY'S FRIENDS

May Day is a little cripple, who must sit in her armchair all day, and cannot join the children at their work or play. One day I asked her how she amused herself from morning till night.

"O, I am never lonely," she replied. "I have the company of a host of young friends."

"Who are they?" I inquired, for I had never seen any of them.

She answered readily:

"(1) Florence Dombey, (2) Ellen Montgomery, (3) Tom Bailey, (4) Eric, (5) Hector, (6) Eva St. Clair, (7) Jo March, (8) Little Nell, (9) Rosamond Fane, (10) Theodore Laurence, (11) Paul Dombey, (12) Kit Nubbles, (13) Prudy Parlin, (14) Polly Oliver, (15) Eyebright, (16) Witch Winnie, (17) Norman May, (18) Sir Guy Morville, (19) Kent Hampden, (20) Hans Brinker, (21) Polly Pepper, (22) Gypsy Breynton, (23) Leslie Goldthwaite, (24) Young Lucretia, (25) Matilda Van Dorn, (26) Tom Brown, (27) Robinson Crusoe, (28) Cedric Errol, (29) Jackanapes, (30) Grimkie, (31) Carol Bird, (32) Annie Lee, (33) Sella, (34) Margaret Dashwood, (35) Kitty M'Nab, (36) Harry Walmers, Jr., (37) Paul Blake, (38) Tom the Sweep, (39) That Boy John, (40) Harry Bertram, (41) Georgy Osborne, (42) Barbara Lewthwaite, (43) Little Ellie, (44) Jeanie Morrison, (45) Master Francis Amory, (46) Ben Hur, (47) Evelyn Hope, (48) Annabel Lee, (49) Randolph Miller, (50) Rollo."

"But who introduced all these friends to you?" I inquired.

"Ah, that," she answered, laughing, "is for you to discover." RUTH HALL.

[The hunt for the introducers of these friends was announced two weeks ago, but the list was crowded out. An elegant volume of Photographic Views of the World, it will be remembered, is to be presented the sender of each of the best two lists of the names. The lists, whether small or large, are all to be forwarded within ten days.]

28. TRANSPOSITIONS

I.

O it is * to seem so fair—
To * a lie and play a part—
With * thoughts your bosom share
And wear a * upon your heart!

II.

Virtue should * when you draw near,
To * alarms from her two
Watchtowers, * with scorn and fear!
O, heed the *: Be true, be true!

III.

* not in lies, give them no place
To * thy life and spoil thy home!
Let truth and honor * the race
O'er hill and * where'er you roam.
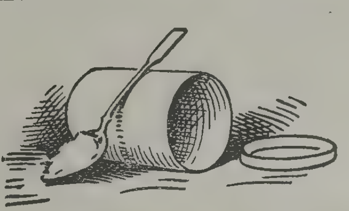
ELZA.

Recent solvers include: S. C. H., Worcester Mass., 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21; Nillor, Middletown Springs, Vt, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21; L. and L. A. F., Easthampton, Mass., 17, 18, 19, 20, 21; L. C. D., Readville, Mass., 17 19, 20; Vigilant, Salem, Mass., 17, 18, 20; M. E. P., New Britain, Ct., 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21; Mrs. T. W. Rich, Hyde Park, Mass., 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21; M. S. D., Providence, R. I., 16, 18, 19, 20, 21; Abbie A. Tidd, Westboro, Mass., 19, 21; Mrs. Newman, Hartford, Ct., 19; H. H., Sherbrooke, Que., 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21.

Specimens of the ingenious tangles entered in the bouts-rimés contest are given this week; more will follow.

ANSWERS

22. The letter E.
23. America.
24. 1. Pot, ash, potash. 2. Runt, dime, rudiment. 3. All, sow, sallow. 4. Drake, rake. 5 Galena, ale, nag.
25. Heather.



The Last Spoonful

of Cleveland's baking powder is as good as the first, pure & sure.

IMPERIAL MILL Co's
196
DULUTH
IMPERIAL PATENT
DULUTH, MINN.
This Barrel
contains 20 loaves more of bread than any other flour made.
You increase the health of your family and the wealth of your purse every time you buy it. It makes "Better bread and more of it."
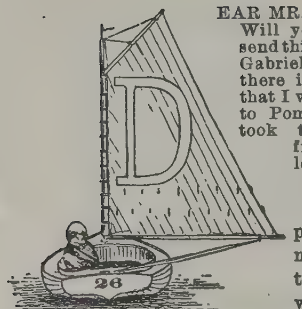
All grocers keep it. Don't be deceived.

The Conversation Corner



DEAR MR. MARTIN: Will you please send this to Pomiuk Gabriel? In letter there is ten cents that I want to send to Pomiuk and I took the money from my Allowance.
CARL B.

Our Despotic Foreman little thought, when he left out this little Worcester boy's letter last week, so as to make his columns come out even, that it would have the place of honor this week, with the biggest kind of an initial to begin it! So Carl will be compensated for his disappointment in not seeing it with the other Pomiuk letters. The next letter on my table is from a Cornerer of about the same age, with the same contribution for the same object:

Dear Mr. Martin: Do you remember me? [O yes!—MR. M.] You came to my house a little while ago. You saw Alice. She is a big baby now. She puts her toe in her mouth. She likes her bath. She laughs when she sees the tub. She spats the water. She cries sometimes when mamma takes her out of the tub. I go to school. I like to read and write. Mamma tells me how to spell some of the words. I send ten cents for Pomiuk. Good-by. Your little friend, DOROTHY G.

I happened to open that letter when Dr. Grenfell was in my library and I read it to him. He laughed merrily about the baby with "her toe in her mouth." He says that is the way the Labrador "liveyers" speak of their little children—so many "toe-biters"!

Speaking of gifts to Pomiuk, here is a note from a Cornerer, about those copper-nickel cents mentioned Feb. 25:

Dear Mr. Martin: I would like one each of the nickel-plated cents dated 1857, 1858. They will complete my collection up to 1896. I hope I am not too late. S.

The lady who wished to know about the silver certificates with "tranquility" on them (March 4) seems satisfied with the explanation and the premium offered, for she sends one of them "for the Corner Cot Fund." And now another lady sends me an English crown for the "Cot." It has the date of 1819, with the bust of George III. on one side and St. George and the dragon on the reverse. It may be that some of you numismatic collectors may want it; consult your coin catalogues. The next letter is about stamps—from my South Shore companion of two summers ago:

My Dear Mr. Martin: . . . I send you some foreign stamps which no doubt you can give to some beginner that you may know, although they are too common for advanced collectors. [The boys in the mailing-room were not so advanced but they were glad of them.] How is the "old Captain"? I haven't heard anything about him lately. I spent my Christmas vacation in Duxbury, but did not see him—the bay was full of ice. He must have pulled up the "26" for the winter on Clark's Island, or else have taken her to some foreign shore.
With much love, K. B.

Judging from my recent mail, I think the last "guess" is the correct one, and that he has been on a winter cruise to the South Seas. The reference of our Australian members is to the Corner of Oct. 22:

PETERSHAM, SYDNEY, N. S. W.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am sorry you did not understand what the N. S. W. Congregational Union Exam. is. It is an exam. in which all the Congregational Sunday schools may compete. It is held in two central Sunday schools, and the papers are set by chosen ministers. You wonder if I have ever seen any blacks. Yes, but the Australian aborigines are a very degraded race, and are fast dying out. There are very few in N. S. W., but a good number in Queensland and Western Australia. One member of our C. E. Society has gone to Coomeragunger—an aboriginal name, as you will readily see—as a missionary to them.

I wonder if the weather in America is ever as hot as it is here. The horses look so funny, for they have hoods tied on their heads with two holes made in them for their ears. We children all wear great big hats, sometimes reaching right down to our shoulders.
ELFRIDA A.

Dear Mr. Martin: I was very glad to see my letter in the last Congregationalist. [This letter is dated Dec. 19, showing how long it takes for the mails to cross our continent and their ocean.—MR. M.] I told you about wallabys, laughing jackasses and the wattle-flower, but I did not explain to you what they were enough. First, the wallaby, which is a kind of kangaroo, lives in the bush, and makes its nest in the ground. Secondly, laughing jackasses laugh most remarkably. While we were staying in the mountains about five came and made a great noise. They have great big beaks and heads, and also large wings. They are altogether very large birds. Thirdly, the wattle-flower is very pretty and has a most beautiful scent. Each little flower is like a ball of beautiful yellow fluff firmly put together. When you are going through the bush, the wattle trees look like a golden mass, and they scent the whole bush.
CARLETON A.

Now from Australian to American aborigines. I have no letter about them, but a live boy introduced the matter in this way. On the cars, a year or two ago, I fell to talking with him about Indian names, that subject being started as we passed a small lake with a long name. (We discussed the reason why so many rivers and lakes had Indian names, and so few cities—what do you think?) He said he lived in "Pentucket." When he told me about an Indian raid and massacre there I knew the town, for in my time every boy and girl knew the story of Hannah Dustin. I thought then that if I ever went to Pentucket I would look up the monument that the boy spoke of. But Haverhill is over thirty miles from Boston and I have not had the opportunity since. But since our last Corner I happened to pass through that city and I stopped over a train or two. I started for the Public Library and soon ran against the monument in a little common. It was of granite, surmounted by a bronze statue of the brave woman, and containing four bas-reliefs, finely representing the whole story; the "Salvages" taking her from her house; the father on horseback defending his group of seven children behind him; "her slaying of her captors at Contoocook Island"; her return in a canoe.

If any of you do not know this story, better look it up, and also Mrs. Sarah J. Hale's lines on "The Father's Choice." I have read over the original account as carefully and quaintly given by "the Reverend and Learned Cotton Mather," in his famous Magnalia, and he got the facts directly from the heroine soon after her return. Otherwise, it would seem almost incredible that a woman, just recovering from illness, could endure such a march through the wilderness and then escape by killing (with the aid of Mary Neff, her companion, of Samuel Leonardson, the Worcester boy, and of three tomahawks) ten of her Indian captors as they slept beside the camp-fire, and with their scalps (to prove her story!) making her way down the Merrimack in a canoe to her home. I believe the place of her escape is now called Dustin's Island, near Concord, N. H., and that a monument marks the place—of course, our boys up there know. It is a curious fact that the massacre and capture at "Pentucket" was March 15, 1697—exactly two hundred years before the day when I write this. If that be "Old Style," as I suppose it is, then add ten days to make it "New Style," and you have the date of the paper in which you read this story. And yet my visit to "Pentucket" was entirely a coincidence, having nothing to do with this bi-centennial anniversary!

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK

The Young Reader. The honorary Cornerer "on the Penobscot" got me into business when he woke up the "old folks" about that "Young Reader"! Now a gentleman in Iowa—although I think his boyhood was spent in the "Old Granite State"—writes to ask if there was not a story in it of a "discontented squirrel." O, yes, it is "Lesson XXXIX.," and is very entertaining—with a plain moral. The squirrel wanted to migrate South in the winter, like the cuckoo and the nightingale, and began the trip. He lost his way and his strength, and at last was seized by a "hungry kite" and "carried off in her talons." Fortunately a hungry eagle also appeared on the scene at that moment and pursued the kite, which was compelled to drop the squirrel. It was dropped at exactly the right moment, for, falling through the air and alighting in the midst of a thick tree, he found himself in the very tree which contained his nest! In the picture accompanying the piece the squirrel (which looks like a fox) is apparently standing still, so that the kite can grab him. But the moral is good—not to be discontented, and not to go South when we are well enough at the North!

Sovereigns of England. A lady in Wisconsin, with the warning, "You can't shut out the old children from being ???ers," sends the verses asked for in this column Feb. 25, which I will have copied for the asker, if she wishes them. The verses were written down years ago from a mother's memory, the last one being:

Queen Anne was victorious by land and by sea,
George the First followed with glorious sway;
And now, when three Georges and William are past,
God sent us Victoria—may she long be the last!

Two Questions a Year Old. They got buried in the drawer! The first is from Brooklyn:

Can some friend tell me where I can find a hymn which embodies this thought? Our burdens should be to us only such burdens as an eagle's wings are to him, bearing him onward and upward. I have looked for the hymn in vain. We grown-ups seem to enjoy the Corner page as much—[etc., etc., etc.!]
MRS. H.

The second is from Boston:

A friend wishes to ascertain where these lines can be found—

The first, the first, O naught like it
  Our after years can bring,
For summer has no flowers so sweet
  As those of early spring.

MISS W.

Wolfe and Montcalm. Mrs. P. of Providence is very anxious to obtain the old poem about the warriors at Quebec, of which the first verse is:

He lifted up his head,
  The drums did rattle,
And to his army said,
  "How goes the battle?"

I have often walked over that historic battle-field on the Plains of Abraham and copied the epitaph on the monument which commemorates the death of both generals, but that does not supply the poem!

Another Query. It comes from a lady in Ohio. Her father and mother wish the song which they sang fifty years ago, commencing:

The nightingale which all day long
Had cheered the village with its song.

L. H. M

The Sunday School

Lesson for April 4 Acts 9: 32–43

PETER WORKING MIRACLES

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The first quarter's lessons, just completed, were mostly confined to the growth of the church in Jerusalem. This quarter presents its rapid extension throughout all Syria and Asia Minor. The first quarter, up to the time of this lesson, included the first ten years of the Christian Church. This quarter includes its second decade. Our attention is now directed to:

1. The expansion of the primitive church. Persecutions ceased for a time. The conversion of Saul took away from the Jews hostile to the new sect their most able and active leader. The governor of Syria was trying to set up in the temple at Jerusalem a statue of the Roman emperor, Caligula, and the rage of the Jews against this sacrilege turned their attention away from the followers of Jesus. The disciples made the most of their opportunity. They lost no time in controversy. They gathered churches throughout all Judæa and Galilee and Samaria [v. 31]. These, "walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Spirit, were multiplied." The people were kept informed of what was being done in the name of Christ, and thus the new sect spread and was strengthened.

The churches grow through extension of the knowledge of their work and of interest in it. This was brought about in the beginning mainly through the witnessing of the disciples. Peter was one of the foremost in visiting, instructing and encouraging them. He went throughout all parts. The churches scattered here and there would soon have died out had they not been kept united and mutually acquainted. Early Congregationalism did not mean independence. If each minister had stayed at home and confined his interest to his own church there would not have been any occasion for writing the book of Acts.

The churches need the same sense of unity now—the counsels of the best leaders, the knowledge of the work at large and its opportunities. There were then no newspapers to convey information of the work of the churches and to suggest plans and methods of united effort. These things could then be spread only by brethren traveling from place to place. The religious newspaper does a service of this kind of great value. If ministers and teachers made efforts to place The Congregationalist in every Christian family the churches would be strengthened and multiplied faster than they now are.

2. The ministration of the primitive church. Jesus found his way to the hearts of the people by satisfying the needs which they most felt. He healed their sicknesses, gave them food, brought them to feel at home with one another, and so relieved their loneliness. A proof of his Messiahship is found in this fact, that wherever he went "the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." The church continued to do what Jesus had begun to do. It was natural that when Peter came down to Lydda the saints there should lead him to the sick man, Eneas. It was to be expected that women like Dorcas would soon become known in the church, whose interest was absorbed in ministering to the poor and especially to widows.

Christian churches today can retain and extend their power only by meeting the needs of men. Helpless classes need the church—the sick, the orphaned, widows, the aged. Working men need the church—to understand them, to speak for them, to secure justice for them, to restrain them from making unjust demands. It is a hopeful sign that the churches are giving increased attention to present problems, that its agencies are striving to meet present wants and that its voice is heard pleading the cause of the poor, the oppressed and them that have no helper.

3. The power of the primitive church. Why did it grow so fast? First, because it brought to the people the help they most needed, the brotherly spirit manifesting itself in service; second, because it promised to the people deliverance from sin, and persuaded them to believe the promise through the new spirit of love and desire for holiness which it implanted in them; and third, because it demonstrated the continued presence of Jesus with it by miracles wrought in his name. Neither he nor his disciples made a business of healing the sick or raising the dead. They did these things often enough to show that they had power from above, and it was given to them to be used in blessing men. The healing of Eneas attracted general attention in Lydda and in the district where he lived. They "saw him and turned to the Lord." The raising of Dorcas accomplished a similar result. "It became known throughout all Joppa; and many believed on the Lord."

